Ad Dominum Ieſum Chriſtum Seruatorem clementiſsimum, Euchariſticon. Ioan. Foxi.

CONFECTO NVNC OPERE, QVOD TVIS PRIMVM AVSPIcijs ac voluntate aggreſſus (ſumme & adorande Ieſu, idemq́; Seruator clementiſſime) inchoaui, quodq́; tuo demum beneficio ac fauore exegi atque abſolui, præter omnem certam opinionem & vires meas: ſupereſt itaque pro officio meo, vt animula hæc, ceu pro votiua tabula, gratias, ſi non quantas debeat (vtinam enim id poſſet) at quantas queat maximè, munificentiſſimæ tuæ perſoluat maieſtati: quæ tam miſerum homuncionem, vel ſyphar potius hominis, in laboribus tot tantíſque iſtis, qui vel aſellum quemuis ἀχθοφόρον poſſent conficere, tumultuantem, benigno ſucceſſu ac ſolatio tam clementer ſuffulcerit. Quanquam autem de operis difficultate nihil hic cauſari attinet, quæ vix æſtimari à multis poterit: tua tamen non ignorat omnipotens maieſtas, huius, qualecunque ſit, negotij confectio quibus quanq; non ferendis curis, vigilijs, moleſtijs conſtitit: Quibus nullo modo pares futuri eſſemus, niſi fauentis gratiæ tuæ numen affulſiſſet, ac ſeſe quodam modo admiſcuiſſet operi. Quid ni enim fatear ac teſter ingenuè, quod re ipſa experti ſumus. Perſenſimus enim, penéque oculis ipſis conſpeximus, ſingularem excellſæ dexteræ tuæ ἐνεργίαν, non modo in ſucceſſu negotij prouehendo, ſed in vita etiam ſpiritúq; inter labores, conſeruando. Tui igitur muneris eſt (clementiſſime Ieſu) quod opus tuis ſuſceptum auſpicijs huc vſque prouectum ſit. Nos viciſſim quod noſtri ſit officij, gratias clementiæ tuæ, cum noſtro priuatim, tum publico quodammodo eccleſiæ tuæ nomine, agimus. Vel hinc enim cernimus quanti cauſam Martyrum tuorum æſtimes, quando eorum illuſtrando nomini tanta faueas propenſione. Quanquam verò ſi nulla hic extaret eorum recordatio, non poſſent non omnibus modis eſſe illuſtriſſimi, quorum ſint nomina vitæ tuæ libro inſcripta. Et tamen voluit hoc modo tua declarare maieſtas, nobiſq́; innoteſcere hominibus, quàm honorificum ſit pro tui nominis gloria fortiter dimicãtes occumbere, quorum tu vitam à cinere ac rogo ſic vindicas, ſic cauſam tueris, ſic dignitatem illuſtras, vt eandem multo cum gloriæ fœnore abs te recipiat clariorẽ, quam ſi ipſi nunquam alioqui perdidiſſent. Habet ſiquidem peculiare hoc ſibi militiæ tuæ ratio, longe à mũdo hoc diuerſum, quòd in caſtris tuis militantes ſiue viuant, tibi viuant, ſiue moriantur, multò clareſcant a funere fœlicius, quàm ſi vixiſſent maximè.

Auxilium Chriſti in cõcinnando hoc opere.

Sic Cranmerum videmus, Ridleum, Latimerum, Iohannem Hooperum, Bradfordum, cæteroſq́; eiuſdem decuriæ pugiles, quanto maiore occubuiſſe cum gloria in acie tua depugnantes, quàm ſi relicta ſtatione, in qua erant collocati, ſaluti ipſi ſuæ cauſam tuam poſtpoſuiſſent. Quæ enim gens, quæ lingua, quæ natio, quæ temporum vetuſtas, quæ hominum poſteritas eorum non cantabit laudes, non virtutem agnoſcet, non magnitudinem admirabitur? Quis Wicleuum vnquam, aut Cobhamum natum fuiſſe exiſtimaſſet, niſi tua in cauſa tam egiſſent ſtrenuè? Quanto honori illud Huſſio Bohemenſi, noſtroq́; Tindallo fuit, quod vitam in Euangelij tui cauſa perditam, magis abs te recipere, quam ipſi retinere maluerint? Spectemus è diuerſa parte aduerſarios tuos, quorum tam multas eſſe conſtat cædes, iniurias, crudelitates aduerſus tuos, multáq; item occultè & ſceleſtè ab ijſdem perpetrata, quæ nũquam ſperabant fore palam: Et tamen quid vnquam in angulis & tenebris ab illis eſt deſignatum tam occultè aduerſus Eccleſiam, quod non in apricum tua produxit producetq́; prouidentia? atque ita produxit, vt vnde ipſi laudis ſibi conceperunt animo opinionem, inde ſummum ſibi ipſis dedecus pepererint & contumeliam, quam nec vita effugere, nec morte vnquam finire poterint. Quis Guiſios, Boneros, Storios, Gardineros, tanquam execranda hominum nomina nunc non nouit? non exhorret, quis eorum facinora obliterabit dies, aut ſepeliet memoria? Et quid hos in tanta multitudine hoſtium tuorum recenſeo? Cui vnquam proſpere ceſſit tuo rebellare numini, aut hoſtem ſe eccleſiæ tuæ profiteri? Papæ nomen quàm erat aliquando in his terris celebre & glorioſum? Nunc quid putidius, quid probroſius? Cardinalitium faſtigium cœperunt primo admirari homines, multáque proſequi reuerentia: Sic Monachorum & Nonnarum collegia ſuum quondam habebant plauſum apud plebem ſimplicem & credulam: At poſtquam ſpreta veritate tua cæperunt graſſari contra te, tuorumq; homicidæ fieri, eo tandem ſunt prolapſi (exceptis paucis quos tua exemit gratia) vt reliqua fex nihil aliud iam eſſe præter vocabula quædam ad ignominiam relicta videatur.

Felix ac glorioſum pro Chriſto mortem oppetere.

Papæ nomen nunc probroſum

Cardinalium Monachorum, nõnarum nomina ad ignominiam nunc relicta.

Hæc nimirum (ſanctiſſime domine ac deus noſter) iuſtiſſimi iudicij tui ſunt præludia, ex quo haud difficile æſtimare ſit, quidnam in altero illo expectaturi ſint, quos in hoc ipſo ſeculo, hoc eſt in ſuo ipſorũ regno, tanta accumules infamia & dedecore. Sed omiſſis his, ad ſanctos tuos redeamus Martyres, quorum nomine, merito à nobis perenne velut ſacrificium laudis & gratiarum tuæ debetur, ſimul & habetur, bonitati. Primum quòd in eccleſiæ tuæ cauſa dimicantibus tam fortem & alacrem ſpiritum omnibuſq; tormentis maiorem aduerſus parricidas Papiſtas ſubminiſtraſti. Deinde quòd & nobis

3. bis in illorum deſudantibus hiſtoria propitius adeò clementiæ tuæ fauor affuerit. Debetur & hoc priuatim meo quoque nomine ſingulari tuæ pietati, quòd vitam toties alioqui nutantem, in hac tanta,
4. quantam tu ſolus nouiſti, laboris immenſitate conſeruatam tuo volueris beneficio. Verum illud inprimis omnes debemus pariter effuſiſſimo tuo in nos amori, quòd beatorum Martyrum tuorum, quos mundi huius ad flammas & cineres adegerit peruerſitas, cauſam & innocentiam velut è cinere recollectam, in lucem denuò notitiamq; eccleſiæ tuæ reuocare at patefacere dignatus ſis. Etſi enim dubium non eſt, quin in ſupremo illo iudicio tuo, quum virtutes cœlorum mouebuntur, omnis eorum ad amuſſim excutietur cauſa ante tribunal tuum, eſt tamen aliquid hîc quoq; in eccleſia tua cauſam ipſorum, facta, vitęq; virtutes cæteras non ignorari. Tunc autem ad illos vberior gloria, ad nos interea maior redundabit fructus, quando ex ipſorum rectè factis, integritate, innocentia, fide ac patientia conſtare poterit, non quid ipſi ſolum fecerint, ſed quid & nobis eorum ſit exemplo faciendum.

Deploratio noſtrorum morum et temporum.

Quanta degeneratio noſtrorum nunc hominum, ab exemplis ſuperiorum Martyrum.

Sed hic rurſus (dulciſſime Ieſu) opus eſt benigno fauoris tui præſidio. Nos enim qui filij Martyrum tuorum ſumus, quoſque maximè maiores noſtros imitari conueniebat, nunc nihil ferè parentum tenemus, præter vitæ ſolam hanc, quam ſuo partam ſanguine reliquerunt, libertatem: qua etiam ipſa nimium abutimur intemperanter, vt iam periculum ſit, ne non filij modò Martyrum, ſed ne fratres quidem ipſorum haberi mereamur. Quantum enim interſit diſcriminis, quamq; prorſus diſconuenit ordine toto noſtra conſuetudo ab illorum veſtigijs & diſciplina, pudet profectò referre. Sed quid ego tibi referam, cuius nihil non perſpicit maieſtas ac intuetur? Quanto illis ſtudio ac curæ fuit amore tui, cætera quæq;, adeoq; ſeipſos ad vitæ etiam contemptum abdicare, mundum cum omnibus deſiderijs flocci facere, voluptates tanquam nugas ſpernere? Nec ſinebant pericula vndiq; imminentia opibus congerendis multoq; minus honoribus cumulandis vacare. Contra verò noſtra nunc vita, ſtudium, omniſq; adeò contentio, quid niſi mundum ſpirat, quid aliud quàm perpetuum quoddam fluxarum rerum, opum, ac honorum aucupium videtur & ambitus? At illi quam præclarè ſecum actum putaſſent, ſi vel viuere modò licuiſſet. Ideoq; multi fuere eorũ qui Mariæ Reginæ facultates & poſſeſſiones omnes aduſq; extremum aſſem obtulerũt, dummodo ſolam ipſis remitteret conſcientiam. Et quę nos tanta hæc habendi intemperies exagitat, quibus nec vnus nec mediocris victus poſſit eſſe ſatis? Sine modo, ſine fine opibus, ſacerdotijs, cenſuiq; dilatando inhiamus. Quanto ambitu amicos fatigamus & inimicos, non vt viuamus ſolum, verum vt ſublimes viuamus & honorati? De fide, de manſuetudine eorum, tolerantia, ſimplicitate, ac patientia incredibili, quid dici ſatis poteſt? Quanta conſtantia, qua animi alacritate perpeſſi ſunt quicquid infligebatur, vindictam omnem deo remittentes, cui & cauſam commendabant? Nulla vis eos aduerſariorum deijcere, nec minæ frangere, non ludibria mouere, non pericula, non tormenta vlla conſternere, nec delinire blanditiæ potuerunt.

Neceſſaria precatio.

Componamus nunc noſtram cum his mollitiem. Sed pudor prohibet, Nam quæ tam leuis nos tentationis aura afflare poſſit, quæ non illico præcipites ac tranſuerſos rapiat in auaritiam, in faſtum, voluptates, turpitudinem, vindictam, & in quid non malorum? Quæ tam leuis obijci poterit iniuriola, pro qua non cœlum terræ miſcemus, mariáq; turbamus ab imo? Ex quo in promptu eſt colligere, quantum ab eo abſumus, vt mortem ſimus vnquam, tua cauſa ſubituri, ſiquando res Martyrium flagitet, quum nec affectus quidem iſtos tuo amputare iuſſu velimus. Quapropter vt Martyrum quidem illorum cauſa gratias agimus nomini tuo ſancto: ita noſtra viciſſim cauſa deprecamur, vt qui largitus ſis ipſis vincendi facultatem, nobis itidem pia eorundem exempla imitandi fœlicitatem aſpires: ſicque eccleſiæ tuæ affulgeat tua gratia, necubi ſeducti huius mundi illecebris, ſecordiores ipſi in retinenda Euangelij tui victoria, quàm illi in comparanda ſtrenui, videamur. Poſtremo quoniam hiſtoriam hanc tuo nutu ac voluntate aggreſſi, in ea re operam ſtudiumq; poſuimus, quo facta geſtaque ſanctorum tuorum (ſanctiſſime Ieſu) ad nominis tui gloriam, & in commodum eccleſiæ publicum emergerent, adde nunc labori fructum, ſimulq; hiſtoriæ tutelam in te recipias magnopere petimus, cui & opus ipſum, totumq; meipſum, quem tot modis tuæ miſericordiæ debeo, toto corpore & anima, totiſq; viribus commendo, dedico, conſecroque, cui omne cadat genu, omniſque vox & lingua confeſſionis gloriam per omnes eccleſias tribuat perſonetque. Amen.

¶ To the Right Vertuous, moſt Excellent and Noble Princeſſe, Queene ELIZABETH, our dread Lady, by the grace of God, Queene of England, Fraunce and Ireland, Defender *of Chriſtes Faith and Goſpell, and principall Gouernour both of the Realme, and al*ſo ouer the ſayd Churche of England and Ireland, vnder Chriſt the Supreme head of the ſame, &c.

Iohn Foxe her humble ſubiect wiſheth daily increaſe of Gods holy ſpirite and Grace, with long raigne, perfect health, and ioyfull peace, to gouerne hys flocke committed to her charge, to the example of all good Princes, the comforte of his Churche, and glory of hys bleſſed name.

CHRIST the Prince of all Princes, who hath placed you in your throne of Maieſtie, vnder him to gouerne the Church and Realme of England, geue your royall highneſſe long to ſit, and many yeares to raigne ouer vs, in all flouriſhing felicitie, to his gracious pleaſure, and long laſting ioy of all your ſubiects. Amen.

When I firſt preſented theſe Actes and Monvmentes vnto your Maieſtie (moſt deare Soueraigne Queene Elizabeth, our peaceable Salome) which your Maieſties rare clemencie receiued in ſuch gentle part: I well hoped that theſe my trauailes in this kynd of writing had bene well at an ende, whereby I might haue returned my ſtudies agayne to other purpoſes after myne owne deſire, more fitte then to write hiſtories, eſpecially in the Engliſh tong. But certaine euill diſpoſed perſons, of intemperant tongues, aduerſaries to good procedings, would not ſuffer me ſo to reſt, fuming and fretting, and raiſing vp ſuch miſerable exclamations at the firſt appearing of the booke, as was wonderfull to heare. A man would haue thought Chriſt to haue bene new borne agayne, and that Herode with all the Citie of Ieruſalem had bene in an vprore. Such bluſtring and ſtirring was then againſt that poore booke thorough all quarters of England, euen to the gates of Louaine: ſo that no Engliſh Papiſt almoſt in all the Realme thoght himſelfe a perfect Catholike, vnleſſe he had caſt out ſome word or other to geue that booke a blow.

Whereupon, conſidering with my ſelfe what ſhould mooue them thus to rage, firſt I beganne with more circumſpect diligence to ouerlooke agayne that I had done. In ſearching whereof, I found the fault both what it was, and where it lay: which was in deede, not ſo much in the Booke it ſelfe (to ſay the truth) as in an other certayne priuy myſterie and working of ſome: of whome Ioannes Auentinus ſhall tel vs in his own words, & ſhew vs who they be: Quibus, inquit, audiendi quæ fecerint. pudor eſt: nullus faciendi, quæ audire erubeſcunt. Illic vbi opus nihil verentur: hic vbi nihil opus eſt, ibi verentur. &c. Who beyng aſhamed belike to heare their worthy ſtratagemes lyke to come to light, ſought by what meanes they might, the ſtopping of the ſame. And becauſe they could not worke it per brachium ſeculare, by publike authoritie (the Lord of heauen long preſerue your noble Maieſtie) they renewed again an old wonted practiſe of theirs: doyng in like ſort herein as they did ſometymes with the holy Bible in the dayes of your renowmed father of famous memory king Henry the viij. who when they neither by manifeſt reaſon could gainſtand the matter contained in the booke, nor yet abide the comming out thereof, then ſought they by a ſubtile deuiſed traine to depraue the tranſlation, notes and Prologues thereof, bearing the king in hand and all the people, that there was in it a thouſand lies, and I cannot tell how many mo: Not that there were ſuch lies in it in very deede: but becauſe the comming of that booke ſhould not bewray their lying falſhood, therefore they thought beſt to begin firſt to make exceptions themſelues againſt it: playing in their ſtage like as Phormio did in the old Comedie, who beyng in all the fault himſelfe, began firſt to quarell with Demipho, when Demipho rather had good right to lay Phormio by the heeles.

With like facing brags theſe Catholike Phormiones thinke now to daſh out all good bookes, and amongſt others alſo, theſe Monuments of Martyrs. Which godly Martyrs as they could not abide beyng aliue, ſo neither can they now ſuffer their memories to lyue after their death, leaſt the acts of them beyng knowne, might bring perhaps their wicked acts and cruell murthers to deteſtation: and therfore ſpurne they ſo vehemently againſt this booke of hiſtories, with all kind of contumelies and vprores, railing and wondering vpon it, much like as I haue heard of a company of thieues, who in robbing a certaine true man by the high wayes ſide, when they had found a piece of gold or two about him more then he would be acknown of, they cried out of the falſhood of the world, meruailing and complaining what little truth was to be found in men.

Euen ſo theſe men deale alſo with me: for when they themſelues altogether delight in vntruths, and haue repleniſhed the whole Church of Chriſt with fained fables, lying miracles, falſe viſions, miſerable errors contained in their Miſſals and Portuſes, Breuiars, and Summaries, and almoſt no true tale in all their Saintes lyues and Feſtiuals, as now alſo no great truthes in our Louanian bookes, &c. Yet notwithſtanding, as though they were a people of much truth, and that the world did not perceiue them, they pretend a face and zeale of great veritie: And as though there were no hiſtories els in all the world corrupted, but onely this hiſtory of Actes and Monumentes, with tragicall voyces they exclaime and wonder vpon it, ſparing no coſt of Hyperbolicall phraſes, to make it appeare as full of lies as lines. &c. much after the like ſort of impudencie as Sophiſters vſe ſometymes in their Sophiſmes to doe (and ſometimes is vſed alſo in Rhetorike) that when an Argument commeth againſt them which they cannot well reſolue in deed, they haue a rule to ſhift of the matter with ſtoute wordes and tragicall admiration, whereby to daſh the Opponent out of countenance, bearing the hearers in hand, the ſame to be the weakeſt & ſlendereſt argument that euer was heard not worthy to be anſwered, but vtterly to be hiſſed out of the Schooles.

With like ſophiſtication theſe alſo fare with me, who when they neither can abide to heare their owne doings declared, nor yet deny the ſame, which they heare to be true for three or foure eſcapes in the booke committed (and yet ſome of them in the ſaid Booke amended) they neither reading the whole, nor rightly vnderſtanding that they read, inueigh and maligne ſo peruerſly the ſetting out therof, as though neither any word in al that ſtory were true, nor any other ſtory falſe in al the world beſides. And yet in accuſing theſe my accuſers, I do not ſo excuſe my ſelf, nor defẽd my book, as though nothing in it were to be ſponged or amended. Therfore I haue taken theſe paines, & reiterated my labours in trauailing out the ſtory again, doyng herein as Penelope did with her web, vntwiſting that ſhe had done before: Or as builders do ſometimes, which build and take down againe, either to tranſpoſe the faſhion, or to make the foundation larger. So in recogniſing this hiſtory I haue emploied a little more labour, partly to enlarge the argument which I tooke in hand: partly alſo to aſſay, whether by any paynes taking I might pacifie the ſtomacks, or ſatiſfie yͤ iudgments of theſe importune quarellers: which neuertheleſſe I feare I ſhall not do, when I haue done all I can. For well I know that all the heads of this hiſsing Hidra will neuer be cut of, though I were as ſtrong as Hercules. And if Apelles the skilfull Painter, when he had beſtowed all his cunning vpon a piece of worke, which no good artificer would or could greatly reprooue, yet was not without ſome controlling Sutor, which tooke vpon him Vltra crepidam, much more may I looke for the like in theſe controlling dayes.

Ne ſutor vltra crepidam.

Neuertheleſſe committing the ſucceſſe thereof vnto the Lord, I haue aduentured againe vpon this ſtory of the Church, and haue ſpent not onely my paines, but alſo almoſt my health therein, to bring it to this. Which now beyng finiſhed, like as before I did: ſo againe I exhibite and preſent the ſame vnto your Princely Maieſtie, bleſsing my Lord my God with all my heart: firſt for this libertie of peace and tyme, which through your peaceable gouernement he hath lent vnto vs for the gathering both of this and other like bookes, tractations and monuments requiſite to the behoofe of his Church, which hitherto by iniquitie of tyme could not be contriued in any Kinges raigne ſince the Conqueſt, before theſe Alcion dayes of yours.

Secondly, as we are all bound with publicke voyces to magnify our God for this happy preſeruation of your royall eſtate: ſo priuately for mine owne part, J alſo acknowledge my ſelfe bound to my God and to my Sauiour, who ſo graciouſly in ſuch weake health, hath lent me time, both to finiſh this worke, and alſo to offer the ſecond dedication thereof to your Maieſty: deſiring the ſame to accept in worth the donation thereof, if not for the worthineſſe of the thing geuen, yet as a teſtification of the bounden ſeruice and good will of one, which by this he here preſenteth, declareth what he would, if he had better to geue.

And though the ſtory being written in the popular tongue, ſerueth not ſo greatly for your own peculiar reading, nor for ſuch as be learned: yet I ſhall deſire both you and them, to conſider in it the neceſſity of the ignoraunt flocke of Chriſt committed to your gouernement in this Realme of England. Who, as they haue bene long led in ignoraunce, and wrapt in blindeneſſe for lacke ſpecially of Gods word, and partly alſo for wanting the light of hiſtory, pity I thought but that ſuch ſhould be helped, their ignoraunce relieued, and ſimplicity inſtructed. I conſidered they were the flocke of Chriſt, and your ſubiectes, belonging to your account and charge, bought with the ſame price and hauing as deare ſoules to the Lord as other. And though they be but ſimple and vnlearned, yet not vnapt to be taught if they were applyed. Furthermore what inconuenience groweth of ignoraunce, where knowledge lacketh, both I conſidered: and experience dayly teacheth.

And therefore hearing of the vertuous inclination of your Maieſty, what a prouident care, & Zeale full of ſolicitude you haue, minding (ſpeedely I truſt) to furniſh all quarters & countryes of this your realme with the voice of Chriſtes Goſpel, & faythful preaching of his word, I thought alſo not vnprofitable to adioyne vnto this your godly proceedinges, and to the office of the miniſtery, the knowledge alſo of Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, which in my minde ought not to be ſeparate from the ſame: that like as by the one the people may learne the rules and preceptes of doctrine: ſo by the other they may haue examples of Gods mighty working in his Church, to the confirmation of their fayth, and the edification of Chriſtian life. For as we ſee what light and profite commeth to the Church by hiſtories in olde times ſet forth of the Iudges, Kinges, Machabees, & the Actes of the Apoſtles after Chriſtes time: ſo likewiſe may it redound to no ſmall vſe in the Church, to knowe the Actes of Chriſtes Martirs now ſince the time of the Apoſtles.

Profite to be taken by examples of chriſtian Martyrs.

Gods workes to be obſerued in hiſtories.

Ad doctum Lectorem

Ioh. Foxus.

COgitanti mihi, verſantique mecum in animo quàm periculoſa res aleæ ſit, emittere nunc aliquid in publicum, quod in man[illegible] oculóſque multorũ ſubeat, his præſertim tam exulceratis moribus temporibúſq;, vbi tot hominum diſſidijs, tot ſtudijs partium, tot moroſis capitibus, tam rigidis cenſuris, & Criticorum ſannis feruent ferè omnia, vt difficillimum ſit quicquã tam circumſpectè ſcribere, quod non in aliquam calumniandi materiam rapiatur: perbeati profectò fœlicéſque videntur ij, quibus eum vitæ curſũ tenere liceat, vt in otio viuentes cum dignitate, ſic alienis frui queant laboribus, velut in theatro ocioſi ſedentes ſpectatores, vt nullum interim ipſis uel ex actione tædium, vel ex labore periculum metuendum ſit. Me vero neſcio quo pacto longe diuerſa quidem hactenus exercuit vitæ ratio, quippe cui nec fortunæ illam fœlicitatem, in cuius complexibus tam multos ſuauiter foueri video, nec otij amœnitatem experiri, vix etiam per omnem vitam deguſtare in continuo laborum ac negotiorum feruore ac contentione contigerit. Quanquam de fortuna parum queror, quam ſemper contempſi, quin neque de laboribus multum dicturus, ſi modo lobores ij, tantum vel prodeſſe vel placere cæteris poſſent hominibus, quantum me priuatim atterunt incommodántque. Nunc ad meæ infœlicitatis cumulum accedit inſuper, quod in eo argumenti genere laborandum fuit, quod præter lugubrem rerum ipſarum materiam, præter linguæ inamœnitatem, præter tractandi difficultatem, quæ vix nitorem recipiat orationis, eo porro autorem ipſum redigit anguſtiæ, vt neque falſa narrare ſine iniuria hiſtoriæ, nec verum dicere ſine magna ſua inuidia odióque multorum liceat. Nam cum in eo hiſtoriæ argumento mihi verſandum fuit, quod non ad ſuperiorum modo temporũ res geſtas altéque repetitas pertineat, ſed hanc ipſam ætatem noſtram, noſtræque gentis nunc homines etiamnum præſentes, viuóſque ſic attingat, ſic perfricet, ſic deſignet, quemadmodum in hoc materiæ genere neceſſario faciundum fuit: quæſo quid hîc mihi aliud expectandum ſit, niſi poſtquã fruſtrà me defatigando, valetudinem attriuerim, oculos perdiderim, ſenium acciuerim, corpus exhauſerim, demum vt poſt hæc omnia multorum me hominum odijs, ſibilis, inuidiæ ac calumnię exponam. In tot iſtis aſperitatibus cum nihil me tutum præſtare poterit, non Cæſar, non Monarchæ, non Rex, non Regina, non vlla huius mundi præſidia, pręter ſolam diuini numinis potentem deteram: principiò igitur atque ante omnia huc ceu ad tutiſſimum aſylum me recepi, huic me librúmque commendaui & commendo. Tum vero inſuper in eodem domino tuum illum candorem (docte piéque Lector) eãque tuam humanitatem appellare volui, qua ex humanioribus literis ſtudijſque te ſcio præditum, quo noſtris his ſudoribus tuę approbationis accedat calculus, aut ſi approbationem non mereamur, ſaltem ne fauoris deſit benignitas: cui ſi approbatum iri hanc hiſtoriæ noſtræ farraginem ſenſerimus, cæterorum iudicia obtrectatorum leuius feremus.

Nam alioquì non defuturos ſat ſcio qui varijs modis nobis faceſſent moleſtiam. Habebit hîc momus ſuos morſus, ſycophanta ſuos ſibilos, nec deerit Calumniatori ſua lingua & aculeus, quem infigat. Hic fidem detrahet hiſtoriæ. Ille artificium in tractando, alter diligentiam, vel in excutiendis rebus iudicium deſiderabit. Illi forſan operis diſplicebit moles, vel minus diſpoſita ſeruatâque temporum ratio. Et ſi nihil horum fuerit, attamen in tanta religionis pugna, in tanta iudiciorum, capitum, ſenſuum varietate, vbi ſuæ quiſque fauet ac blanditur factioni, quid tam affabrè aut circumſpectè enarrari poteſt, quod placeat vniuerſis? Quin & iam nunc muſſitari etiam audio a nonnullis, qui longa ſeſe teneri dicant expectatione, quoad hæc tandem (Legenda noſtra vt appellant Aurea) euulganda ſit: qui ſi noſtram primùm in eo tarditatem repræhenſam velint, næ ego ſuaues iſtos homines viciſſim rogatos velim, vt ipſi prius in edendis ſuis ſe præbeant expeditiores, quam alienam inceſſant lentitudinem.

Deinde ſi tardius exeat ipſorum opinione volumen, meminerint prouerbiali præcepto, lentam eſſe feſtinationem oportere. Et bos dicitur laſſus fortius pedem figere. Egimus in hac quidem re pro virili noſtra, egimus ſpero & pro officio, ſi non ſatis pro temporis modo expeditè, at egimus certè pro valetudine, addam porro, egimus ſupra valetudinem. Quin & illud ipſorum venia adijcere liceat, egiſſe nos maturius quam ipſis forſan expediet, qui in hunc nugantur modũ: certè maturatius egimus, quam tanti momenti & magnitudinis negotio conueniebat, quod accuratiorem in digerendis rebus moram curamq; poſtulabat, cùm a nobis vix integros datos eſſe menſes octodecim præparandæ materiæ, comportandis componendiſq; rebus, conferendis exemplaribus, lectitandis codicibus, reſcribendis his quæ ſcripto mandata erant, caſtigandis formulis, concinnandæ hiſtoriæ, & in ordinẽ redigendæ. &c, nouerunt ij qui teſtes adfuerint, & temporis conſcij; & laboris ſocij. Quòd ſi autem Legendæ ſua aurea titulum huc eò accomodant, quòd illius exemplo hanc ſimiliter fabuloſam putent hiſtoriam, hincque odioſo vocabulo eius preiudicent veritati, quid his reſpondeam aliud quam quòd ingenuè ſuam ipſi prodant calumniam, quam ne ad editionem quidem libri differre queant, prius de rebus dijudicantes quam nouerint. Atq; interim quidem illud bene habet quòd ipſis tandem aliquando Aurea ſua legenda pudeat tam fabuloſæ. Et tamen fabellis illis non puduit mundum tam diu ludificare, periculum etiam intentantes his, ſi qui Legenda illi, hoc eſt, mendaciſſimis illorum nugis auderent detrahere. Quare cum nihil magis eſſe poſſit impium quam ſacroſanctam eccleſię fidem fabulamentis huiuſmodi confictiſque præter omnem veri fidem delitijs commaculare, tamen ineptiſſimi iſti nugatores ex ſuo ingenio cęteros quóſque ſcriptores metientes, nec ipſi verum adferre ſatagunt, nec afferentibus alijs fidem habendam putāt, cuncta videlicet ſuis aureis ſomnijs ſimilia exiſtimantes. Quin apagè cum Aurea tua legenda, nugator impudens, quem ego librum, cum omnes eum ſcimus, nec ipſe ignoras prodigioſis mendaciorum portentis & vaniſſimis vndique commentis ſcatere, ne cū Homeri quidē fabulis conferre velim: tantum abeſt vt cū verè ſerijs grauibusq; eccleſię hiſtorijs quicquam commune habeat. Quid? an quia Papiſtis illis tuis & impuris monachis ſic libuit in ridiculis miraculorum ſuorum portentis ineptire, tu protinus nullam grauem hiſtoriæ authoritatem putas in eccleſia admittendam? Quin eadem lege & de Euſebij eccleſiaſtica, & tripartita Sozomeni & Socratis cæterorúmque hiſtorijs iudicemus. Sunt præter hæc & alia quædam de Sanctis & Diuis conſcripta miracula, quæ proprius ad Legendam hanc accedunt, & tamen nequaq̃ eo loco apud nos habentur, vt Legendæ illi Papiſticæ annumerentur, etiam quæ ſuſpectiſſimæ ſunt fidei. Quanq̃ de ſcriptoribus cæteris mea nihil intereſt cenſuram ferre. Quòd ad hanc verò noſtram περὶ τῶν μαρτυρικῶν attinet, teſtatum id velim vniuerſis, datam eſſe a nobis operam ſedulò ne quid vſquam ineſſet operi fabuloſum, aut eiuſmodi, quod vel a nobis fictum, vel quod Legendæ illi aureæ (magis dicam plumbeæ) non vndique foret diſſimillimum. Id quod res ipſa & natiua hiſtorię facies teſtari poterit, cuius tota textura ex ipſis Epiſcoporum Archiuis atque Regiſtris, partímque ex proprijs martyrum ipſorum literis hauſta ac cōflata videri poterit. In qua hiſtoria etſi neque id exigam vt ſingula hic ꝓ oraculis habeantur, at dedimus tamen pro virili operam vt ſi non plenè aſſequeremur, accederemus tamen quam proximè ad veterē illam hiſtoriæ legem, vt duas res, præcipuas hiſtoriæ peſtes vitaremus, timorem uidelicet & aſſentationem: quarum altera ſæpe minus dicit, altera ſemper plus addit quàm par eſt, narrationi. Sed huius rei fidem ex ipſo magis opere, quam ex mea commendatione aſtrui honeſtius eſt. Habet enim veritas ipſa ſimplicem ſuam & natiuam faciem, quam non erit deficile non muccoſis naribus lectori, ex ipſo vel orationis habitu, aut rerum aſpectu, ſiue alijs circumſtantiarum notis deprehendere. Sed vereor ne hîc quoque, quemadmodum cæteris in rebus locum habeat veteris prouerbij experientia: faciunt quippe mendaces vt ne vera etiam dicenti fides habeatur. Cum hactenus in Martyrologicis ſanctorum Legendis vitíſque deſcribendis mendacia, ac nugaciſſimæ ſomniorum fictiones pro veris legantur narrationibus, fit vt & cæteræ eiuſdem argumenti materiæ eandem pariter ſuſpicionem ſubeant, vt vix iam quicq̃ legi dicíue in eccleſia cum fide queat. Verùm huic malo cùm mederi nequeamus, ſatis erit quod noſtrarum erat virium id nos præſtitiſſe. Quod ſupereſt, diuinæ curandum prouidentiæ relinquamus. Atque de certitudine veritatéſque hiſtoriæ hæc hactenus: quæ vtinam ne tam vera quidem certaque eſſet, quàm iſti videri volunt, at falſa potius, conſimiliſque huic quam dicunt, Aurea ipſorum Legenda, aut Vitis patrum, aut Feſtiuali, aut Dormi ſecure, cæteríſque Papiſticis iſtis τοῖς τῶν ληρῶν λήροις foret. Nunc verò martyrum horum non a nobis ficta, ſed inflicta à vobis ſupplicia, atroxque cædes veriorem hanc comprobant hiſtoriam, pluréſq; ſuæ veritatis teſtes habent quàm vellemus ipſi qui hiſtoriam ſcripſimus. Venio iam ad alteram criminationis partem, quæ de Calendario fortaſſis obijcietur. Audio enim & hic mihi obſtrepere non tacitas modò ſententias, ſed apertas papiſtarum quorūdam voces, quibus iniquè a me factum videbitur, quòd antiquatis atque ex Calendario exploſis veteris eccleſiæ Diuis, Martyribus, Confeſſoribus, Virginibúſq;, nouos eorum loco Martyres at Confeſſores inſultiam. Primùm nulli ego veterum Diuorum hoc facto pręiudicatum velim. Neque verò ideò inter Diuos a me referuntur iſti, quòd inſeruntur in Calendarium. Hanc ego apotheoſin mihi nunq̃ ſumpſi, quam ſibi tam confidenter ſumpſit Gregorius nonus. Porro neque eò ſpectat hoc Calendarium, vt nouam aliquam feſtorum dierum legem præſcribam eccleſiæ, Tum multò minus cultum ſancti alicuius inſtituo. Feſtorum dierum iam plus ſatis erat in mundo. Vtinam dominicum ſolum ſabbatum dignè, atque vt par eſt, tranſigeremus. Habeant per me ſuum papiſtæ Calendarium, Habeat & eccleſia ſuos ſanctos, tum recētes tum veteranos, modò probatos, modò interim idē ne colantur, modò quàm ſint vetuſti, tàm verè etiam ſancti ſint.

Verum enimuero cum non dubitauit ſua etiam ætate Hieronimus multos exiſtimare eorum gehennæ ignibus cruciari, quos multi paſſim pro ſanctis haberent in eccleſia: quid hîc tum diceret Hieronimus, ſi modo ſuperſtes papiſticam hanc ſanctorum colluuiem & Calendaria, tot Papis, tot Epiſcopis, & Abbatibus oblita cerneret?

Quanquam à me quidem non aliter Calendarium hoc inſtitutum eſt, niſi vt pro Indice duntaxat ſuum cuiuſque Martyris menſem & annum deſignante, ad priuatum Lectoris ſeruiret vſum. Et tamen ſi in templis etiam fas ſit ſingulorum menſium dies proprijs ſanctorum nomenclaturis conſignare: qui minus liceat id mihi in veris iſtis facere Martyribus, quod ipſi in ſuis pſeudomartyribus tanta ſibi licentia, ne dicam impudentia, permiſerunt? Si non pœna, ſed cauſa Martyrem faceat, cur non vnum Cranmerum ſexcentis Becketis Cantuarienſibus non conferam, ſed prætulerim? Quid in Nicholao Ridleo videtur cum quouis Diuo Nicholao non conferendum? Qua in re Latimerus, Hoperus, Marſheus, Simpſonus, cæteriq; chriſtiani martyrij Candidati, inferiores ſummis maximíſque illis papiſtici Calendarij Diuis, imo multis etiam nominibus non præponendi videantur? Interim nullius ego boni ſanctique viri (modo qui verè ſanctus ſit) cauſam lædo, nec memoriam extinguo, nec gloriam minuo. Et ſi cui hoc diſpliceat Calendarium, memineret non in templis collocari, ſed domeſticæ tantum lectioni præparari.

Sed miſſis hiſce aduerſariorum calumnijs, ad te, docte candidéque Lector (quoniam hæc ad te inſtituta eſt epiſtola) tempus eſt vt recurrat oratio, cuius in his rebus iudicium vt pluris æſtimo, ita egeo magis hîc quoque patrocinio. Scio enim in vaſta hac congerie reperies nonnulla, ad quæ merito corruges frontem. Neque vero fieri facile potuit, præſertim in tanta operis præcipitatione, vt cuncta ad amuſſim atque ad vnguem perfectè adeo elimarētur, quin alicubi vel ex laſſitudine dormitaret ſcriptor, vel per incuriam excideret authori aliquid, vel ex feſtinatione eueniret, quod cani ſolet in prouerbijs nimium præ ſtudio properanti, cæcos nimirum producenti catulos. In quibus quidem excutiendis rebus magis nobis venia tua quam cenſura imploranda eſt. Quamobrem paucis hæc apud te, docte ſimul & humaniſſime Lector, ante operis ingreſſum libuit προοιμιάζειν, vt ſi quid inter euoluendum occurrerit, non omnibus perfectum numeris, non ad Cleantis lucernam elucubratum, non ad exquiſitum Theologorum acumen expreſſum aut minus alioqui acutiſſimis tuis dignum naribus, cogites hæc non tuis auribus data eſſe, ſed meæ hoc eſt craſſioris turbæ hominibus, a quibus facilius leguntur libri quam iudicantur. Aut ſi ne id quidem grauiſſimæ tuæ ſententiæ fecerit ſatis, liceat illa mihi vti lege, qua ſemper permiſſum eſt opere in magno ſcriptori obrepere ſomnum. Quod ſi vero tuam hac in re facilitatem impetrauero, minus laborabo quid cæteri obſtrepant, græci memor prouerbij, cuius & ipſos commeminiſſi velim: μωμήσεταί τις θᾶσσον ἢ μιμήσεται.

To the true and faythfull Congregation of Chriſtes Vniuerſall Church, with all and ſinguler the members therof, whereſoeuer congregated or diſperſed through the Realme of England, a Proteſtation or Petition of the Author, wiſhing to the ſame aboundaunce of all peace and tranquility, with the ſpeedy comming of Chriſt the Spouſe, to make an ende of all mortall myſerye.

SAlomon the peaceable Prince of Iſraell, as we read in the thirde of Kynges, after he had finiſhed the buildyng of the Lordes Temple (which he had vij. yeares in hand) made his petition to the Lord for all that ſhould pray in the ſayde Temple, or turne theyr face toward it. And his requeſt was graũted, the Lord aunſwering him, as we read in the ſayd booke. cap. 6. I haue heard (ſayth he) thy prayer and haue ſanctified this place. &c. Albeit the infinite Maieſty of God is not to be compaſſed in any materiall walles, yet it ſo pleaſed his goodneſſe to reſpect this praier of the king, that not only he promiſed to heare thẽ which there prayed, but alſo repleniſhed the ſame with his own glory. For ſo we read again in the book aforeſayd: Et non poterant miniſtrare propter nebulã, quia repleuit gloria domini, domũ domini. 3. Re. 7.

Vpon like truſt in Gods gracious goodnes, if I ſinnefull wretch, not comparing with the building of that Temple, but folowing the zeale of the builder might either be ſo bold to aske, or ſo happye to ſpeed, after my vij. yeares trauayle about this Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory, moſt humbly would craue of almighty God to beſtow his bleſſing vpon the ſame, that as the prayers of them, which prayed in the outward Temple were heard: ſo all true diſpoſed mindes which ſhall reſort to the reading of this preſent Hyſtory conteining the Actes of Gods holy Martyrs, and monumentes of his Church, may by example of theyr lyfe, fayth, & doctrine, receiue ſome ſuch ſpirituall fruit to theyr ſoules through the operation of his grace, that it may be to the aduauncement of his Glory, and profite of his Churche, through Chriſt Ieſus our Lord. Amen.

But as it happened in that Temple of Salomon, that all which came thither, came not to pray, but many to prate, ſome to gaze and ſee newes, other to talke and walke, ſome to buy and ſell, ſome to carpe and finde fault, and finally ſome alſo at the laſt to deſtroy and plucke down, as they did in deed. For what is in this world ſo ſtrong, but it will be impugned? what ſo perfect, but it will be abuſed? ſo true, that will not be contraryed? or ſo circumſpectly done, wherein wrangling Theon will not ſet in his tooth? Euen ſo neither do I looke for any other in this preſent Hyſtory: but that amongeſt many well diſpoſed Readers, ſome Waſpes neſt or other will be ſtyrred vp to buſze about mine eares. Such a daungerous thing it is now a dayes to write or do any good, but either by flattering a man muſt offend the Godly, or by true ſpeaking procure hatred with the wicked. Of ſuch ſtinging Waſpes and buſzing Drones I had ſufficient triall in my former edition before, who if they had found in my book any iuſt cauſe to carpe, or vpon any true zeale of truth had proceded agaynſt the vntruths of my ſtory and had brought iuſt proofes for the ſame, I could haue right well abide it. For God forbid, but that faultes, whereſoeuer they be, ſhould be detected and accuſed. And therfore Accuſers in a Common wealth after my mind do ſerue to no ſmall ſtead.

But then ſuch Accuſers muſt beware they play not the dog, of whom Cicero in his Oration ſpeaketh, which being ſet in Capitolio to fray away Theeues by night, left the Theeues and fell to barcke at true men walking in the day. Where true faultes be, there to bay & barcke is not amiſſe. But to carpe where no cauſe is, to ſpye in other ſtrawes, and to leape ouer theyr owne blockes: to ſwalow Camels, and to ſtrayne gnattes: to oppreſſe truth with lyes, and to ſet vp lyes for truth, to blaſpheme the deare Martyrs of Chriſt, and to Canonize for Sayntes, whom Scripture would ſcarce allow for good Subiectes, that is intollerable. Such barcking Curres, if they were well ſerued, would be made a whyle to ſtoope. But with theſe brauling ſpirites I entend not at this time much to wraſtle.

Wherefore to leaue them a while, till further leaſure ſerue me to attend vpon them, thus much I thought in the meane ſeaſon, by way of Proteſtation or petition, to write vnto you both in generall & particular the true members and faythful Congregation of Chriſtes Church, whereſoeuer either cõgregated together, or diſperſed through the whole Realme of England, that forſomuch as all the ſeeking of theſe Aduerſaryes is to do what they can, by diſcrediting of this Hiſtory with ſlaunders & ſiniſter ſurmiſes, how to withdraw the Readers frõ it: This therfore ſhalbe in few wordes to premoniſh and deſire of all and ſinguler of you (all well minded louers and partakers of Chriſtes Goſpell) not to ſuffer your ſelues to be deceiued with the big brags, and hyperbolicall ſpeeches of thoſe ſlaundering tongues, whatſoeuer they haue or ſhall hereafter exclame agaynſt the ſame. But indifferently ſtaying your iudgement till truth be tryed, you will firſt peruſe, & then refuſe: meaſuring the vntruthes of this Hyſtory, not by the ſcoaring vp of theyr hundreds and thouſandes of lyes which they geue out, but wiſely weying the purpoſe of theyr doinges, according as you finde, and ſo to iudge of the matter.

To read my bookes I allure neither one nor other. Euery man as he ſeeth cauſe to like as he liſt. If any ſhall thinke his labor to much in reading this hiſtory, his choyce is free either to read this, or any other which he more mindeth. But if the fruite thereof ſhall recompence the Readers trauell, then would I wiſh no man ſo light eared, to be caryed away for any ſiniſter clamour of Aduerſaryes, who many times depraue good doinges, not for the faultes they finde, but therefore finde faultes becauſe they would depraue. As for me and my hiſtory, as my will was to profite all and diſpleaſe none: ſo if skill in any part wanted to will, yet hath my purpoſe bene ſimple, and certes the cauſe no leſſe vrgent alſo, which moued me to take this enterpriſe in hand.

The partiall dealing of ſtorie writers.

For firſt to ſee the ſimple flocke of Chriſt, eſpecially the vnlearned ſort, ſo miſerably abuſed, and all for ignoraunce of hiſtory, not knowing the courſe of times, and true diſcent of the Church, it pittyed me, that part of diligence ſo long to haue bene vnſupplyed in this my countrey Church of Englande. Agayne conſidering the multitude of Chronicles and ſtory writers, both in England, and out of England, of whome the moſt part haue bene either Monkes or Clientes to the ſea of Rome, it grieued me to behold how partially they handled theyr ſtoryes. Whoſe paynefull trauell albeit I cannot but cõmend, in committing diuers thinges to writing, not vnfruitful to be knowne, or vnpleaſant to be read: yet it lamented me to ſee in theyr Monumentes the principall poyntes, which chiefly concerned the ſtate of Chriſtes Church, and were moſt neceſſary of all chriſten people to be knowne, either altogether pretermitted, or if any mention thereof were inſerted, yet were all things drawn to the honor ſpecially of the Church of Rome, or els to the fauor of theyr owne ſect of Religion. Wherby the vulgare ſort, hearing and reading in theyr writinges no other church mentioned or magnified but onely that Church which here floriſhed in this world in riches and iollity, were drawne alſo to the ſame perſuaſion, to thinke no other Church to haue ſtand in all the earth, but onely the Church of Rome.

In the number of this ſort of writers, beſides our Monkes of England (for euery Monaſtery almoſt had his Chronicler) I might alſo recite both Italian, and other countrey authors, as Platina, Sabellicus, Nauclerus, Martinus, Antoninus, Vincẽtius, Onuphrius, Laziardus, Georgius Lilius, Pollid. Virgilius, with many more; who taking vpon thẽ to intermeddle with matters of the church, although in part they expreſſe ſome truth in matters concerning the Biſhops and ſea of Rome: yet in ſuppreſſing an other part, they play with vs, as Ananias and Saphira did with their mony, or as Apelles did in Pliny, who painting the one halfe of Venus comming out of the ſea, left the other halfe vnperfect. So theſe writers while they ſhew vs one half of the B. of Rome, the other halfe of him they leaue vnperfect, & vtterly vntold. For as they paynt him out on the one part gliſtering in welth and glorye, in ſhewing what ſucceſſion the Popes had from the chaire of S. Peter, when they firſt began, and how long they ſate, what Churches and what famous buildings they erected, how farre theyr poſſeſſions reached, what lawes they made, what councels they called, what honour they receiued of Kynges and Emperours, what Princes and Countryes they brought vnder theyr authority, with other like ſtratagemes, of great pompe and royalty: ſo on the other ſide what vices theſe Popes brought with them to theyr ſeat, what abhominatiõs they practiſed, what ſuperſtition they mainteined, what Idolatry they procured, what wicked doctrine they defended contrary to the expreſſe word of God, to what hereſies they fell, into what diuiſion of ſectes they cut the vnity of chriſtian Religion, how ſome practiſed by Simony, ſome by Necromancy and Sorcery, ſome by poyſoning, ſome indenting with the Deuill to come by theyr Papacy, what hypocriſy was in theyr liues, what corruptiõ in theyr doctrine, what warres they rayſed, what bloudſhed they cauſed, what treachery they trauerſed agaynſt their Lordes and Emperours, impriſoning ſome, betraying ſome to the Templaryes and Saracẽs, in bringing other vnder theyr feet, alſo in beheading ſome, as they did with Fredericus and Conradinus, the heires and oſſpring of the houſe of Fredericus Barbaroſſa. an. 1269. furthermore how mightely almighty God hath ſtand agaynſt them, how their warres neuer proſpered agaynſt the Turke, how the iudgementes of the godly learned frõ time to time haue euer repugned agaynſt theyr errours, &c. of theſe and a thouſand other mo, not one word hath bene touched, but all kept as vnder Benedicite in Auriculer confeſſion.

This partiall dealing and corrupt handling of Hiſtoryes, when I conſidered, I thought with my ſelf nothing more lacking in the church, then a ful & a complet hiſtory, which being faythfully collected out of all our Monaſtical writers & writtẽ Monuments, ſhould conteine neither euery vain written fable for that would be to much, nor yet leaue out any thing neceſſary, for that would be to little: but with a moderate diſcretion taking the beſt of euery one, ſhould both eaſe the labor of the reader from turning ouer ſuch a number of writers: and alſo ſhould open the plaine truth of times lying long hid in obſcure darcknes of antiquity. Wherby all ſtudious Readers, beholding as in a glaſſe the ſtate, courſe, and alteration of Religion, decay of doctrine, and the controuerſies of the church, might diſcerne the better betwene antiquity and nouelty. For if the things which be firſt (after the rule of Tertullian) are to be preferred before thoſe that be latter, then is the reading of hiſtories much neceſſary in the church, to know what went before, and what folowed after. And therfore not without cauſe Hiſtoria, in old authors is called the witneſſe of times, the light of verity, the life of memory, teacher of life, & ſhewer of antiquitie. &c. Without the knowledge wherof mans life is blind, and ſoone may fall into any kind of errour, as by manifeſt experience we haue to ſee, in theſe deſolate latter times of the Church, when as the Byſhops of Rome vnder colour of antiquity haue turned truth into hereſy and brought ſuch new found deuiſes of ſtraunge doctrine and Religiõ as in the former age of the church were neuer heard of before, and all through the ignorance of times, and for lacke of true hiſtory.

Primum quodq; veriſſimum eſt Tertul.

For to ſay the truth, if times had bene well ſearched, or if they which wrote Hyſtories had without partiality gone vpright betwene God and Baall, halting on neither ſide, it might well haue bene foũd the moſt part of all this catholicke corruptiõ intruded into the church by the biſhops of Rome, as Tranſubſtantiation, leuation, and adoration of the ſacrament, auriculer confeſsion, forced vowes of Prieſtes not to mary, veneration of Images, priuate and ſatiſfactory Maſſes, the order of Gregories Maſſe now vſed, the vſurped authoritie, & Summa poteſtas of the ſea of Rome, with all the route of their ceremonies and wiedes of ſuperſtition ouergrowing nowe the Churche, all theſe (I ſay) to bee new nothinges lately coyned in the minte of Rome without any ſtampe of antiquitie, as by readyng of this preſent hiſtory ſhall ſufficiently, I truſt, appeare. Whiche hiſtory therefore I haue here taken in hand, that as other ſtory writers heretofore haue employed their trauayle to magnifie the Church of Rome, ſo in this hiſtory might appeare to all Chriſtian readers the Image of both Churches, as well of the one as of the other: eſpecially of the poore oppreſſed and perſecuted Churche of Chriſt. Which perſecuted Church though it hath bene of long ſeaſon troden vnder foote by enemyes, neglected in the world, nor regarded in hiſtories, and almoſt ſcarſe viſible or knowne to worldly eyes, yet hath it bene the true Church only of God, wherin he hath mightely wrought hetherto in preſeruing the ſame in all extreeme diſtreſſes, continually ſtirring vp frõ time to tyme faythful miniſters, by whõ alwayes hath bene kept ſome ſparkes of hys true doctrine and Religion.

Image of both Churches.

Now for aſmuch as the true Church of God goeth not lightly alone, but is accompanyed wyth ſome other Church or Chappel of the deuill to deface and maligne the ſame, neceſſary it is therfore the difference betweene them to be ſene, and the deſcent of the right Churche to be deſcribed from the Apoſtles tyme. Which hetherto in moſt part of hiſtories hath bene lacking, partly for feare, that men durſt not: partly for ignoraunce that men could not diſcerne rightly betweene the one and the other. Who beholding the Church of Rome to be ſo viſible and glorious in the eyes of the worlde, ſo ſhining in outward beauty, to beare ſuche a porte, to cary ſuche a trayne and multitude, and to ſtand in ſuch hye authoritie, ſuppoſed the ſame to be only the right Catholike mother. The other because it was not ſo viſibly known in the world, they thought therfore it could not be the true church of Chriſt. Wherin they were far deceaued. For although the right church of God be not ſo inuiſible in the world, that none can ſee it, yet neyther is it ſo viſible agayne that euery worldly eye may perceiue it. For like as is the nature of truth: ſo is the proper condition of the true Churche, that commonly none ſeeth it, but ſuch onely, as be the members and partakers thereof. And therefore they which require that Gods holy Church ſhould be euident and viſible to the whole world ſeeme to define the great ſinagogue of the world rather then the true ſpirituall Church of God.

The deſcent of Chriſts Church from the Apoſtles time deſcribed.

How the true Church of Chriſt is viſible, and not viſible.

In Chriſtes time who would haue thought, but the congregations and Councelles of the Phariſies had ben the right church: and yet had Chriſt an other Church in earth beſides that, which albeit it was not ſo maniſeſt in the ſight of the world, yet was it the onely true Church in the ſight of God. Of this Church ment Chriſt ſpeaking of the Temple, whiche he woulde rayſe agayne the thyrd day. And yet after that the Lord was riſen, he ſhewed not himſelfe to the worlde, but onely to his electe which were but few. The ſame Churche after that encreaſed and multiplied mightely amonge the Iewes, yet had not the Iewes eyes to ſee Gods Churche, but did perſecute it till at length all their whole nation was deſtroyed.

After the Iewes, then came the heathen Emperours of Rome, who hauing the whole power of the world in their hands, did what the world could do, to extinguiſh the name and church of chriſt. Whoſe violence cõtinued the ſpace of 3. hundreth yeares. All which while the true church of chriſt was not greatly in ſight of the world, but rather was abhorred euery where, and yet notwithſtanding the ſame ſmall ſelly flocke ſo deſpiſed in the worlde, the Lorde highly regarded and mightely preſerued. For although many then of the Chriſtians did ſuffer death: yet was their death neither loſſe to them, nor detriment to the Church: but the more they ſuffered, the more of theyr bloud encreaſed.

In the time of theſe Emperours, God rayſed vp then in this Realme of Britaine diuers worthy teachers and witneſſes, as Elnanus, meduinus, Meltiuianus, Amphibolus, Albanus, Aaron, Iulius and other moe In whoſe time the doctrine of fayth without mens traditions was ſincerely preached. After theyr death and Martyrdom, it pleaſed the Lord to prouide a generall quietnes to his Church, wherby the number of hys flocke began more to encreaſe.

In this age then followed here in the ſayd land of Britayne Faſtidius, Niuianus, Patricius, Bacchiarius, Dubricius, Congellus, Kentigernus, Helmotus, Dauid, Daniell, Sampſon, Elnodugue, Aſaphus, Cildas, Heulanus Elbodus, Dinothus, Samuell, Niuius, and a great ſort moe, whiche gouerned the Churche of Britayne by Chriſten doctrine a long ſeaſon, albeit the ciuil gouernours for the tyme, were then diſſolute & careles, as Gildas very ſharply doth lay to theyr charge, and ſo at length were ſubdued by the Saxons.

The antiquitye of the Churche here in England with the deſcent of the ſame.

All this while about the ſpace of foure hundred yeares, Religion remayned in Britayne vncorrupt and the word of Chriſt truely preached, till about the comming of Auſten and of hys companions from Rome, many of the ſayd Britayne preachers were ſlayne by the Saxons. After that began Chriſten fayth to enter & ſpring among the Saxons, after a certayne romiſh ſort, yet notwithſtanding ſomewhat more tollerable, thẽ were the times, which after folowed, through the dilligent induſtry of ſome godly teachers, which then liued amongeſt them: as Aidanus, Finianus, Coleman Archbiſhop of Yorke Beda, Iohn of Beuerlay, Alcuinus, Noetus, Hucharius, Serlo, Achardus, Ealredus, Alexander Neckam, Negellus, Fenallus, Alfricus, Sygeferthus & ſuch other: who though they erred in ſome few thinges, yet neither ſo groſſely, nor ſo greatly to be complayned of in reſpect of the abuſes that followed. For as yet, all thys while, the error of Tranſubſtantiation and leuation, with auriculer confeſsion was not crept in for a publicke doctrine in Chriſtes Church, as by theyr owne Saxon Sermon, made by Aelfricus, & ſet out in the ſecond Volume of this preſent hiſtory may appeare pag. 1114. During the which meane time although the Biſhops of Rome wer had here in ſome reuerẽce with the Clergy: yet had they nothing as yet to do in ſetting lawes touching matters of the Church of England: but that only appertayned to the kings and gouernours of the land as is in this ſtory to be ſeene.pag.754.

Tranſubſtantiation not yet receaued for a publicke doctrine.

The Church when it began to fall from God. Æneas Siluius ſayth that Mathilda made the Pope heyre of thoſe landes, which is called the Patrimonye of S. Peter. Ex Auen. lib. 6. Monkery when it beganne to raigne in England.

And thus the Church of Rome albeit it began then to decline a pace frõ God, yet during all this while it remayned hitherto in ſome reaſonable order, till at length after that the ſayd Biſhops began to ſhout vp in the world through the liberalitie of good Princes, and eſpecially by Mathilda a noble Duches of Italy. Who at her death made the Pope heyre of all her landes, and indued his ſea, with great reuenewes. Then riches begot ambition. Ambition deſtroyed Religion, ſo that all came to ruine. Out of this corruption ſprang forth here in Englãd (as did in other places more) an other romiſh kind of Monkery, worſe then the other before, being much more drowned in ſuperſtition and ceremonies, which was about the yeare of our Lord.980. Of this ſwarme was Egbertus Aigelbert. Egwine, Boniſace, Wilfrede Agathon, Iames, Romayne, Cedda, Dunſtane, Oſwold, Athelwold, Athelwine Duke of Eaſtangles, Lanfrancke, Anſelme and ſuch other.

And yet in this tyme alſo through Gods prouidence, the Churche lacked not ſome of better knowledge and iudgement, to weigh with the darcknes of thoſe dayes. For although king Edgar, with Edward his baſe ſonne being ſeduced by Dunſtane, Oſwold and other Monkiſh Clerkes, was thẽ a great author and fautor of much ſuperſtition, erecting as many Monaſteries, as were Sondayes in the yeare: yet notwithſtanding this continued not long. For eftſoones after the death of Edgar came king Ethelrede and Queene Elſthred his mother, with Alferus Duke of merceland, and other peeres and nobles of the Realme, who diſplaced the Monkes againe, and reſtored the maryed Prieſts to their old poſſeſsions and liuings. Moreouer after that followed alſo the Danes whiche ouerthrew thoſe Monkiſh foundations, as faſt as king Edgar had ſet them vp before.

The true Church when it began firſt to decay.

And thus hetherto ſtode the condition of the true Church of Chriſt, albeit not without ſome repugnance and difficultie, yet in ſome meane ſtate of the truth & veritie, till time of pope Hildebrand called Gregory 7. which was nere about the yeare. 1080. And of Pope Innocentius 3. in the yeare 1215. By whome altogether was turned vpſide downe, all order broken, diſipline diſſolued, true doctrine defaced. Chriſtian faith extinguiſhed. In ſtead whereof was ſet vp preaching of mens decrees dreames, and idle traditions. And whereas before truth was free to be diſputed amongeſt learned men, now libertie was turned into law, Argument into Authoritie. Whatſoeuer the Byſhoppe of Rome denounced, that ſtode for an oracle, of all men to be receaued without oppoſition or contradiction: whatſoeuer was contrary, ibſo facto it was hereſie, to be puniſhed with fagot and flaming fire. Then began the ſincere fayth of this Engliſh Church, which held out ſo long, to quayle. Then was the clerre ſunne ſhine of Gods word ouerſhadowed, with miſtes and darcknes, appearing like ſackecloth to the people, which neither could vnderſtand that they read, nor yet permitted to read that they could vnderſtand. In theſe miſerable dayes, as the true viſible Church beganne now to ſhrinke and keep in for feare: ſo vpſtart a new ſort of players to furniſh the ſtage, as ſchole Doctours, Canoniſtes, and foure orders of Friers. Beſides other Monaſticall ſectes and fraternities of infinite variety. Which euer ſince haue kept ſuch a ſtirre in the Church, that none for them almoſt durſt rout, neyther Cęſar, king, nor ſubiect. What they defined, ſtode. What they approued, was Catholicke: What they condemned, was hereſie: whom ſoeuer they accuſed, none almoſt could ſaue. And thus haue theſe hetherto continued or raigned rather in the Church, the ſpace now of foure hundreth yeares and odde. During which ſpace, the true Church of Chriſt, although it durſt not openly appeare in the face of the world, oppreſſed by tyranny: yet neyther was it ſo inuiſible or vnknown: but by the prouidence of the Lord, ſome remnaunt alwayes remayned from tyme to time, which not onely ſhewed ſecret good affection to ſincere doctrine, but alſo ſtode in open defence of truth agaynſt the diſordered Churche of Rome.

The true Church continueth in the middeſt of their enemies.

To diſcend now ſomewhat lower in drawing out the diſcent of the Churche. But what do I ſtand vpon recitall of names,which almoſt are infinite.

Wherfore if any be ſo farre beguiled in his opinion to thinke the doctrine of the church of Rome (as it now ſtandeth)to be of ſuch antiquitie, & that the ſame was neuer impugned before the time of Luther and Zuinglius now of late,let him read theſe hiſtories: or if he thinke the ſayd hiſtorie not to be of ſufficient credite to alter his perſwaſion let him peruſe the Actes and Statutes of Parliamentes, paſſed in this realme of auncient time and therein conſider and conferre the courſe of times;where he may finde and read.An.5.Regis Richardi.2. in the yeare of our Lord.1380,of a great nũber(which there be called euill perſons) goyng about from town to town in freeſe gownes preaching vnto the people.&c. which preachers although the wordes of the Statute do terme there to be diſſembling perſons,preaching dyuers Sermons contayning hereſies & notorious errours, to the emblemiſhment of Chriſten faith,& of holy Church &c.as the words do there pretend:yet notwithſtanding euery true Chriſtian reader may conceaue of thoſe Preachers to teache no other doctrine, then nowe they heare theyr owne Preachers in Pulpits Preache, agaynſt the Biſhoppe of Rome and the corrupte hereſies of his Churche.

Statut. in An.5. Rich.2.An.Domini.1390.

Furthermore he ſhall finde likewiſe in Statut.An.2.Henr.4.Cap.15. in the yeare of our Lord. 1402. an other lyke company of good Preachers and faythful defenders of true doctrine agaynſt blynd hereſie and errour: Whom albeit the wordes of the Statute there, through corruption of that time, do falſely terme, to be falſe and peruerſe Preachers, vnder diſſembled holines, teaching in thoſe dayes openly and priuely new doctrines and hereticall opinions contrary to the faythe and determination of holy Churche.&c. yet notwithſtanding whoſoeuer readeth hiſtories and conferreth the order and diſcent of times,ſhall vnderſtand theſe to be no falſe teachers, but faythfull witneſſes of the truth, not teaching any newe doctrines contrary to the determination of holy Church: But rather ſhall finde that Churche to be vnholy, which they Preached agaynſt, teaching rather it ſelfe hereticall opinions contrary both to antiquitie, and veritie of Chriſtes true Catholicke Churche.

Ex Statut. in An.2.Henr.4. cap.15.An.Domini 1402.

Of the lyke number alſo, or greater, of lyke true faythfull fauourers and followers of Gods holy worde, we find in the yeare of our Lord. 1422. ſpecified in a letter ſent from Henry Chicheſley Archbiſhop of Canterbury,to Pope Martin 5. in the fift yeare of his Popedome,where mention is made of ſo many here in Engand infected: (as he ſayde) with the hereſies of Wickleffe and Huſſe, that without force of any army they could not be ſuppreſſed.&c. Whereupon the Pope ſent two Cardinals to the Archbiſhop to cauſe a tenth to be gathered of all ſpirituall and Religious men, and the money to be layde in the chamber Apoſtolicke, and if that were not ſufficient, the reſidue to bee made vppe of Chalices, Candleſtickes, and other implementes of the Churche.&c.

Ex Literis Archiepiſcopi Cant.ad Martinum.5. Anno. Domini.1422.

What ſhall neede then any more witnes to proue this matter, when you ſee ſo many yeares agoe, whole armyes and multitudes, thus ſtanding agaynſt the Pope? who thoughe they bee termed here for heretickes and ſchiſmatickes, yet in that, which they call hereſie, ſerued they the liuing Lord, within the Arke of his true ſpirituall and viſible Churche.

And where is then the friuolous bragge of the Papiſtes, which make ſo muche of there paynted ſheath, & would nedes beare vs downe, that this gournment of the Church of Rome which now is, hath bene of ſuch an old ſtanding,time out of minde,euen from the primitiue Antiquitie, & that neuer was any other church demonſtrable here in earth for men to follow,beſides the ſaid only Catholick mother church of Rome? whẽ as we haue ſufficiently proued before by the continual deſcẽt of the Church till this preſent tyme, that the ſayd Church, after the doctrine which is now reformed, is no new begunne matter, but euen the olde continued Churche, by the prouidence and promiſe of Chriſt, ſtill ſtanding, which albeit it hath bene of late yeares repreſſed by the tyranny of Romayne Byſhops, more then before: yet notwithſtanding it was neuer ſo oppreſſed but God hath euer maintayned in it the truth of his Goſpell, agaynſt hereſies and errours of the Church of Rome, as in thys hiſtory more at full is to be ſeene.

Bloudy markes of Chriſtes paſſion ſeene on mens garmentes in Germany. Anno. 1501.

Let vs now proceede farther as we began, deducing this deſcent, of the Churche vnto the 1501. yeare. In which yeare the Lord began to ſhew in the partes of Germany wonderfull tokens, and bloudy markes of his Paſſion, as the bloudy Croſſe, hys nayles, ſpeare, and Crowne of thornes, which fell from heauen vpon the garments and cappes of men, and rockes of woman, as you may further read in this booke pag. 816. By the which tokens almighty God (no doubt) preſignified what grieuous afflictions and bloudy perſecutions ſhoulde then begin to enſue vppon his Churche for hys Goſpels ſake, according as in this hiſtory is deſcribed, wherein is to be ſeene what Chriſten bloud hathe bene ſpilt, what perſecutions rayſed, what tyranny exerciſed, what tormentes deuiſed, what trechery vſed agaynſt the poore flocke and Church of Chriſt, in ſuch ſort as ſince Chriſtes tyme greater hath not bene ſeene.

Seuentie yeares of captiuitie well neare expired.

And now by reuolution of yeares we are come from the time of. 1501. to that yeare now preſent 1570. In which the full ſeuenty yeares of the Babilonicall captiuitie draweth now well to an ende, if we count from the firſt appearing of theſe bloudy markes aboue mentioned. Or if wee recken from the beginning of Luther, and hys perſecution, then lacketh yet xvi. yeres. Now what the Lord wil do with this wicked world, or what reſt he will geue to hys Church after theſe long ſorrowes, he is our father in heauen, his will be done in earth, as ſeemeth beſt to his diuine maieſtie.

Exhortation to the Church of England.

In the meane time let vs for our partes with all patient obedience wayt vpon hys gracious leyſure and glorifie his holy name, and edifie one an other with all humilitie. And if there cannot be an end of our diſputing, and contending one agaynſt an other: yet let there be a moderation in our affections. And for aſmuch as it is the good will of our God, that Sathan thus ſhould be let loſe amongſt vs for a ſhort time: yet let vs ſtriue in the meane while what wee can to amende the malice of the tyme with mutuall humanitie. They that be in errour, let them not diſdayne to learne. They whiche haue greater talentes of knowledge committed, inſtruct in ſimplicitie them that be ſimple. No man liueth in that common wealth where nothing is amiſſe. But yet becauſe God hath ſo placed vs Engliſhmen here in one common wealth, alſo in one Church as in one ſhippe together: let vs not mangle or deuide the ſhippe, which being deuided periſheth: but euery man ſerue in his order with dilligence, wherein he is called. They that ſitte at the helme, keepe well the poynt of the needle, to knowe how the ſhip goeth, and whether it ſhould. Whatſoeuer weather betydeth, the needle well touched with the ſtone of Gods word will neuer fayle. Such as labour at the oares, ſtart for no tempeſt, but doe what they can to keepe from the rockes. Likewiſe they whiche be inferiour rowmes, take heede they moue no ſedition, nor diſturbance agaynſt the rowers and mariners. No ſtorme ſo daungerous to a ſhippe on the ſea, as is diſcord and diſorder in a weale publique. What countryes and nations, what kingdomes and Empyres, what Cities, townes, and houſes diſcord hath diſſolued, in ſtoryes is manifeſt: I neede not ſpend tyme in rehearſing examples. The Lord of peace, who hath power both of land and Sea, reach forth hys mercifull hand to helpe them vp that ſincke, to keepe them vpp that ſtand, to ſtill theſe windes and ſourging ſeas of diſcord and contention among vs: that wee profeſſing one Chriſt, may in one vnitie of doctrine gather our ſelues into one Arke of the true Church together, where we continuing ſtedfaſt in fayth may at the laſt luckely be conducted to the ioyfull porte of our deſired landing place by hys heauenly grace. To whome both in heauen and in earth be all power and glory, with his father and the holy ſpirite for euer. Amen.

The vtilitie of this Story.

Seyng the worlde is repleniſhed with ſuch an infinite multitude of bookes of all kinde of matters, I may ſeeme (perhaps) to take a matter in hand ſuperfluous and needles, at this preſent to ſet out ſuch Volumes, eſpecially of hiſtories, conſidering now a dayes the world is ſo greatly peſtered, not only with ſuperfluous plenty therof, but of all other treatiſes, ſo that books now ſeeme rather to lacke Readers, then Readers to lacke bookes: In which multitude of bookes I doubt not, but many doe both perceiue, and inwardly bewayle this inſatiable boldnes of many now a dayes both in writing and printing, which to ſay the truth, for my part I do as much lament as any man els beſide: and would therefore no man ſhould thinke that vnaduiſedly or with raſhnes I haue attempted this enterpriſe, as one being not onely doubtful, but alſo both baſhfull and feareful within my ſelf for ſetting the ſame abroad. And why? firſt I perceaued howe learned this age of ours is in reading of bookes, neither could I tell what the ſecret iudgementes of readers woulde conceaue, to ſee ſo weake a thing, to ſet vpon ſuch a weighty enterpriſe, not ſufficiently furniſhed with ſuch ornamentes able to ſatiſfie the perfection of ſo great a ſtory, or ſufficient to ſerue the vtility of the ſtudious: and the delight of the learned. Which abilitie the more I perceiued to be wanting in me, the leſſe I durſt be bold to become a writer.

Multitude of bookes lamented.

But agayne on the other ſide, when I weyed with my ſelfe what memorable Actes and famous doynges this latter age of the Churche hath miniſtred vnto vs by the patient ſuffringes of the worthy martyrs: I thought it not to be neglected, that ſo precious Monumentes of ſo many matters, meet to be recorded and regeſtred in books, ſhould lie buried by my default vnder darkenes of obliuion. Me thought ſomewhat was to be ſayd of them for their well deſeruing, and ſomething agayne of our partes for benefites by them receaued. But aboue all other thinges nothing did ſo much ſtyrre me forward hereunto, as the dilligent conſideration and ſpeciall regard of the common vtilitie which euery man plentifully may receaue by the reading of theſe Monuments or Martyrologe which hiſtory as I haue taken in hand chiefly for the vſe of the Engliſh Church: ſo haue I framed it in that tongue which the ſimple people could beſt vnderſtand.

Nowe if men commonly delite ſo much in other Chronicles which intreate onely vpon matters of pollicye, and reioyce to beholde therein the variable euentes of worldlye affayres, the Stratagemes of valiaunt captaynes, the terrour of foughten fieldes, the ſacking of Cities, the hurlye burlies of Realmes and people. And if men thinke it ſuch a gaye thing in a common wealth to committe to hiſtory ſuch olde antiquities of thinges prophane and beſtow all theyr ornamentes of wit and eloquence in garniſhing the ſame: how much more then is it meete for Chriſtians to conſerue in remembraunce the liues: Actes and doynges, not of bloudy warriours, but of myld and conſtant Martyrs of Chriſt, which ſerue not ſo much to delight the eare, as to garniſh the lyfe, to frame it with examples of great profite, and to encourage men to all kinde of Chriſtian godlines? As firſt by reading thereof wee may learne a liuely teſtimony of Gods mighty working in the life of man, contrary to the opinion of Atheiſtes, and all the whole neſt of Epicures. For like as one ſayd of Harpalus in times paſt, that his doyngs gaue a liuely teſtimony agaynſt God, becauſe he being ſo wicked a man eſcaped ſo long vnpuniſhed: ſo contrariwiſe in theſe mē we haue a much more aſſured and playne witnes of God both in whoſe liues and deathes appeared ſuche manifeſt declarations of Gods diuine working, whiles in ſuch ſharpnes of tormentes we behold in them ſtrength, ſo conſtant aboue mans reach, ſuch readines to aunſwere, ſuch patience in impriſonment, ſuche godlines in forgeuing, cherefulnes ſo couragious in ſuffering, beſides the manifold ſenſe and feeling of the holy ghoſt which they in their liues ſo plentifully taſted in theyr afflictions, as in readyng of theyr letters euidently we may vnderſtand. Ouer and beſides this, the milde deaths of the ſayntes do not a little auayle to the ſtabliſhing of a good conſcience: to learne the contempt of the world, and to come to the feare of God. Moreouer, they confirme fayth, encreaſe godlines, abate pride in proſperitie, and in aduerſitie do open an hope of heauenly comfort. For what man reading the miſery of theſe godly perſons, may not therein as in a glaſſe behold his owne caſe, whether hee be godly or godles. For if God geue aduerſitie vnto good men, what may eyther the better ſort promiſe themſelues, or the euill not feare? And whereas by reading of prophane ſtoryes we are made perhaps more ſkilfull in warlike affayres: ſo by reading of this we are made better in our liuinges, and beſides are better prepared vnto like conflictes, if by Gods permiſſion they ſhall happen hereafter more wiſer by theyr doctrine, and more ſteadfaſt by theyr example.

Compariſon betweene worldly ſoldiours and the ſoldiours of Chriſt.

To be ſhort, they declare to the world what true Chriſtian fortitude is, and what is the right way to conquere which ſtandeth not in the power of man, but in hope of the reſurrection to come, and is nowe I truſt at hand. In conſideration whereof, me thinkes I haue good cauſe to wiſh, that like as other ſubiectes: euen ſo alſo Kinges and Princes, which commonly delite in heroicall ſtories, would diligently peruſe ſuch Monumentes of martyrs, and lay them alwayes in ſight, not alonely to read, but to follow, and would paynt them vpon theyr walles, cups, ringes and gates. For doubtles ſuche as theſe: are more worthy of honour thē an hundreth Alexanders, Hectors, Scipions and warlike Iulies. And though the world iudgeth proſperouſly of thinges, yet with God the true iudge, certes ſuch are to be reputed in deede, not that kill one an other with a weapon, but they which being rather killed in Gods cauſe, do retayne an inuincible conſtancie agaynſt the threates of tyrantes and violence of tormentours. Such as theſe, are the true Conqueroures of the world, by whome we learne true manhode, ſo many as fight vnder Chriſt, and not vnder the world. With this valiantnes did that moſt milde Lambe and inuincible Lyon of of the tribe of Iuda firſt of all go before vs, of whoſe vnſpeakeable fortitude we heare this prophetical admiration: who is this (ſayth he) which walketh ſo in the multitude of hys ſtrength? Forſooth the high ſonne of the high God, once conquered of the world, and yet conquering the world after the ſame maner he was conquered.

Eſay. 63.

The like daunce did all hys other Martyrs follow, to whome the auncient antiquitie of the Churche did attribute ſo great honour, as neuer king or Emperour could purchaſe in this world with all theyr images, pillers hie ſpires, triumphes, temples, and all theyr ſolemne feaſtes. In probation whereof we ſee with what admiration, and almoſt ſuperſtition, not onely the memory, but alſo the reliques of thoſe good Martyrs were receaued & kept amongeſt the auncient Chriſtians. We haue alſo for witnes the learned Hymnes and Songes of Prudentius and Nazienzene, wherewith Pindarus did neuer ſo much ſet out hys triumphes of Olympia and Nemea. I neede not here rehearſe the learned Orations of eloquent Cyprian, Chryſoſtome, Ambroſe. and Hierome, who neuer ſhewed theyr eloquence more, then when they fell into the commendations of the Godly Martyrs.

Whereby it is manifeſt, what eſtimation in times paſt was attributed to Martyrs: with what gratulation, reioyce, myrth, and common ioy the afflictions of thoſe godly, dying in Chriſtes quarrell, were ſometime receiued and ſolemniſed, and that not without good reaſonable cauſe. For the Churche did well conſider howe much ſhe was beholding to theyr benefites, by whoſe death ſhe vnderſtoode her treaſures to encreaſe. Now then if Martyrs are to be compared with Martyrs, I ſee no cauſe why the Martyrs of our tyme deſerue any leſſe commendation, then the other in the primatiue Churche, which aſſuredly are inferiour vnto them in no poynt of prayſe: whether we view the number of them that ſuffered, or greatnes of theyr tormentes, or theyr conſtancie in dying, or alſo conſider the fruite that they brought to the amendment of poſteritie, and encreaſe of the Goſpell. They did water the truth with theyr bloud, that was newly ſpringing vp: ſo theſe by theyr deathes reſtored it agayne, being ſore decayed and fallen downe. They ſtanding in the forewarde of the battell, did receaue the firſt encounter and violence of theyr enemies, and taught vs by that meanes to ouercome ſuch tyranny: Theſe with like courage agayne like old beaten ſouldiours did winne the field in the rereward of the battayle. They like famous huſbandmen of the world did ſow the fieldes of the Church, that firſt lay vnmanured and waſt: theſe with fatnes of their bloud did cauſe it to battell and fructifie. Would to God the fruite might be ſpeedely gathered into the barne, whiche onely remayneth behinde to come.

A compariſon betweene the Martyrs of the Primitiue Church and of the latter Church.

Now, if we aſcribe ſuch reputation to Godly preachers (and worthely) which diligently preache the Goſpell of Chriſt, when they liue notwithſtanding by the benefite of tyme, without all feare of perſecution: howe muche more reaſonable cauſe haue we to prayſe and extoll ſuch men as ſtoutly ſpend theyr lyues for the defence of the ſame: All theſe premiſſes duely of our partes conſidered and marked, ſeeing we haue found ſo famous Martyrs in this our age, let vs not fayle then in publiſhing and ſetting forth their doings, leſt in that poynt we ſeeme more vnkinde to them, then the writers of yͤ primitiue Church were vnto theirs. And though we repute not theyr aſhes chaynes, and ſwerdes in the ſtede of reliques: yet let vs yeld thus much vnto theyr commemoration, to glory the Lord in hys Saintes, and imitate theyr death (as much as we may) with like conſtancy, or theyr liues at yͤ leaſt with like innocency. They offered theyr bodies willing, to the rough handling of the tormentors. And is it ſo great a matter then for our part, to mortifie our fleſh, with all the members thereof? They neglected not onely the riches and glory of the world for the loue of Chriſt, but alſo their liues: and ſhal we then keepe ſo great a ſtyrre one agaynſt an other, for the tranſitory trifles of this world? They continued in patient ſuffering, when they had moſt wrong done vnto them, and when theyr very heartes bloud guſhed out of theyr bodyes: and yet will not wee forgeue our poore brother, be the iniury neuer ſo ſmall, but are ready for euery trifling offence to ſeeke hys deſtruction, and cut his throat. They wiſhing well to all men, did of theyr own accord forgeue theyr perſecutors: & therefore ought we, which are now the poſteritie and Children of Martyrs, not to degenerate from theyr former ſteps, but being admoniſhed by their examples, if we cannot expreſſe theyr charitie toward all men, yet at leſt to imitate the ſame to our power and ſtrength. Let vs geue no cauſe of offence to any. And if any be geuen to vs, let vs ouercome it with patience, forgeuing and not reuenging the ſame. And let vs not onely keepe our handes from ſhedding of bloud, but our tongues alſo from hurting the fame of others. Beſides, let vs not ſhrinke if caſe ſo require, martyrdome or loſſe of lyfe, according to their example, to yeld vp the ſame in the defence of the Lordes flocke. Whiche thing if men would do, much leſſe contention and buſines woulde be in the world then now is. And thus much touching the vtilitie and fruit to be taken of this hiſtory.

To all the profeſſed frendes and followers of the Popes proceedinges, foure Queſtions propounded.

Foure demaundes or queſtions put forth to the Papiſtes.

TO you all and ſinguler, which profeſſe the doctrine and Religion of the Pope your holy Father, and of your mother Church of Rome, pretending the name of Catholickes. commōly termed Papiſtes, whereſoeuer abiding in the Realme of England, theſe foure Queſtions or Problemes hereunder folowing I would moue, deſiring you all either to muſe vpon thē, or to anſwere thē at your leiſure.

* The firſt Queſtion.

The 1. queſtion.

Eſay. 11. 65.

FIrſt, forſomuch as Mount Sion (which God calleth by the Prophet Jeſai, the hill of his holines) beareth in the ſcripture an vndoubted type of the ſpiritual church of Chriſt: & for ſo much as the ſayd Jeſai. ca. 11. & 65. propheſying of the ſayd Mount Sion, ſayth in theſe wordes: Non nocebunt neq; affligent in omni monte ſancto meo, dicit Dominus. &c. i. They ſhal not kill nor hurt, in all my holy hill, ſayth the Lord, &c. And agayne in the ſame chap. thus we read: Habitabit Lupus cum agno, & Pardus cū hædo accubabit: Vitulus, & Leo & ouis vna commorabuntur, & puellus paruulus ducet eos. &c. i. The wolfe ſhall dwell with the Lambe, & the Leopard with the Kid: the Calfe, the Lion & the ſheepe ſhall feed together, & a yong child ſhall rule thē. The Cow alſo & the Beare ſhall abide together wͭ theyr yong ones, & the Lion ſhall eat chaffe & fodder like yͤ Oxe. &c.

Obiection.

Upon theſe premiſes now foloweth my queſtion, how the church of Rome can be anſwerable to this hill of Siō: ſeing in the ſayd church of Rome is, and hath bene now ſo many yeares ſuch killing and ſlaying, ſuch crueltie and tyranny ſhewed, ſuch burning & ſpoyling of chriſten bloud, ſuch malice & miſchiefe wrought, as in reading theſe hiſtoryes may to all the world appeare.

Refutation.

To this if they aunſwere, & expound theſe wordes of the Prophet, as perteining to the church triumphant therevnto I reply agayne: that by the wordes in the ſame place & in the ſame ſentence expreſſed that ſence cannot ſtand, for as much as the Prophet in the very ſame place, where he propheſieth of this peaceable dwelling in Gods holy mountayne without hurting or killing, meaneth plainly of the earth, & ſheweth alſo the cauſe of that godly peace. Becauſe (ſayth he) the earth is repleniſhed with knowledge & ſcience of the Lord. &c. ibid. And furthermore the Prophet ſpeaking of the ſame day when this ſhalbe, addeth ſaying: In that day the root of Jeſſe ſhall ſtand for a ſigne to the people, for the Gentils to be conuerted, and to ſeeke vnto him, &c. which day in no wiſe can be applyed to the church in heauen triumphant, but only here militant in earth.

Publicke execution of lawes, not forbidden in Scripture.

The conditions and properties of the true Church of Chriſt.

Rom. 15.

Galath. 6.

Touching which place of Jeſai, further here is to be noted by the way, that by this peaceable Mōūt Sion (which comprehendeth both the ſtates, as well eccleſiaſticall as tēporall) is not reſtrayned the publicke penalty of good lawes needfull to be executed vpon publicke malefactors, but here is reſtrayned the fierceneſ, reuenge, cruelty, & violence of mens affections. To which affectiōs men being commonly ſubiect by nature, through grace & working of the goſpel are altered, reformed, & chaūged to another diſpoſition: frō ſtoutnes to ſoftnes: frō violence to ſufferance: from fierceneſ to forbearing: frō pride to humility, frō cruelty to compaſſion, from wilynes to ſimplicity, frō ſolemne ſingularity to humanity and meekenes. which vertues, if they had bene in the church of Rome (according to the rule of S. Paul, which willeth men that be ſtronger, to beare with the infirmities of the weaker, and that in the ſpirit of meeknes. &c. Rom. 15. Gal. 6.) I ſhould not haue needed now at this time to write ſuch a long hiſtory as this of the ſuffering of ſo many Martyrs.

❡ The ſecond Queſtion.

The 2. queſtion.

The deadly hatred of the Papiſtes agaynſt the Proteſtantes, grounded vpon no iuſt cauſe nor deſeruing.

MY ſecond queſtion is this: to demaūd of you catholicke profeſſors of the popes ſect, which ſo deadly maligne and perſecute the proteſtants profeſſing the goſpell of Chriſt, what iuſt or reaſonable cauſe haue you to allege for this your extreme hatred ye bear vnto thē, yͭ neither you your ſelues can abide to liue wͭ them, nor yet will ſuffer yͤ other to liue amongeſt you? If they were Jewes, Turkes or Infidels, or in their doctrine were any Idolatrous impietie or deteſtable iniquitie in their liues: if they went about any deadly deſtruction, or priuy conſpiracies to oppreſſe your liues, or by fraudulent dealing to circūuent you, then had you ſome cauſe to cōplaine, and alſo to reuenge. Now ſeing in their doctrine ye haue neyther blaſphemy, idolatry, ſuperſtition nor miſbeliefe to obiect vnto them: ſeing they are baptiſed in the ſame beliefe, and beleue the ſame articles of the Crede, as ye do: hauing the ſame God, yͤ ſame Chriſt & ſauiour, the ſame baptiſme, & and are ready to conferre with you in all kinde of Chriſten doctrine, neyther do refuſe to be tryed by any place of the ſcripture, how then riſeth this mortall malice of you agaynſt them? If you thinke them to be herretickes, then bring forth if ye can, any one ſentence which they arrogantly hold, contrary to the minde of holy ſcripture: expounded by the cenſure of moſt auncient Doctours? Or what is there in all yͤ ſcripture to be required, but they acknowledge & confeſſe the ſame? See & try the order of their liues & doinges, what great fault find you. They ſerue God, they walke vnder his feare, they obey his law, as men may do: and though they be tranſgreſſors toward him, as other men are, yet toward you what haue they done, what haue they committed or deſerued why you ſhould be ſo bitter agaynſt them?

Malice and crueltie of Papiſtes againſt the countrey of Merindoll and Cabriers.

What offended the poore habitants of Merindal & Cabriers when the biſhop of Aix, the Cardinall of Turon, and other Biſhops of Fraunce wraſting from Fraunces the French king a commiſſion, ſent Mencrius wͭ his Captayne John de Gay to deſtroy theyr countrey, an. 1530. who driuing yͤ poore people there into a barn ful of ſtraw, ſet yͤ barn on fire, & burned vp men, women, and children: And likewiſe in a church, exerciſed the like crueltie vpon them, where were murdered the ſame time to the number of a thouſand yong and old, women, children, and yong infants, beſides vii. whole townes, with the moſt part of the dwellers therin, being murdered & burnt in yͤ ſayd country of Prouēce.

Malice of Papiſtes agaynſt the Citizens of Tholouſe in Fraunce.

Alſo before that, what offended the Citizens of Tholouſe and Auinion when Pope Gregory the ix. ſet Lewes the French king to warre agaynſt them and agaynſt Raymundus their Earle, without cauſe, where alſo the ſayd kyng died at the ſiege.

Malice and crueltie of Papiſtes agaynſt the Proteſtantes in the towne of Vaſſy.

Or to ſpeake of later yeres, what hurt or harme did the poore Proteſtantes in the towne of Vaſſy, who peaceably being at a Sermon, were miſerably ſlayne and cut, men, women, and children, by the Duke of Guyes and hys armed ſouldiours? beſides other infinite examples almoſt not to be numbred of like crueltie, in Calabria, Apulia, Bohemia, Fraunce, and now of late in Flaunders, and in other countryes moe.

Clemencie and mercy ſhewed to Papiſtes in the raigne of Queene Elizabeth.

But to let other countryes paſſe, let vs turne now to the peaceable gouernment in this realme of England, vnder this our ſo milde & gracious Queene now preſently reigning. Under whome you ſee howe gently you are ſuffered, what mercy is ſhewed vnto you: how quietly ye liue. what lacke you, that you woulde haue, hauing almoſt the beſt rowmes and offices in all the realme, not onely without any loſſe of lyfe, but alſo without anye feare of death. And though a few of your Archclerkes be in cuſtody: yet in that cuſtody ſo ſhrewdly are they hurt, that many a good Proteſtant in the realme would be glad with all their hartes to chaunge rowmes and dyet with them if they might. And albeit ſome other for their pleaſure haue ſlipt ouer the ſeas, if their courage to ſee countries abroade did ſo allure them, who coulde let them, yet this is certayne, no dreade there was of death that draue them. For what papiſt haue you ſeen in all this land to loſe eyther life or limme for papiſtry during al theſe xii. yeares hetherto ſince this Queenes reigne? And yet all this notwithſtādīg, hauing no cauſe to complayne, ſo many cauſes to geue God thāks ye are not yet content, ye fret and fume, ye grudge and mutter, and are not pleaſed with peace, nor ſatiſfied with ſafety but hope for a day, and fayne would haue a chaunge. And to preuent your deſired day, ye haue conſpired, and riſe vpp in open rebellion agaynſt your Prince, whom the Lord hath ſet vp to be your gouernour.

The trayterous murdering of the Lord Iames Regent of Scotland Martyr.

And as you haue ſince that, nowe of late diſturbed the quiet and peaceable ſtate of Scotland, in murdering moſt trayterouſly the gentle and godly Regent of Scotland (who in ſparing the Queenes life there when he had her in his handes, hath now therfore loſt his own) ſo with like fury, as by your rebellion appeareth, would diſturbe the golden quiet and tranquilitie of this Realme of England, if ye might haue your willes. which the mercifull grace of almightie, for Chriſt his ſonnes ſake our Lord, forfend and vtterly diſapoynt. Amen.

Wherfore theſe premiſes cōſidered, my queſtion is to aſke of you & know, what iuſt or reaſonable cauſe ye haue of theſe your vnreaſonable doinges, of this your ſo mortall and deadly hatred, fury and malice you beare agaynſt theſe your euenchriſtened, of theſe your tumultes, coniurations, gaping and hoping, rebellions, mutteringes, & murders, wherewith you trouble and diſquiet the whole world. Of all which miſchiefes, if the true cauſe were well knowen, the truth would be found doubtles to be none other but onely the priuate cauſe of the Biſhop of Rome, that he is not receiued, and the dignity of his Church exalted.

The chiefe cauſe of al theſe latter perſecutions in the Church is onely the priuate quarrell of the Biſhop of Rome.

The plantation of the Popes ſupremacie proued not to be of God. Iohn. 8. Luke. 18.

Touching which cauſe how vnreaſonable and vniuſt it is, more ſhalbe ſayd (the Lord willing) in reply, according as I ſhal ſee theyr anſwere, if it ſhall ſo pleaſe thẽ, or any of thẽ to anſwere this queſtion. In the meane time this for a briefe note ſhall ſuffice: that it ſtandeth not with the ſcripture, but contrary to the ſcripture that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould ſo reuenge his owne priuate cauſe. If his title & plantatiõ be good & of God, why doth he not refer it vnto god? And no doubt, but if it be ſo, God will maintein it, though the whole world ſayd no. If it be otherwiſe, it will fall & be rooted out, though all the world ſayd yea, yea the greateſt argument to proue this plantation of the Popes ſupremacy not to be of God, is, that the Pope fighting in his owne priuate cauſe, by outward & worldly force ſeeketh his owne glory. Chriſt our ſauior being here refuſed himſelfe, yet neither reuenged his cauſe, nor ſought his owne glory, but onely the glory & will of his father, thus ſpeaking of himſelf: Si ego glorifico meipſũ, gloria mea nihil eſt, pater meus eſt, qui glorificat me. &c. Ioan. 8. i. If I glorify my ſelfe, my glory is nothing, my father is he that glorifyeth me, &c. Euen ſo I ſaye with ſcripture, that if the Popes proceedings were planted of God, he would not ſo wraſtle for his glory, as he doth. But forſomuch as he ſeeketh by ſuch cruelty and bloudſhed to exalt himſelfe, we may well argue his proceedings not to be of God, and that he ſhalbe brought low. &c. Luke. 18.

The 3. queſtion.

¶ The third Queſtion.

Apocal. 13. The two beaſtes in the booke of Reuelatiõ deſcribed. The ſecond beaſt with the hornes like a Lambe.

MY third queſtion I take of the 13. chap. of the booke of Reuelation. which booke as it conteineth a Propheticall hiſtory of the Church: ſo likewiſe it requireth by hiſtories to be opened. In this chapter mention is made firſt of a certayne beaſt comming out of the Sea, hauing vij. heads & x. hornes, with x. diademes of blaſphemy. Vnto ỹ which beaſt the dragon, the deuill, gaue his ſtrength, and great power to fight agaynſt the Saynctes, & to ouercome them, & to make xlij. monethes: of the which beaſt, one of his heades was wounded at length to death. &c.

After this immediatly in the ſame chap. mentiõ foloweth of an other beaſt, riſing out of the land, hauing 2. hornes like a lambe, & ſpake like a dragon, & did all the power of the former beaſt before his face, and cauſed all dwellers of the earth to worſhip the beaſt: whoſe head was wounded, and liued. Who alſo had power to geue ſpirit & life to the ſayd former beaſt, to make the Image of the beaſt to ſpeak, & to cauſe al men frõ the higheſt to the loweſt, to take the marke of the beaſt in theyr handes and foreheades, & whoſoeuer worſhipped not the Image of the beaſt ſhould be killed. &c.

Vpon this deſcription of theſe two beaſtes riſeth my queſtion, wherein I deſire all papiſtes, from the higheſt to the loweſt, either to anſwere or to conſider with thẽſelues, what the ſpirit of the propheſy meaneth by the ſayd 2. beaſtes. Neither is the miſtery of this propheſy ſo obſcure, but being hiſtoricall, by hiſtories it may be explaned & eaſely expounded. Writing therfore to the Papiſtes, as men expert in hiſtories, my queſtion is this: that ſeing the propheſy of theſe 2. beaſtes muſt needes prefigure ſome people or dominiõ in the world, of ſome high eſtate & power: they will now declare vnto vs, what people or domination this ſhould be. Which if they will do playnely and truely, according to the markes & propertyes of the ſayd ij. beaſtes here ſet forth, they muſt needes be driuen of force ineuitable to graunt and confeſſe, the ſame only to agree to the City & Empyre of Rome, & to no other: which by theſe reaſons folowing of neceſſity muſt needes be concluded.

The miſterie of the firſt beaſt riſing out of the Sea applied.

Firſt, the beaſt wich came out of the ſea, hauing the ſtrength, the ſeat, and power of the great Dragon (the Deuill, called the Prince of this world, committed to him, who alſo had power geuẽ ouer all tribes, nations, languages, people and countryes in the earth) muſt needes be an Empyre or Monarchy of great force, paſſing all other Monarchies in the world beſides, and this muſt needes argue the Empyre of Rome and none other.

The Image of the beaſt reſembled to the Monarchie of Rome. Apocall. 13.

Secondly, in that the beſt had vij. heads, & x. hornes, with x. diademes full of blaſphemy vpõ thẽ: thoſe vij. heades being expounded in the ſayd booke, cap. 17. for vij. hilles, notoriouſly importeth the Citie of Rome, wherein were 7. hilles conteyned. The like alſo may be thought of ỹ x. hornes being there expounded for x. kinges (ſignifying belike ỹ x. Prouincies or Kingdomes of the worlde ſubdued to the Romayne Empyre) with x. crownes of blaſphemy vppon their heades: all which conueniently agree to the Cittie of Rome.

Of theſe 42. monethes, and the expoſition thereof, read. page. 101.

Thirdly, where the ſayd beaſt had power to make 42. monthes and to fight againſt the Saintes, and to ouercome them, &c. therby moſt manifeſtly is declared the Empyre of Rome, with the heathen perſecuting Emperours, which had power geuẽ the ſpace of ſo many monthes, (that is, from Tiberius to Licinius. 294. yeares) to perſecute Chriſts Church as in the Table of the primitiue Church hereafter following is diſcourſed more at large.

The wounded head of the beaſt in the reuelation what it meaneth. The ſecond beaſt riſing out of the land pretending the hornes of a Lambe what it meaneth.

Fourthly, where the prophet ſpeaketh of the one of the heades of the beaſt to be wounded to the death, & the wound afterward to be cured agayne, by that ye haue to vnderſtand the decay and ſubuerſion of the Citie of Rome & of Italy, which being one of the heades of the Romayne Monarchie, was ſubdued by the Gottes, Vandals, & Lombards, and the Cittie of Rome, thriſe ſackt and taken betweene the reigne of Honorius Emperour of Rome, and the tyme of Iuſtinian Emperor of Conſtantinople, & ſo remayned this head of Rome wounded a long time vnder the dominion of ỹ Lombards, till at length this wound was cured agayne, as the ſequele of this propheſie declareth: For ſo it followeth in the foreſayd chap. of the Reuelation: And after this I ſaw (ſayth he) an other beaſt riſing out of the land, hauing two hornes like the lamb, and ſpake like the Dragon. Who practiſed all the power of the firſt beaſt before his face, and cauſed all the inhabitantes of the earth to worſhip the firſt beaſt, whoſe head was wounded and cured agayne. &c. And to him it was geuen to geue life to the Image of the beaſt, and to make it ſpeake: and alſo to make all them that will not worſhip the image of the beaſt, to bee ſlayne, and cauſed all from the moſt to the leaſt, both rich and poore, free men and bondmen, to take the marke of the beaſt in their right hand and in their foreheades, ſo that none ſhould buy and ſell vnles he had the beaſtes marke about him. &c.

Apocall. 13. The Miſterie of the 13. chapter of the Reuelations expounded.

The deſcription of this ſecond beaſt being well viewed: it cannot be auoided, but needes muſt be applyed to ỹ Byſhop of Rome and to none other: as by the hiſtory and order of times is euident to be proued. For who els repreſenteth ỹ hornes of the lambe of God which taketh away the ſinnes of the world, but only he? who ſpeaketh with ỹ voyce of ỹ Dragon ſo proudly, as he? The voice of the Dragon ſpake once to Chriſt: That all the glory of the world was his to geue to whom he would, & that he would geue it. &c. And doth not thys falſe horned lambe ſpeaking in the ſame voyce of the Dragon, ſay by the mouth of Pope Gregory 7. that all the kingdomes of the earth were hys, and that hee had power in earth to looſe, and take away Empyres, Kingdomes, Dukedomes, and what els ſoeuer mortall menne may haue, and to geue them where he would? &c. Ex platina in Vit. Gregorij. 7.

Ex platina in vita Gregorij. 7. The Image of the old Monarchie reuiued by the Biſhop of Rome.

Furthermore, at what time the declining ſtate of Rome began to decay, and Italy was brought vnder ſubiection of ỹ Lombardes, then the Pope ſtirred vp Pipinus and Carolus Magnus, to take his part agaynſt the Lombardes, and to reſtore agayne, the old glory of ỹ Monarchie to hys former ſtate. And therfore who cured the wounded head of this beaſt agayne, but onely he? who gaue life and ſpeach to the Image of the beaſt but he? who after that by helpe of the French kings, had ſubdued thoſe Lombardes with other aliens, and had gotten the poſſeſſion of Rome, into hys own handes, he ſo repared & aduaunſed the fame and name of Rome, that ſince that time all perſons from the hyeſt, to the loweſt, both rich & poore haue bene glad to ſend & ſeek to Rome, yea Kinges, Emperors, Queens, & Dukes haue bene glad to kiſſe the Biſhops feete, and to lead hys horſe by the bridle: So that the Maieſty of Rome in the old heathẽ Emperors days was neuer more terrible, nor glorious, nor neuer had more power to perſecute & ouercome gods Saintes thẽ theſe lambelyke Byſhops of Rome haue had, and haue exerciſed theſe 500. yeares in Chriſtendome. And therefore who els in all the world hath ſo much power to do the workes of the firſt beaſt, before hys face, as he? or who but he alone? which forceth both high and low, rich and poore, free and bond to receaue the ſeale, and to become loyall to the Citie and ſea of Rome: ſo that whoſeuer hath not the marke whereby to be knowne to holde of the Churche of Rome, ſhall haue no place, to buy and ſell nor to occupy in all Chriſtendome.

Power to doe the workes of the beaſt before his ſight. Apocal. 13.

Now if any Papiſt whatſoeuer, in anſwering to this my queſtiõ can apply this propheticall miſtery of theſe 2. beaſts otherwiſe then thus, I would hartely deſire him, to take ſo much paynes to ſatiſfie this doubt at his good pleaſure & laiſure

layſure. In the meane ſeaſon let this ſtand for a Corolarium, that the biſhop of Rome by this deſcription muſt be that ſecond beaſt propheſied to come in the latter time of the Church vnder a falſe pretenſed lambe, to reſtore agayn the old perſecutions of Rome, and to diſturbe the whole Church of Chriſt, as this day so truely is come to paſſe.

¶ The fourth Queſtion.

AS touching my fourth queſtion, although I could vrge you with an other like propheticall place of ſcripture no leſſe euident agaynſt the biſhop of Rome, taken out of the ſecond Epiſtle of S. Paule to the Theſſa. where mention is made of the ſonne of perdition, ſitting in the Temple of God, as god, & aduauncing himſelfe aboue al that is called god &c. which place ye can by no reaſonable euaſiō auoyd: yet notwithſtanding to let this paſſe, I turne my queſtiō to aſke this of you, whether the religion of Chriſt be mere ſpiritual, or els corporall. If ye affirme it to be corporall as was the old religiō of the Iewes cōſiſting in outward rites, ſacrifices, ceremonies of the law: thē ſhew if ye can, what any one outward actiō or obſeruatiō is required in chriſtian religiō by the ſcripture, as neceſſary in a chriſten man, for remiſſiō of ſinnes & ſaluation, ſaue onely the two Sacramentall ceremonies of outward Baptiſme, & of the Lordes Supper? Howbeit neither theſe alſo as they are corporall, that is to ſay neither the outward action of the one, nor of the other cōferreth remiſſiō of ſinnes, nor ſaluation, but onely are viſible ſhewes of inuiſible & ſpirituall benefits. And furthermore if our god, whō we ſerue, be ſpirituall, how can his religiō & ſeruice be corporall as we are taught by the mouth of our ſauior, ſaying: God is a ſpirit and therfore they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip in ſpirit & verity. &c. Ioan. 4.

The 4. queſtion. 2. Theſſ. 2.

Religion of Chriſt ſpiritual, and not corporall.

Now if ye graunt (as ye muſt needes) this our chriſten religion to be ſpirituall, & not a corporall religiō, thē ſhew if ye can, any one poynt of all theſe thinges which ye ſtriue for ſo much with vs, to be ſpirituall, but altogether corporall, & externe matters & ceremoniall obſeruations, nothing cōducing to any ſpirituall purpoſe, as your outward ſucceſſiō of biſhops, garmentes, veſtures, geſtures, coulors, choiſe of meates, differēce of dayes, times & places, hearing, ſeing, ſaying, touching, taſting, numbring of beades, gilding & worſhipping Images, building monaſteries, riſing at midnight, ſilence in cloyſters, abſteining from fleſh & white meat, faſting in Lent, keeping Imberdayes hearing maſſe & diuine ſeruice, ſeing & adoring the body in forme of bread, receiuing holy water, & holy bread, creeping to the croſſe, carying palmes, taking aſhes, bearing candles, pilgrimage going, ſenſing, kneeling, knocking, aultars, ſuperaltars, candleſtickes, pardons: In orders croſſing, annoynting, ſhauing, forſwering mariage: In baptiſme, croſſing, ſalting, ſpatling, exorciſing, waſhing of handes: At Eaſter eare confeſſion, penaunce doing, ſatiſfaction: And in receiuing with beardes new ſhauen, to imagine a body, where they ſee no body: & though he were there preſent to be ſene, yet the outward ſeing & touching of him, of it ſelfe, without fayth, conduceth no more, thē it did to the Iewes. At Rogatiō daies, to cary banners, to follow the croſſe, to walke about the fieldes. After Pentecoſt, to go about with Corpus Chriſti play. At halowmas to watch in the church, to ſay a dirige & commendations, & to ring for all ſoules to pay tithes truely, to geue to the high aultar. And if a man will be a Prieſt, to ſay Maſſe & Mattens, to ſerue the Saynt of that day, and to lift well ouer his head. &c. In ſicknes to be ancled, to take his rites, after his death to haue funerals, & obites ſayd for him, and to be rong for at his funerall, moneth mind, and yearemind. &c. Adde moreouer to theſe the outward ſacrifice of the Maſſe, with opus operatum ſine bono motu vtentis. &c.

The Pope turneth the ſpirituall religion of Chriſt to a corporall religion.

The whole ſumme of the Popes Catholicke religion ſet forth in partes.

All which thinges aboue recited, as they conteine the whole ſummary & effect of all the popes catholicke religion: ſo are they all corporall exerciſes, conſiſting in the externe operation of man. which if they can make a perfect right catholicke chriſtian, then it may be ſaid, that men may be made perfect chriſtians by fleſh and bloud, without any inward working of faith, or of the holy ghoſt. For what is in all theſe, but the fleſh & bloud, of his ſtrength is able to accōpliſh, though no inward ſtrength or motion of the holy Ghoſt did worke.

A man may be Catholique by the Popes religion without any working of the holy ghoſt.

But now the order of our religion, & way of ſaluation conſiſteth not in ſuch corporall or outward things as theſe, but in other more higher & more ſpirituall gifts, which farre exceed the capacity of fleſh & bloud: of the which giftes the chiefeſt & onely meane cauſe that ſaueth man, & remitteth ſinnes, is his fayth in Chriſt. which fayth I thus define, for a man to beleue by the bloudſhedding of Ieſus ye ſonne of god, his ſinnes to be forgeuen, Gods wrath to be pacified, & himſelfe to be iuſtified perfectly from all accuſations that can be layd vnto him. &c. And though the Papiſtes make a light matter of this, to beleue in Chriſt, and when they heare vs ſay, that fayth onely iuſtifieth, they obiect to vs again and make it a ſmall matter to be ſaued, if fayth onely iuſtifie vs. Yet notwithſtanding, this fayth, if it be well examined, is ſuch a thing that fleſh and bloud is not able to attayne therto, vnles Gods holy ſpirite frō aboue do draw him.

The nature of true Chriſtian Religion deſcribed.

Saluation of man, ſtandeth onely in fayth of Chriſt.

Fayth in Chriſt, no light matter to fleſhe and bloud.

Moreouer beſides this fayth, many other thinges are incident alſo to the doctrine of our ſaluation. Albeit as no cauſes therof, but either as Sacramentes and ſeales of fayth, or as declarations thereof, or els as fruites, & effects folowyng the ſame. So Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord be as teſtimonies and profes: that by our fayth only in Chriſt we are iuſtified, that as our bodyes are waſhed by water, and our life nouriſhed by bread and wine: ſo by the bloud of Chriſt, our ſinnes be purged, and the hunger of our ſoules releued by the death of his body.

Many thinges incident to ſaluation beſides fayth: but not as cauſes thereof.

Upon the ſame fayth riſeth alſo outward profeſſion by mouth, as a declaration thereof. Other thinges alſo as fruites and effectes do follow after fayth, as peace of conſcience, ioy in the holy Ghoſt, inuocation, patience, charitie, mercy, iudgement, & ſanctification. For God for our fayth in Chriſt his ſonne, therfore geueth into our hartes his holy ſpirite of comfort, of peace, and ſanctification, whereby mans hart is moued to a godly diſpoſition to feare God, to ſeek him, to call vpon him, to truſt vnto him, to ſtick to him in all aduerſities and perſecutions, to loue him: & for hys ſake alſo to loue our brethren, to haue mercy and compaſſion vpon them, to viſite them if they be in priſon, to breake bread to them, if they be hungry: and if they be burdened, to eaſe them: to clothe them if they be naked, and to harbour them if they be houſeles, Mat. 25. with ſuch other ſpirituall exerciſes of pietie and ſanctification as theſe. which therefore I call ſpirituall, becauſe they procede of the holy ſpirite and law of God which is ſpirituall.

Workes of ſanctification, how they come and follow fayth. Eſay. 58. Math. 25.

And thus haue ye a Catholicke Chriſtian defined, firſt after the rules of Rome, and alſo after the rule of the Goſpell. Now conferre theſe Antitheſes together, and ſee whether of theſe is the truer chriſtian, the ceremonial man after the Church of Rome, or the ſpirituall man with his fayth and other ſpirituall fruites of pietie following after ye ſame. And if ye ſay that ye mixt them both together, ſpirituall thinges with your corporall ceremonies, to that I aunſwere agayne, that as touching the end of remiſſion of ſinnes, and ſaluation, they ought in no caſe to be ioyned together, becauſe the meane cauſe of all our ſaluation and remiſſion, is onely ſpirituall, and conſiſteth in fayth, and in no other.

And therefore vpon the ſame cauſe I come to my queſtion agayne, as I began, to aſke whether the Religion of Chriſt be a mere ſpirituall religion: and whether in the Religion of Rome: as it is now, is any thing but onely mere corporall thinges required, to make a catholicke man. And thus I leaue you to your aunſwere.

IN turning ouer the firſt leafe of this booke, which is pag. 2. col. 1. and in the latter end of the ſame columne, thou ſhalt finde gentle Reader, the argument of Pighius & Hoſius, wherein thus they argue: That forſomuch as Chriſt muſt needes haue a catholicke Church euer continuing here in earth, which all men may ſee & wherunto all men ought to reſort: and ſeeing no other church hath endured continually from the Apoſtles, viſible here in earth, but only ye church of Rome: they conclude therefore the Church onely of Rome to be the right Catholicke Church of Chriſt. &c.

In aunſwering whereunto this is to be ſayd: that forſomuch as the medius terminus of this argument, both in the Maior and Minor, conſiſteth onely in the word (viſible and vnknowne) if they meane by this word (viſible) in the Maior that Chriſtes Church muſt be ſeene here to all the world, that all men may reſort to it, it is falſe: Likewiſe if they meane by the ſame word (viſible in the Minor: that no other Church hath bene ſeene and knowen to any, but onely the Church of Rome, they are likewiſe deceiued. For the true Church of Chriſt neyther is ſo viſible, that all the worlde can ſee it, but onelye they whiche haue ſpirituall eyes: and bee members thereof: nor yet ſo inuiſible agayne, but ſuche as be Gods elect, and members therof, doe ſee it and haue ſeen it, though the worldly eyes of the moſt multitude cannot ſo doe. &c. wherof read more in the proteſtation aboue prefixed to the church of England.

❧ Foure conſiderations geuen out to Chriſtian Proteſtantes profeſſours of the Goſpell with a briefe exhortation inducing to reformation of life.

AS in the page before, foure queſtions were moued to the Catholick Papiſts to anſwere them at theyr leyſure: ſo haue I here to the Chriſtian Goſpellers foure conſiderations likewiſe for them to muſe vpon, with ſpeede conuenient.

THe firſt conſideration is this euery good man well to weigh with himſelfe the long tranquillitie, the great plenty, the peaceable libertie, which the Lord of his mercy hath beſtowed vpon this land during all the reigne hetherto of this our Soueraigne and moſt happy Queene ELIZABETH, in ſuch ſort as the like example of Gods aboundant mercies are not to be ſeene in any nation about vs, ſo as we may well ſing with the Pſalme in the Churche. Non fecit taliter omni nationi, & opes gloriæ ſuæ non manifeſtauit eis: firſt in hauing the true light of Gods goſpel ſo ſhining among vs, ſo publickly receiued, ſo freely preached, with ſuch libertie of conſcience without daunger profeſſed, hauing withall a Prince ſo vertuous, a Queene ſo gratious geuen vnto vs, of our owne natiue country, bred and borne amongſt vs, ſo quietly gouerning vs, ſo long lent vnto vs in ſuch peace defending vs, agaynſt ſuch as would els diuoure vs: briefly what could we haue more at Gods hand, if wee woulde wiſh? or what els could we wiſh in this world, that we haue not? if this one thing lacked not grace to vſe that well, which we haue.

AS theſe thinges firſt are to be conſidered concerning our ſelues: ſo ſecondly let vs conſider likewiſe, the ſtate and tymes of other our countrymen, and bleſſed Martyrs afore paſt: what ſtormes of perſecutions they ſuſteined, what little reſt they had, with what enemies they were matched, with what croſſes preſſed, vnder what Princes, vnder what Prelates they liued, or rather dyed in the dayes of King Henry the 4. king Henry 5. King Henry 7. King Henry 8. Queene Mary. &c. vnder Boner Biſhoppe of London, Gardiner Biſhoppe of Winchester, Cholmley, Story, Biſhoppe Arundell, Stokeſley, Courtney, Warham. At what time children were cauſed to ſet fire to their fathers: The father adiured to accuſe the ſonne, the wife to accuſe the husband, the husband the wife, brother the ſiſter, ſiſter the brother, examples whereof are plenty in this booke to be ſeene, pag. 774.

THirdly let vs call to mynd, conſidering thus with our ſelues: Theſe good men and worthy Martyrs in thoſe dangerous daies, taſtyng as they did, the heauy hand of Gods ſharpe correction, beginning commonly with his owne houſe firſt if they were aliue now in theſe Alcion daies, vnder the protection of ſuch a peaceable prince, O what thanks would they geue to God, how happy would they count themſelues hauing but halfe of that we haue, with freedome onely of conſcience, and ſafetie of lyfe. Or if in caſe we our ſelues had bene in thoſe times of theirs ſo troubled and diſtreſſed as they were, ſpoiled of goods, hated of the world, cited in conſiſtories, pinched in priſons, ſequeſtred from wife, houſe and children, loking for nothing but death, What would we ſay? what would we thinke? what would we do? Much otherwiſe doubtleſſe, then we do now, God graunt we may do better, for worſe I thinke we cãnot if we would. Ioh Wickliffe, W. Swinderby, Thorpe, Sawtrie, with a nũber of godly men moe, beyng thẽ glad in frieſe gownes goyng barefoote, to preach where they could. If they were now alyue, how glad would they be of theſe dayes, what paines would they take, yea what pains would they not take in preaching the goſpell, not for lucre, nor for mony, nor paſſing for promotions or dignities of the church? Sir I. Oldcaſtle L. Cobham, ſir Rog. Acton, with diuers worſhipful gentlemen a great nũber, If they being in our ſtate might enioy with vs their houſes and lands, with the good fauour of their Prince (as then they could not) how gladly would they haue contented themſelues though they neuer raiſed their rentes and fines to the vndoyng of their poore tenants? Likewiſe in the tyme of Ioh. Hus and Hierome of Prage, the Nobilitie and gentlemen of Bohemia, if they might haue had halfe this tranquillitie which we haue, to enioy the liberty of Gods word, and true vſe of the ſacraments without moleſtatiõ of Romiſh prelates, what would they haue cared how ſimply they walked in their attire, without any ſuch monſtrous pomp in pranckyng vp themſelues, as we Engliſhmen in theſe reformed dayes walke now, more like plaiers in a ſtage, then gods children in his Church.

WHerfore, welbeloued, theſe thinges being ſo, let vs call our ſelues to mind, conſidering the times that haue bene, the times that be, and times that may come, how we ſtand, and by whom we ſtand. If it be the fauor of God onely, that doth ſupport vs in the midſt of ſo many enemies, let vs beware, in no wiſe we prouoke his indignation. If it be his trueth and Goſpell that we profeſſe, let vs walke in the light of his truth, and keepe our ſelues within the compaſſe of his Goſpell: what the Goſpel requireth, and what it abhorreth, who knoweth not? And yet who foloweth that he knoweth? If S. Paule willeth euery one to depart from iniquity, which nameth the Lord Ieſus: And if the Lord Ieſus himſelfe teſtifieth playnely, his kingdome not to be of this worlde, how will then the nature of that kingdome ſo ſpirituall, and our conditions ſo worldly match well together? To rippe vp all our deformities in particular, I minde not here, neither need I, the ſame being ſo euident to all mens eyes, that who cannot ſee our exceſſiue outrage in pompous apparrell, our carnall deſires and vnchaſt demeanors, without feare of God, our careles ſecurity without conſcience, as though there were no iudgement to come, our ſtudyes ſo vpon this world, as though there were no other heauen: what pride and idlenes of life, double diſſembling in word & deed with out ſimplicity, auarice vnſatiable, litle regard to heare Gods word, leſſe to read it, leaſt of all to folow it, euery man aſpiring to worldly wealth and promotion, litle or no mercye to the poore, racking of rentes & fines, bribing and taking vnmeaſurable. What ſhould I ſpeake of the contentions and vnbrotherly diuiſion amongeſt vs moſt lamentable to ſee, but more lamentable, if all were ſeene which may or is like to folow vpon the ſame. Such were the times once of the Churh before the horrible perſecution of Diocleſian, for ſo we read, ſuch hatred and diſdayne, through much peace and proſperity of the Church, to creepe in amongeſt the Church men. Read pag. 77.

Euſeb. lib. 8. cap. 1.

Wherefore let vs be exhorted (dearely beloued) to reclayme our ſelues, whyle time doth ſerue. If we finde the Lord ſo gracious in ſparing vs, as he doth, let that not make vs worſe, but better. It is a lewd childe, which will not learne without beating. A well minding man will be good, not forced by coaction, but of voluntary office induced. As aduerſity if it come, ought not to diſmay vs: ſo neither proſperity now preſent ought not to puffe vs vp in ſecurity, conſidering what commonly is wont to folow. As Plato well writeth: Summa atq; effrenata libertatis ſeruitutẽ plerumq; aſſeclam eſſe. Of immoderate liberty, and to much ſecurity, foloweth moſt commonly extreme ſeruitude. And as Hippocrates ſayth: diſpoſitions of bodyes when the are come to the higheſt perfection of health, then are they moſt ſubiect to daunger of ſickenes. &c. Let vs therfore hauing light geuen vs, walke like children of light. Otherwiſe if we walke like children of diſobedience, God hath his roddes to ſcourge vs, if we will needes be Rebelles, he hath his Pharaos and Nabuchodonoſors to plague vs. Or if we will be ſo vnordinate, and (with reuerence be it ſpokẽ, without offence to God or man) ſo doggiſh and curriſh, one to another, the Lorde lacketh not his Doggeſtrikers to whippe vs. And would God our liues were ſuch, that the deſtruction and ruine here of late ſeene amongeſt vs, may portend nothing agaynſt vs, as I truſt there is no cauſe for vs to feare, but rather to feare the Lord and walke in his obedience & amend that is amiſſe amongeſt vs. Amen.

Papa.

ERgone ſic Papæ potuit vox improba iuſſu
Tam dirum mandare nefas? tot corpora tantis
Contumulaſſe rogis, cineres ſine honore ſepulchri?
Quod genus hoc hominum? quæue hunc tam barbara morem
Permittit gens vlla, pios ſine lege necari,
Totq; ſimul mactare viros meretricis ob iram?
Papa refer, quæ te rapuit rabieſq; furorq;
Corpora tam diris ſanctorum addicere flammis,
Funera tot miſcere hominum, tot plectere ciues,
Vaſtare & toto diuiſos orbe Britannos?
Dic quid noſtrates in te committere tantum?
Illi quid potuere, quibus tot maxima paſſis
Vix pars vlla manet terræ qui panditur orbis?
An tua quod nobis taxata eſt frauſq; doluſq;,
Et πολυπραγμοσύνη, & amor ſceleratus habendi?
An tua quod nobis vox non hominem ſonat: ergo
Rite putabamus papam cacadæmone natum?
An quod cum Chriſto nos conſpirare delebas?
Quod te cum Chriſto non conſpirare videmus?
Quòd te Romanam crebris cum cornibus hydram

Actes and Monumentes of Chriſtian Martyrs, and matters Eccleſiaſticall, paſſed in the Church of Chriſt from the Primitiue beginning, to theſe our dayes, as well in other Countreys, as namely, in this Realme of England, and alſo of Scotland, diſcourſed at large.

Math. 16.

CHRIST our Sauiour in the Goſpell of S. Mathew, Cap. 16. hearing the confeſſiõ of Simon Peter, who firſt of all other openlye acknowledged him to be the ſonne of God, and perceauing the ſecret had of his father therin, aunſwered agayne and alludyng to his name, called him a Rocke, vpon which Rocke hee would buylde his Church ſo ſtrõg, that the gates of Hell ſhould not preuaile againſt it. &c. In which wordes three things are to be noted: Firſt that Chriſt will haue a Churche in this world. Secondly that the ſame Church ſhould mightely be impugned, not onely by the world, but alſo by the vttermoſt ſtrength & powers of all hell. And thirdly, that the ſame Church notwithſtãdyng the vttermoſt of the deuill & all his malice ſhould continue. which Propheſie of Chriſt, we ſee wõderfully to be verified. In ſomuch that the whole courſe of the Churche to this day, may ſeeme nothyng els but a verifying of the ſayd Propheſie. Firſt that Chriſt hath ſet vp a Church needeth no declaration. Secondly, what force, what ſides and ſortes of men, of Princes, Kynges, Monarches, Gouernours, and rulers of this world, with their ſubiectes publikely & priuately, with all their ſtrength & cunnyng haue bent them ſelues againſt this Church. And thirdly, how the ſayd Church all this notwithſtandyng hath yet endured & holden his owne. what ſtormes & tempeſtes it hath ouerpaſt, wonderous it is to behold. For the more euident declaration wherof, I haue addreſſed this preſent hiſtory, entendyng, by the fauorable ayde of Chriſt our Lord, not ſo much to delight the eares of my countrey in readyng of newes, as moſt eſpecially to profite the harts of the godly in peruſing antiquities of auncient times, to the ende, that the wonderfull workes of God firſt in his Church might appeare to his glory. Alſo that the continuaunce and proceedings of the Church from tyme to tyme beyng ſet forth in theſe Actes and Monumentes, more knowledge and experience may redound therby to the profite of the Reader, and edification of Chriſtian faith.

Three thinges noted in Chriſtes wordes.

The order of the diſpoſition of this hiſtory.

For the better accõpliſhyng wherof, ſo to proſecute the matter, as may beſt ſerue to the profite of the Reader, I haue thought good firſt, begynnyng from the tyme of the primitiue Church, & ſo continuyng (by the Lordes grace) to theſe latter yeares, to runne ouer the whole ſtate and courſe of the Church in generall, in ſuch order as digeſting the whole tractation of this hiſtory, into fiue ſundry diuerſities of tymes:

1. The ſuffering time of the church.

Firſt, I will entreat of the ſuffring tyme of the Church which continued from the Apoſtles age about. 300. yeres.

2. The floriſhing time of the Church.

Secondly, of the floriſhyng time of the Church, which laſted other 300. yeares.

3. The declining time of the church.

Thirdly, of the declinyng or backeſlidyng tyme of the Church, which comprehendeth other 300. yeares, vntill the looſing out of Sathan, which was about the thouſand yeare after the ceaſing of perſecution. During which ſpace of tyme, the Church, although in ambition & pride, it was much altered from the ſimple ſinceritie of the Primitiue tyme, yet in outward profeſſion of doctrine and religion, it was ſomethyng tollerable, & had ſome face of a Church: notwithſtanding ſome corruption of doctrine, with ſuperſtition and hypocriſie was then alſo crept in. And yet in compariſon of that as followed after, it might ſeeme (as I ſayd) ſomethyng ſufferable.

4. The time of Antichriſt in the Church.

Fourthly, foloweth the tyme of Antichriſt, and looſing of Sathan, or deſolation of the Church, whoſe full ſwyng conteineth the ſpace of 400. yeares. In which tyme, both doctrine and ſinceritie of life, was vtterly almoſt extinguiſhed, namely, in the chiefe heades and rulers of this weſt church, through the meanes of the Romaine Byſhops, eſpecially countyng from Gregory the vij. called Hildebrand, Innocentius the iij. and Friers which with him crept in, til the tyme of Iohn Wickliffe, & Iohn Huſſe, duryng 400. yeres.

5. The reformation of the Church.

Fiftly and laſtly, after this tyme of Antichriſt, raigning in the Church of God by violence and tyranny, followeth the reformation & purgyng of the church of God, wherein Antichriſt begynneth to be reuealed, and to appeare in his coulors, and his Antichriſtian doctrine to be detected, the number of his Church decreaſing, and the number of the true Church increaſing. The durance of which tyme hath continued hetherto about the ſpace of 280. yeres, and how long ſhall continue more, the Lord and gouernour of all tymes, he onely knoweth. For in theſe fiue diuerſities & alterations of tymes, I ſuppoſe the whole courſe of the Church may well be compriſed. The which Church, becauſe it is vniuerſall, and ſparſedly through all countreys dilated, therfore in this hiſtory ſtanding vpon ſuch a generall argument I ſhall not be bõd to any one certaine nation, more then an other: yet notwithſtandyng keepyng mine argument aforeſayd, I haue purpoſed principally to tary vpon ſuch hiſtoricall actes and recordes, as moſt appertaine to this my country of England and Scotland.

The Church of Rome.

And for ſomuch as the Church of Rome, in all theſe ages aboue ſpecified, hath chalenged to it ſelfe the ſupreme title, and ringleadyng of the whole vniuerſall Church on earth, by whoſe direction all other Churches haue bene gouerned, in writyng therfore of the Church of Chriſt, I can not but partly alſo intermedle with the actes and procedynges of the ſame Church, for ſomuch as the doynges & orderyngs of all other Churches from tyme to tyme, as well here in England, as in other nations, haue this long ſeaſon, chiefly depended vpon the ſame. wherfore, as it is much needefull and requiſite to haue the doynges & orderyngs of the ſayd Church to be made manifeſt to all Chriſten congregations: ſo haue I framed this hiſtory, accordyng to the ſame purpoſe. Firſt in a generall deſcription briefly to declare as in a ſummary Table, the miſguidyng of that Church, comparyng the former primitiue ſtate of the forenamed Church of Rome, with theſe later tymes of the ſame. which done, then after in a more ſpeciall tractation, to proſecute more at large all the particulars therof, ſo farforth as ſhall ſeeme not vnprofitable for the publike inſtruction of all other Chriſten Churches, to behold and conſider the maner & dealyng of this one. In the which one church of Rome foure things, as moſt ſpeciall points, ſeeme to me chiefly to be conſidered. To wit, Title, Iuriſdictiõ, Life, and Doctrine, wherin I haue here to declare, firſt concernyng the title or primacie of the Church, how it firſt began, and vpon what occaſion. Secondly, concernyng the iuriſdiction and authoritie therof, what it was, and how farre it did extend. Thirdly, touchyng the miſorder of lyfe and conuerſation, how inordinate it is. And fourthly, the forme of doctrine, how ſuperſtitious & Idolatrous of late it hath bene. Of the which foure yͤ firſt was preiudiciall to all Byſhops, the ſecond derogatorie to Kings and Emperours. The third deteſtable to all men. The fourth iniurious agaynſt Chriſt.

Foure thinges to be conſidered in the Church of Rome.
1. Title.
2. Iuriſdiction.
3. Lyfe.
4. Doctrine.

The title of the Pope.

The iuriſdiction of the Pope.

For firſt, the title and ſtile of that church was ſuch, that it ouerwent all other churches, beyng called the holy vniuerſall mother Church, which could not erre, and the Byſhop therof holy father yͤ Pope, Byſhop vniuerſal, prince of Prieſtes, ſupreme head of the vniuerſall Church, and Vicare of Chriſt here in earth, which muſt not be iudged, hauyng all knowledge of Scripture and all lawes cõtayned with in the cheſt of his breſt.

The iuriſdiction of the Pope.

Secondly the iuriſdiction of that Byſhop was ſuch, that chalenging to him ſelfe both the ſwordes, that is, both the keyes of the ſpiritualtie, and the ſcepter of the Laytie: not onely he ſubdued all Byſhops vnder him, but alſo extended him ſelfe aboue Kynges and Emperours, cauſing ſome of them to lye vnder his feete, ſome to hold his ſturrup, Kynges to leade his horſe by the bridle, ſome to kiſſe his feete, placyng and diſplacyng Emperours, Kynges, Dukes and Earles, whom and whē he liſted, takyng vpon him to tranſlate the Empire at his pleaſure. Firſt from Grece to Fraunce, from Fraūce to Germany, preferryng and depoſing whom he pleaſed, confirmyng them which were elected. Alſo beyng Emperour him ſelfe ſede Vacante, pretendyng authoritie or power to inueſt Byſhops, to geue benefices, to ſpoyle Churches, to geue authoritie to binde and loſe, to call generall Councels to iudge ouer the ſame, to ſet vp religions, to canonize Saintes, to take appeales, to binde conſciences, to make lawes, to diſpence with the law and word of God, to deliuer from Purgatory, to commaunde Aungels. &c.

The properties of life in the Romiſh Clergy.

Thirdly, what was the lyfe and conuerſation of the court of Rome, hereafter in the proces of this hiſtory followeth to be ſene and obſerued.

The doctrine of the Pope.

Fourthly, ſuch was his doctrine in like maner, tedious to Students, pernicious to mens conſciences, iniurious to Chriſt Ieſus, & cōtrary to it ſelfe. In lawes more diuers, in volume more large, in diligēce & ſtudy more applied, in vauntage & preferment more gaynfull, then euer was the ſtudy and learning of the holy Scripture of God.

All which foure pointes well cōſidered and aduiſed in this preſent hiſtory ſet forth, I truſt it may miniſter to the indifferent Chriſtiā Reader, ſufficient inſtructiō to iudge, what is of this ſea and Church of Rome to be eſteemed.

Pope ſilueſter the ſecond.

Pope Gregory, 7. called Hildebrand.

Pope innocentius the third.

Pope Bonifatius the eight.

But here by the way is to be noted, that all theſe deformities aboue touched of vayne title, of pretenſed iuriſdiction, of hereticall doctrine, of ſchiſmaticall lyfe, came not into the Church of Rome all at one tyme, nor ſprang with the begynnyng of the ſame Church, but with long workyng, and continuaunce of tyme by litle and litle crept vp, through occaſion, & came not to full perfectiō, till the tyme partly of Pope Silueſter, partly of pope Gregory the vij. an. 1170. partly of Innocentius the thyrd, and finally of Pope Boniface the viij. an. 1300. Of the which foure Popes, the firſt brought in the title. an. 670. which was neuer in ſuch ample wiſe before publickely exacted & receiued publikely in the ſayd Church of Rome. The ſecond brought in iuriſdiction. The thyrd, which was Pope Innocent with his rable of Monkes and Friers, (as Thomas Aquine, Petrus Lombardus, Iohannes Scotus,) and with ſuch other Biſhops as ſucceeded in the ſame ſea after hym, corrupted and obſcured the ſinceritie of Chriſtes doctrine and maners alſo. And laſtly, Pope Bonifacius the viij. and after him Pope Clement the fift, ouer and beſides the iuriſdiction, ſufficiētly aduaunced before by Pope Hildebrand, added moreouer the temporall ſword to be caryed before them. And that no Emperour (were he neuer ſo well elected) ſhould bee ſufficient and lawfull, without the Popes admiſſion. an. 1300. whereby the Popes power was brought now to his full pride, and perfection. And thus came vp the corruption of the Romiſh Church in continuaunce of yeares by degrees, and not all together, nor at one tyme, as is declared, and hereafter more particularly (Chriſt willyng) ſhalbe expreſſed.

Wherfore, whoſoeuer ſhall haue hereafter to do with any aduerſaries, about the antiquitie or authoritie of the Church of Rome, let him here well conſider when, & how the title, iuriſdiction, & corruption of doctrine firſt begā in the Popes ſea. And ſo ſhal he ſee, that the church of Rome, as it is now gouerned with this maner of title, iuriſdictiō, & inſtitution of doctrine, neuer deſcended frō the primitiue age of the Apoſtles, or frō their ſucceſſion, niſi tātum æquiuocè, & non vniuocè: Like as Sancta Maria picta, non eſt ſancta Maria, & homo pictus eſt non homo, as the ſcholes do ſay: that is as the picture of the holy virgine, is not the holy virgine, and as a man painted on the wall, is not a man: ſo it is to be ſayd of the Church of Rome, (the inſtitution and doctrine of the Church of Rome I meane) that although it haue the name of the Church Apoſtolicall, & doth bring forth a long Genealogie of outward ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles, as the Phariſeis did in Chriſtes tyme bryng their deſcent frō Abraham their father: yet all this is (as I ſayd) but onely æquiuocè, that is, in name onely, and not in effect or matter, which maketh the Apoſtolical Church in deede, for as much as the definition of the Apoſtolicall Church, neither agreeth now with this preſent Church of Rome, nor yet the maner, forme, & inſtitution of the ſayd Romiſh Church, as it now ſtandeth with this title, iuriſdictiō, and doctrine, had euer any ſucceſſion or offpring from the primitiue Church of the Apoſtles. But as Chriſt ſayd by the Phariſeis, that they were the childrē not of Abraham, but of the deuill: in ſemblable wiſe may be aūſwered, that this Church of Rome now preſent, with this title, iuriſdictiō, and doctrine now vſed, can not be fathered vpon the Apoſtles, neither Petrus, nor Linus, but of an other author, whō here I will not name.

Æquiuocè. That is in name onely and not in very deede.

Vniuocè That is both in name and alſo in definition and effect agreeing with the name.

The Church of Rome as now it is, is not Apoſtolicall but onely æquiuocè.

The argument of Pighius, Hoſius, and Eckius for the authoritie of the Church of Rome.

And here now commeth in the Argument of Pighius, Hoſius, and Eccius, to be aunſwered vnto, who arguyng for the antiquitie and authoritie of the Church of Rome, reaſon on this maner.

Da That for ſomuch as an ordinary & a knowen Church viſible muſt here be knowen cōtinually on earth, duryng frō the time of the Apoſtles, to the which church all other Churches muſt haue recourſe.

ri- And ſeeyng then there is no other Church viſible, orderly knowen to haue indured from the Apoſtles time, but onely the Church of Rome.

j. They conclude therfore that the Church of Rome, is that Church wherunto all other Churches muſt haue their recourſe. &c.

Aunſwere. Fallacia æquiuoci.

To the which Paralogiſme I aūſwere thus: that this word Durans Eccleſia, the during Church in the Minor, hath fallaciā æquiuoci. For although the name of the Church and outward ſucceſſiō of Byſhops haue had their durance frō tyme of the Apoſtles, yet the definition and matter which maketh a true Apoſtolicall church in deede, and vniuocè, neither is now in the church of Rome, nor yet the forme & inſtitution of the church now vſed in Rome was euer frō the Apoſtles, whiche Apoſtles were neuer Authors or fathers of this title, iuriſdictiō, and doctrine now taught in Rome, but rather were enemies euer to the ſame.

The minor examined.

The maior examined.

Agayne to the Maior which ſtandeth vpon two partes, I aunſwere, firſt although the neceſſitie of the churche duryng from the Apoſtles, may and muſt be graūted, yet the ſame neceſſitie was not boūd to any certaine place, or perſō, but onely to fayth, ſo that where ſoeuer, that is to ſay, in whatſoeuer congregation true fayth was, there was the church of Chriſt: And becauſe the true fayth of Chriſt muſt needes euer remaine in earth, therfore yͤ Church alſo muſt needes remaine in earth. And God forbid that the ſaid true faith of Chriſt ſhould only remaine in one citie in yͤ world, and not in other as well. And therfore to the ſecōd part of the Maior is to be ſayd, that as this true and ſincere fayth of Chriſt is not ſo geuen, to remaine firely in one place or citie alone: ſo neither is there any one church in the world ſo ordained & appointed of God, that al other Churches ſhould haue their recourſe vnto it, for determination of their cauſes and cōtrouerſies incident. &c. And thus much to the Argument of Pighius and Hoſius, &c.

A diſtinction. The church of Rome diſtincted into a double conſideration of tymes.

Now as touchyng the authorities & allegations of the auncient Doctours, and holy fathers in the commēdation of the Church of Rome, here commeth in alſo to be noted, that whoſoeuer will vnderſtand rightly their authorities and aūſwere to the ſame, muſt firſt learne to make a difference and diſtinction of the ſayd Church of Rome, frō that it was, to that it is, for as much as the Church of Rome is not the ſame Church now, which it was then, but onely æquiuocè: otherwiſe as touching the very propertie and definition of a Church, it is an other Church, and nothing agreeing to that was then, ſaue onely in outward name and place, therefore by this diſtinction made, I aunſwere the place of Irenæus, Cyprianus, and other famous Doctours, commendyng the Church of Rome as Catholicke and Apoſtolicall, and ſay that theſe Doctours ſpeakyng of the Church of Rome which then was, ſayd not vntrue, callyng it Catholicke & Apoſtolicall, for that the ſame Church tooke their ordinary ſucceſſion of Byſhops, ioyned with the ordinary doctrine and inſtitution frō the Apoſtles: but ſpeakyng of the Church of Rome, whiche now is, we ſay the ſayd places of the Doctours are not true, neither doe appertaine to the ſame, all which Doctours neither knew the Churche of Rome that now is, neither if they had, would euer haue iudged any thyng therein worthy ſuch commendation.

The church of Rome, how it was commended of the olde Doctours.

The principall obiection of the Papiſtes, agaynſt the Proteſtants.

Ouer and beſides, our aduerſaries yet more obiect agaynſt vs, who heauing and ſhouyng for the antiquitie of the Romiſh Churche for lacke of other ſufficient reaſon to proue, are driuen to fall in ſcannyng the tymes and yeares. What, ſay they, where was this Church of yours, before theſe fiftie yeares? To whom briefly to aunſwere, firſt we demaund what they meane by this, which they call our Church? If they meane the ordinaunce and inſtitution of doctrine and Sacramentes, now receaued of vs, and differing from the Church of Rome, we affirme and ſay, that our church was, when this church of theirs was not yet hatched out of the ſhell, nor did yet euer ſee any light: that is, in the time of the Apoſtles, in the primitiue age, in the tyme of Gregorie the firſt, & the old Romane church, when as yet no vniuerſall pope was receiued publikely, but repelled in Rome, nor this fulneſſe of plenary power yet knowen, nor this doctrine, and abuſe of Sacramentes yet heard of. In witnes wherof we haue the old actes and hiſtories of aũcient tyme to geue teſtimony with vs, wherein ſufficiẽt matter we haue for vs, to declare yͤ ſame forme, vſage, and inſtitution of this our church reformed now, not to be the begynnyng of any new church of our owne, but to be the renewyng of the old aũcient church of Chriſt: nor to be any ſweruyng from the church of Rome, but rather a reducyng to the church of Rome. Whereas contrary the churche of Rome whiche now is, is nothyng but a ſweruyng from the churche of Rome, as partly is declared, and more ſhall appeare (Chriſt willyng) hereafter.

An other obiection of the papiſts.

An anſwere to the obiection.

And where the ſayd our aduerſaries doe moreouer charge vs with the ſayth of our fathers and Godfathers, wherein we were baptiſed, accuſing and cõdemnyng vs, for that we are now reuolted frõ them & their fayth, wherein we were firſt Chriſtened: To this we aũſwere, that we beyng firſt baptiſed by our fathers & Godfathers, in water, in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, & of the holy Ghoſt, the ſame fayth wherin we were Chriſtened thẽ, we do retaine, & becauſe our Godfathers were thẽ ſelues alſo in the ſame fayth, therfore they cã not ſay that we haue forſaken the fayth of our Godfathers. &c. As for other points of Eccleſiaſticall vſes & circumſtaunces cõſidered, beſides the principall ſubſtaunce of fayth and baptiſme, if they held any thyng whiche receded from the doctrine and rule of Chriſt, therein we now remoue our ſelues not becauſe we would differ from them, but becauſe we would not with them remoue from the rule of Chriſtes doctrine. Neither doth the Sacramẽt of our baptiſme binde vs in all points to the opiniõs of them that baptiſed vs, but to the fayth of him, in whoſe name we were Baptiſed. For as if a man were Chriſtined of an heretique, the Baptiſme of him notwithſtandyng were good, although the Baptiſer were nought: ſo if our Godfathers or fathers, which Chriſtened vs, were taught any thyng, not conſonant to Chriſtiã doctrine in all pointes, neither is our Baptiſme worſe for that, nor yet we bouñd to folow thẽ in all thynges, wherein they them ſelues did not folow the true church of Chriſt.

No man bound to follow the opinions of hys Godfathers in all poyntes vnleſſe they be conſonant in al things.

Wherefore as it is falſe, that we haue renounced the fayth of our Godfathers wherin we were firſt baptiſed, ſo is it not true yͤ we are remoued from the church of Rome. But rather ſay, and (by the leaue of Chriſt) will proue that yͤ Church of Rome hath vtterly departed frõ the church of Rome, accordyng to my diſtinctiõ afore touched. Which thyng yͤ more euidently to declare, I will here compare yͤ church of Rome, with yͤ churche of Rome: And in a generall deſcription ſet forth (by Gods grace) the difference of both the churches, that is of both yͤ tymes of the church of Rome: to yͤ intent it may be ſene, whether we or yͤ churche of Rome haue more Apoſtated from yͤ church of Rome.

The church of Rome diſtincted frõ the Church of Rome.

Two times of the Church of Rome conſidered and examined.

And here firſt I diuide the churche of Rome in a double conſideration of tyme, firſt of thoſe firſt. 600. yeares which were immediatly after Chriſt: and ſecõdly of the other. 600. yeares, which now haue bene in theſe our latter dayes. And ſo in cõparyng theſe two together, will ſearch out what diſcrepance is betwene them both. Of the which two age and ſtates of the Romane church, the firſt I call the primitiue church of Rome. The other I call the latter churche of Rome, countyng this latter churche from the thouſand yeares expired after the binding vp of Sathã, to the time of his louſing agayne accordyng to the Propheſie of the xx. chap. of S. Iohns Reuelation, countyng theſe. 1000. yeares from the ceaſing of perſecution, vnder Conſtantinus Magnus, to the beginnyng of perſecution of the churche agayne vnder Innocentius 3. and Ottomannus the firſt Turcian Emperour. And thus haue ye the churche of Rome parted into two churches, in double reſpect and cõſideration of two ſondry ſtates and tymes. Now in ſettyng and matchyng the one ſtate with the other, let vs ſee whether the churche of Rome hath ſwarued from the church of Rome more then we, or no.

The firſt poynt.

AND to begyn firſt with the order and qualities of life: I aſke here of this Romane Clergie, where was this Church of theirs which now is, in the old auncient tyme of the primitiue Church of Rome, with this pompe and pride, with this riches & ſuperfluitie, with this gloria mundi, and name of Cardinals, with this praunſing diſſolutenes and hooryng of the Curtiſans, with this extortiõ, bribyng, bying and ſellyng of ſpirituall dignities, theſe Annates, reformations, procurations, exactions, and other practiſes for money, this auarice inſatiable, ambition, intollerable, fleſhly filthynes moſt deteſtable, barbarouſnes and negligence in preachyng, promiſe breakyng faythleſſe, poyſoning and ſupplantyng one another, with ſuch ſchiſmes & diuiſions, which neuer were more ſeen then in the elections and Court of Rome theſe 700. yeares, with ſuch extreme crueltie, malice and tyranny in burnyng and perſecutyng their poore brethren to death.

The enormities of life in the later Churche of Rome deſcribed.

Policies and practiſes of Rome to get mony.

It were to long, and a thing infinite, to ſtand particularly vpõ theſe aboue rehearſed. And if a man ſhould proſecute at large all the ſchiſmes that haue bene in yͤ Church of Rome ſince the time of Damaſus the firſt, which are coũted to the number of xviij. ſchiſmes. What a volume would it require? Or if here ſhould be recorded all that this Sea hath burned and put to death ſince looſing out of Sathan, who were able to number them? Or if all their ſleightes to get money ſhould be deſcribed as proceſſe of matter would require, who were able to recite them all? Of which all notwithſtandyng, the moſt principall groundes are reckoned at leaſt to xiiij. or xv. ſleights.

XV. Practiſes of the newe Churche of Rome to get mony.

Firſt for Annates, or vacanties of Archbyſhoprikes, Byſhoprikes, Abbaties, Priories conuentuall, and other benefices electiue.

Secondly, for the holdyng and reteinyng of all other ſpirituall liuyng whatſoeuer, beſides this which now the incumbent payeth for, or which he may hold hereafter.

Thirdly, new annates for all the ſame are required agayne, toties quoties, any one of all his ſpirituall liuynges be, or are fayned to be not orderly come by, whereby it hath chaunced diuers tymes three or foure Annates to be payed for one benefice.

Fourthly, for geuing out preuẽtiõs of benefites before they fall, and many tymes ſome one preuention to be geuẽ to diuers and ſundry perſons, by the office for money ſake.

Fiftly, for reſignations vpon fauour, whiche in many caſes the Pope chalengeth to be reſerued to him ſelfe.

Sixtly, for commendams.

Seuently, for compoſidyng with ſuch as be abſent frõ their charge, and geue attendaunce about the Court.

Eightly, for infinite diſpenſations, as to diſpence with age, with order, with benefices incompatible, as if the nũber be full, if the houſe be of ſuch or ſuch an order. Item diſpenſation for irregularitie, for whoredome & aduoutry, for times of mariage, for marying in degrees forbidden, or in affinitie canonicall, for Goſſips to mary, for the which it hath bene ſene in Fraũce a thouſand crownes to be payd to Rome at one tyme, for diſpenſing with this canonicall affinite of Goſſippes, as we call it, the ſame beyng yet not true, but fayned. Item diſpenſing for eatyng meates in tymes prohibited.

Ninthly, for innumerable priuilegies, exẽptiõs, graces for not viſityng, or viſityng by a Proctor, for cõfirmations of priuileges, for tranſactiõs made vpon ſpeciall fauour of the Pope, for permutations of benefices with diſpenſation annexed, or makyng of penſiõs, with ſuch like.

Tenthly, for mandates graunted by the Pope, to Ordinaries, wherof euery Ordinary, if he haue the collation or preſẽtatiõ of x. may receaue one mãdate, if he haue fifty, he may receaue ij. mandates, & for euery mandate cõmeth to the Pope about xx. ducates. And yet notwithſtãdyng ſo many are ſold, as will come buyers to pay for them.

Eleuenthly, for the Popes penitẽtiarie, for abſolutiõ of caſes reſerued to yͤ Pope, for breaking & chãging of vowes for tranſlation frõ one monaſtery to another, alſo from one order to an other, for licẽce to enter into certaine Monaſteries, to cary about altars, with many other things of like deuiſe, pertainyng to the office of the Popes penitentiary.

Twelfty, for geuyng & graũtyng of innumerable Pardons and Indulgences, to be read not onely in publicque tẽples, but alſo to be bought in priuate houſes, and of priuate perſons, in diuers and ſundry reſpectes.

Thirtenthly, for makyng Notaries, and Protonotories, and other offices of the Court of Rome.

Fourtenthly, for grauntyng out Buls and Commiſſions of new foundatiõs, or for chaungyng of the old, for reducyng regular Monaſteries, to a ſecular ſtate, or for reſtoryng agayne into the old, & for other infinite reſcriptes & writes, about matters dependyng in controuerſie, & otherwiſe might and ought by the Ordinary to be decided.

Fiftenthly, for geuing the palle to Archbyſhops newly elected, by reaſon of all whiche deuiſes (beſides the firſt of the Annates) it hath bene accounted out of the kynges recordes in Fraunce, in the tyme of Ludouike the ix. (as teſtifieth Molineus) to the number of CC. thouſand crownes, onely out of Fraunce payd & tranſported to Rome. Which ſumme ſince that time hath bene doubled & tripled, beſides Annates and Palles, whiche all together are thought to make the totall ſumme, yearely goyng out of Fraunce to the Popes coffers of late yeares x. Myriades, or Milliõs, euery Myriade mountyng to x. thouſand crownes. Now what hath riſen beſides in other Realmes and Natiõs, let other men coniecture.

Wherfore if the Goſpell ſend vs to the fruites to know the tree, I pray you what is to be thought of the Churche of Rome, with theſe fruites of lyfe? Or if we will ſeeke the Church in length and number of yeares, where was this Church of Rome with theſe qualities then, at what tyme the Church of Rome was a perſecuted Church, not a perſecutyng Church? And when the Byſhops therof did not make Martyrs, as theſe do now, but were made Martyrs them ſelues, to the number of xxv. in order one after an other? Or when the Byſhops therof were elected & exalted, not by factiõs conſpiring, not by power or partes taking, not by money or frendes makyng, as they be now, but by the free voyces of the people & of the Clergy, with the conſent of the Emperour ioyned with all, and not by a few cõſpired Cardinals, cloſed vp in a corner, as they be now &c.

The iuriſdiction and power of this new church of Rome examined.

Ex Annonio de geſtis Frãcorum Lib 5. Cap. 33.

The Popes iuriſdiction reſiſted in Fraunce.

AND yet if there were no other difference in the matter, but onely corruptiõ of life, all that we would tollerate, or els impute to the common fragilitie of man, and charge them no further therein, then we might charge our ſelues. Now ouer and beſide this deformitie of life, wherein they are cleane gone frõ the former ſteppes of the true Church of Rome, we haue moreouer to charge them in greater pointes, more nearely touchyng the ſubſtauntiall ground of the Church, as in their iuriſdiction preſumptuouſly vſurped, in their title fallſely grounded, and in their doctrine heretically corrupted. In all which three pointes, this latter pretenced Churche of Rome, hath vtter ſequeſtred it ſelfe from the Image and nature of the auncient and true Church of Rome, and haue erected to them ſelues, a new Church of their owne makyng, as firſt vſurping a iuriſdiction neuer knowen before to their auncient predeceſſors. For although the Churche of Rome in the old primitiue tyme had his due authoritie and place due vnto that ſea, among other Patriarchall Churches, ouer and vpon ſuch Churches as were within his precinct, & bordering neare vnto it, as appeareth by the Actes of Nicene Cõucell: yet the vniuerſall fulneſſe and plenitude of power in both the regimentes, ſpirituall & temporall, in depoſing & diſpenſing matters of the Church, not to him belõging, in taking Appeales, in geuyng elections, inueſtyng in benefices, in exẽpting him ſelfe from obedience & ſubiection of his ordinary power & Magiſtrate, with his coactiue power newly erected in the church of Rome, was neuer receaued nor vſed in the old Romane church, frõ which they diſagree in all their doings. For although Victor thẽ biſhop of Rome. an. 200. went about to excõmunicate the Eaſt Churches, for the obſeruation of Eaſter day: yet neither did he proceede therein, neither was permitted by Irenæus ſo to doe. And although Boniface the firſt likewiſe, wrytyng to the Byſhops of Carthage, required of thẽ to ſend vp their appellatiõs vnto the Church of Rome, alledgyng moreouer the decree of Nicene Coũcell for his authoritie: The Byſhops & Clergy of Carthage aſſemblyng together in a generall Coũcell (called the vj. Councell of Carthage) to the nũber of. 217. Byſhops, after they had peruſed the decrees in the autentike copies of the foreſayd Nicene Councell, & foũd no ſuch matter, by the ſayd Bonifacius alledged, made therefore a publike decree, that none out of that countrey ſhould make any appeale ouer the ſea. &c. And what maruell if appeales were forbiddẽ them to be made to Rome, whẽ as both here in Englãd the kyngs of this land would not permit any to Appeale frõ them to Rome, before king Henry the ij. becauſe of the murther of Thomas Becket, beyng thereunto compelled by Pope Alexander the iij. And alſo in Fraunce yͤ like prohibitions were expreſſely made by Ludouicus Pius, an. 1268. which did forbid by a publicke inſtrument, called Pragmatica ſanctio, all exactions of the Popes court within his Realme. Alſo by kyng Philip named Le bel, an. 1296. the like was done, which not only reſtrayned all ſedyng or goyng vp of his ſubiectes to Rome, but alſo that no money, armour, nor ſubſidy, ſhould be tranſported out of his Realme. The like alſo after him did king Charles the v. ſurnamed the Wiſe, and his ſonne likewiſe after him Charles the vj. who alſo puniſhed as traytours, certaine ſeditious perſons for appealyng to Rome. The like reſiſtaũce moreouer was in the ſayd countrey of Fraũce, againſt the Popes reſeruatiõs, preuẽtiõs, & other like practiſes of his vſurped iuriſdictiõ in yͤ dayes of pope Martin the v. an. 1418. Item, when kyng Henry the vj. in England, and kyng Charles the 7. in Fraũce, did both accord with the Pope, in inueſting & in collatiõ of benefices, yet notwithſtandyng the highe Court of Parliament in Fraunce did not admit the ſame, but ſtill maintayned the old libertie & cuſtomes of the French Church. In ſo much that the Duke of Bethfort came with the kynges letters patẽt to haue the Popes procurations & reſeruations admitted, yet the court of Parliamẽt would not agree to the ſame, but the kyngs Procurator generall was fayne to go betwixt them, as is to be ſene in their Regiſters. an. 1425. the fift day of Marche. In the dayes of the which kyng Charles the vij. was ſet forth in Fraunce, Pragmatica ſanctio, as they call it, agaynſt the Annates, reſeruations, expectatiues, and ſuch other proceedyngs of the Popes pretenced iuriſdictiõ. an. 1438. wherfore what maruell if this iuriſdiction of the Popes Court in excommunicatyng, in takyng Appeales, and geuyng of benefices, was not vſed in the old Church of Rome, when as in theſe latter dayes it hath bene ſo much reſiſted?

Pragmatica ſanctio.

The Popes iuriſdiction concerning elections examined.

Platina. Sabel. Enead. 8. lib. 6.

Cõſtãtine the 4. Emperour of Conſtantinople.

The Popes bibliothecarie ſuſpected.

And what ſhould I ſpeake of the forme and maner of elections, now vſed in the Church of Rome, cleane conuerted from the maner of the old Church of their predeceſſors? For firſt in thoſe auncient dayes, when as yet the Church remayned in the Apoſtles onely, & a few other Diſciples, the Apoſtles then with prayer and impoſition of handes, elected Byſhops & Miniſters, as by the Apoſtles Iames was made Biſhop of Hieruſalem. Paule in Creta elected Titus, and Timothe in Epheſus. Alſo Peter ordayned Linus and Clement in Rome. &c. After which tyme of the Apoſtles, when the Church began more to multiply, the election of Byſhops and Miniſters ſtode by the Clergie & the people, with the conſent of the chief Magiſtrate of the place, and ſo continued during all the tyme of the Primitiue Church, till the tyme, and after the time of Conſtantine the 4. Emperour, which Emperour (as writeth Platina and Sabellic. Enead. 8. lib. 6.) publiſhed a law concernyng the election of the Romane Byſhop, that he ſhould be takẽ for true Byſhop, whom the Clergy and people of Rome did chuſe & elect, without any tarying for any authoritie of the Emperour of Conſtãtinople, or the Deputie of Italy: ſo as the cuſtome and faſhion had euer bene before that day, an. 685. And here the Byſhops began firſt to writhe out their elections and their neckes a litle from the Emperours ſubiection, if it be ſo as the ſayd Platina and Sabellicus after him reporteth. But many coniectures there be, not vnprobable, rather to thinke this conſtitutiõ of Conſtantine to be forged and vntrue. Firſt, for that it is taken out of the Popes Bibliothecarie, a ſuſpected place and collected by the keeper and maiſter of the Popes Librarie, a ſuſpected author, who whatſoeuer fayned wrytynges or Apocripha he could finde in the Popes cheſtes of Recordes, makyng any thyng on his maiſters ſide: that he compiled together, and therof both Platina, Sabellicus, & Gratianus take moſt part of their reportes, & therefore may the more be ſuſpected. &c.

The conſtitution of Conſtantine the 4. Emperour of Cõſtãtinople examined.

Secondly, where Platina and Sabellicus ſay that Conſtantine moued with the holynes of Pope Benedict the firſt made that cõſtitutiõ, how ſeemeth that to ſtãd with truth, when both the Emperour was ſo farre of from him being at Conſtantinople, & alſo for that the ſayd Pope raigned but x. monethes? which was but a ſmall tyme to make his holines knowen to the Emperour ſo farre of. And giue he were ſo holy, yet that holynes might rather be an occaſiõ for the Emperour ſo to confirme and maintaine the olde receaued maner of his inſtitution, then to alter it.

Rubrica de ordinatione Epiſcopi. ex Caleſtino Papa diſt. 63. Cap. Cleri. Diſt. 63. Cap. Sacrorum.

The third coniecture is this, for that the ſayd conſtitution was not obſerued, but ſhortly after by the ſayd Benedict was broken in the election of Pope Conon. And yet notwithſtanding albeit the conſtitution were true, yet the election there by was not takẽ away from the people, and limited to the Clergy onely, and much leſſe might be taken away frõ the Clergie, and be limited onely to the Cardinals, without the conſent of their Prince and ruler, accordyng to their owne Rubrice in their Decrees, where the Rubrice ſayth: De ordinatione Epiſcopi: Nullus inuitis detur Epiſcopus, cleri, plebis, & ordinis conſenſus & deſiderium requiratur, &c. That is: Let no Byſhop be geuen to any people agaynſt their wils: but let the conſent & deſire both of the Clergy and of the people, and of the order, be alſo required. &c. And in the ſame Diſt. alſo, cap. Sacrorũ, we read the ſame libertie & intereſt to be graunted by Carolus Magnus, and Ludouicus his ſonne, not to a few Cardinals onely, but to the order as well of the Clergy, as of the people, to chuſe not onely the Biſhop of Rome, but any other Biſhop within their owne Dioceſſe whatſoeuer, and to the Monkes likewiſe, to chuſe their owne Abbot, ſettyng aſide all reſpect of perſons and giftes, onely for the worthynes of life, and gift of wiſedome, ſo as might be moſt profitable for doctrine, and exãple vnto the flocke. &c. And this continued till the tyme of the foreſayd Carolus Magnus, and Libertie graunted to the Clergy, and to the people to chuſe their Biſhop.

Ludouicus Pius.

The decree, Ego Ludoucus, diſt. 63. ſuſpected.

Gratianus & Volateranus, what ground they haue of their recordes.

Diſt.63.ca. Ego Ludouicus.

Election of the Biſhop of Rome ſtandeth vpon the cōſent of the Clergy, and the people of Rome.

Ludouicus his ſonne, an. 810. of the which two, Carolus the father receaued expreſly of Pope Adrian the firſt, full iuriſdiction and power to elect & ordeine the Biſhop of Rome, like as pope Leo the ix. did alſo to Ottho the firſt Germain Emperour, an. 961. The other, that is, Ludouicus, ſonne to the forſayd Charles, is ſayd to renoūce agayne, and ſurrender from him ſelfe and his ſucceſſours, vnto pope Paſchalis and the Romaines, the right and intereſt of chuſing the Romane Biſhop, and moreouer to giue and graunt to the ſayd Paſchalis the full poſſeſſion of the Citie of Rome, & the whole territorie to the ſame belongyng. An. 821. as appeareth by the decree, Ego Ludouicus Diſt.63. But admit that fayned decree to be vnfaynedly true (as it may wel be ſuſpected for many cauſes, as proceedyng out of the ſame foūtaine, with the cōſtitution of Conſtantine afore mentioned, that is, from the maiſter of the Popes Library, of whō doth Gratianus & Volateran, by their owne confeſſion take their grounde) yet the ſame decree doth not ſo geue away the freedome of that election, that he limiteth it onely to the Cardinals, but alſo requireth the whole cōſent of the Romaines, neither doth he ſimplely & abſolutely geue the ſame, but with cōditiō, ſo that, Omnes Romani vno conſilio, & vna concordia ſine aliqua promiſsione ad pontificatus ordinem eligerent: that is, whō as all the Romaines with one counſaile, & with one accord, without any promiſe of their voyces grāted before, ſhall chuſe to be Byſhop of Rome. And moreouer in the ſame Decree is required, that at the conſecration of the ſame Biſhop, meſſengers ſhould be directed incōtinent to the Frēch kyng concernyng the ſame.

The decree Ego Ludouicus, proued falſ.

Diſt.23.ca. In Nomine Domini.

Furthermore, neither yet did the ſame decree (albeit it were true) long continue. For although Pope Stephen the fourth, and pope Paſchalis the firſt, in Ludouicus time were inpapaced thorough diſcord without election of the Emperour, yet they were fayne by meſſage to ſend their purgation to him of their election. And after that, in the tyme of Eugenius the ij. which ſucceeded next to Paſchalis, Lotharius ſonne of Ludouicus, and Emperour with his father, came to Rome, and there appointed lawes & magiſtrates ouer the Citie. whereby may appeare the donation of Ludouike, in geuyng away the Citie of Rome to the Pope, to be fayned. And after Eugenius, pope Gregory the iiij. who followyng within a yeare after Eugenius, durſt not take his election without the conſent and confirmation of the ſayd Emperour Ludouicus. And ſo in like maner his ſucceſſours pope Sergius the ij: Pope Leo, the iiij. pope Nicolas the firſt, and ſo orderly in a long tract of tyme, from the foreſayd Nicolas the firſt, to Pope Nicolas the ij. an. 1061. (which Nicolas in his Decree beginnyng, In nomine Domini Diſt.23. ordained alſo the ſame) ſo that in the election of the Biſhops of Rome, commonly the conſent of the Emperour and the people with the Clergy of Rome, was not lackyng. After which Nicolas came Alexander the 2. and wicked Hildebrād, which Alexander being firſt elected without the Emperors will and conſent, afterward repenting the ſame, openly in his preaching to the people declared that he would no longer ſit in the Apoſtolique ſea, vnleſſe he were by the emperor confirmed. wherfore he was greatly rebuked, and caſt into priſon by Hildebrand, and ſo depoſed. Then Hildebrand and his folowers ſo ordred the matter of this election, that firſt the Emperor, then the lay people, after that the Clergie alſo began to be excluded. And ſo the election by litle & little was reduced into the handes of a few Cardinals, cōtrary to all anciēt order, where euer ſince it hath remained.

The iudiciarie power of the Pope examined.

Georg. Turonenſ. in Francorum hiſt. lib.10. ca.18.

And like as in elections, ſo alſo in power iudiciarie, in deciding and determinyng of cauſes of fayth, and of Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, the ſtate of the Church of Rome, now beyng, hath no cōformitie with the old Romane Churche heretofore. For then Byſhops debated all cauſes of fayth onely by the Scriptures, and other queſtions of Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline they determined by the Canōs, not of the Pope, but of the Church, ſuch as were decreed by the auncient Councels, as writeth Greg. Turonenſis in Francorum hiſtoria. where as now both the rule of ſcripture, & ſanctions of the old Councels ſet aſide, all thynges for the moſt part are decided by certaine new decretall or rather extradecretall & extrauagant conſtitutions, in the Popes Canon law compiled, and in his Conſiſtories practiſed.

9.q.3.cap.per ſingulas, Pragmatica ſanctio ſancti Ludouici.

Impropriations and firſt fruites of benefices.

And where as the old ordinaunce and diſpoſition, as well of the common law, as of the ſacred Coūcels, and inſtitution of auncient fathers haue geuen to Byſhops & other prelates, alſo to patrons and donors of Eccleſiaſtical benefices euery one within his owne precinct and dominion, alſo to cathedrall Churches and other: to haue their free elections & to proſecute the ſame in full effect: ordryng and diſpoſing promotions, collatiōs, prouiſions & diſpoſitions of prelacies, dignities, and all other Eccleſiaſticall benefices whatſoeuer, after their owne arbitremēt, as appeareth by the firſt generall Councell of Fraunce. 16. q 7. cap. Omnes Baſilicæ, by the firſt generall Councell of Nice, cap 6. Alſo by the generall Councell of Antioche. cap. 9. and is to be ſeene in the Popes Decrees. 9.q.3. Per ſingulas. And alſo beſide theſe auncient decrees, the ſame is confirmed agayne in more latter yeares by Ludouicus the ninth French kyng in his conſtitution called Pragmatica ſanctio, made and prouided by full Parliament agaynſt the popes exactions. An. 1228. in theſe wordes as folow. Item exactiones & onera grauiſsima pecuniarum, per curiam Romanam Eccleſiæ regni noſtri impoſitas vel impoſita (quibus regnum miſerabiliter de pauperatum exiſtit) ſiue etiam imponendas vel imponenda leuari aut colligi nullatenus volumus: niſi duntaxat pro rationabili, pia & vrgentiſsima cauſa, vel ineuitabili neceſsitate, ac etiam de expreſſo, & ſpontaneo iuſſu noſtro, & ipſius Eccleſiæ regni noſtri. &c. that is. Item all exactions & importable burdens of money, which the Court of Rome hath layd vpon the Church of our kingdome (whereby the ſaid our kingdome hath bene miſerably hetherto impoueriſhed) or hereafter ſhall impoſe or lay vpon vs, we vtterly diſcharge and forbyd to be leuied or collected hereafter for any maner of cauſe, vnleſſe there come ſome reaſonable, godly, & moſt vrgent, & ineuitable neceſſitie, & that alſo not to be done without the expreſſe & voluntary commaundement of vs, & of the Church of the ſame our foreſayd kingdome. &c. Now contrary and agaynſt to theſe ſo manifeſt & expreſſe decrementes of generall Councels, & conſtitutions Synodall, this latter Church of Rome of late preſumption, degeneratyng frō all the ſteppes of their elders, haue taken vpon them a ſingular iuriſdiction by them ſelues, & for their owne aduauntage, to entermedle in diſpoſing & trāſpoſing Churches, Colledges, Monaſteries, with the collations, exemptions, elections, goodes & landes to the ſame belongyng, by reaſon and exāple wherof haue come in theſe impropriations, firſt fruites, & reſeruations of benefices to the miſerable diſpoyling of Pariſhes, & horrible decay of Chriſten fayth, which thynges amōg the old Romaine elders were neuer knowē. For ſo much then did it lacke, that due neceſſities were pluckt frō the Church, that Emperours, Kyngs, & Princes plucking frō their owne, rather did cumulate the Church with ſuperfluities.

Inſtitutiones canonicæ ſub Ludouico Pio.

Agayne, when ſuch goodes were geuen to the Church by thoſe auncetors, they were neither ſo geuen, nor yet taken, to ſerue the priuate vſe of certaine churchmen takyng no paynes therein, but rather to ſerue the publique ſubuētiō of the needy, as is cōteined in the canonicall inſtitutiōs by the Emperour Ludouicus Pius ſet forth. An. 830. The wordes be theſe: Res Eccleſiæ vota ſunt fidelium, pretia peccatorum, & patrimonia pauperum, that is: The goods of the church be the vowes and bequeſtes of the faythfull, prices to raunſome ſuch as be in captiuitie or priſon, and patrimonies to ſuccour them with hoſpitalitie, that be needy.

The wordes of Proſper.

Wherunto agreeth alſo the teſtimony of Proſper, whoſe wordes be theſe: Viros ſanctos eccleſiæ non vendicaſſe vt proprias, ſed vt commendatas pauperibus diuiſiſſe: that is, good men tooke ỹ goodes of the church not as their own but diſtributed thē as geuē & bequeathed to the poore. And ſayth moreouer: Quod habet Eccleſia, cum omnibus nihil habentibus habet commune, that is: what ſoeuer the church hath, it hath it common, with all ſuch as haue nothyng. &c.

Adde to theſe the worthy teſtimony of S. Auguſt. ad Bonif. Si autem priuatim, quæ nobis ſufficiant poſsidemus, nō ſunt illa noſtra, ſed pauperum quorum procurationem quodammodo gerimus, non proprietatem nobis vſurpatione damnabili vendicamus, &c.

Vowſons and pluralities of benefices.

Likewiſe vowſons and pluralities of benefices were thyngs then as much vnknowen, as now they are pernitious to the church, taking away all free election of miniſters from the flocke of Chriſt.

Three points wherein the Popes Church erreth in his iuriſdiction.

All which inconueniences as they firſt came and crept in chiefly by the pretenſed authoritie & iuriſdiction abuſed in this latter church of Rome, ſo it can not be denyed, but the ſayd latter church of Rome hath taken and attributed to it ſelfe much more, thē either the limites of Gods word do geue, or ſtandeth with the example of the old Romane church, in theſe three thynges eſpeciall. wherof as mentiō is touched before, ſo briefly I will recapitulate the ſame.

1. Eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction falſly reſtrained & impropriate to the Church of Rome, which ought to be generally equall to all Churches Chriſtian.

The firſt is in this, that whatſoeuer the Scripture geueth and referreth, either to the whole church vniuerſally, or to euery particular church ſeuerally, this church now of Rome doth arrogate to it ſelfe abſolutely and onely, both doyng iniury to other churches, & alſo abuſing the Scriptures of God. For albeit the Scripture doth geue authoritie to binde and looſe, it limitteth it neither to perſon nor place, that is, neither to the Citie of Rome onely, more thē to other Cities, nor to ỹ ſea of Peter, more thē to other Apoſtles, but geueth it clearely to ỹ Church, wherof Peter did beare the figure, ſo that where ſoeuer the true Church of Chriſt is, there is annexed power to bynde & looſe, geuen and taken meerly as from Chriſt, and not mediatly by the Pope or Byſhop of Peters ſea.

2. Eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction abuſed and extended in the church of Rome further then the word limiteth.

The ſecond poynt wherein this preſent Churche of Rome abuſeth his iuriſdiction contrary to Scripture and ſteps of the old Romane Church, is this, for that it extendeth his authoritie farther and more amply, thē either the warrant of the word, or example of tyme will giue. For although the Churche of Rome hath (as other particular churches haue) authoritie to binde and abſolue, yet it hath no ſuch authoritie to abſolue ſubiectes frō their othe, ſubiection, and loyaltie to their rulers & Magiſtrates, to diſpēſe with periury, to denounce remiſſiō, where no earneſt repentaunce is ſene before, to number remiſſion by dayes & yeares, to diſpenſe with thynges expreſſely in the word forbiddē, or to reſtrayne that which the word maketh free, to deuide Religion into Religions, to binde and burthen conſciences with conſtitutions of men, to excommunicate for worldly matters, as for breakyng of parkes, for not ringyng bels at the Byſhops commyng, for not bringyng litter for their horſe, for not paying their fees and rētes, for withholding the church goods, for holding on their princes ſide in princely caſes, for not going at the Popes commaundement, for not agreeyng to the Popes electiō in an other princes Realme, with other ſuch thyngs mo & more vayne then theſe. &c. Agayne, although the Scripture geueth leaue and authoritie to the Byſhop and Churche of Rome to miniſter Sacraments, yet it geueth no authoritie to make Sacramentes, much leſſe to worſhyp Sacraments. And though their authoritie ſerueth to baptiſe mē, yet it extendeth not to Chriſten bels: neither haue they authoritie by any word of God to adde to the word of God, or take from the ſame, to ſet vp vnwritten verities vnder payne of damnation, to make other articles of belief, to inſtitute ſtraunge worſhip, otherwiſe thē he hath preſcribed, which hath told vs how he would be worſhipped. &c.

Chriſtening of Bels.

3. The iuriſdiction of the Pope abuſed and vſurped in temporal matters where he hath nothing to doe.

The third abuſe of the Popes iuriſdiction ſtandeth in this, that as in ſpirituall iuriſdiction they haue vehemētly exceeded the boūdes of Scripture, ſo they haue impudētly intermedled them ſelues in temporall iuriſdictiō, wherein they haue nothing to do. In ſo much that they haue trāſlated the Empire, they haue depoſed Emperours, Kyngs, Princes & rulers & Senatours of Rome, & ſet vp other, or the ſame agayne at their pleaſure, they haue proclaymed warres, & haue warred them ſelues. And where as Emperours in aūcient tyme haue dignified thē in titles, haue enlarged thē with donations, & they receauyng their confirmation by the Emperours, haue like ingratfull clients to ſuch benefactors, afterward ſtampte vpon their neckes, haue made thē to hold their ſtyrrup, ſome to hold ẏ bridle of their horſe, haue cauſed them to ſeeke their confirmation at their hand, yea haue bene Emperours thē ſelues: Sede vacante, & in diſcordia electionis, and alſo haue bene Senatours of the Citie. Moreouer haue extorted into their owne handes the plenary fulnes of power & iuriſdiction of both the ſwordes, eſpecially ſince the tyme of Pope Hildebrand: which Hildebrand depoſing Henricus the iiij. Emperour, made him geue attendance at his Citie gate. And after him Pope Bonifacius the viij. ſhewed him ſelfe vnto the people on the firſt day like a Byſhop, with his keyes before him, & ẏ next day in his robes Imperiall, hauyng a naked ſword borne before him, like an Emperour. an. 1298. And for ſo much as this inordinate iuriſdiction hath not onely bene vſed of thē, but alſo to this day is mainteined in Rome, let vs therefore now compare the vſage hereof to the old maner in tymes paſt, meanyng the primitiue and firſt age of the Church of the Romaines. Wherein ẏ old Byſhops of Rome in thoſe dayes, as they were then ſubiect to their Emperours, ſo were other Byſhops in like maner of other nations ſubiect euery one to his Kyng & Prince, acknowledgyng them for their Lordes, & were ordered by their authoritie & obeyed their lawes, and that not onely in cauſes ciuile, but alſo in regiment Eccleſiaſticall as appeareth Diſt. 10. cap. 1. & 2. Diſt. 97. cap. De illicita.

Popes ſubmitted in the olde tyme to Emperours.

Alſo 24.q.3. So was Gregorius ſurnamed Magnus, ſubiect to Mauritius, and to Phocas, although a wicked Emperour. So alſo both Pope & people of Rome tooke their lawes of the Emperours of Conſtantinople, & were ſubmitted to thē, not onely in the time of Honorius an hūdreth yeares after Conſtantine the great, but alſo in the tyme of Martianus, an. 451. & ſo further vnto the tyme of Iuſtinian & of Carolus Magnus, and alſo after the dayes of them. In all which cōtinuance of tyme, it is manifeſt, that the Emperiall law of Martiane did rule & bynde in Rome, both in the days of Iuſtinian, an 150. yeres after, til the tyme of the Empire beyng tranſlated from Grece vnto Fraūce. Whereby it may appeare falſe, that the Citie of Rome was geuē by Conſtantine the firſt vnto the biſhop of Rome to gouerne, for that Pope Bonifacius the firſt writyng to the Emperour Honorius, called in the ſame place Rome the Emperours Citie. Diſt. 97. cap. 1. And Lotharius, alſo Emperour appointed Magiſtrates and lawes in Rome, as is aboue mentioned. Moreouer, for further probation hereof, that both the Byſhop of Rome & all other Eccleſiaſticall perſons were in former tyme, and ought to be ſubiect to their Emperours and lawfull Magiſtrates, in cauſes as well ſpirituall as ciuile, by many euidences may appeare, takē out both of Gods law, and mans law. And firſt by Gods law we haue exāple of godly kyng Dauid, who numbred all the Prieſtes and Leuites, & diſpoſed thē into xxiiij. orders or courſes, appointyng thē cōtinually to ſerue in the miniſtery euery one in his proper order & turne, as came about: which inſtitution of the Clergy, alſo good king Ezechias afterward renued, of whō it is written: he did that was right in the ſight of the Lord, accordyng to all things as his father Dauid had done before, he tooke away the high groues, and brake downe Images. &c. 4.Reg.8. The ſayd Ezechias alſo reduced the Prieſts & Leuites into their orders, preſcribed by Dauid before, to ſerue euery one in his office of miniſtratiō. 2.Paralip.30.31. And this order frō Dauid ſtill continued till the time of Zachary at the cōmyng of Chriſt our Lord, beyng of Abias courſe, which was the viij. order of the Prieſtes appointed to ſerue in the tabernacle. Luc.1. To paſſe ouer other lighter offices tranſlated from the Prieſtes to the Kyngs authoritie, as cōcernyng the orderyng of oblations in the Temple, and reparations of the Lordes houſe, kyng Salomon diſplaced Abiathar the high Prieſt, by his kyngly power, and placed Sadoch in his ſtede. 3.Reg.cap.6. Alſo dedicatyng the temple of the Lord with all the people, bleſſed the whole congregation of Iſraell. 3.Reg.8. Iudas Machabeus alſo elected Prieſtes, ſuch as beyng without ſpot had a zeale to the law of the Lord, to purge the Temple, which the Idolatrous Gentiles had before prophaned. 1.Machab.4.

Ioſaphat likewiſe as in the whole lād did ſet Iudges, ſo alſo in Hieruſalem he appointed Leuites & Prieſtes, and heades of families to haue the hearyng of cauſes, and to miniſter Iudgement ouer the people. 2 Paral. 19. By theſe & many other is to be ſene, the Kynges & Princes in the old tyme as well, when Prieſtes were borne Prieſtes, as whē they were made by election, had the dealyng alſo in Eccleſiaſticall matters, as in callyng the people to Gods ſeruice, in cutting down groues, in deſtroying images, in gathering tithes into ẏ Lordes houſe, in dedicating the tēple, in bleſſing the people, in caſtyng downe the braſen Serpēt within the tēple, in correcting & depoſing Prieſtes, in cōſtituting the order & offices of Prieſtes, in commaundyng ſuch thynges as pertained to the ſeruice & worſhyp of God, & in puniſhyng the contrary. &c. And in the new Teſtament what meaneth the exāple of Chriſt himſelfe both geuing & teaching tribute to be geuen to Cæſar? to Cæſar I ſay, & not to ẏ high Prieſt. What meaneth his wordes to Pilate not denying power to be geuen to him from aboue?

And agayne declaryng the kynges of nations to haue dominiō ouer thē, & willing his Diſciples not ſo to do, geuyng vs to vnderſtād the difference betwene the regimēt of his ſpirituall kingdome, & of ẏ kingdome of this world, willyng all worldly ſtates to be ſubiect vnder the ſuperiour rulers & Magiſtrates, in whoſe regiment is dominiō and ſubiectiō, & not in the other. Whereunto accordeth alſo the doctrine of S. Paule, where it is written: let euery ſoule be ſubiect to the higher powers, vnder whoſe obedience neither Pope, Cardinall, Patriarch, Byſhop, Prieſt, Frier nor Monke is excepted, nor exempted, as Theophilactus expoūdyng the ſame place declareth, & ſayth: Vniuerſos erudit, ſiue ſacerdos ſit ille, ſiue monachus, ſiue Apoſtolus, vt ſe principibus ſubdant: that is, he teacheth all ſortes, whether he bee Prieſt, or Monke, or els Apoſtle, that they ſhould ſubmit themſelues vnder their Princes. &c. And S. Auguſtine writyng ad Bonifacium, ſayth in much like ſort: Quicunq; autem legibus imperatoris, quæ pro Dei veritate feruntur, obtemperare non vult, acquirit grande ſupplicium, that is, whoſoeuer refuſeth to obey the lawes of the Emperor, which make for the veritie of God, incurreth the daunger of great puniſhmēt. &c. Alſo in an other place, writyng cōtra Creſconium, hath theſe words: In hoc enim reges ſicut eis diuinitus præcipitur, Deo ſeruiunt, in quantum reges, ſi in ſuo regno bona iubeant, mala prohibeant, non ſolùm quæ pertinent ad humanam ſocietatem, verumetiam quæ ad diuinam religionē &c. that is, Kynges accordyng as it is inioyned them of God, do ſerue God in that they are kynges, if they in their kyngdome commaunde thoſe thynges that be good, & forbid thynges that be euill, ſuch as appertaine not onely to humaine ſocietie, but alſo to Gods Religion. &c. And yet to come more neare to the Popes owne Doctours, Thomas Aquine not much diſcrepant from the iniunction of the Apoſtle aboue alledged, thus deſcribeth ẏ office of a kyng: Hoc inquit, officium rex ſe ſuſcepiſſe cognoſcat, vt ſit in regno, ſicut in corpore anima, & ſicut Deus in mundo, &c. Let a kyng (ſayth he) vnderſtand, that he hath taken this office vpon him, to be as the ſoule within the body, and as God in the world. In like agreemẽt with the holy Apoſtle S. Paule, ioyneth alſo S. Peter: be you ſubiect (ſayth he) to euery humaine creature, whether it be to the king, as moſt preeminent, or to other ſet ouer you. &c. Where the common Gloſe addeth thereto, to obey the ſame, whether they be good or euill. Theſe places rightly pondered, let any mã now iudge whether the Pope hath done open wrong to the Emperour, in ſurpriſing aboue the iuriſdiction of his lawfull Prince and Magiſtrat, notwithſtãdyng whatſoeuer his owne Canon law ſayth to the contrary.

1. Pet. 2.

And as it is ſufficiently hetherto proued by Gods law, that all Eccleſiaſticall perſons owe their due ſubiection to their lawfull Princes, in matters as well tẽporall, as ſpirituall: ſo no leſſe euidẽces may alſo be inferred out of mãs law, and examples of the oldeſt fathers, to proue the ſame. And firſt to begyn with the example of Gregory the great, who in his Epiſtle to Mauritius writeth thus: Dominus meus fuiſti, quando adhuc Dominus omnium non eras: Ecce per me ſeruum vltimum ſuum, & veſtrum reſpondebit Chriſtus, &c. that is: You were thẽ my Lord, whẽ you were not the Lord of the whole Empire, behold Chriſt him ſelfe ſhall make you aũſwere by me, which am his moſt ſimpleſt ſeruaũt and yours. &c. And before him Eleutherius his predeceſſour Byſhop of Rome, wrytyng to Lucius, kyng of this Realme, calleth him by the name of Chriſtes Vicare: But what needeth much confirmation of this matter, whẽ the Popes decrees & Canons be full of recordes hereof, teſtifying how the auncient Church of Rome not onely receaued, but alſo required of the Emperours, lawes & cõſtitutions to be made, touchyng not onely ſuch cauſes, but alſo ſuch perſons as were Eccleſiaſticall. And here to omit by the way the chap. Principes ſeculi, alſo cap. Adminiſtratores, 23. q. 5. with diuers other beſide, I will recite out of the Epiſtle of Boniface the 1. to the Emperour Honorius, ſo much as ſerueth for our purpoſe, written diſt. 92. cap. Eccleſiæ, cap. Victor. Where it is mentioned that the ſayd Bonifacius Byſhop of Rome ſent an hũble ſupplication to the forenamed Emperour, deſiryng him by his authoritie to prouide ſome remedy againſt the ambitious cõtentions of the clergie, concerning the biſhoprike of Rome. Which Emperor Honorius incontinent at his requeſt, directed & ſtabliſhed a law, that none ſhould be made Byſhop of Rome through ambitiõ, charging all Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters to ſurceaſe frõ ambition, appointyng moreouer, that if two were elected together, neither of them both ſhould be takẽ, but the election to proceed further to an other to be choſen by a full conſent of voyces, as is expreſſed. And if any ſhould otherwiſe procede cõtrary to the ſame, thẽ the excõmunicate perſon to be abſolued by ẏ authoritie of an higher degree, & the excõmunicate to be ſequeſtred frõ the communiõ, ſo long as ſhould ſeeme conueniẽt to him that had the executiõ therof, as is expreſſed. 24. q. 3. The ſame Carolus alſo decreed that onely the Canonicall bookes of Scripture ſhould be read in the Church, & none other. Item he exhorteth and chargeth Byſhops and Prieſts to preach the word, with a godly iniũction: Epiſcopi verò vt ſiue per ſe, ſiue per vicarios, pabulum verbi diuini ſedulò populis annuncient. For as Gregory ſayth, the Prieſt procureth againſt him the wrath of ẏ ſecret iudge, which goeth without the ſound of preaching. And alſo that they bring vp their Clergy to thẽ cõmitted in ſobernes & chaſtitie. Moreouer deſcendyng yet to lower tymes. an. 1228. Ludouicus 9. called holy Ludouike, made a law agaynſt the peſtiferous ſimonie in the Church, alſo for yͤ maintenaũce of the libertie of the Church of Fraũce, eſtabliſhed a law or decree, agaynſt the new inuẽtions, reſeruations, preuẽtions, & exactions of yͤ court of Rome, called Pragmatica ſanctio, S.Ludouici, the which Sãction was alſo practiſed lõg after in the kyngdome of Fraũce agaynſt the popes collectors & vndercollectors, as appeareth by the Areſtum of the coũſaile of Paris. an. 1463. ex Molinæo in Cõmẽtarijs. Furthermore king Philip le Bel. 1303. ſet forth a law, called Philippina, wherein was forbid any exactiõ of new tithes and firſt fruites, & other vncuſtomed collections, to be put vpon the Church of Fraũce. Carolus the v. named Sapiens. an. 1369. by a law cõmaũded, that no Byſhops nor Prelates, or their Officials within his kyngdome of Fraũce ſhould execute any cenſure of ſuſpenſe, or excommunicatiõ, at the Popes cõmaundemẽt, ouer or vpõ the Cities, or townes, corporations, or cõmons of his Realme, ex regiſt. antiquarũ conſt.chart.62. Itẽ Carolus vi. an. 1388. agaynſt yͤ Cardinals & other Officials, & collectors of the Pope, reuoking againe the power which he had geuẽ to thẽ before, prouided by a law, that the fruites & rentes of benefices, with other penſions, & Byſhops goodes that departed, ſhould no more be exported by the Cardinals & the Popes collectours vnto Rome, but ſhould be brought to the king, and ſo reſtored to them to whõ they rightly did appertaine.

The like alſo may be inferred & proued by the ſtories & exãples of our kyngs here in Englãd, as kyng Offa, kyng Egbertus, Edgarus, Aluredus, Athelwoldus, Canutus, Edwardus. William Conquerour, Wilhel.Rufus, Henricus the firſt, Henricus the ſecond, till the tyme of kyng Iohn and after. Whoſe dealyng as well in Eccleſiaſticall caſes, as in tẽporall, is a ſufficient demonſtration to proue what iniury the Popes, in theſe latter dayes, haue done vnto the Emperours their lawfull gouernours & Magiſtrates: in vſurpyng ſuch fulnes of power & iuriſdictiõ ouer them, to whõ properly they owe ſubiection, cõtrary to the ſteps & example of the old Romaine Byſhops their aunciters, & therfore haue incurred the daũger of a Premunire, worthy to be depriued. Although it is not to be denyed, but that Eccleſiaſticall miniſters and ſeruitures haue their power alſo committed vnto thẽ, after their ſort, of the Lord: yet it becommeth euery man to know his owne place & ſtandyng, & there to keepe him, wherein his owne precinct doth pale him & not raſhly to breake out into other mẽs walkes. As it is not lawfull for a ciuile Magiſtrate to intermedle with a Byſhops or a Preachers function: ſo vnſeemely & vnorderly it is agayne that Boniface the viij. ſhould haue borne before him the tẽporall maſe, & the naked ſword of the Emperour, or that any Pope ſhould beare a triple crowne, or take vpon him like a Lord and Kyng. Wherfore let euery man conſider the compaſſe & limitation of his charge, & exceede no farther. The office of a Biſhop or ſeruiture Eccleſiaſticall, was in the old law to offer ſacrifice, to burne incenſe, to pray for the people, to expounde the law, to miniſter in the tabernacle, to which office it was not lawfull for any Prince or mã els to intermedle, as we read how Ozias was puniſhed for offering incenſe, & an other for touchyng the Arke: ſo now the office of Chriſtian Miniſters is to preach the word, to miniſter Sacramẽts, to pray, to binde and looſe, where cauſe vrgently requireth, to iudge in ſpirituall caſes, to publiſhe & denounce free reconciliation, & remiſſiõ in the name of Chriſt, to erect & comfort troubled conſciences with the rich grace of the Goſpell, to teach the people the true differẽce betwixt the law and the Goſpell, whereof the one belongeth to ſuch as be not in Chriſt, and come not to him: the other pertaineth to the true beleuers in the ſonne of God, to admoniſh alſo the Magiſtrates erryng or tranſgreſſing in their office. &c.

The office of the Eccleſiaſticall miniſter.

The office of ciuile rulers & magiſtrates.

And as theſe properly belong to the functiõ of the Eccleſiaſticall ſort: ſo hath yͤ ciuile gouernour or Magiſtrate agayne his proper charge & office to him aſſigned, whiche is, to ſee the adminiſtratiõ of iuſtice & iudgement, to defend with power the right of the weake that ſuffer wrõg, to defend from oppreſſion the poore oppreſſed, to miniſter with equalitie, that which is right and equall to euery man: to prouide lawes good & godly, to ſee the execution of yͤ ſame as cauſe moueth: eſpecially to ſee the law of God mainteined, to promote Chriſtes glory & Goſpell, in ſettyng vp & ſendyng out good Preachers, in mainteinyng the ſame, in prouidyng Byſhops to be elected that be faythfull, in remouyng or els correctyng the ſame beyng faulty or negligẽt, in congregatyng the Clergy whẽ neede is of any coũſell or electiõ, to heare their learning in cauſes propoũded, & according to the truth learned, to direct his iudgemẽt, in diſpoſing ſuch rites & ordinaunces for the church, as make to edification not to the deſtruction therof, in conſeruyng the diſcipline of the Churche, and ſettyng all thynges in a congrue order. Briefly, the office of the ciuile ruler & Magiſtrate extendeth to miniſter iuſtice and iudgement in all Courtes as well temporall, as Eccleſiaſticall: to haue correction ouer all trãſgreſſours, whether they be laymen or perſons Eccleſiaſticall. And finally all ſuch thyngs as belong to the mouyng of yͤ ſword, whatſoeuer, that is to ſay, all outward puniſhment, is referred to the iuriſdiction of the ſecular Magiſtrate, vnder whoſe ſubiection the ordinaunce of God hath ſubiected all orders and ſtates of mẽ.

Here we haue the witneſſe alſo of Hormiſda Byſhop of Rome, which being well weyed, maketh yͤ matter plaine, that Princes haue to deale in ſpirituall cauſes alſo, not onely in temporall: where the ſayd Hormiſda writeth to Epiphanius, Patriarche of Conſtant. in this ſort: Clara cœleſtis miſericordiæ demonſtratio procedit, quando reges ſeculi cauſas de fide, cum gubernatione politiæ coniungunt. &c. ex Act.v.vniuerſ.concil.Conſtantini ſecundi. an. 528. And thus much, and to much peraduenture concernyng the matter of iuriſdiction, in which poynt this new Church of Rome hath ſwarued from the auncient Church of Rome, which was, as is ſufficiently proued.

Hierony.ad Chromatiũ, Epiſt. Idem ad Euſtachium & Fabiolam.

The third point wherein the church of Rome hath broken and is departed from the Church of Rome, is the forme of ſtile & title annexed to the Biſhop of that Sea. As where he is called Pope, moſt holy father, vicare generall, & vicare of Chriſt, ſucceſſour of Peter, vniuerſall Byſhop, Prince of Prieſtes, head of the Church vniuerſall Summus orbis pontifex, Stupor mundi, head Byſhop of the world, the admiration of the world, neither God nor mã, but a thyng betwene both. &c. for all theſe termes be geuen him in Popiſh bookes. Albeit yͤ name Pope, beyng a Greeke name, deriued of παϖϖας, which ſoũdeth as much as Father, in the Syracuſane ſpeach, may peraduenture ſeeme more tolerable, as which hath bene vſed in the old time among Byſhops, for ſo Auſten was called of the Coũcell of Aphrike, Hierome, of Boniface & other. Alſo Cyprian Byſhop of Carthage, was called Papa.24.q.1.cap.loquitur & diſt.50.cap. De eo tamen. Item Clodouæus or (as Rheanus calleth him) Ludouicus, firſt Chriſtiã king of Fraũce, calleth a certain ſimpler Byſhop, Papam. Hierome alſo in his Epiſtle to Chromatius calleth Valerianus, by the name of Pope: & likewiſe writyng to Euſtachium, and Fabiola, he calleth Epiphanius beatum Papam. In the Apologies of Athanaſius, we read oft tymes that he was called Papa, and Archiepiſcopus. Ruffinus alſo Lib.2.cap.26. calleth him. Pontificem maximum: Alſo Aurelius Preſident in the vi. Councell of Carthage was called of the ſayd Councell, Papa, ex cap.4.vi. Concil. Carthag. And before this Eleutherius Byſhop of Rome, writyng to kyng Lucius the firſt Chriſtian kyng in this land, calleth him in his Epiſtle, the vicare of Chriſt. &c. But that any of theſe termes were ſo peculiarly applied to the Biſhop of Rome, that other biſhops were excluded from the ſame, or that any one biſhop aboue the reſt, had the name of Oecumenicall, or vniuerſall, or head, to the derogation of other Biſhopps, or with ſuch glory as is now annexed to the ſame: that is not to be found neither in hiſtories of the old tyme, nor in any example of the primitiue Church, nor in the teſtimonies of auncient approued Doctours. Firſt before the Councell of Nice, it is euident by Pope Pius the ij. that there was no reſpect had to the church of Rome, but euery church then was ruled by his owne gouernance, til the yeare of our Lord, 340. Then folowed the Councell of Nice, wherin was decreed, that throughout the whole vniuerſitie of Chriſtes Church, which was now far ſpread ouer all the world, certaine Prouinces or precincts to the number of foure were appointed, euery one to haue his head church, and chiefe biſhop, called then Metropolitane or Patriarch, to haue the ouerſight of ſuch churches as did lie about him. In the number of which Patriarches or Metropolitanes, the Biſhop of Rome had the firſt place, The Biſhop of Alexandria was the ſecond. The Biſhop of Antioche the third. The Biſhop of Hieruſalem was the fourth Patriarch. Afterward in the number of theſe Patriarches, came in alſo the Biſhop of Conſtantinople in the roome of the biſhop of Antioch. So theſe foure or fiue Metropolitanes or Patriarches, had their peculiar circuites and precincts to them peculiarly appointed, in ſuch ſort, as one of them ſhould not deale within an others precinct, & alſo that there ſhould be among them equalitie of honour, wherupon we read ſo oft in the decrees of the olde Councels, τὰ ἴσα πρεσβεῖα τῶν θρόνων, καὶ τῆς τιμῆς, that is, equall degree of thrones, and of honour among prieſts and miniſters. Againe, ſpeaking of the ſaid Patriarches or Primates, we read in the 2. and 3. chap. of the Councel of Conſtant. ἐπισκόπους ταῖς ὑπερορίοις ἐκκλησίαις μὴ ἐπιέναι, μηδὲ συγχέειν τὰς ἐκκλησίας, that is, That biſhops ſhould not inuade the Dioces of other biſhops without their borders, nor confound togither churches, &c. Moreouer, the old Doctours for the moſt and beſt part, do accord in one ſentēce, that all biſhops placed whereſoeuer, in the church of God, be eiuſdem meriti & honoris, & ſucceſſores Apoſtolorum, that is, to be of one merite, of like honour, and all to be ſucceſſors together of the Apoſtles. Alſo, he that is the Author of the booke called Dionyſius Areopagita, calleth all the Biſhops ὁμοταγεῖς καὶ ἰσοτίμους, that is, of equall order, and of like honor, &c. All this while the Biſhop of Rome was a Patriarch, and a Metropolitane or biſhop called of the firſt ſea, but no Oecumenicall Biſhop, nor head of the vniuerſall Church, nor any ſuch matter. In ſo much, that he, with all other Biſhops, was debarred from that, by a playne decree of the Councell of Carthage, Can. 39. in theſe wordes: ὥστε τὸν τῆς πρώτης καθέδρας ἐπίσκοπον μὴ λέγεσθαι ἔξαρχον τῶν ἱερέων, ἢ ἄκρον ἱερέα, ἢ τοιοῦτόν τι ποτε, that is, That the biſhop of the firſt ſeat ſhall not be called the Prince of prieſts, or the high prieſt, or any ſuch thing.

Ex Concil. Conſtan. 2. Cap. 36.

Ex Concil. Conſt. cap. 2. 3.

Ex Concil. Carthag. Can. 39.

And leaſt any here ſhould take occaſion of cauilling, to heare him called biſhop of the firſt ſea, here is to be expounded, what is ment by the firſt ſea, and wherfore he was ſo called, not for any dignitie of the perſō, either of him which ſucceedeth, or of him whom he is ſaid to ſucceede, but onely of the place wherin he ſitteth. This is plainly proued by the councell of Calcedone, cap. 28. wherin is manifeſtly declared the cauſe why the ſea of Rome among all other Patriarchall ſeas is numbred for the firſt ſea by the auncient fathers. For why, ſaith the Councell, καὶ γὰρ θρόνῳ τῆς πρεσβυτέρας ῥώμης, διὰ τὸ βασιλεύειν τὴν πόλιν ἐκείνην, οἱ πατέρες εἰκότως ἀποδεδώκασι τὰ πρεσβεῖα, that is, for that our forefathers did worthily attribute the chiefe degree of honour to the ſea of old Rome, becauſe the principall raigne or Emperie was in that Citie, &c. The ſame alſo is confirmed by Euſebius Cæſarienſis, declaring, quòd excellentia Romani Imperij extulit papatum Rom. Pontificis ſupra alias Eccleſias. That the excellencie of the Romaine Emperie did aduance the Popedome of the Romaine biſhop aboue other churches, &c. Ex Gab. Biel. Moreouer, ſaith the ſaid Cæſarienſis: Nicena ſynodus hoc contulit priuilegium Rom. pontifici, vt ſicut Romanorum rex Auguſtus præ cæteris appellatur: ita Rom. pontifex præ cæteris Epiſcopis Papa vocaretur. That is, The Councell (ſaith he) of Nice gaue this Priuiledge to the Biſhop of Rome, that like as the king of the Romaines is named Emperour aboue all other kings, ſo the biſhop of the ſame citie of Rome ſhould be called Pope aboue other biſhops &c. By theſe places hitherto alledged (and ſuch other, many more then be here alleaged) it appeareth that though theſe titles of ſuperioritie had bene attributed to the Biſhop of Rome, yet it remaineth certaine, that the ſaid Biſhop receiued that preferment Iure non diuino, ſed humano, by mans law, not by the law of God. And ſo is the diſtinction of the Popes proued falſe, where is ſaid: Romanam Eccleſiam non a concilio aliquo, ſed a diuina voce primatum accepiſſe, that the church of Rome, tooke not his primacie by any Councell, but onely by the voyce of God. And this is to be ſaid although it were true, that theſe titles & termes were ſo giuen to the biſhop of Rome in the olde time, yet how and by whom they were giuen, ye ſee. Now to tne this matter, as ioyning an iſſue with our aduerſaries, whether theſe foreſaid titles of ſoueraigntie, were applied in the old tyme of the Primitiue church, to the Biſhop of Rome, as to be called the vicare generall of Chriſt, the head of the whole church, and vniuerſall biſhop, it remaineth to be proued. wherunto this in my minde is to be anſwered, that albeit the biſhops of Rome (of ſome peraduenture) were ſo called by the names of higher preeminence of that citie, of ſome going about to pleaſe them, or to craue ſome helpe at their handes, yet that calling 1. Firſt, was vſed then but of a few. 2. Secondly, neither was giuen to many. 3. Thirdly, was rather giuen, then ſought for, of the moſt. 4. Fourthly, was not ſo giuen that it maketh or can make any generall neceſſitie of law, why euery one is ſo bound to call them, as the biſhop of Rome now ſeeketh to be taken and called, and that by neceſſitie of ſaluation, as the decree of Pope Boniface 8. witneſſeth, where is ſaid, quòd ſit de neceſsitate ſalutis, vt credatur Primatus Eccleſiæ Rom. & ei ſubeſſe. That it ſtandeth vpon neceſſitie of ſaluation, to beleue the Primacie of the church of Rome, and to be ſubiect to the ſame, &c.

As touching therfore theſe titles and termes of preeminence aforeſaide, orderly to ſet foorth and declare what hiſtories of times doe ſaye in that matter, by the grace of Chriſt. Firſt we will ſee what be the titles, the Biſhop of Rome doth take and chalenge to himſelfe, and what is the meaning of them. 2. When the firſt came in, whether in the primitiue time or not, and by whom. 3. How they were firſt giuen to the Romane Biſhops, that is, whether of neceſſary duety, or voluntary deuotion, whether commonly of the whole, or particularly of a few, and whether in reſpect of Peter, or in reſpect of the Citie, or els of the worthines of the Biſhop which there ſat. 4. And if the foreſayd names were then giuen of certaine Biſhops, vnto the biſhop of Rome: whether all the ſaide names were geuen, or but certaine, or what they were. 5. Or whether they were then receaued of all Byſhops of Rome, to whō they were giuen, or els refuſed of ſome. 6. And finally whether they ought to haue bene refuſed beyng giuen, or not. Touching the diſcourſe of which matters, although it appertaine to the profeſſion, rather of Diuines, then hyſtoritians, and would require a long and large debating: yet for ſo much as both in theſe, & diuers other weighty controuerſies of Diuinity, the knowledge of times and hiſtories, muſt needes helpe Diuines diſputing about the ſame ſo much as the grace of Chriſt ſhall aſſiſte me therein, I wil ioyne to the ſeeking out of truth, ſuch helpe as I may.

Regalia Sancti Patri.

Ex frat. Barth. & alijs.

And firſt to begin with the names and titles, now clayned and attributed to the ſea and Byſhop of Rome: and what they be, is ſufficiently declared aboue, that is, the cheiſe Preiſt of the worlde, the Prince of the Church, Byſhop Apoſtolicall, the vniuerſall head of the Church, the head and Byſhop of the vniuerſall Church, the ſucceſſor of Peter, moſt holy Pope, the vicar of God on earth, neither God nor man, but a mixt thing betweene both: the Patriarche or Metropolitane of the Churche of Rome, the Byſhop of the firſt ſea. &c. Unto the which titles or ſtile is annexed a triple crowne, a triple croſſe, two croſſed keyes, a naked ſword, ſeauenfold ſeales, in token of the ſeauenfolde giftes of the holy Ghoſt, he being carried pickbacke vpon mens ſhoulders, after the maner of heathen kynges, hauing all the Empire, and the Emperour vnder his dominion: & that it is not conuenient for any terrene Prince to reigne there, where he ſitteth, hauing the plenary fulnes of power, as well of temporall things as ſpirituall things in his handes, that all thinges are his, and that all ſuch Princes as haue gyuen him any thing, haue giuen him but his owne, hauing at his will and pleaſure to preach indulgencies, and the croſſe againſt Chriſten Princes whatſoeuer: And that the Emperour, & certaine other Princes, ought to make to him confeſſion of ſubiection at their coronation: hauing authoritie to depoſe, and that he de facto, hath depoſed Emperors and the king of France: Alſo to abſolue the ſubiects from their allegeance to their Princes, whom kings haue ſerued for footmen to lead his horſe, and the Emperour to hold his ſtirrop, that he may and doth geue power to Biſhops vpon the bodies of men, and hath graunted them to haue priſons, without whoſe authoritie no general Counſell hath any force, And to whom appellations in all maner ner of cauſes may and ought to be made. That his decrees be equall with the decrees of Nicen Councel, and are to be obſerued and taken in no leſſe force, then if they had bene confirmed with the heauenly voyce of Saint Peter himſelfe ex fra. Item that he can of nothing make ſomething, and cauſe the ſentence, which before was none to ſtande in effect, and may diſpence aboue the lawe, and of iniuſtice make iuſtice, in correcting and chaunging lawes, for he hath the fulnes of power. And againe. diſt 40.cap. Si Papa. If the Pope doe leade with him innumerable ſoules by flockes into hell, yet no man muſt preſume to rebuke his faultes in this worlde. Diſt 40. cap. Si. papa.

These thinges thus declared, now let vs ſee whether theſe names and titles, with the forme and maner of this authoritie and regalitie aboue rehearſed: were euer attributed of any in the primitiue tyme to the byſhop of Rome. For al theſe, he doth chalenge and clayme vnto him by old poſſeſſion from the time of S. Peter. And here a queſtion is to be aſked of our aduerſaries the Papiſtes, whether they will auouch all theſe aforeſaide titles, together wyth the whole forme and tenour of regalitie, to the ſame belongyng as is afore touched, or not? if they wil, let them come foorth with their allegations, which they neuer haue done yet, nor euer ſhalbe able: if they will not, or can not auouch them all together in maner as is ſpecified, then why doth the byſhop claime them altogether ſo ſtoutly, vſurpe them ſo falſely, and obtrud them vpon vs ſo ſtraitly. Moreouer if the ſayd our aduerſaries, being conuicted by plaine euidence of hyſtorye, and example of time, will yeld vnto vs (as they muſt needes) in part, and not in the whole, let vs come then to the particulars, and ſee what part of this regalitie they wil defend, and deriue from the auncient cuſtome of the Primitiue Church (that is from the firſt fyue hundred yeares, I meane after Chriſt.) Firſt, in the Cõcell of Nyce, which was the yeare of our Lord. 340. and in the. vj. Canon of the ſayd Councell, we finde it ſo decreed: that in euery prouince or precinct of ſome one Church, and Byſhop of the ſame, was appointed and ſet vp to haue the inſpection and regiment of other churches about him. Secundum morem antiquum, that is, after the ancient cuſtome, as the wordes of the Councell do purport, ſo that the Byſhop of Alexandria ſhoulde haue power of Lybia, & Pentapolis in Egypt, for as much as the Byſhop of the Cytie of Rome, hath the like or ſame maner. And in like ſort alſo in Antioch, & in other countreyes, let euery Church haue his due honor, & conſequently yͤ the Biſhop of Ieruſalem haue alſo his due honor to him reſerued, ſo that ſuch order be kept, that the Metropolitane Cities be not defrauded of their dignitie which to them is due and proper. &c. In this Councell and in the ſame Canon. vj. and vij. where the Byſhops of Alexandria, of Rome, and of Antioch, are ioyned together in on like maner of dignity, fyrſt there appeareth no difference of honor to be ment therin. Secondlye forſomuch as in the ſayde two Canons after mention made of them, immediatly followeth, that no Byſhops ſhould be made without conſent of their Metropolitanes, yea and that the City alſo of Hieruſalem ſhould be vnder hys Metropolitane, and that the Metropolitane ſhould haue the ful power to confirme euery Byſhop made in his prouince: Therfore it may be well ſuſpected that the third Epiſtle decretall of Pope Anacletus, and of Pope Stephanus, with other mo are forged, wherin theſe Byſhops, and eſpecially the Byſhop of Rome is exempted and deſceuered from the name of a Metropolitane or an Archbyſhop, to the name of a Patriarch or Primate: as appeareth in the decrees. diſt. 22. cap. Sacro ſancta. wherefore as wee muſt needes graunt the Byſhop of Rome to be called a Metropolitane or an Archbyſhop by the Councell of Nice: ſo we will not greatly ſticke in this alſo, to haue him numbred with Patriarches or primates. which title ſeemeth in the old tyme to be common to mo Cities then to Rome, both by the Epiſtle of Anacletus, of Pope Stephanus, of Pope, Iulius, and Leo, &c.

Byſhops among whom was alſo, Auguſtinus, Proſper, Oroſius, with diuers other famous perſons. This Councell continued the ſpace of v. yeares, wherein was great contention about the supremacie, and iuriſdiction of Rome. The Byſhop wherof then was Zoſimus. This Zoſimus the Romane Biſhop had receaued the ſame time into the communion of the church without any examination, one that came to complaine to him out of Aphrike, named Apiarius, a Prieſt whom Aurelius the Metropolitane with the Councell of Aphrike had worthelye excommunicated for his deteſtable conditions before. Vppon this Zoſimus after that hee hadde receaued and ſhewed ſuch fauor to Apiarius, for that he did appele to him, ſendeth to the Councell his meſſengers, to wit Faſtinus Byſhop of Potentine and two Prieſtes of the Churche of Rome named Philippus and Aſellus, with theſe foure requeſtes: firſt that Apiarius whom he had abſolued might be receaued of them againe, and that it might be lawful for Byſhops or Prieſtes to appeale from the ſentence of their Metropolites, & alſo of the Counſell, to the ſea of Rome.

Ex Conciliorum. Tom. 1. in Sexta Synod. Carthage.

Secondly, that Byſhops ſhould not ſaile ouer inportunely ad comitatum. Thirdly, that if any Prieſt or Deacon were wrongfully excommunicate by yͤ Byſhops of their owne prouince, it ſhould be lawfull for thẽ to remooue the hearing and iudgeing of their cauſe to their neighbour biſhops. Fourthly, that Vrbanus there Byſhop, either ſhould be excommunicated, or els ſent vp to Rome, vnleſſe he would correct thoſe things that were to be corrected. &c. For the approbation whereof, the ſayde Zoſimus alledged for him the words (as he pretended) taken out of Nicene Councell. The Councell of Carthage hearyng this, and remembring no ſuch thing in the Councell of Nice to bee decred, & yet not ſuſpecting the Byſhop of Rome to dare wrongfully to falſefie the wordes of that Councell: writeth againe to Zoſimus, declaring that they neuer reade to their remembraunce, in their common Latine exemplare of Nicene Councell any ſuch Canon, yet notwithſtanding for quietnes ſake, they woulde obſerue the ſame tyll time they might procure the originall copies of that councell to be ſent to them from Conſtantinople, Alexandria, and from Antioch. In like effect afterward they wrote to Pope Boniface, which then ſucceded Zoſimus.

Vrbanus. Epiſcopus Siccenſis.

The Popes of Rome taken with the maner in falſefiyng the decrees of Nicene Councell.

And thirdly alſo to Celeſtinus, which ſhortly after ſucceeded Boniface. In the meane time this foreſayd Councell ſent their Legates, Marcellus and Innocentius to Atticus Patriarche of Conſtantinople, and to Cyrillus Patriarch of Alexandria, for the autentique copies in Greeke of Nicene Councell, which being ſent vnto them, & they finding in the true originals no ſuch Canon, as the Biſhoppe of Rome had falſely forged, they wrote a ſharpe & an handſome letter to Celeſtinus Byſhop of Rome, calling him in the ſaid letter by the way: Domine frater: declaring to him, how they had peruſed all the copies of yͤ Councell of Nice coulde finde no ſuch Canon: as he and his predeceſſours had falſely alledged, and therewithall reciting the vj. Canon afore mentioned, declared how the decrees of Nicene Councell had committed all and ſingular perſons Eccleſiaſticall, as well Byſhops, as other, vnto the charge of their Metropolitanes. Moreouer expounding the ſame decree, they ſhewed the reaſons thereof.

The Biſhop of Rome called Dominus frater. that is brother Byſhop.

Biſhops of Rome proued falſefiers of Nicen Councell.

1. Fiue reaſons why matters of controuerſie ought not to be had out of other countryes vnto Rome.

1. For that (ſayd they) the fathers of that councell did well foreſee, to be moſt iuſt and conuenient, that all controuerſies there be ended (in ijſdem locis) where they begin.

2. For that it is not to be ſuppoſed contrary, but that the grace of God wil be as preſt and ready in one prouince as in other, to inſtruct his miniſters both prudently to vnderſtand iudgement, and conſtantly to mayntayne the ſame. 2.

3. For that there is no need to ſeeke further to any outlandiſh helpe, becauſe eſpecially that the party whoſoeuer is not contented with the determination of his iudges or commiſſioners, may lawfully appeale either to the prouincial or to any generall counſell. 3.

4. That way to be better, then to runne to any forranine Iudge, it muſt needes be graunted, because it is not like that our God will inſpire his iuſtice and truth of examining, vnto one Byſhop, and denie it to a multitude congregated in a whole Councell. 4.

5. Neither can it be, that any ſuch outlandiſh iudgement in hearing and determining cauſes, can ſtand perfect and vpright, for that the neceſſary perſons of witneſſes, either for infirmitie of ſexe of age, of ſickenes, or ſome other impeachment, are not able to be preſent, by whom the truth of the ſentence, ſhould be directed. wherefore as by theſe & other reaſons they thought it not conuenient from them to bryng their matters ouer vnto Rome: ſo neither was it to be found, ſayd they, by any councell of the old fathers decred, that any Legates ſhould be ſent frõ Rome to thẽ, for deciding of their matters. And therefore exhorted they the ſayd biſhop of Rome, that he would not induce fumoſum typũ, (or rather as I may call it) typhos ſeculi, in Eccleſiam Chriſti, quæ lucem ſimplicitatis & humilitatis præfært ijs qui Deum Diligunt, that is, that he would not induce the ſwelling pride of the worlde into the Church of Chriſt,

5. Euery coũtrey to appeale firſt to his own Metropolitane, ſecondly to a prouinciall or generall Councell.

Fumoſum typhos ſeculi.

Summary notes gathered out of the Councell of Carthage agaynſt the Pope.

which church ſheweth and giueth the light of ſimplicitie & of humilitie to ſuch as loue to ſee God, &c. In theſe foreſaid letters moreouer, is ſignified how ẏ forenamed malefactor Apiarius, whom the biſhop of Rome before had abſolued & receiued to the communion of the church, was afterward found culpable, and therfore the councell procded againſt him, brought him to open confeſſion of his faults, & ſo enioined him due penance for his demerites, notwithſtanding the abſolution and inconſiderate clearing of the Biſhop of Rome before proceeding.

In ſumme, out of this Councell of Carthage theſe are to be noted. Firſt, how glad the Biſhops of Rome were to receiue ſuch as came to them for ſuccour.

2. What pride they tooke by the occaſion therof, thinking and ſeeking thereby to haue all vnder their ſubiection.

3. To the intent to allure other to ſeeke to them, how redie they were to releaſe and quit this Apiarius as guiltles, which after was tried culpable by his owne confeſſion.

4. How contrary to the actes and doings of the Romiſh biſhop, this Councell condemned him, whom the ſaid biſhop of Rome before had abſolued, litle reſpecting the proceedings of the Romiſh church.

5. How the biſhops of old time haue bene falſifiers of ancient Councels and writings, wherby it may be ſuſpected, that they which ſhamed not to falſifie & corrupt the Councell of Nice, much leſſe would they ſticke to abuſe and falſifie the decretall Epiſtles and writings of perticular Biſhops & Doctors, for their owne aduantage, as no doubt they haue done many one.

6. In this foreſaid Councell, whereat Auguſtine himſelfe was preſent, & where Aurelius Preſident of the ſame, was called Papa, the biſhop of Rome was called expreſly in their letters, but biſhop of the citie of Rome, and Dominus frater, that is, brother Biſhop.

7. Seuenthly, the dominion of this Romain Patriarch, in the ſaid Councel of Carthage. was cut ſo ſhort, that neither it was permitted to thē of Affrike to appeale ouer the ſea to him, nor for him to ſend ouer his Legates to them for ending their controuerſies. wherby it may ſufficiently appeare, that the Biſhop of Rome in thoſe dayes, was not fully admitted to be the chiefe of all other Biſhops, nor the head of the vniuerſall church of Chriſt in earth, &c.

8. We heare in this Councell, fiue cauſes or reaſons giuē, why it is not neceſſary nor yet conuenient for all forraine cauſes to be brought to one vniuerſall head or iudge, as is before recited.

9. Laſtly, by the ſaid Councell of Carthage, we heare a vertuous exhortation to be giuen to the biſhop of Rome, that he would not induce into the meeke & humble church of Chriſt, the fuming and ſwelling pride of the world, as is before declared, &c. In this, or in ſome other Councell of Carthage, it was moreouer prouided by expreſſe law, and alſo ſpecified in the Popes decrees, that no Biſhop of the firſt ſea, ſhould be called the Prince of Prieſts, or the chiefe prieſt, or any ſuch like thing but onely the biſhop of the firſt ſeat, as followeth more in the ſaid decree, Vniuerſalis autem, nec etiam Rom. pontifex appelletur, that is, Be it enacted, that no biſhop, no not the Biſhop of Rome be called vniuerſall biſhop, &c. And thus much cōcerning this foreſaid Councell of Carthage.

Concil. Car. Cano. 23.

Not long before this Councel, was celebrate in Affrike an other Councel, called Synodus Mileuitana, about the yere of our Lord, 442. at the which Councell alſo S. Auguſtine was preſent, where it was decreed vnder payne of excommunication, that no miniſter or biſhop ſhould appeale ouer the ſea to the biſhop of Rome, whereby it may appeare that the biſhop of Rome all this ſpace was not vniuerſally called by the terme of Oecumenical or vniuerſal biſhop, but Biſhop of the firſt ſea: ſo that if there were any preferment therein, it was in the reuerence of the place, and not in the authoritie of the perſon. And yet it was not ſo in the place, that the place importeth the Citie of Rome onely, but the firſt ſeate then was called Metropolitane Church, as by the woordes of Nicene Councell, and other conſtitutions moe, is to be ſeene where the foure Patriarches were called πρῶτοι, or προτεύοντες, or προεστῶτης, as namely, by the wordes of the Councell of Carthage may appeare, which be theſe: εἰ μὴ μετὰ ψηφίσματος τῆς πρώτης καθέδρας τοῦ ἰδίου ἑκάστης χώρας ἐπισκόπου: τοῦτ' ἐστιν, εἰ μὴ ὑπὸ αὐτοῦ τοῦ πρωτεύοντος κατ' ἐξαίρετον λάβῃ. that is, except he haue ſome ſpecial licēce or exception, by ẏ conſent of ẏ firſt ſeat of ẏ proper biſhop in euery country, that is, of him that is the Primate in ẏ ſaid countrey, &c. Alſo the wordes of the can. 39. of the Councell of Carthage, before touched be theſe, ὥστε τὸν τῆς πρώτης καθέδρας ἐπίσκοπον μὴ λέγεσθαι ἔξαρχον τῶν ἱερέων, ἢ ἄκρον ἱερέα, ἢ τοιοῦτόν τίποτε, That is, that the biſhop of the firſt ſea, be not called Ex Epiſt. decret. Anicet. Step. Felicis.

Prince of Prieſtes, or head Prieſt, or els any ſuch like. Againe Anicetus the x. biſhop of Rome, and Pope Stephen & Pope Felix making a difference betwene Primate & Metropolitane, writeth thus. Let no Archbiſhops bee called Primates, but onely ſuch as haue the firſt ſeat, &c. Thus it is made plaine, how the biſhop of the firſt ſeate, or firſt biſhop, or Primate is none other, but he which was called Patriarch, and belonged not only to the church of Rome, but to all ſuch cities & places, where as before among the Gentiles were primi flamines, &c. diſt. 80. cap. vrbes & loca, & in illis. where, by the way is to be noted the repugnance or contrarietie of ſuch as craftily, but falſly haue counterfaited the Popes decretall epiſtles, which beſides other great and many coniectures alſo hereby may be gathered. For where Clement, Anacletus, epiſt. 2. Anicetus and other, ioyning together the office of Patriarchs & Primates, do deuide the ſame from the order of Metropolitanes or Archbiſhops, alledging therin the conſtitution of the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, that is, to be found falſe by the Canōs of the Apoſtles, by the Councell of Nice, and by the councell of Antioche with other moe. For in the Canons of the Apoſtles, where in euery Canon almoſt, mention is made of Biſhops, Prieſtes, and Deacons, no worde is there touched, neither of any order aboue the Biſhop, or lower then the Deacon, saue only in the 33. Canon, ſetting an order among biſhops, the Canon willeth the Biſhops of euery nation to know their firſt or chiefe biſhop, & him to be taken for the head of them: he ſaith not the head of the church, or head of the world, but the head of thoſe biſhops. And where: not in Rome onely, but plainely and expreſly in euery nation, for ſo the wordes purport, τοὺς ἐπισκόπους ἑκάστου ἔθνους εἰδέναι χρὴ τὸν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρῶτον. That is, the biſhops of euery nation ought to know the firſt or chiefe among them, &c. Moreouer, the Councell of Antioch reciting the foreſaid Canon worde for worde, expoundeth the matter plainly, in ſtead of τὸν πρῶτον, writing τὸν ἐν μητροπόλει προεστῶτα ἐπίσκοπον: which is as much to ſay, as Metropolitan: and in the end of the ſaid Canon, calleth him τὸν τῆς μητροπόλεως ἐπίσκοπον, Id eſt, Metropolitanum, 6 q 3. per ſingulas. wherby it is concluded, that to be falſe, that Clement and Anacletus, and Anicetus bee reported (but falſedly) to put a difference betwene Primates or Patriarchs, and Metropolitanes or Archbiſhops. whereas by ſufficient authoritie it is to bee proued, that in the old church both Primates, firſt biſhops biſhops of the firſt ſeat, Patriarchs, Metropolitanes, biſhops of the Mother citie, and Archbiſhops were all one. Firſt, that Primates and Metropolitanes were both one, is before declared by the Canons of the Apoſtles, & by the Councell of Antioch aforeſaid. Agayne, that Patriarches and Archbiſhops were all one, it is euident Ex Nouella Iuſtiniani. cap. 23. where the ſayd conſtitution reciting the 4. Patriarches (aboue mentioned) calleth them by the name of Archbiſhops. And a little after calleth the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Archbiſhop, by theſe wordes: οἵτινες ὑπὸ τὸν μακαριώτατον ἀρχιεπίσκοπον Κωνσταντινουπόλεως, καὶ πατριάρχην εἰσίν, That is, which be vnder the Archbiſhop and Patriarch of Conſtantinople. And after ſpeaking more plainly in the matter, ſetteth an other order, diuers from that of Clement, Anacletus and Anicetus, in placing theſe foreſayd perſons, firſt beginning with biſhops, then ouer them ſetteth the Metropolitane, and ouer him againe, the Archbiſhop, and there ſtaieth, making no further mention of any other aboue him: whoſe wordes be theſe, εἰ γὰρ ἐπίσκοπος εἴη ὁ κατηγορούμενος, τὸν τούτου μητροπολίτην ἐξετάζειν τὰ λεγόμενα, εἰ δὲ μητροπολίτης εἴη, τὸν μακαριώτατον, ὑφ' ὃν τελεῖ. That is, if a Biſhop be accuſed, the Metropolitane to haue the examination of theſe things that are brought againſt him, if the Metropolitane be accuſed, then the Archbiſhop to haue the hearing therof, vnder whom he dwelleth & pertaineth, &c.

Archbiſhop and Metropolitane not to be both one.

In this conſtitution of Iuſtinian, although the Metropolitane be placed aboue the Byſhop, and the Archbiſhop aboue the Metrapolitane: yet notwithſtanding by this is ſufficiently confuted the forged conſtitution of Clement Anacletus, Anicetus, Stephanus, & Felix: who in their Epiſtles decre-

Summus orbis pontifex.

And thus much as touching the name or title of high Prieſt, or ſupreme Byſhop. which title as I doe not deny to haue bene vſed in maner & forme aforeſayd: ſo do I denye this tytle and ſtyle of Summus orbis pontifex, as it is now vſed in Rome, to haue bene vſed, or vſually receaued duryng all the primitiue tyme of the Church, that is v. hũdred yeares after Chriſt, after the manner and ſort I mean of that authoritie and glory, which in theſe dayes nowe is vſed and is giuen to the ſame, vntil the time of Phocas, the wicked Emperour, which was after the yeare of the Lord 608. The which title as it is to glorious for any one Byſhop in yͤ church of Chriſt to vſe: ſo is it not to be found in any of the approued and moſt auncient writers of yͤ church namely theſe, as Cyprianus, Baſilius, Fulgentius, Chryſoſtomus Hieronymus, Ambroſius, Auguſtinus, Tertullianus, but rather writeth againſt the ſame, eſpecially of the laſt. And therfore not without cauſe it is written and teſtified of Eraſmus, who ſpeaking of the ſayd name, of Summus orbis pontifex, denieth plainely the ſame to be hearde of among the olde writers, whoſe wordes be theſe: Certe nomen hoc nondum illis temporibus erat auditum, quantum ex veterum omniũ ſcriptis licet colligere. &c. lib. Vniuerſalis pontifex. Caput vniuerſalis Eccleſia. Chriſti in terris vicarius. Princeps ſacerdotũ. &c

The like is to be affirmed alſo of other preſumptious titles of like ambition, as the head of the vniuerſal church, the Vicar of Chriſt in earth, Prince of Prieſtes, with ſuch like, which all be new found termes, ſtraunge to the eares of the old primitiue writers and Councels, and not receiued openly and commonly before the tyme of Boniface the third, and Phocas the aforeſayd.

Papa.

Now remaineth the name of the Pope, which of his nature, and by his firſt origine, being a word of the Syracuſane ſpeech called παππᾶς, and ſignifieth as much as Pater, Father, was then vſed and frequented of them in the old tyme, not ſo as proper onely to the Byſhop of Rome, but common and indifferent to all other Byſhops or perſonages, whoſoeuer were of worthy excellẽce, as is partly before declared. But nowe contrarily, the generalitye of this name is ſo reſtrayned and abuſed, that not onely it is appropriate to the Byſhop of Rome, but alſo diſtincteth and diſceuereth the authoritie and preminence of that Byſhop alone from all other Byſhoppes, for which cauſe it is now worthely come into contempt and execration. No leſſe is to be reiected alſo the name of vniuerſalis, or œcumenicus, pontifex, Summus orbis Epiſcopus, Caput vniuerſalis Eccleſiæ, Chriſti in terris, Princeps vicariꝰ ſacerdotũ, &c. Al which termes and vocables, tending to the derogation of other Biſhops & Patriarches, as they were neuer receaued nor allowed in Rome (if we beleeue Gregory) during the tyme of yͤ Primatiue church, ſo now are worthely of vs refuſed.

How they began firſt at Conſtantinople, to take the name of vniuerſall Byſhop. Ex quinta ſynodo vniuerſali. Actione prima. cap. poſt. conſulatum. Ibid. cap. dom. noſtri.

Although it cannot be denied, but certaine were in the Primatiue time, which began priuately to pretende that proude and wicked title of vniuerſall Byſhop, as Menna, and eſpecially Ioannes Patriarche of Conſtantinople, who calling a Counſell at Conſtantinople, went about to ſtabliſh and ratifie and to dignifie his throne by the conſent of the Councell, and the Emperour of Conſtantinople, and obtained the ſame as appeareth in the v. generall Councell of Conſtantinople the 2. where both Menna is named Oichumenicus Patriarcharum and alſo Ioannes in the ſayde Councell is titled Oicumenicus Patriarcha: ex Concil. general. 5. cap. Domino. Concerning the which title although it was then vſed to Conſtantinople through the ſufferaunce of the Emperours, being then willing to haue their imperiall City aduaunced: yet notwithſtanding this foreſayde title, all this while was not in the City of Rome. And in Conſtantinople it ſtoode not then in force: Iure aliquo diuino, but onely by mans lawe. And thirdly it was then but onely, verbalis titulus: hauing no true dominacion vpon all other Churches, or any reall ſubiection belonging to the ſame. Foraſmuch as neither yͤ Biſhop of Rome, nor any of the weſt churches were ſubiect or did acknowledge ſeruice vnto them but rather did repugne the ſame: namely Pelagius the 2. & Gregorius the 1. both Byſhops at that time of Rome, whiche Pelagius writing to all Byſhops, ſayth playnely in theſe wordes: that no Patriarch ſhould take the name of vniuerſalitie at any time, becauſe that if any be called vniuerſall, the name of Patriarch is derogate from all other. But let this be farre, ſaith he, from all faithfull men, to will to take that thing to him, wherby the honor of his brethren is diminiſhed. Wherefore yͤ ſayd Pelagius chargeth all ſuch Byſhops, that none of them in their letters will name any Patriarche to be vniuerſall, leaſt he take from him ſelfe the honour due to him, while they giue that which is not due to another. What can be more euident then theſe wordes of Pelagius, who was Biſhop of Rome next before Gregory. an. 583? In lyke maner or more plainely, and more earneſtly writeth alſo Gregory of this matter in his regiſter, prouyng and diſputing that no man ought to be called vniuerſall Byſhop. Moreouer with ſharpe wordes and rebukes deteſteth the ſame title, calling it new, foliſh, proude, peruerſe, wicked, prophane, and ſuch, as to conſent vnto it, is as much, as to denye the fayth. He addeth further and ſaith, that whoſoeuer goeth about to extoll himſelfe aboue other Byſhops, in ſo doing followeth the fact of Sathan, to whõ it was not ſufficient to be counted equall or like vnto other angels. In his Epiſtles how oft doth he repeate, and declare yͤ ſame to repugne directly againſt the Goſpell, and auncient decrees of Counſels? affirming that none of his predeceſſours did euer vſurpe to himſelfe that ſtyle or title, and concludeth that whoſoeuer ſo doth, declareth himſelfe to be a forerunner of Antichriſt. &c. With this iudgement of Gregory wel agreeth well agreeth alſo the wordes of S. Auguſtine, Lib.3.cap.3. De Baptiſmo, where reciting the wordes of Cyprian thus ſaith: Neque enim quiſquam noſtrum ſe Epiſcopum Epiſcoporũ conſtituit, aut tyrannico more ad obſequendi neceſsitatem collegas ſuos adigit, &c. That is, for none of vs doth euer ſet himſelfe to be Biſhop of Biſhops, or after a tyrannical maner doth ſubdue and bring vnder his fellowes vnto the neceſſitie of his obedience, &c. By theſe wordes of Cyprian and Auguſtine, it is manifeſt, that in their tyme was no ſupremacie, or vniuerſall title among Biſhops receiued, nor that any greater reſpect was had to the biſhop of Rome (as Pius the 2. ſaith, Epiſt.301.) before the Councell of Nice. And after in that Councell the ſaid Biſhop of Rome had no further authoritie to him limited, then only ouer his prouince, and places ſuburbane, bordering about the Citie of Rome. Againſt whoſe primacie diuers cities alſo did reſiſt long after that, as the Church of Rauenna, Mediolanenſis, and Aquilegienſis. Alſo the Greeke Churches long reſiſted the ſame, ſo did the churches of Aſia, Rutenicæ, Moſcouiticæ, Valachicæ, and other moe.

Ex Antonino titl.12. cap.3.

But to returne againe to Gregory, who confirming the ſentence of Pelagius his predeceſſour aboue mentioned, had no ſmall conflicts about this title matter, both with the Patriarche, and with the Emperour of Conſtantinople, as witneſſeth Antoninus, & other. &c. The hiſtorie is thus: After that Iohn beyng made of a Monke, Patriarche of Conſtantinople, by his flatterie & hypocriſie, had obtained of Mauritius the Emperor, to be extolled aboue other Biſhops with the name of vniuerſall Patriarche, and that he would write to Gregorie biſhop then of Rome, for his conſent concerning the ſame: Gregory abiding ſtill in his conſtancie, did ſet himſelfe ſtoutly againſt that Antichriſtian title, and would geue no place. At the ſame tyme the Lombards had inuaded the countrey of Italy, and the Citie of Rome, the Emperor keping then at Conſtantinople, and ſetting in Italy an ouerſear called Exarchus, to rule in Rauenna: Gregory perceiuing the Emperour Mauritius to bee diſpleaſed with him about the matter afore touched, writeth to Conſtantina the Empreſſe, arguing and declaring in his letters, that preſumption and pride of him to bee vniuerſall Patriarch, was both againſt the rule of the goſpel, and decrees of the Canons, namely, the vj. Canon of Nicene Councell, and the noueltie of that newfound title to declare nothing els, but that the tyme of Antichriſt was neere. Vpon this, Mauritius the Emperor taking diſpleaſure with him, calleth home his ſouldiors againe from Italy, and inciteth the Lombardes againſt the Romaines: who with their king Agilulphus, therupõ contrary to their league made before, ſet vpon the citie of Rome, and beſieged it a whole yeare togither, Gregory yet notwithſtãding ſtill remaining in his former conſtancie. After theſe afflictions thus ouerpaſt, Eulogius Patriarch of Alexandria, writeth to the ſaid Gregory in his letters, naming him vniuerſall Pope, vnto whom Gregory refuſing the ſame, anſwereth againe as followeth.

❧ The letter of Gregorie, to the Patriarch of Alexandria.

The aunſwere of Gregory to Eulogius Patriarche of Alexandria.

Diſt 99. cap.Ecce.

Gregory refuſeth the name of vniuerſall Pope.

BEhold in the Preface of your Epiſtle directed to me, ye haue vſed a worde of a proud name, calling me vniuerſall Pope, which I pray your holineſſe you will ceaſe hereafter to doe, for that is derogated from you, whatſoeuer is attributed to an other more then right and reaſon requireth. As for me I ſeeke not mine aduauncement in wordes, but in maners: neither doe I account that any honour, wherein the honour of my brethren I ſee to bee hindred: For my honour I take to be the honour of the vniuerſall Church: my honour is the whole and perfect vigour of my brethren. Then am I honoured when to no man is denied the due honour which to him belongeth. For if your holineſſe call me vniuerſall Pope, in ſo doing you denie your ſelfe to be that, which ye affirme me to be vniuerſal. But that God forbid, let theſe words therefore go, which do nothing but puffe vp vanitie, and wound charitie, &c.

It were too long here to inſerte all ſuch letters and Epiſtles of his, concerning this matter, written to the Emperour Mauritius, and Conſtantina the Empreſſe, but that ſhal more largely appeare hereafter (Chriſt willing) in the body of the hiſtory, when we come to the yeare and time of Gregory, which was well nie about vj. hundred yere after Chriſt. In the meane ſeaſon this is ſufficiẽt to declare how the church of Rome with the fourme and maner of their title of vniuerſall ſupremacie now vſed & maintained, hath vtterly ſwerued from the auncient ſteps of the primitiue church of Rome.

Now let vs ſee what the aduerſarie ſide hath to obiect againe for the title of their vniuerſalitie, or rather ſingularitie. And firſt here commeth in a blind cauillation of a certaine Sophiſter, who gloſing vpon the wordes of Pelagius aboue recited, laboureth to colour the playne text with a ſubtile meaning, as though the ſenſe of the Canon were this, not to deny there the ſtate of ſupremacie: Sed negari ibi aliquem poſſe eſſe vniuerſalem Epiſcopum, ſub eo ſenſu duntaxat, quòd eſſet cuiuſq; Eccleſiæ proprius rector, ita quòd nullus alius eſſet Epiſcopus, &c. That is, but to denie there, that any may be vniuerſall biſhop after this ſenſe and meaning onely, ſo that he ſhould be the proper Paſtor of euery Church alone, and that there ſhould be no other biſhop beſide himſelf, &c. Thus goeth this Sophiſter about to daſh out this text, but he cannot ſo diſcharge the matter. For neither did Iohn the Patriarch then ſeeke any ſuch thing, to be biſhop and proper Paſtor of euery church alone, nor if he had the Councell of Chalcedon, and the Emperor Iuſtinian, would neuer haue agreed therunto. Neither is it true, that this Gloſer denieth Pelagius, here to forbid the primacie or ſupremacie of that Patriarch, which in deed is the onely intent of Pelagius in that Canon, witneſſing as well other Hiſtoriographers, as namely, Anton.tit.12.cap.3.par.13. & alſo the gloſe ordinary vpon the ſame Canon, &c.

A ſophiſtical cauillation vpon the wordes of Pelagius and Gregory aunſwered.

An obiection of a certayne late Engliſh writer refuted.

Out of the ſame fountaine ſpringeth the like or very ſame reaſon of late renued by a certaine new ſtart Engliſh Clarke in theſe our dayes, who aunſwering to the places of Gregory touching the ſaid matter, laboureth to auoide the cleare authoritie of him, by a like blind cauillation, ſaying, that Iohn biſhop of Conſtantinople, by this title of vniuerſall biſhop, vnderſtood himſelfe onely to be a biſhop, and none els. And that Gregory in reſiſting him, had none other meaning but the ſame. And to proue this to be the very meaning of Gregory, he reciteth the wordes of Gregory written to the ſaid Iohn Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople as followeth: Qui enim indignum te eſſe fatebaris, vt Epiſcopus dici debuiſſes, ad hoc quandoq; perductus es, vt deſpectis fratribus Epiſcopus appetas ſolus vocari. That is to ſay, For thou (Iohn biſhop of Conſtantinople) which ſometime didſt graunt thy ſelfe vnworthy the name of a biſhop, art now come to this, that ẏ doeſt ſeeke to be called a biſhop alone, &c. Vpõ this word Epiſcop' ſolus, this gloſer would ground a ſurmiſe, that Gregory did find fault with the Archbiſhop, not for any primacie which he ſought for aboue other Biſhops, but onely, for that he coueted to be biſhop and Paſtor alone in euery Church, in ſuch ſort, as there ſhould be no other Biſhop nor Paſtour els but himſelfe onely. But as is ſaid, that was neuer the Archbiſhops ſeeking, nor the matter of Gregories reprehenſion. For the ſaid Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, went not about to bee Biſhop alone, (which was to much abſurd, and alſo impoſſible) but to be vniuerſall alone: not to take away the office from other, but the honour from other: not to depoſe them, but to deſpiſe them. And therfore ſaith Gregory, vt deſpectis fratribus, not depoſitis fratribus, ſo that this worde ſolus, here noteth a deſpiſing of other, not a depoſing of other, & importeth a ſingularitie in condition aboue other, and not the office or ſubſtaunce of miniſtration without other, that is, to be vniuerſall among many, and not to bee one alone without any, nor to diminiſh the number of them, but only to encreaſe the honour to himſelfe. For the more euident probation whereof (although the thing of it ſelfe is ſo euident, that it needeth no proofe) what can be more playne, then the words themſelues of Pelagius and Gregory wherwith they charge him for running before his brethren, for chalenging ſuperioritie aboue them, for diminiſhing their honour, by taking more honour then to him was due, for following the aungell of pride in exalting himſelfe, in admitting that to him, which the biſhops of Rome and their predeceſſours had refuſed, beyng offered to them before, &c. All which declare that he ſought not to thruſt out all other biſhops out of their churches, and to be biſhop himſelfe alone. For that was neuer offered to the Biſhops of Rome by the Councell of Chalcedon, that they ſhould be biſhops alone, and none other. Neither did Lucifer ſeeke to haue no mo angels in all heauen, but himſelf, but he to be aboue all other alone.

A place of Gregory examined.

Pelag.2. Epiſt.1.

Likewiſe the word præcurrere, that is, to runne before other in the Epiſtle of Pelagius, declareth that Iohn ſought not to be biſhop alone, but Biſhop vniuerſall. We ſay not that a man runneth before another, whẽ he runneth alone, and no mã followeth him, that is not properly præcurrere, but ſolus currere. Moreouer, in ſeeking to be ſuperior to other biſhops, he ſeeketh not to take away other Biſhops, but to make other biſhops inferior to him. For where no inferior is, there can be no ſuperior, foraſmuch as theſe together are correlatiues, & inferre neceſſary reſpect mutually. And if it were true as this Gloſer ſayth, that he had ſought to be biſhop alone, how would that Councel either haue graunted that vnto him, or haue offered it to the Biſhop of Rome before? or if they had, howe could it be poſſible for him alone to ſerue all Churches, without any felow Biſhop to helpe him? And where this foreſaid clerke ſtandeth ſo much vpon the wordes of S. Gregory: Solus Epiſcopus Gregory therfore ſhall expound Gregory, and one Solus ſhall declare an other. wherfore if this diuine (whatſoeuer he be Doctour or Bacheler) either knoweth not, or would learne, what (onely Byſhop) meaneth in this place: an other place of the ſayde Gregory may inſtruct him, where Gregory wryting to Eulogius, Patriarch of Alexandria, geueth this reaſon, why he refuſed the ſame title offered to him (which then was offered to the ſayde Iohn Patriarche of Conſtantinople) ſaying: Quia videlicet ſi vnus Patriarcha vniuerſalis dicitur, Patriarcharum nomen cœteris derogatur, ſed abſit hoc. &c. That is to ſay: For if one alone woulde be called Patriarch vniuerſall, then ſhould the name of Patriarches be derogated from all other. &c. wherby two things are to be noted: Firſt what thing it was which the Patriarche of Conſtantinople did ſeeke, for Gregory here findeth no other fault, but with the ſame which was geuen to Iohn, which was to be called Patriarche vniuerſal. The ſeconde thing to be noted, is the cauſe why Gregory did rebuke this title, both geuen to Iohn, and offered to him, becauſe (ſayeth he) if one take vpon him the name of vniuerſall Patriarch, then is the name Patriarche taken from the reſt. As who would ſay: if I ſhould take vpon me to be named vniuerſal Patriarch, then ſhould there be no other Patriarches; but I ſhoulde be Byſhop Patriarche alone. And here commeth in your Solus Epiſcopus. &c.

Ex. Epiſt. Greg. 36. Lib. 4.

Ex Epiſt. Greg. 38. Lib. 4.

Furthermore, the ſame Gregory ſpeaking of the ſayde Solus, in an other place by, ſeemeth to declare there what he meaneth by this Solus here, in theſe wordes as followe: vt & nulli ſubeſſe, & ſolus omnibus præeſſe videretur. That is to ſay: ſo that he would be ſubiect to none, and would be chieftain to all other alone. &c. And ſo by this place, may the other place be expounded, vt ſolus Epiſcopus ſit is, qui ſolus inter Epiſcopos præeſſe appetat. That is, he that ſeeketh to be as biſhop alone, who alone ſeeketh to be extolled aboue other byſhops. But to be ſhort in a matter that needeth not many wordes. He that thus cauilleth vpon this place Solus Epiſcopus in Gregory, muſt be deſired here not to take Solus alone, but ioyne with all the word going before, which is, deſpectis fratribus, by the which might ſeeme ſufficiently declared, what Gregory ment by Solus Epiſcopus, meaning, that to deſpiſe other biſhops, & to diminiſh their honor, to ſet vp his owne, & to be ſubiect to none, but to preferre him ſelfe inequally before al other, is as much as to be counted biſhop alone. And thus much touching this obiection.

An other obiection reſolued.

An other obiection of our aduerſaries is this: although (ſay they) no Byſhop of Rome was euer called, or would be called by the name of vniuerſal Biſhop: yet it followeth not therefore, that they be not, or ought not to be heades of the vniuerſall Church. Their reaſon is this:

As S. Peter had the charge of the whole Church (by the teſtimonie of Gregory) committed vnto him, although he were not called vniuerſall Apoſtle:

So no more abſurde it is, for the Pope to be called the head of the whole Church, and to haue the charge thereof, although he be not called vniuerſall Byſhop. &c.

A double vntrueth in one Popiſh argument.

Peter how he had charge and not charge of the Church.

The firſt vntrueth in this argument.

The dignitie of the Church aboue the Apoſtles.

Vide Baldum conſi. 169. lib. 3 Secundum nouam impreſſionem. Et ſecund. Vete conſi. 359. lib. 1.

Proofes and reaſons that there was no inequallitie of preheminence among the Apoſtles.

Wherein is a double vntruth to be noted. Firſt in that they pretend Peter to be the head, & to haue the charge of the whole Church: if we take here (charge or head) for dominion or maſterſhip vpõ or aboue the Church, in all caſes iudiciarie, both ſpirituall & temporal: for the wordes of the Scripture be plaine. Non dominantes in clerum 1. Pet. Vos autem non ſic. Luke. 22. That is. Not as maiſters ouer the Clergy. &c. but you not ſo. &c. Againe that the Churche is greater, or rather the head of Peter it is cleare: 1. Corin. 3. All thinges are yours, whether it be Paule, or Apollo, or Cephas: either the world, death, or life, you be Chriſtes, Chriſt is Gods. &c. In which wordes the dignitie of the Churche no doubt is preferred aboue the Apoſtles, and aboue Cephas alſo. Moreouer as the dignitie of the wife is aboue the ſeruant, ſo muſt needes the honour and worthines of the Churche (being the ſpouſe of Chriſt) ſurmount the ſtate of Peter or other Apoſtles, which be but ſeruants to Chriſt and to the Churche, yea and though they were Princes of the Church, yet after the minde of Baldus: Magis attenditur perſona intellectualis, quàm organica. Otherwiſe if by this word (charge) he ment only the office and diligence of teaching: to that I aunſwere: The ſame Lord that ſayde to Peter, feede my ſheepe, ſaid alſo to the other, go & preach this Goſpell to al nations. And he that ſaid to Peter: whatſoeuer thou looſeſt, ſaid alſo to the other: whatſoeuer ye remit in the earth. Moreouer if the matter goe by preaching, Paul the Apoſtle laboured more therin, then euer did Peter by his owne confeſſion: Plus laboraui, alſo ſuffered more for the ſame, Plus ſuſtinui, neither was his doctrine leſſe ſound. Yea and in one point he went before Peter, & was teacher and ſchoolmaiſter vnto Peter, whereas Peter was by him iuſtly corrected. Gal. 2. Furthermore, teaching is not alwaye nor in all things a point of maiſterſhip, but ſometime a point of ſeruice. As if a Frenchman ſhould be put to an Engliſhman to teach him French, although he excelleth him in that kind of facultie, yet it followeth not therefore, that he hath fulnes of power vpõ him, to appoint his diet, to rule his houſhold, to preſcribe his lawes, to ſtinte his landes, and ſuch other. wherfore ſeing in trauail in teaching, in paines of preaching, in gifts of tongs, in largenes of commiſſion, in operation of miracles, in grace of vocation, in receauing the holy Ghoſt, in vehemencie of tormentes and death for Chriſtes name, the other Apoſtles were nothing inferiour to Peter: why Peter then ſhould claime any ſpecial prerogatiue aboue the reſt, I vnderſtãd no cauſe. As in deed he neuer claimed any, but the patrons of the Apoſtolicall ſea do claime it for him, which he neuer claimed himſelf, neither if he were here, would no leſſe abhorre it with ſoule and conſcience, then we do now: & yet our abhorring now is not for any malice of perſon, or any vantage to our ſelues, but only the vehemencie of truth, & zeale to Chriſt and to his congregation. Moreouer, if theſe men would needes haue Peter to be the Curate and ouerſear of the whole vniuerſall Church (which was to much for one man to take charge vpon) and to be Prince of al other Apoſtles, then would I faine learne of them, what meaneth (Dextræ ſocietatis) the right hand of ſocietie betwene Peter, Paul, & Barnabie, mentioned, Gal. 2. what taking of hands is there betwene ſubiects & their Prince, in way of fellowſhip? Or where fellowſhip is, what maiſterſhip is there? Or againe, what ſtate of maiſterſhip is it like, that Chriſt would geue to Peter, who beyng in deede maiſter of all, toke ſuch little maiſterſhip vpon himſelfe, and that not only in inward affection, but alſo in outward fact. Although I am not ignorant that Peter in places of the Goſpell hath his commendation, neither doe I denie Peter to bee worthy of the ſame. But yet theſe wordes of commendation, geue to him no ſtate of ſuperioritie, or iuriſdiction vpon all other, to haue all vnder his ſubiection. As if a Schoolemaiſter ſhould haue more ſpecial charge to ſome one of his ſcholers for his riper towardnes: yet this geueth him no fulnes of authoritie, or power coactiue vpõ the reſt, vnleſſe by ſpecial admiſſion he be deputed thereunto. Whereof, nothing can be gathered of Peter, for if it bee true that S. Auguſtine ſaith, that ſuch things as were ſpokẽ to Peter, haue no lightſome vnderſtanding, except they be referred to the church, wherof Peter did beare a figure: thẽ hath yͤ perſon of Peter nothing to claime by theſe wordes, but all redoũdeth to the church, which being ment by Peter, hath power by this reaſon, both ouer the perſon of Peter, and all other perſons in the Lord.

Office of teaching geueth no dominion, farther then in his book.

Peter in no poynt excelleth the reſt of the Apoſtles.

Dextra ſocietatis.

Anſwere to an inuincible argument prouing by Chriſoſtõe the whole Church to be committed to S. Peter.

Chriſoſt. Lib. 2. de ſacred.

But here ſtumbleth in an argument of our aduerſarie againe, which he in the margent of his booke calleth an inuincible argument drawen out of the bowels of S. Iohn Chryſoſtome. Lib. 2. De Sacerd. Wherby he ſuppoſeth to haue giuen a ſhrewd blow to the Proteſtants, and to haue gotten Hectors victory vpon a certaine Engliſh priſoner taken in plain field, and of all ſuch as take his part. The text onely of Chryſoſtome he reciteth, but maketh no argument albeit he maketh mention of an inuincible argumẽt in the margent. But becauſe he either wiſt not, or liſt not to ſhew his cunning therein, I wil forme that in argumẽt for him which he would haue done, but did not: and ſo will forme it (the Lord willing) as he himſelfe muſt of neceſſitie bee driuen to do, if the matter euer come to the triall of act, and not to the trifling of wordes. Firſt, he taketh his text out of Chryſoſtome, as followeth: for what cauſe, I pray you, did Chriſt ſhed his bloud? Truely, to redeeme thoſe ſheep, whoſe charge he committeth to Peter, and to Peters ſucceſſours. Vpon this place of Chryſoſtome. this Clarke taketh his medium, Chriſtes ſuffring. His concluſion is, that all which Chriſt died for, were committed to Peter, wherfore the forme of the argument muſt needes ſtand thus in the third figure.

A Popiſhe perilous paralogiſme.

Chriſt ſuffred for all men.

Chriſt ſuffered for them whome hee committed to Peter.

Ergo, All that Chriſt dyed for, were committed to Peter.

If this be the forme of his inſoluble argument, as it ſeemeth to be, by the order of his reaſoning, & alſo muſt needs be, taking that medium, and making that concluſion as he doth, (for els in the firſt figure, and firſt moode, the text of Chriſoſtome will not ſerue him) then muſt the forme and violence of this inexpugnable argumẽt be denied, for that it breaketh the rules of Logike, making his concluſiõ vniuerſall, which in that figure muſt needes be perticular, either affirmatiue or negatiue. And ſo this argument inuincible, falleth into one of theſe two ſtraites, either cõcluding thus, the forme wil not ſerue him, or cõcluding in another figure, the wordes of Chryſoſtome will not aunſwer to his purpoſe, to proue that all the world was committed to Peter. which propoſition as it is ſtrange in ſcripture: ſo neither is it the propoſition of Chryſoſtome. And though it were, yet both without inconuenience might be graunted of vs, and being graunted, ſerueth his purpoſe nothing, ſo long as the propoſition is not exceptiue, excluding other Apoſtles. For the words of Chryſoſtom do not ſo ſound, that the whole world was committed to Peter onely and to none other. Likewiſe then as it may be well affirmed of vs, that the world was committed to Peter, ſo can it not be denied of them, that the world was alſo committed to Iohn, Iames, Bartholomew, Paule, Barnabe, and other all and ſingular Apoſtles. For he that ſaid to Peter, Feede my ſheepe, ſaid alſo to all and ſingular his Apoſtles: Go into all the world & preach, &c. Math.vlt. Moreouer, for as much as this man collecteth out of Chryſoſtome, that the whole world was committed to Peter, how ſhall we then ioyne this meaning of Chryſoſtome with S. Paule, which ſayth that the Goſpel was committed to Peter ouer the circumciſion, as was Paule ouer the vncircumciſion? And here an anſwer to this doughtie argument, both to the forme, & to the matter thereof, albeit concerning the matter, here lacketh much to be ſaid more of Peters ſucceſſours in the text of Chryſoſtome. By the which ſucceſſours is not ment the biſhop of Rome onely (as the Papiſts would beare vs in hand) but all ſuch true and faithfull Paſtors, whom the Lordes calling ſendeth, and ſetteth ouer his flocke, whereſo euer, or whatſoeuer they be. For as Peter beareth a repreſentation of the church, by the teſtimonie of Auguſt. in Ioan.tract 124.Præfat.in Pſal.108. ſo the ſucceſſours of Peter be all faithfull Paſtors and ouerſeers of Chriſtes Church, to whom Chriſt our Lord hath committed the charge of his flocke. Wherefore they are not a little deceiued, which looking vpõ the rocke onely of the perſon, and not the rocke of confeſſion (contrary to the rule of Hilarie, De trinit. lib 6.) doe tie the Apoſtleſhip or rocke of Peter, to one onely Biſhop, and the ſucceſſion of Peter to one onely ſea of Rome: where as this being a ſpiritual office, and not carnall, hath no ſuch carnall race or diſcent after any worldly or locall vnderſtanding: but hath a more myſticall meaning, after a ſpirituall ſenſe of ſucceſſion, ſuch as Hierome ſpeaketh of, epiſt. ad Euagrium. Omnes, inquit, Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores ſunt &c. That is, All, ſaith he (ſpeaking of Biſhops) be ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles, &c.

The worlde was committed as well to other Apoſtles as to Peter.

A place of Chriſoſtome examined by S. Paule.

The ſucceſſours of Peter.

Auguſt. in Ioan. tract. 124.

Hilarius. lib. 6.

Hierony. Epiſt. ad Euagrium.

Of like force and faſhion, and out of the ſame figure, the ſame Author patcheth moreouer another argument, prouing that the Biſhop of Rome was tituled the head of Chriſtes church, in the primitiue time of the old aunciters, before the age of Gregory. His argument proceedeth thus, in the third figure.

An argument of the Papiſtes.

S. Peter was called by the auncient fathers, head of Chriſtes church.
S. Peter was biſhop of Rome:
Ergo, the biſhop of Rome was called head of yͤ Church in the old auncient tyme.

This argument expoſitorie, beyng clouted vp in the third figure, and concluding ſingularly, hath rather a ſhew of an argumẽt, then maketh any neceſſarie concluſiõ, ſtanding vpon no moode in the ſaid figure, if the Author thereof were put to his triall. Albeit to leaue the forme, and to come to the matter of the argument. Firſt, how wel he wil diſpatch himſelfe of the Maior, & proue vs that S. Peter, although he were at Rome, and taught at Rome, and ſuffered at Rome: yet that he was biſhop and proper Ordinarie of that citie and ſpeciall ſea of Rome? As touching the allegation of Abdias, Oroſius, Ado, Tertullian, Cyprian, Hierome, Optatius, and Auguſtine, brought forth for his moſt aduantage, to proue his Maior: thus I anſwer cõcerning Oroſius, Tertullian, Cyprian, Hierome, and Auguſtine, that where they ſpeake of S. Peters chaire, or planting yͤ faith at Rome, ſtraightway this man argueth thereupon, that Peter was Biſhop of Rome. But that doth not clarkely follow. For the office of the Apoſtles was to plant the faith in all places, and in euery regiõ, yet were they not biſhops in euery region. And as for the chaire, as it is no difference eſſentiall that maketh a biſhop (for ſo much as a Doctour may haue a chaire, and yet be no biſhop) ſo cannot he conclude by the chaire of Peter, that S. Peter was Biſhop of Rome. For all this proueth no farther, but that Peter was at Rome, and there taught the fayth of Chriſt, as Paul did alſo, and peraduenture in a chayre likewiſe: yet we ſay not that Paule was therefore Biſhop of Rome. But that he was there as an Apoſtle of Chriſt, whether he taught there ſtanding on his feete, or ſittyng in a chayre. In the Scripture commonly the Chaire ſignifieth doctrine or iudgement, as ſitting alſo declareth ſuch as teach or iudge, whether they ſit in the chaire of Moyſes, or in the chaire of peſtilence. Planting likewiſe is a worde Apoſtolicall, and ſignifieth not onely the office of a Biſhop. Wherefore it is no good conſequent, he ſate, he taught, he planted at Rome his chaire and ſeate was at Rome: Ergo, he was Biſhop of Rome. And thus much touchyng Oroſius, Tertullian, Cyprian, Auguſtine.

Aunſwere to the argument.

Oſorius. Tertul lib. de præſcript aduer hære. Cypri. lib. 1. Epiſt. 3. Hier. in catal. & Epiſt. 42.

As for Abdias, Ado, Optatus, and ſuch other, although we ſhould haue much wrong offered, and neuer ſhould make an ende, if we ſhould be preſt with the authoritie of euery one that could or did moue pen, in all the whole firſt age of the church, to be our iudges in euery eccleſiaſticall matter: and much more wrong ſhould haue, if the authors either corrupted, or counterfaited, ſhould be layd vnto vs, ſpeaking not in the ſame ſenſe, or in the ſame tongue, or in the ſame time wherin they wrote: yet to helpe and to ſalue the authorities of theſe authors ſo much as we may, I anſwer to their allegations, with this diſtinction of a biſhop, which is to be taken either generally or ſpecially. After the firſt, a biſhop is he to whom ſo euer the publike cure and charge of ſoules is committed, without any limitation of place. And ſo the name of Biſhop is concident with the office of Apoſtle, or any publique Paſtour, Doctour, or Curator of the vniuerſall flocke of Chriſt. And thus may Paule, Peter, or any other of the Apoſtles be called Biſhops. So alſo is Chriſt himſelfe by expreſſe worde called ἐπισκόπος and ποίμην, that is, Biſhop and Paſtor, 1. Peter. 2. And thus may Peter wel be named a biſhop of theſe foreſaid authors after this maner of taking. But this publike and generall charge vniuerſally ouer the whole, without limitation, ceaſed after Chriſt and the Apoſtles. For then were biſhops by places and prouinces appointed, to haue ſpeciall ouerſight of ſome perticular flock or prouince, and ſo to be reſident and attendant onely vpon the ſame.

A double taking of the word Biſhop.

Chriſt himſelfe a Byſhop.

The other diuerſitie of this name biſhop, is to be taken after a more ſpeciall ſort, which is, when any perſon orderly called, is aſſigned, namely & ſpecially to ſome one certain place, citie, or prouince, wherunto he is only bound to employ his office & charge, and no where els, according to the old Canons of the Apoſtles, and of the Councell of Nice. And this Biſhop differing from the other, is called Epiſcopus intitulatus, hauing his name of his citie or Dioces. And thus we deny that Peter the Apoſtle was euer Biſhop elected, inſtalled, or intituled to the Citie of Rome, neyther doth Optatus, Abdias, Ado, or Hierome affirme the ſame. And if Ado ſay that Peter was biſhop of Rome 25. yeares, vntill the laſt yeare of Nero, that is eaſilie refuted both by the Scriptures and Hiſtories: for ſo we vnderſtand by the declaration of Saint Paule, Gal. 1. 2. that 14. yeares after his conuerſion, Saint Paule had Peter by the hand at Hieruſalem.

Canon. Apoſt. 23. 14. 34. Con. Nice. cap. 15. Concil. Antioch. cap. 3 13.

Peters being at Rome.

Moreouer, the ſaid Paule in the foreſaid Epiſtle, witneſſeth, that yͤ charge Apoſtolical was cõmitted vnto Peter ouer the Circumciſed, and ſo was he intituled. Alſo S. Paule writing to the Romains, in his manifold ſalutations to them in Rome, maketh no mentiõ there, of S. Peter, which doubtles ſhould not haue bene vnremembred, if he had bene then in Rome. Againe S. Peter dating his Epiſtle from Babilon, was not then belike at Rome.

Furthermore, hiſtories doe record, that Peter was at Pontus v. yeares, and at Antioch. 7. yeares. How could he then be 25. yeares at Rome? Finally, where our aduerſary alleaging out of Ado, ſaith, that S. Peter was there 25 yeres, vntil the laſt yere of Nero: how can that ſtand, when S. Paule ſuffering vnder Nero, was put to death the ſame day tweluemonth, that is, a whole yeare after Peter, &c. But eſpecially how agreeth this with Scripture, that Chriſt ſhould make Peter an Apoſtle vniuerſall to walke in all the world: Item per vniuerſum orbem. Item, Eritis mihi teſtes vſque ad fines terræ. &c. And our Papiſts would needs make him a ſitting Byſhop, and intitle him to Rome. How accorde theſe: Apoſtolus and Epiſcopus ire and ſedere. Omnes gentes, and Roma togither?

And thus haue I reſolued the firſt vntrueth of that Popiſh demonſtration aboue rehearſed, Pag. 14. wherein they thinke to proue that as Peter, although hee was not called vniuerſall Apoſtle, yet was the head of the whole Churche: ſo the Pope might and hath had after him the charge of the whole Church, although he was not called vniuerſall Biſhop in the olde tyme. &c.

Now followeth the ſecond vntrueth to be touched in ſame argument, which is, that becauſe Peter was the head of the church: ſo therfore the Pope muſt alſo be the head of the church, and was, albeit he was not called vniuerſal biſhop a long time. But this we do deny, yea the matter denieth it ſelfe, by their owne poſition, for being graunted by them, that the title of vniuerſall biſhop was not receiued at Rome, but refuſed to the time of Gregory: then muſt it neceſſarily be graunted, that the Biſhops of Rome before S Gregory, had not the charge of the whole church, neither could be admitted by that reaſon to be heads of the church. For ſo much as there can be no head, but which is vniuerſall to the whole body, neither can any haue charge of the whole, but he muſt needes be vniuerſal to all and ſinguler partes of that, whereof he hath the charge. As in ſciences, whoſoeuer hath knowledge & cunning in all the ſeuen liberal ſciences, & all the partes therof pertaining to liberall knowledge, is ſaid to be an vniuerſall learned man: ſo in office, to whomſoeuer the publike charge of all Churches doth appertaine, how is he not to be called biſhop vniuerſal? Now if before S. Gregories time the name of vniuerſall biſhop, was repealed in Rome: how then can the name be refuſed, & the definition of the name be admitted? Or els let our aduerſaries tell vs how they define an vniuerſall Biſhop, ſeing this word biſhop is properly the name of office whereto is annexed charge. Wherefore, if a Biſhop be he which hath the charge of all ſoules in his Dioces cōmitted to him, & muſt render account for thē al: then whoſe charge extendeth to all & ſinguler churches, & muſt render account for euery chriſtian ſoule within the whole world, to him cā not be denied the name of an vniuerſal biſhop, hauing the office of an vniuerſall biſhop. Or if he be not an vniuerſall biſhop, he cannot then haue the charge of the whole that is, of all and ſingular churches of Chriſt. For ſuch is the rule of true definition. Cui cōuenit definitio, conuenit & definitum, & contra. Cui adimitur definitio, eidem & definitum adimitur. Although this word vniuerſall, in the Greeke writers, ſignifieth that, which we in our vulgar Engliſh tongue call catholike: yet I ſuppoſe our aduerſaries here will not take vniuerſall in that ſenſe. For after that meaning, as we doe not deny that the biſhops of Rome may be vniuerſall Biſhops, ſo neither can they deny but other biſhops alſo may be as vniuerſall, that is, as catholike as they. But ſuch as more diſtinctly & ſchoolelike diſcuſſe this matter, define vniuerſall or catholike by three things: to witte, by tyme, place, and perſon. So that whatſoeuer extendeth it ſelfe to times, all places, & to all perſons that is properly vniuerſal or catholike. And contrarywiſe, what thing is to be called vniuerſal or catholike, reacheth to all thoſe three aforeſaid, cōprehending al places, times, & perſons, & extendeth it ſelfe of his owne nature to the ſame, or els it is not to be called properly vniuerſal or catholike. And thus iij. things there be, which moſt cōmonly we cal catholike or vniuerſal: that is, the church which is called the catholike church: Faith, which is called the catholike faith: A man, whome alſo we call a man catholike, becauſe theſe iij. of their owne nature & diſpoſition (no contrary obſtacle letting) extend themſelues ſo to all, that no time, place, nor perſō is excluded. Which iij. conditions, if they altogither cōcurre in the charge of yͤ biſhop of Rome, then is it an vniuerſal charge, and he an vniuerſal biſhop: if not, then is his charge neither vniuerſall, nor he the head of the Church, nor yet vniuerſall biſhop. For how theſe three can be ſeparated, I can not ſee, except the aduerſary part do proue it more euidently, then yet they haue done.

The ſecond vntrueth of the argument aboue mentioned.

What is an vniuerſall Biſhop.

Regula definitionis.

Cui conuenit definitio & definitum.

Vniuerſall defined by three thinges, tyme, place, and perſō.

Three thinges commonly called catholique or vniuerſall.

To haue vniuerſall charge to be head of the vniuerſall Church, and to be vniuerſall Biſhop are all concident together.

And thus much to the obiection of our aduerſaries, arguing thus: that as S. Peter being not called vniuerſall Apoſtle, yet was the head of the vniuerſal church: So the Pope although he was not firſt called vniuerſall Biſhop, had, and might haue the charge of the whole Church, and was the vniuerſall head of the ſame. The which obiection conteining (as is ſaid) a double vntruth, our aduerſaries yet notwithſtanding do buſie themſelues greatly to fortify by ſundry teſtimonies and allegations, patched out of old and auncient Doctours, but ſpecially out of Theodoritus, Irenæus, Ambroſe, & Auguſtine, prouing by them, that the ſea of Rome hauing the preeminence and principallitie, hath bene honoured aboue all other churches. Whereupon the ſaid aduerſarie before minded, groundeth this conſequent.

Irenaus. Lib. 3. Cap. 3. Amb. de doct. gent. lib. 2. ca. 6. August. Epist. 162.

An argument of the Papiſtes.

Irenæus, Ambroſe, Auguſtine and Theodoritus affirme that the church of Rome is the chiefe of all other churches.

Ergo, the Biſhop and head of that church is chiefe and head ouer all other biſhops, & head of all other churches.

Aunſwere.

But this conſequent is to be denied, for that the excellencie of the church or place doth not always argue the excellencie of the miniſter or biſhop, nor yet neceſſarilie doth cauſe the ſame. For in matters of the church which are ſpirituall, all preeminence ſtandeth vpon ſpirituall & inward gifts, (ſpiritualia enim ſpiritualibus comparantur) as fayth, pietie, learning and godly knowledge, zeale and feruencie in the holy ghoſt, vnitie of doctrine, &c. which giftes many tymes may excel in a church, where the miniſter or biſhop is inferiour to biſhops or miniſters of other churches. As the moſt famous ſchoole in a realme hath not alway yͤ moſt famous ſchoolemaiſter, neither doth make him therby moſt excellent in learning aboue of all other: So if our aduerſaries do meane by this preeminēce of the church of Rome, ſuch inward gifts of doctrine, faith, vnitie and peace of religion: then ſay I, the excellencie hereof doth not inferre or argue the excellencie of the Biſhop. And thus concerning the principallitie of the Church of Rome, commended at that time of the Doctors, it may be true, & ſo well expounded one way. And thus do I graunt the antecedent of this argument, and deny the conſequent. But here will our aduerſaries peraduenture reply againe and ſay, that yͤ principallitie of the church of Rome which is commended by the Doctours, is not ment here ſo much by inward gifts and induments belonging to a chriſtian church, as by outwarde authoritie and domination ouer other churches, whereto is to be aunſwered. Firſt, what neceſſitie is there, or where did our Papiſts learne, to bring into the ſpiritual church of Chriſt, this outward forme of ciuile regimēt and pollicie? that as the Romaine Emperours in tyme paſt gouerned ouer all the world, ſo the Romaine biſhop muſt haue his monarchie vpon the vniuerſall Clergy, to make all other churches to ſtoupe vnder his ſubiection. And where then be the wordes of our Sauiour: Vos autem non ſic, If they hold their affirmatiue, quòd ſic where then is Chriſtes negatiue, non ſic? if they ſay, there muſt needes be diſtinction of degrees in the church, and in this diſtinction of degrees, ſuperioritie muſt neceſſarily be graunted for the outward diſcipline of the church, for directing matters, for quieting of ſchiſmes, for ſetting orders, for commenſing of Conuocations and Councels, as neede ſhall require, &c. Againſt this ſuperioritie we ſtand not, & therefore we yeld to our ſuperior power, kings, and princes, our due obedience, and to our lawfull gouernours vnder God of both regiments, Eccleſiaſticall and Temporall. Alſo in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtate, we take not away the diſtinction of ordinarie degrees, ſuch as by the Scripture be appointed, or by the primatiue church allowed. As Patriarchs, or Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Miniſters and Deacons, for of theſe foure, we eſpecially read as chiefe. In which foure degrees as we graunt diuerſitie of office, ſo we admitte in the ſame alſo, diuerſitie of dignitie: neither denying that which is due to ech degree, neither yet maintaining the ambition of any ſinguler perſon. For as we geue to the miniſter place aboue the Deacon, to the biſhop aboue the miniſter, to the Archbiſhop aboue the Biſhop: ſo we ſee no cauſe of inequalitie, why one miniſter ſhould be aboue an other miniſter: One biſhop in his degree aboue an other biſhop to deale in his Dioceſſe: or one Archbiſhop aboue another Archbiſhop. And this is to keepe an order duely & truly in the church, according to the true nature and definitiō of order by the authoritie of Auguſt. lib. De ciuit. Dei. Where he thus defineth that which we call order: Ordo, eſt parium diſpariumq; rerum ſua cuiq; loca tribuens diſpoſitio Order) ſaith he) is a diſcretion or diſpoſition giuen to all things, according as they are matches, or not matches, proportionally to euery one his owne right and proper place.

Aug. de Ciuit. Dei. lib. 91. cap.

Order defined.

This definition of S. Auguſtine, ſtanding with the things before premiſed, now here ioyneth the queſtiō betwene vs and the Papiſtes, whether the Metropolitane Church of Rome, with yͤ Archbiſhop of the ſame, ought to be preferred before other Metropolitane churches & Archbiſhyps, through vniuerſall Chriſtendome or not? To the anſwer wherof, if the voyce of order might here be heard, it would ſay: geue to things that be matches & like, like honour, to things vnlike, vnlike honour, &c. Wherefore, ſeyng the ſea of Rome is a Patriarchall ſea appointed by the Primitiue Church, and the Biſhop thereof an Archbiſhop limited within his owne bordering churches, which the Councel of Nice calleth ſuburbicas Eccleſias, as other Archbiſhops be: he ought therfore orderly to haue the honor of an Archbiſhop (ordering himſelfe thereafter) & ſuch outward preeminence as to other Archbiſhops is due. More if he do require, he breaketh the rule of right order, he falleth into preſumption, and doth wrong vnto his fellows, and they alſo do wrong vnto themſelues, whoſoeuer they be, which feeding his humour of ambition, geue more vnto him thē the foreſaid rule of order doth require. For ſo much as they yeld to him more thē is his right, ſo much they take frō themſelues, which is due to thē. And the ſame is the cauſe, why both Gregory and Pelagius his predeceſſour reprehendeth them, which gaue to the Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, that,

Ex Regiſtro Greg. lib. 4. Epiſto. 32.

that, which now the biſhop of Rome claimeth to himſelfe; charging them with the breach of order in theſe wordes: Ne dum priuatim aliquod daretur vni, honore debito ſacerdotes priuarentur vniuerſi, that is, leaſt that while any ſingular thing is giuen to one perſon, all other Prieſtes be depriued of their due honour. And for the like caſe Pelagius exhorteth that no Prieſt do giue to any one Archbiſhop, the name of vniuerſall biſhop, ne ſibi debitum ſubtrahat cum alteri honorem offert indebitum. That is, leaſt (ſaith he) in ſo doing, he take from himſelfe his due honour, while he yeldeth that, which is not due to another. And alſo in the ſame Epiſtle: Quia ſi ſummus Patriarcha vniuerſalis dicitur, Patriarcharum nomen cæteris derogatur. For (ſaith he) if he be called the chiefe vniuerſal Patriarch, then is the name of Patriarchs derogated from other. &c. wherfore as is ſaid, ſeing the biſhop of Rome is an Archbiſhop, as other be. Order giueth that he ſhould haue the dignitie, which to Archbiſhops is due, whatſoeuer is added more, is derogation to the reſt. And thus much concerning diſtinction of degrees, and order in giuing to euery degree, his place and honour.

The ſecond aunſwere to the obiectiō before moued.

The ſecond reaſon or anſwer to the obiectiō before moued, pag. 16. is this: that beyng graunted to the Papiſts, that the Doctours aforeſaid, ſpeaking of the principallitie of the church of Rome, doe meane not onely of the inward vertues of that church, but alſo of the outward authoritie and iuriſdiction of the ſame, aboue other churches: yet the cauſe wherfore they did attribute ſo much to the church, is to be expēded, which was this, as before was alledged out of the Councel of Calcedon, cap. 28. διὰ τὸ βασιλεύειν τὴν πόλιν ἐκείνην, that is, for the rule and Imperie which that citie of Rome had then aboue other cities, which cauſe being outward & carnall, was neither then cauſe ſufficient, and now ceaſing, importeth not to vs the like effect, according as they ſay: Sublata cauſa, tollitur effectus. So that by the reaſon therof, the foreſaid principallitie of the church of Rome, did not hold then iure diuino, ſed humano. And as it holdeth by mans law, ſo by mans law may be repealed againe.

Ex Concil. Calced. cap. 28.

Wherfore, be it admitted that both the Pope ſitteth and ſucceedeth in the chaire of Peter, and alſo that he is the Biſhop of the greateſt citie in the world: yet it followeth not therby that he ſhould haue rule and lordſhip ouer all other biſhops and churches of the world. For firſt touching the ſucceſſion of Peter, many things are to be conſidered.

Certayne demaundes for the Papiſtes to anſwere vnto.

Firſt, whether Peter ſate, and had his chaire in Rome, or not?

Secondly, whether he ſate there as an Apoſtle, or as a Biſhop?

Thirdly, whether the ſitting in the outward ſeate of Peter, maketh ſucceſſour of Peter?

Fourthly, whether he ſitteth in the chaire & ſeat of Peter, which ſitteth not in the doctrine of Peter?

Fiftly, whether the ſucceſſion of Peter maketh rather an Apoſtle then a Biſhop, & ſo ſhould we call the Pope, the Apoſtle of Rome, and not the biſhop of Rome?

Sixtly, whether Eccleſiaſticall functions ought to be eſteemed by ordinarie ſucceſſion of place, or by Gods ſecret calling or ſending?

Seuenthly and laſtly, whether it ſtand by Scripture, any ſucceſſion at all to be pointed in Chriſtes Church, or why more from Peter, then from other Apoſtles?

All which Interrogatories being wel diſcuſſed (which would aſke a long proces) it ſhould wel appeare what litle hold the Pope hath to take this ſtate vpon him, aboue all other Churches as he doth. In the meane tyme, this one argument by the way may ſuffice in ſtead of many, for our aduerſaries to anſwer to at their conuenient leiſure. Which argument thus I forme and frame in Cameſtres.

An argument prouing the Popes of this latter Church of Rome not to be ſucceſſours of Peter.

Ca- All the true ſucceſſors of Peter, ſit in the chaire of the doctrine of Peter, and other Apoſtles vniformly.

me- No Popes of this latter Church of Rome, ſitte in the chaire of Saint Peters and other Apoſtles doctrine vniformely.

ſtres. Ergo, no Popes of this latter church of Rome, be the true ſucceſſors of Peter.

And when they haue well peruſed the Minor of this argument, and haue well conferred together the doctrine taught them of S. Peter, with the doctrine taught now by the Popes, of iuſtification of a Chriſten man, of the office of the law, of the ſtrength and largenes of ſinne, of mens merites, of free will, of works of ſupererogation, of ſetting vp images, of vij. Sacramentes, of auricular confeſſion, of ſatiſfaction, of ſacrifice of the Maſſe, of communicating vnder one kinde, of eleuating and adoring the Sacramentall elements, of Latine ſeruice, of inuocation, of prohibitiō of meates and mariage, of vowing chaſtitie, of ſectes & rules of diuers religions, of indulgences and pardōs: alſo with their doctrine taught now of magiſtrates, of the fulnes of power, and regalitie of the ſea of Rome, with many other like to theſe, &c. then will I be glad to heare what they wil ſay to the premiſſes.

Secondly, if they would proue by the allegation of the Doctours, Irenæus, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Theodoritus aforeſaid, the Biſhop of Rome to bee the chiefe of all Biſhops, therfore, becauſe the citie wherof he is biſhop, is the chiefe and principall aboue all other Churches, that conſequent is to be denied. For it followeth not (taking as I ſaid, the principallitie of that church to ſtand διὰ τὸ βασιλεύειν τὴν πόλιν that is, vpon the principal dominion of that citie) no more then this conſequent followeth.

London is the chiefe Citie in all England.

Ergo, the biſhop of London is the chiefeſt of all biſhops in the Realme.

Which argument were derogatory to the biſhop both of Canterbury, and of Yorke.

Yea to graunt yet more to our aduerſaries (which is all they can require) the minde of the foreſaid Doctours Irenæus, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, and Theodoritus, in giuing principallitie vnto Rome, to haue reſpect vnto ý vertue of ſucceſſion from Peter, and not vnto the greatnes of the Citie: yet notwithſtanding, for all this their argument holdeth not, if it be rightly conſidered, to ſay.

A falſe conſequent of the Papiſtes.

The Apoſtolicall Sea of Rome, hauing ſucceſſiō from Peter, with the biſhops therof, was chief then of all other churches, in the primitiue tyme of theſe Doctours.

Ergo, the Apoſtolicall ſea of Rome, with the Biſhops therof, hauing ſucceſſiō from Peter, ought now to be chiefe of all other churches in theſe our dayes.

Aunſwere to the conſequent.

This conſequent might well follow, if the tymes were like, or if ſucceſſion which gaue them the cauſe of principallitie, were the ſame now, which was then. But now the time and ſucceſſion is not correſpondent, for then ſucceſſion in the time of theſe Doctours, was as well in doctrine Apoſtolicall, as in place Apoſtolicall. Now the ſucceſſion of doctrine Apoſtolicall hath not long ceaſed in the ſea Apoſtolicall: and nothing remaineth but onely place, which is the leſt matter of true ſpirituall and Apoſtolical ſucceſſion. And thus much to the authoritie and teſtimonie of theſe forenamed Doctors.

Succeſſion Apoſtolicall double wiſe to be conſidered.

Beſides theſe obiections heretofore recited out of Irenæus, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, and Theodoritus, our aduerſaries yet obiect and heape vp againſt vs: moreouer, examples of the primitiue time of the church, teſtimonies of generall Councels, and opinions of auncient writers, taken out of the booke of Councels, & Epiſtles decretall, wherby their intent is to proue, the foreſayd termes (of the head of the church, ruler of the church, chiefe of all other Prieſtes) to bee applied not onely to Peter, but alſo to the Biſhop of Rome within the compaſſe of the primitiue time. And here commeth in the teſtimonie cited of Vincentius Lirinenſis. Of the Epiſtle of Paſchaſius and his fellowes, writing to Leo from the Councel of Chalcedon. The teſtimonie alſo of Iuſtinian the Emperour in his Codex: where Ioannes then Pope was called caput omnium Eccleſiarum Epiſt. inter claras cap. De ſumma Trinit & fide Cath. The teſtimonie alſo of Athanaſius, with his fellow biſhops of Egypt, of Thebaida, and Libia, in their Epiſtles to Pope Marcus, Liberius & Felix. Likewiſe the teſtimonie of Hierome, In præf. in 4. Euang. Item Epiſt. 42 Tom. 1. Item Epiſt. 41. Tom. 2. Of S. Ambroſe, 1. Tim 3. Of S. Auguſtine to Boniſace. Ad Bonifac. contra duas Epiſt. Pelagian. Lib. 1. cap. 1. Item, Lib. 2. De Baptiſm. cap. 1. Of Theodoritus in his Epiſtle to Pope Leo. Epiſt Commentar. in Pauli Epiſt. præfixa. Of Chryſoſtome, Epiſt ad Innocentium, Tom. 5. &c. By which teſtimonies our aduerſaries would proue S. Peter, and after him the Biſhop of Rome to be called and taken for head of the church, chiefe biſhop, prince and ruler of the whole Clergy. To all which obiections fully and exactly to aunſwer in order, would require a whole volume by it ſelfe. In the meane time, leauing the reſt vnto them vnto whom it doth more properly appertain, briefly with this one ſhort diſtinction, I anſwer theſe & all ſuch other like places, where S. Peter with his ſucceſſours are called: head of the church, chiefe of Biſhops, Prince of the Apoſtles, &c. In which places, this worde head, chiefe, and Prince of the Apoſtles, may be taken two maner of waies: to note, either dominiō, or els commendation. For ſo we read ſometime Caput, and princeps, to be wordes not of authoritie, but of excellencie, wherby is declared the chiefeſt and worthieſt part among many parts, and not poſſeſſour and gouernour of the whole. Like as in the perſon of mā, the hed is the principal part of the whole body, being endued with reaſon, & furniſhed with moſt excellēt ſenſes, by the which ý whole body of mā is directed,

Teſtimonies alledged for the principalitie of the Pope.

Aunſwere by a diſtinction.

Caput and Princeps, haue a double vnderſtanding.

ſo thereof is deriued by a metaphor, to what man or thing ſoeuer nature or condition hath giuen the greateſt excellẽcie, of gifts and properties aboue other partes or mẽbers, the ſame ſocietie to be called of the ſaid parties, Caput, or Princeps, head or Prince. And yet the ſame head or Prince ſo called, hath not alwayes dominion or iuriſdictiõ of the reſt. So we call in our vulgar ſpeach the head or chiefe men of the pariſh, who for their riches, wiſdom, or place, are moſt ſpecially noted: After like phraſe of ſpeach we call the head man of the Inqueſt, him that hath the firſt place. And yet neither they nor theſe haue any dominion or iuriſdiction vpon the reſidue. In a ſchoole the chiefeſt Scholer in learning, is not therefore the maiſter or gouernour of his fellowes. Neither hath M. Cicero any title thereby to claime ſubiection and ſeruice of all other Oratours, becauſe he is named Princeps eloquentiæ, and goeth before them in that kind of phraſe. The ſame Cicero. Lib. 1. offic. calleth Cratippũ principem huius ætatis Philoſophorum: as Homerus alſo may be called Poetarum Princeps: And yet neither Philoſophers to Cratippus, nor Poetes to Homere, owe anye thing els, but onely fame and praiſe.

How Peter is Princeps Apoſtolorum. Princeps eloquẽtiæ Cicero. Princeps Philoſophorum Cratippus.

And what if S. Peter the bleſſed Apoſtle be called and counted of the old auncient Doctours, as head and Prince of the Apoſtles, which is as much as Coryphæus Apoſtolorum, for his excellent faith, for his deuine confeſſion & ſingular affection to the Lorde Ieſus: yet what Intereſt or charge either hath he to chalenge ouer the Apoſtles, or the Pope after him ouer all other biſhops & the whole church of Chriſt, although the Pope haue the like excellencie of Chriſtes faith which Peter had, as would God he had? As concerning theſe allegations therfore out of the Doctors, two thinges are to be obſerued: Firſt, that neither theſe names and titles though they be geuen to Peter, doe geue him any ſtate or dominion aboue other Apoſtles: nor yet the ſucceſſion of him doth further any whit this celſitude and regalitie of the Pope to aduance him aboue his fellow Archbiſhops, as he now doth.

Petrus Princeps & Coryphæus Apoſtolorum.

And if our aduerſaries would needs prouoke vs to the numbring of teſtimonies, & deuiding the houſe (ſpeaking of the writers and Counſels of the Primitiue age) for theſe aforeſaid teſtimonies alleaged on their ſide, I could on the contrary part recite out of the witneſſe of Doctours, out of the examples of Councels, & practiſes of Emperors, no leſſe then 60. voices, much more repugnant againſt their aſſertion, then there is for the Pope. The tractation whereof for this preſent I do refer, either to them that haue more laiſure at this time to diſcourſe them, or els omit it to an other time, if the good pleaſure of the Lord ſhall be, to graunt me further laiſure in an other Booke to intreat thereof at large, in ſuch order, as (if the Lord ſo graunt) ſhal appeare ſufficient matter, to proue by the Doctors, general Councels, examples and hiſtories of time, that the Biſhops of Rome during the firſt 500. yeres after Chriſt, although for the greatnes of the Empire, were ſomewhat more magnified then the other, and therfore were ſought of many, and were flattred of ſome, and they themſelues diuers, did ſet forth themſelues more then they ſhould: yet by the commõ conſent of churches, were ſtopped of their purpoſe, ſo that by the conſenſion of the moſt part, within the compaſſe of that age the Biſhops of Rome had not this regall ſtate of title, iuriſdiction, and fulnes of power, which now they vſurpe, but were taken as Archbiſhops, of equal honour, of equal merite with other Archbiſhops & rulers of yͤ church. And if any preferment was giuen vnto them ſome thing aboue the reſt, yet neither was it ſo giuen of all, nor of the moſt part: ſecondly, neither was it ſo giuen of them for any ſuch neceſſitie of Gods worde, aut iure aliquo diuino, as which did ſo bind them thereunto, nor yet ſo much for the reſpect of Peter, & his ſucceſſion: as for certaine other cauſes and reſpects, as may be gathered to the number of 13.

Cauſes 13. of aduauncing the ſea of Rome.

1. Of which, the firſt is the greatneſſe of the citie and Monarchie of Rome.

2. The ſecond, is the authoritie of the Emperor Conſtantine the great, firſt of the Emperors conuerted to the faith, and ruling in the ſame citie, by whom the vniuerſal libertie of the church was firſt promoted, and the cauſes of the biſhops being then at variance, were committed partly to the biſhop of Rome, partly to other biſhops nere by, to be decided, as appeareth Euſeb. lib. 10. cap. 5.

3. The third, was the Councel of Nice, which confirmed the preeminence of that church to haue the ouerſight of the churches bordering about it.

4. The fourth cauſe of aduauncing the church of Rome, was the vnquiet ſtate of the Greek church, much troubled in thoſe dayes with ſects, factions, and diſſentions, wherof we may read, Socrat. lib. 2. cap 15. Sozom. lib. 3. cap. 8.

5. The fift, when Synodes were called by other Metropolitanes, then if it chanced the biſhops of Rome to be abſent, and their ſentence being abſent to be required, by the occaſion therof, they began at length to take their ſentence for a Canon or rule Eccleſiaſticall, & thereby to refuſe other Synodes, where their decree or ſentẽce was not required.

6. An other cauſe was, that when any common matter was in hand in other places, whatſoeuer was done, commonly the maner was to write to the Romaine biſhop for his approbatiõ in the ſame, for publike vnitie and conſent to be had in Chriſtes church, as appeareth Lib. 10. Epiſt. 78. Ambroſij ad Theophilum.

7. Item, for that the teſtimonie ſomtimes of the Romain biſhop was wont in thoſe dayes alſo to be deſired, for admitting teachers and biſhops in other churches, whereof we haue example in Socrat lib. 4. cap. 37.

8. Moreouer, this was a great ſetting vp of that church, when as their ſentence not only was required, but alſo receiued diuers times of other biſhops. And when Biſhops of other prouinces were at any diſſention among thẽſelues they of their owne accord appealed to the biſhop of Rome, deſiring him to cite vp both parties, and to haue the hearing and deciding of the cauſe, as did Macarius and Heſychius ſend to Iulius then biſhop of Rome, &c.

9. Item, in that certaine of the Arrians returning from their Arrianiſme, offered vp and exhibited vnto the biſhops of Rome their libels of repentance, and were of them receiued againe, as Vrſatius and Valens did to Iulius. Socra. lib. 2. cap 24.

10. The x. cauſe was alſo, for that Gratianus the Emperour made a law, that all men ſhould retaine that religiõ which Damaſus biſhop of Rome, and Peter biſhop of Alexandria did hold. Sozom lib. 7. cap. 4.

11. And alſo, if it happened the biſhop of Rome to diſalow the ordering of any miniſter or miniſters, the Popes perceiuing how diligent and redy they were to ſeeke their fauour, and to ſend vp their meſſengers to Rome for their purgation, tooke therby no little maner of exaltation. Theodoret. lib. 5. cap. 23.

12. Beſides theſe aforeſaid, the biſhops of Rome had alſo an other artificiall practiſe, that in ſending out their letters abroad, as they did to many, in all their Epiſtles (if the Epiſtles be theirs, and not forged) euer they were harping of the greatnes of their name, and of their Apoſtolike ſea, and of the primacie of S. Peter, their predeceſſor and prince of all the Apoſtles, &c. And this they vſed in euerie letter, when ſo euer they wrote to any, as appeareth in all their letters decretall, namely, in the letters of Miltiades, Marcellus, and Marcus, &c.

13. Againe, if any of the Eaſt church directed any writing to them, wherein any ſignification was conteined of neuer ſo little reuerence giuen vnto them (as learned men commonly vſe for modeſties ſake) that was taken by & by and conſtrued for plaine ſubiection, and due obediẽce, as declareth the letter of Damaſus, written to the biſhops of the Eaſt Church, beginning thus: Quod debita reuerentia, &c. in Engliſh thus: but that your charitie yeldeth due reuerẽce to the Apoſtolicall ſea, you in ſo doing (deare children) do much for your ſelues, &c. Theodoret. Lib. 5. cap. 9. where as the Biſhops of the Eaſt Church notwithſtanding had ſhewed little or no reuerence in their Epiſtle to Pope Damaſus before.

Thus haue ye the firſt and originall groundes, by the meanes wherof, the Archbiſhops of the Romiſh Sea haue atchieued to this their great kingdome and celſitude ouer Chriſtes church, firſt beginning the myſterie of their iniquitie, by that which was modeſtly and voluntarily giuẽ them. Afterward by vſe and cuſtome claiming it ambitiouſly vnto them, of dutie & ſeruice, & laſtly holding faſt (as we ſee) that which once they had gotten into their poſſeſſiõ, ſo that now in no caſe they can abide the birdes to cal home their fethers againe, which they ſo long haue vſurped.

This latter Church of Rome differing from the firſt Church of Rome, in forme of gouernement.

And thus much concerning the life, iuriſdiction, & title of the Romain biſhops: In all which (as is declared) they and not we, haue fallen from the church of Rome. To theſe I might alſo ioyne the maner of gouernment, wherin the ſaid Romiſh Biſhops haue no leſſe altered both from the rule of Scripture, and from the ſteps of the true church of Rome, which gouernment as it hath bene, and ought to be only ſpirituall: ſo hath the biſhop of Rome vſed it of late yeres no otherwiſe, thẽ hath an earthly king or prince gouerned his realme & dominiõs, with riches, glory, power, terror, outward ſtrẽgth, force, priſõ, death, executiõ, lawes policies, promoting his friends to dignities, reuenging his affections, puniſhing and correcting faults againſt his perſon more then other offences againſt God committed, vſing and abuſing in all theſe things the word of God for his pretext & cloke to worke his worldly purpoſe withall:

whereas indede the word of God miniſtreth no ſuch power to ſpirituall perſons, but ſuch as is ſpirituall: according to the ſaying of the Apoſtle. Arma militiæ noſtræ non ſunt carnalia, ſed ſpiritualia.&c. The armour and artillery, sayth S. Paule, of our warfaire is not carnall, but ſpirituall: ſuch as ſerue not againſt fleſh and bloud, nor againſt the weake perſon of man: but againſt Sathan, agaynſt the gates of hell, and the profundities of the wicked power. &c.

Howe the Church of Chriſt ought to be gouerned.

which armour as it is al ſpiritual, ſo ought they, which haue the dealing therof, to be likewiſe ſpirituall, well furniſhed with all ſuch giftes and graces of the holye Ghoſt, meete for the gouernance of his ſpiritual Church: as with wiſedome and knowledge in the Scripture, to inſtructe the ignorant: with inward intelligence & forſight of the craftye cogitations and operations of Sathan, with power of the ſpirit to reſiſt the ſame: with practiſe and experience of tentations, to comfort ſuch as be afflicted and oppreſſed of Sathan: with heauenly diſcretion to diſcerne ſpirits, and truth from vntruth: with iudgment and knowledge of tounges and learning to conuict errour: wyth zeale of Gods glory, with feruencye of prayer, with patience in perſecution: with a minde contented with all caſes and ſtates incident, with teares and compaſſion on other mens greeues: with ſtoutnes and courage againſt proud and ſtout oppreſſours: with humilitie toward the poore and miſerable: with the counſaile of the Lorde Ieſus, by his word and ſpirite to direct him in all things to be done with ſtrength againſt ſinne: with hatred of this worlde; with gift of fayth: power of the keyes in ſpirituall cauſes, as to miniſter the word, the Sacraments and excommunication when the worde biddeth, that the ſpirite may be ſaued, and to reconcile againe, as caſe requireth. &c. Theſe and ſuch like are the matters wherin conſiſteth the ſinewes and ſtrength of the church, and the true gouernance of the ſame. But cõtrary to theſe aforeſaid both yͤ Biſhop & clergie of this latter Church of Rome, proceeding in their adminiſtration and gouernaunce, as who vnder the name and pretence of Chriſt and his word, haue exerciſed of long time nothing els but a worldly dominion, ſeeking indede their owne glory, not the glory of Chriſt: riches of the world, not the lucre of ſoules: not feeding the flocke, but fillyng the purſe: reuenging their owne wronges, but neglecting gods glory: ſtryuing againſt man onely, and killing him, but not killing the vice, nor confuting the errour of man: ſtrong againſt fleſh and bloude, but weake againſt the Deuill, ſtout againſt the ſimple, but meeke againſt the mightie: briefly, doing almoſt all thinges preposterouſly, more like to ſecular Princes, then ſpirituall Paſtours of Chriſtes flocke, with outward forcement, and feare of puniſhment, wyth pryſoning, famiſhyng, hanging, racking, drowning, headyng, ſlaying, murdering, and burning, and warring alſo: on the other ſide with his riches and treaſures, wyth his garde and gardiance, with ſtrength of men, with Court and Cardinals: with pomp and pride about them, with their triple crowne, with the naked ſworde: with theyr ordinary ſucceſſion: with their lawes, and executions: their promotions and prefermẽts: their biddings and commandings: threatninges and reuenginges. &c.

Prepoſterous gouernement of the Church by the pope.

A compariſõ betwene the kingdom of this world and the kingdome of the Pope.

In fine, to compare therfore the Images of a worldly kingdome, with this kingdome of the Pope, there is no difference, ſaue onely that this kingdome of the Pope, vnder hypocriſie maketh a face of the ſpirituall ſword, which is the worde of God: but in verye deede doth all things with the temporall ſworde, that is with outwarde forcement and coaction: differing nothing from ciuile and ſecular regiment in all properties and conditions, if it be well conſidered. For as in an earthly kingdome firſt there is a Prince or ſome chiefe Magiſtrate appointed, hauing dominion ouer his nobles and commons, conteining all his ſubiects vnder his ſtatutes and lawes, with the which lawes notwithſtanding he diſpenſeth at his pleaſure: vnder whom all other inferior Magiſtrates haue their order and place to them appointed to rule ouer the ſubiects, and yet to be ſubiect vnder him: So if the ſtate and forme of the Pope be well aduiſed, we ſhall ſee it altereth nothing from the ſame, but onely in the names of the perſons. In ciuile gouernment, al ſubiectiõ is referred to one head ruler, whoſe authoritie ſurmounteth all the reſt, and kepeth them vnder obedience: In like maner the gouernement of the Popiſh Church is committed to one man, who as chiefe ſteward, ouerſeer and ruler of Chriſtes houſhold in his abſence, hath ſupreame power ouer all Churches, to moderate and direct all the affaires thereof. But here ſtãdeth the difference, in ciuill policy he is called a Kyng or Prince: here he is called a Pope.

Seculer Nobilitie compared with eccleſiaſticall Nobilitie.

The King hath next vnto him his Dukes & Earles, The Popes nobilitie ſtandeth in his Cardinals, and Legats, who though they be no Dukes in name, yet in pompe and prid will not onely giue checke to them, but alſo mate to Kings themſelues, if they might be ſuffered, as did Theodorus, Lancfrancus, Ancelmus, Thomas Becket, and ſo would Thomas Woulſey haue done, had not the King giuen him a necke to his mate betime. In ciuile policie next to Dukes & Earles foloweth the order of Lords, Barons, Knights Eſquiers, Gentlemen, with Mayors, Sheriffes, Cõſtables, Bayliffes, wardens. &c. The like race is to be ſeene alſo, although vnder other names, in the Popes policie: of Primates, Biſhops, Suffraganes, Prouoſtes, Deanes Canons, Vicars, Archdeacons, Prieſts, Deacons, Subdeacõs, Acolites, Exorciſts, Lectors, Dorekepers, Singſters, with other Clerks. And as in the other vnder wardens cometh the order of Scauingers: ſo neither doth the Popes Monarchy lacke his kaynilrakers, to whome may well be compared the rablement of Abbots, Prouincials, Priors, Monkes, Friers, with their Couentes and Nonneries.

Ciuile Magiſtrates compared with Eccleſiaſticall.

Officers of the temperall court compared with the officers of the ſpirituall Court.

Moreouer from Iuſtices, Iudges, Laweyers, Sergeants, Attorneyes, which be neceſſary offices in the cõmon wealth, what differeth the Popes Inquiſitors, Canoniſtes, Doctours and Bachelers of the Popes lawe, Comiſſaries, Officials, Proctors, Promoters, with ſuch other, which ſerue no leſſe in ſpirituall Court, & in the conſiſtorie, then the other aforeſaid doe in temporall Court, or in the Yeldhall. Now who ſo liſt to compare the glory and magnificence of the one, with the glory of the other: alſo the power and ſtrength of the one regiment, with the power of the other: and ſo the ryches of the one, wyth the rythes of the other, I ſuppoſe he ſhall ſee no great ods betweene them both, taking the Popes kingdome as it hath ſtood in his full ruffe, & yet doth ſtande, where Churches are not reformed. As for ſubtiltie and politike practiſe, there is no man that doubteth, that is indifferent, nor that ſeeth not, that hath his eyes, but that the Popes hierarchie in holding vp their ſtate, far excelleth all yͤ kingdomes of worldly Princes, of whome all other may take example to learne.

Glory cõpared. Power cõpared. Riches compared.

Subteltie compared.

The difference betweene the Popes regiment and the order of the primitiue Church.

Thus in comparing the Popes regiment with ciuile gouernance as they doe little or nothing diſagre a ſunder: So in comparing againe the ſame with the order of ſcriptures, or with the regiment that was in the old auncient Church of Rome, we ſhall ſee no reſemblaunce betwene them. As we read in the Apoſtles time, all the armour of Chriſtes miniſters was ſpirituall and ful of godly power againſt the ſpirituall enimies of our ſaluation, gouerning the Church then with peace, patience, humilitie, true knowledge of God, the ſword of the ſpirite, the ſhielde of fayth, the breaſtplate of righteouſnes, harty charitie, ſincere faith, and good conſcience: ſo after the Apoſtles in the time of Ambroſe, by his owne teſtimonie is to be vnderſtand, that the armour of Churchmen was then, preces & lachrymæ, prayers and teares: where now the armour of the popes Prieſthode is nothing els but ignis & ferrum, i. fire and ſword, wherewith they keepe all things vnder their ſubiection. And here commeth the enorme and horrible abuſe of excommunication, ſuſpenſion, and interdiction in caſes friuolous, or worldly, and for ſuch, as for which the ciuile magiſtrate will not commit any Citizens to the ſtockes, the Popes cenſure will not ſticke to commit a Chriſtian to the deuill: not to ſpeak of their other vſurped dealings and doings in matters, that belong to yͤ ciuile ſword, & be to them impertinent. As in puniſhing whoredome and adultery, in adminiſtration and probates of teſtamentes, in bearing ciuile office, as popes to be Senators of Rome and Emperour alſo ſede vacante. Cardinals to be Capitaines in warre, and rulers of regions: Byſhoppes to be Preſidentes or Chauncelours, Prieſtes to be ſtewards in great mens houſes, or mayſters of mintes, or Clerkes of yͤ market, or gardiners to Gentlemen. &c. All which here I ouerpaſſe referring thẽ to yͤ deeper conſideratiõ of ſuch as haue more leiſure to mark yͤ order of their doings, & ſo to iudge of the ſame with indifferencie, according to yͤ rule of truth, touched with Gods worde, and publike examples of yͤ auncient Church of Chriſt in the primitiue tyme.

2. Cor. 10. Ephe. 6. 1. Tim. 1.

The armour proper to Churchmen.

Horrible abuſe of excommunication in the Popes Church.

The Popes gouerning in matters to them not pertayning.

The corrupt doctrine of the Popes Church examined and detected.

Thus hauing diſcourſed, ſufficiently ſo much as concerneth the maner of life, title, iuriſdiction, and gouernement of the Popes ſea (in all which pointes is to be ſene how this latter Church of Rome hath receded from the true auncient Church of Rome) now remaineth, according to my promiſe, and order prefixed, conſequentlye to proceede to the fourth and laſt point, which is of doctrine: wherein conſiſteth the chiefeſt matter that maketh with vs and againſt them, in ſuch ſort as (their doctrine ſtanding ding as it doth) neither they are to be reputed for true Catholikes being altered ſo far from them: nor we otherwiſe then heretikes if we ſhoulde now ioyne with theſe. For the more triall whereof, let vs examine the doctrine & rites of the ſayd Church of Rome now vſed, and compare the ſame with the teaching of the auncient Catholikes, to the intent that ſuch ſimple ſoules as haue beene hetherto, and yet ſeduced by the falſe viſour and image of this pretenced and baſtardly church, perceauing what lieth within it, may be warned by tyme, either to eſchue the perill, if they liſt to be inſtructed: or if not, to blame none but thẽſelues for their owne wilfull deſtruction. And albeit I coulde here charge the newfangled Church of the Pope with vij. or viij. heynous crimes, as blaſphemy, Idolatry, hereſie, ſuperſtition, abſurditie, vanitie, crueltie, and contrarietie (as which neither agreeth with the old learning of their forelders, nor yet with thẽſelues in ſundry points) yet after a more temperate ſort to paſſe this matter wyth them, theſe ij. things, I will & dare boldly affirme, that in this doctrine of the Pope nowe taught in the Church of Rome, is neither any conſolation of conſcience, nor ſaluation of mans ſoule. For ſeeing there is no life nor ſoule health but onely in Chriſt, nor any promiſe of ſaluation or comfort made, but only by faith in the ſonne of God, what aſſurance then can there be of perfect peace, life, or ſaluatiõ where that which onely maketh all, is leaſt made of, and other things which make leaſt are moſt eſteemed? For to ſay the ſimple truth, what els is the whole courſe and body of the popes law now ſet forth, but a doctrine of laws, a heape of ceremonies, a teaching of traditions, a meditation of merites, a foundation of new Religions: al which conferre not one iote to the iuſtification of our ſoules before the terrible iudgement of God.

Papiſtes neuer lightly afflicted in conſcience deepely.

An horrible thing to thinke of God without Chriſt. Luther.

And therefore (as it may be truely ſaide) this doctrine of the Pope to be voyd of all true comfort and ſaluation: ſo likewiſe it ſeemeth that theſe which addict themſelues ſo deuoutly to yͤ popes learning, were neuer earneſtly afflicted in conſcience, neuer humbled in ſpirite nor broken in hart, neuer entred into any ſerious feeling of Gods iudgement, nor euer felt the ſtrength of the law & of death. For if they had, they ſhoulde ſoone haue ſeene their owne weakenes and be driuen to Chriſt: then ſhould they haue ſeene what a horrible thing it is to appeare before GOD the father, or once to thinke on him (as Luther ſaith) without chriſt. And on the contrarye ſide, then ſhoulde they know what a glory, what a kingdome, what liberty and life it were to be in Chriſt Ieſus by faith, holding their inheritance, not with the bondſonne of Agar, but with the free ſonne of Sara: by promiſe and not by yͤ law: by grace, and not by works: by gift and not by deſeruing, that god onely might be prayſed and not man.

The right fayth of the olde Romanes.

Cornelius a Romane firſt baptiſed of all the Gentiles.

The church of Rome hath loſt the liquor where with it was firſt ſeaſoned.

The Galathians almoſt gone frõ fayth in Sainct Paules time.

And thus were the olde Romaines firſt taught by S. Paule writing to the Romanes. The ſame did Cornelius the Romaine, and firſt that was Baptiſed of all the Gentiles, learne of S. Peter when he receaued the holy Ghoſt, not by the deedes of the law, but onely by hearing the faith of Ieſus preached. And in the ſame doctrine the ſayd Church of the Romaines many yeares continued, ſo long as they were in affliction. And in the ſame doctrine, the byſhop of Rome with his Romanes now alſo ſhould ſtill remayne, if they were ſuch auncient Catholickes as they pretende, and woulde follow the old mother Church of Rome, and holde the firſt liquor wherewith they were firſt ſeaſoned. But the ſweete verdor and ſent of that liquor and pleaſant muſt is nowe cleane put out through other vnſauery infuſions of the Popes thruſting in, ſo that almoſt no taſt nor peece remaineth of all that primitiue doctrine which S. Paule and other Apoſtles firſt planted among the Gentiles. And what maruell if the Romanes now in ſo long tract of time haue loſt their firſt ſap, ſeyng the Church of the Galathians then in the very time of S. Paule their Schoolemaiſter, he being amongſt them, had not ſo ſoone turned his backe a little, but they were all turned almoſt from the doctrine of fayth, and had much a doo to be recouered againe.

1. Tim. 4.

Of this defection and falling from faith. S. Paule expreſſely foretelleth vs in his letters both to the Theſſalonians, and alſo to Timothe, where he ſheweth: that a defection ſhall come, and that certaine ſhall depart from the faith, attending to ſpirits of errour. &c. 1. Tim. 4. And to know what errours theſe ſhall be, the circumſtance plainly leadeth vs to vnderſtande in the ſame place, where the ſayd Apoſtle, ſpeaketh of marked conſciences, forbidding men to marry, and to eate meates ordeined of God to be taken with thankes giuing, for mans ſuſtenance, moſt euidently as with his finger, pointeth out vnto vs yͤ church of Rome, which not in theſe pointes onely but alſo in all other conditions, almoſt is vtterly reuolted from the pure originall ſinceritie of that doctrine which Saint Paule planted in the Churche of the Romanes, and of all other Gentiles.

¶ The Summe of S. Paules doctrine deliuered to the Gentiles.

A briefe ſũme of S. Paules doctrine deliuered to the Gentiles.

1. Firſt, the doctrine of S. Paule aſcribeth all our iuſtification freely & meerly to faith onely in Chriſt as to the onely meanes and cauſe immediate, whereby yͤ merites of Chriſtes paſſion be applyed vnto vs, without any other reſpect of worke or workes of the law, whatſoeuer? and in this doctrine the Church of the Romanes was firſt planted.

Saluation by mercy onely and not by merites.

2. Secondly, the ſame doctrine of S. Paule cutting of and excluding all glory of mans deſeruing, ſtayeth onely vpon Gods promiſe and vpon grace, not mans merites, vpon mercy, not mans labouring or running: vpon election and calling, not mans willing. &c.

All fleſhe concluded vnder ſinne,

3. Thirdly, the ſame doctrine caſting downe the ſtrength of man and his integra naturalia (as the ſcholes doe terme them) concludeth all fleſhe vnder ſinne, and maketh the ſame deſtitute of the glory of God.

Difference betweene the law and the goſpell,

4. Item, it maketh manifeſt difference betweene the law and the Goſpell, declaring the vſe and ende of them to be diuers: the one to kill, the other to quicken, the one to cõdemne, the other to iuſtifie: the one to haue an ende and a tyme, the other to be perpetuall. &c.

Iuſticia dei. Iuſticia propria.

5. Item, the ſame doctrine of S. Paule, as it ſheweth a difference betweene the law and the Goſpell: ſo it maketh no leſſe difference betweene Iuſticia Dei, and Iuſticia propria, that is, the righteouſnes of God and the righteouſnes of man, abhorryng the one, that is, mans owne righteouſnes, comming by the law and works: and embracing the other which God imputeth freely and graciouſly to vs for Chriſt his ſonnes ſake, in whom we beleeue.

The righteouſneſſe of God, and the righteouſnes of man howe they differ in Scripture.

6. Item, it wipeth away al traditions, and conſtitutions of men whatſoeuer, eſpecially from binding of conſcience, calling them beggerly elements of this world.

A true chriſtian knoweth nothing but Chriſt crucified.

7. Likewiſe it reiecteth and wipeth away al curious ſubtilities, and ſuperfluous ſpeculations, & knoweth nothing els but Chriſt onely Crucified, which is onely the obiect whereunto our faith looketh.

All men condemned by one: All men ſaued by one. Originall ſinne, originall iuſtice.

8. Furthermore, as the ſame doctrine of S. Paule defineth al men to be tranſgreſſours by diſobedience of one Adam, though they neuer touched the Aple, comming of his ſtocke by nature: ſo doth it proue all men to be iuſtified by the obedience of one, though they did not his obedience, being likewiſe borne of him by ſpirituall regeneration and faith.

9. And therfore as all men comming of Adam be condemned originally, before they grow vp to commit anye ſinne agaynſt the law, ſo all men be ſaued originally being regenerated by fayth in Chriſt, before they begin to do any good worke of charitie, or any other good deede.

ding as it doth) neither they are to be reputed for true Catholikes being altered ſo far from them: nor we otherwiſe then heretikes if we ſhoulde now ioyne with theſe. For the more triall whereof, let vs examine the doctrine & rites of the ſayd Church of Rome now vſed, and compare the ſame with the teaching of the auncient Catholikes, to the intent that ſuch ſimple ſoules as haue beene hetherto, and yet ſeduced by the falſe viſour and image of this pretenced and baſtardly church, perceauing what lieth within it, may be warned by tyme, either to eſchue the perill, if they liſt to be inſtructed: or if not, to blame none but thẽſelues for their owne wilfull deſtruction. And albeit I could here charge the newfangled Church of the Pope with vij. or viij. heynous crimes, as blaſphemy, Idolatry, hereſie, ſuperſtition, abſurditie, vanitie, crueltie, and contrarietie (as which neither agreeth with the old learning of their forelders, nor yet with thẽſelues in ſundry points) yet after a more temperate ſort to paſſe this matter wyth them, theſe ij. things, I will & dare boldly affirme, that in this doctrine of the Pope nowe taught in the Church of Rome, is neither any conſolation of conſcience, nor ſaluation of mans ſoule. For ſeeing there is no life nor ſoule health but onely in Chriſt, nor any promiſe of ſaluation or comfort made, but only by faith in the ſonne of God, what aſſurance then can there be of perfect peace, life, or ſaluatiõ where that which onely maketh all, is leaſt made of, and other things which make leaſt are moſt eſteemed? For to ſay the ſimple truth, what els is the whole courſe and body of the popes law now ſet forth, but a doctrine of laws, a heape of ceremonies, a teaching of traditions, a meditation of merites, a foundation of new Religions: al which conferre not one iote to the iuſtification of our ſoules before the terrible iudgement of God.

The falſe image of the Popes Church.

No comfort nor ſaluation in the Popes doctrine now taught.

The ſcope and ſumme of the Popes doctrine whether it tendeth.

And therefore (as it may be truely ſaide) this doctrine of the Pope to be voyd of all true comfort and ſaluation: ſo likewiſe it ſeemeth that theſe which addict themſelues ſo deuoutly to ẏ popes learning, were neuer earneſtly afflicted in conſcience, neuer humbled in ſpirite nor broken in hart, neuer entred into any ſerious feeling of Gods iudgement, nor euer felt the ſtrength of the law & of death. For if they had, they ſhoulde ſoone haue ſeene their owne weakenes and be driuen to Chriſt: then ſhould they haue ſeene what a horrible thing it is to appeare before GOD the father, or once to thinke on him (as Luther ſaith) without chriſt. And on the contrarye ſide, then ſhoulde they know what a glory, what a kingdome, what liberty and life it were to be in Chriſt Ieſus by faith, holding their inheritance, not with the bondſonne of Agar, but with the free ſonne of Sara: by promiſe and not by ẏ law: by grace, and not by works: by gift and not by deſeruing, that god onely might be prayſed and not man.

Papiſtes neuer lightly afflicted in conſcience deepely.

An horrible thing to thinke of God without Chriſt. Luther.

And thus were the olde Romaines firſt taught by S. Paule writing to the Romanes. The ſame did Cornelius the Romaine, and firſt that was Baptiſed of all the Gentiles, learne of S. Peter when he receaued the holy Ghoſt, not by the deedes of the law, but onely by hearing the faith of Ieſus preached. And in the ſame doctrine the ſayd Church of the Romaines many yeares continued, ſo long as they were in affliction. And in the ſame doctrine, the byſhop of Rome with his Romanes now alſo ſhould ſtill remayne, if they were ſuch auncient Catholickes as they pretende, and woulde follow the old mother Church of Rome, and holde the firſt liquor wherewith they were firſt ſeaſoned. But the ſweete verdor and ſent of that liquor and pleaſant muſt is nowe cleane put out through other vnſauery infuſions of the Popes thruſting in, ſo that almoſt no taſt nor peece remaineth of all that primitiue doctrine which S. Paule and other Apoſtles firſt planted among the Gentiles. And what maruell if the Romanes now in ſo long tract of time haue loſt their firſt ſap, ſeyng the Church of the Galathians then in the very time of S. Paule their Schoolemaiſter, he being amongſt them, had not ſo ſoone turned his backe a little, but they were all turned almoſt from the doctrine of fayth, and had much a doo to be recouered againe.

The right fayth of the olde Romanes.

Cornelius a Romane firſt baptiſed of all the Gentiles.

The church of Rome hath loſt the liquor where with it was firſt ſeaſoned.

The Galathians almoſt gone frõ fayth in Sainct Paules time.

Of this defection and falling from faith. S. Paule expreſſely foretelleth vs in his letters both to the Theſſalonians, and alſo to Timothe, where he ſheweth: that a defection ſhall come, and that certaine ſhall depart from the faith, attending to ſpirits of errour. &c. 1. Tim. 4. And to know what errours theſe ſhall be, the circumſtance plainly leadeth vs to vnderſtande in the ſame place, where the ſayd Apoſtle, ſpeaketh of marked conſciences, forbidding men to marry, and to eate meates ordeined of God to be taken with thankes giuing, for mans ſuſtenance, moſt euidently as with his finger, pointeth out vnto vs ẏ church of Rome, which not in theſe pointes onely but alſo in all other conditions, almoſt is vtterly reuolted from the pure originall ſincerity of that doctrine which Saint Paule planted in the Churche of the Romanes, and of all other Gentiles.

1. Tim. 4.

¶ The Summe of S. Paules doctrine
deliuered to the Gentiles.

1. FIrſt, the doctrine of S. Paule aſcribeth all our iuſtification freely & meerly to faith onely in Chriſt as to the onely meanes and cauſe immediate, whereby ẏ merites of Chriſtes paſſion be applyed vnto vs, without any other reſpect of worke or workes of the law, whatſoeuer: and in this doctrine the Church of the Romanes was firſt planted.

A briefe ſũme of S. Paules doctrine deliuered to the Gentiles.

2. Secondly, the ſame doctrine of S. Paule cutting of and excluding all glory of mans deſeruing, ſtayeth onely vpon Gods promiſe and vpon grace, not mans merites, vpon mercy, not mans labouring or running: vpon election and calling, not mans willing. &c.

Saluation by mercy onely and not by merites.

3. Thirdly, the ſame doctrine caſting downe the ſtrength of man and his integra naturalia (as the ſcholes doe terme them) concludeth all fleſhe vnder ſinne, and maketh the ſame deſtitute of the glory of God.

All fleſhe concluded vnder ſinne.

4. Item, it maketh manifeſt difference betweene the law and the Goſpell, declaring the vſe and ende of them to be diuers: the one to kill, the other to quicken, the one to cõdemne, the other to iuſtifie: the one to haue an ende and a tyme, the other to be perpetuall. &c.

Difference betweene the law and the goſpell.

5. Item, the ſame doctrine of S. Paule, as it ſheweth a difference betweene the law and the Goſpell: ſo it maketh no leſſe difference betweene Iuſticia Dei, and Iuſticia propria, that is, the righteouſnes of God and the righteouſnes of man, abhorryng the one, that is, mans owne righteouſnes, comming by the law and workes: and embracing the other which God imputeth freely and graciouſly to vs for Chriſt his ſonnes ſake, in whom we beleeue.

Iuſticia dei. Iuſticia propria.

The righteouſneſſe of God, and the righteouſnes of man howe they differ in Scripture.

6. Item, it wipeth away al traditions, and conſtitutions of men whatſoeuer, eſpecially from binding of conſcience, calling them beggerly elements of this world.

7. Likewiſe it reiecteth and wipeth away al curious ſubtilities, and ſuperfluous ſpeculations, & knoweth nothing els but Chriſt onely Crucified, which is onely the obiect whereunto our faith looketh.

A true chriſtian knoweth nothing but Chriſt crucified.

8. Furthermore, as the ſame doctrine of S. Paule defineth al men to be tranſgreſſours by diſobedience of one Adam, though they neuer touched the Aple, comming of his ſtocke by nature: ſo doth it proue all men to be iuſtified by the obedience of one, though they did not his obedience, being likewiſe borne of him by ſpirituall regeneration and faith.

All men condemned by one: All men ſaued by one. Originall ſinne, originall iuſtice.

9. And therfore as all men comming of Adam be condemned originally, before they grow vp to commit anye ſinne agaynſt the law, ſo all men be ſaued originally being regenerated by fayth in Chriſt, before they begin to do any good worke of charitie, or any other good deede.

10. Item, the doctrine of S. Paule perpending the high glory of a Chriſten mans ſtate in Chriſt Ieſus by faith, firſt ſetteth him in a perfect peace with almightie God. Rom. 5. Secondly exempteth him from all condemnatiõ. Rom. 8. Thirdly it matcheth him with aungels, it equalleth him with Saints and felow citizens of heauen, it nũbereth him with the houſholde of God, and inheriteth him with Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe. Epheſ. 2. Fourthly it adopteth him from the ſtate of a ſeruaunt, to the ſtate of the ſonne of God, crying Abba father. Gal. 4. Fifthly, it openeth to him a bolde acceſſe and entraunce to the high maieſtie and throne of grace, Epheſ. 2. Heb. 4. Sixtlye, it ſubiecteth all thinges vnder him: as miniſters, yea, the Apoſtles themſelues in their hieſt office, death, life, thinges preſent, thinges to come, with the whole worlde beſides, and aſſigneth him no ſpirituall head, but onely Chriſt, ſaying. And you are Chriſtes, and Chriſt is Gods. 1. Cor. 3. Seuenthly, it aduaunceth and ſetteth him in a ſpirituall liberty or freedome, aboue all terrours of ſpirite, riſing either of Gods lawe or mans lawe, aboue all dreadfull feares of ſinne, damnation, malediction, reiection, death, hell, or purgatory: aboue al ſeruile bondage of ceremonies, mens precepts, traditions, ſuperſtitious vſes, yokes, cuſtomes, or what els ſoeuer oppreſſeth and intangleth the ſpirituall freedome of a conſcience with Chriſt hath ſet at libertie: And requireth moreouer that wee walke and ſtande ſtout in that liberty with the free ſonne of Sara, whereto we are brought, and not ſuffer our ſelues any more to bee clogged with any ſuch ſeruile bondage: that is to meane, although we muſt be content to ſubiect our bodies to all ſeruice & to all men, yet that we yeld not our ſpirituall conſciences

11. Item, the right vayne of S. Paules doctrine putteth no difference nor obſeruation in dayes and tymes. Gal. 4. Col. 2.

14. Item, it admitteth no ſacrifice for ſinne but the ſacrifice of Chriſt alone, and that done once for all with bloude. For without bloud there is no remiſſion of ſinne whiche onely is applied to vs by fayth, & by nothing els. Heb. 9.

The vſe of the holye communion in auncient tyme of the primitiue church.

15. Item, as touching the holy Communion, by the letters of S. Paule to the Cor. 11. we vnderſtande, that the vſe then amongſt them was, to haue the participation of the bread called the Lordes body, and of the cup called the Lordes bloud, adminiſtred not at an altar, but at a plaine bord or table, the congregation there meeting together after the time of their ſupper, where not the miniſter alone did receaue and the other looked on, but the whole congregation togither did cōmunicate with reuerence & thankes giuyng, not lifting ouer the Prieſtes head, nor worſhipyng, nor kneeling, nor knocking their breſtes, but eyther ſittyng at the ſupper, or ſtanding after the ſupper. Accordyng to which forme the Muſcouites yet to this day followyng the old rite of the Country (although being drowned otherwiſe in much ſuperſtition) vſe to receaue it after they be riſen from their diner ſtanding. Experience whereof was ſeene here at London the firſt day of October. 1569.

No mo Sacramentes mentioned in S. Paule, but the Lordes ſupper and baptiſme.

16. Item, the ſayde Apoſtle, beſides the ſacramentall ſupper maketh mention of Baptiſme, or waſhing of regeneration, although he himſelfe Baptiſed but few. 1. Cor. 1. of the other ſacraments he maketh no mention.

17. Item, by the ſame doctrine of S. Paule no tongue is to be vſed in the congregation which is not knowen and doth not edifie. 1. Cor. 14.

The authoritie and office of the ciuill Magiſtrates.

18. Item, the rule of S. Paules doctrine ſubiecteth euery creature vnder the obedience of Kinges and Princes and ordinary Magiſtrates ordeined of God to haue the ſword and authoritie of publike regiment to order and diſpoſe in all thinges not contrary to God, whatſoeuer perteineth to the maintenance of the good, or to the correction of the euil: from whoſe iuriſdiction there is no exemption of vocations of perſons, whether they be Eccleſiaſticall or politicall. And therfore to this office appertaineth to preſerue peace, to ſet things in lawfull order, to conſerue Chriſtian diſcipline in the Church of Chriſt, to remoue offences, to bridle the diſobedient, to prouide and procure wholeſome and faithfull teachers ouer the people, to maintaine learning and ſet vp ſchooles, to haue ouerſight not onely of the people, but alſo of all Eccleſiaſtical miniſters to ſee to euery one to do his dutye, & to remoue or puniſh ſuch as be negligent: alſo to call Councels and Synodes, & to prouide the Church goodes to be faithfullye diſpenſed by the handes of true dealers, to the ſuſtentation of the Church, of true teachers, & to the publike neceſſitie of the pore, &c.

The office and aucthoritie of Byſhops how farre it doth extend.

19. Furthermore, by S. Paules doctrine, the Miniſters and ſuperintendentes of Chriſtes Church haue their authoritie and armour likewiſe to them limited, which armour is onely ſpiritual, and not carnal, wherby they fight not againſt fleſh & bloud, but againſt the power of darkenes, errour, and ſinne againſt the ſpirituall ſeduction and craftines in heauenly things, againſt the works and proceedings of Sathan the Prince of this worlde, in comforting weak conſciences againſt the terrors of the deuil, and deſperation, and finally againſt euery cogitation lifted vp againſt Chriſt, to ſubdue euery celſitude to the ſubiection and power of Chriſt Ieſu the ſonne of God.

An other briefe recapitulation of the ſame

An other briefe recapitulation of S. Paules doctrine reduced to fiue poynts. Iohn. 3.

Briefly and in a compendious ſumme to reduce the whole doctrine of S. Paule, in theſe fiue pointes chieflie it conſiſteth.

2. The ſeconde point conſiſteth in preaching and expreſſing the glorious and triumphant Maieſtie of Chriſt Ieſus the ſonne of God, and the excellency of his glory, who being once dead in the infirmitie of fleſh roſe againe wyth power, aſcending vp with maieſtie, hath led away captiuitie captiue, Eph. 4. ſitteth and reigneth in glory on the right hand of God in heauenly thinges, aboue all principates and poteſtates, powers and dominations, & aboue euery name that is named, not only in this world, but alſo in the world to come, Ephe. 1. The fourth braunch.

4. The fourth branch is, to teach and informe vs (to whō theſe benefites of Chriſtes Paſſion and victory do apperteine) by what meanes the ſame is applied & redoundeth vnto vs: which meanes is onely one, that is onely faith, in Chriſt Ieſu, and no other thing. which faith it pleaſeth almightie God, to accept for righteouſnes. And this righteouſnes it is, which onely ſtandeth before God and none other, as we are plainly taught by the Scriptures, and eſpecially by the doctrine of S. Paule. which righteouſnes thus riſing of faith in Chriſt. S. Paule calleth the righteouſnes of God, where he ſpeaketh of himſelfe, vtterly refuſeth the other rigteouſnes which is of the lawe, that he might be found in him, not hauing his own righteouſnes which is of the law, but the righteouſnes of Chriſt, which is of faith. Phil. 3. Againe, the ſaide Apoſtle writing of the Iewes, which ſought for righteouſnes and found it not: and alſo of the Gentiles which ſought not for it, and yet found it, ſheweth the reaſon why: becauſe (ſaith he) the one ſought it as by workes and the lawe, and came not to

Ro. 9. Alſo in an other place, Saint Paule in the ſame Epiſtle writing of this righteouſnes which commeth of faith, calleth it the righteouſnes of God, in theſe wordes. Whome God (ſaith he) hath ſet vp for a propitiatiõ by faith in his bloud, whereby to make manifeſt the righteouſnes, which is of himſelfe in tollerating our ſinnes. &c. Rom. 3. By the which righteouſnes it is euident that S. Paule meaneth the righteouſnes of faith, which almightie God nowe reuealeth & maketh manifeſt by preaching of the Goſpell. Wilt thou ſee yet more plainely this righteouſnes of God howe it is taken in S. Paule, for the righteouſnes of faith, & therefore is called the righteouſnes of God, becauſe it is imputed onely of God to fayth, and not deſerued of man? In the ſame Epiſtle to the Romanes and in the 3. chap. aforeſayd, his wordes be manifeſt: The righteouſnes of God (ſayth he) is by faith of Ieſus Chriſt, in all, and vpon al that doe beleue. &c.

Wherfore whoſoeuer ſtudieth to be accepted with God and to be found righteous in his ſight, let him learne diligently by the doctrine of S. Paule to make a difference & a ſeparation, as farre as from heauen and earth, betwene theſe two, that is betweene the righteouſnes of workes, & righteouſnes of faith: & in any wiſe beware he bring no other meanes for his iuſtification, or remiſſion of his ſins, but onely faith apprehending the body or perſon of Chriſt Ieſus crucified. For as there is no way into the houſe but by the dore, ſo is there no comming to God but by Chriſt alone, which is by faith. And as the mortall body, without bodely ſuſtenance of bread & drinke can not but periſhe ſo the ſpiritual ſoule of man hath no other refreſhing but only by faith in the body and bloude of Chriſt, whereby to be ſaued. With this faith the Idolatrous Gentiles apprehẽded Ieſus Chriſt, and receaued therby righteouſnes. Thus then thou ſeeſt as the paſſion of Chriſt is onely the efficient or perſonall cauſe immediate of our ſaluation: ſo is faith onely the inſtrumentall or meane cauſe that maketh the merits of Chriſt to vs auaileable. For as the Paſſion of Chriſt ſerueth to none but ſuch as do beleue: ſo neither doth faith (as it is onely a bare qualitie or action in mans minde) it ſelf iuſtifie, vnles it be directed to the body of Chriſt crucified, as to his obiect, of whom it receueth all his vertue. And therfore theſe ij. muſt alwayes ioyntly concurre together, faith, and Chriſt Ieſus crucified. As for example, when the children of Iſrael were byd of Moſes to looke vp to the braſen Serpent, neither could yͤ Serpent haue helped them, except they had looked vp, nor yet their looking vpward haue profited them, vnles they had directed their eyes vpon the ſaid Serpent, as the only obiect ſet vp to the ſame purpoſe for them to behold. So our faith in like caſe directed to the bodye of Ieſus our Sauiour is onely the meanes wherby Chriſtes merits are applied vnto vs, and we now iuſtified before God, according to the doctrine of S. Paule, who in expreſſe wordes, defining to vs what this faith is, and how it iuſtifieth, ſayth: If thou ſhalt confeſſe with thy mouth the Lord Ieſus, and beleeue with thy hart, that God raiſed him from death, thou ſhalt be ſaued. &c, Rom, 10. Beſides this, what action or qualitie ſoeuer is in man, either, hope, charitie, or any other kinde of faith and beleeuing, be it neuer ſo true except it apprehend this obiect (which is) the body of Chriſt, the ſonne of God it ſerueth not to iuſtification. And that is the cauſe why we adde this particle Onely, to faith, and ſay that faith, Onely, in Chriſt iuſtifieth vs, to exclude all other actions, qualyties, giftes, or works of man, from yͤ cauſe of iuſtifying for ſo much as there is no other knowledge nor gift giuen of God to man, be it neuer ſo excellent, that can ſtand before the iudgement of God to iuſtification, or whereunto any promiſe of ſaluation is annexed: but onely this faith lookyng vp to the braſen Serpent, that is to the body of Chriſt Ieſus for vs crucified.

Diuers ſorts of beleuing.
The Turkes fayth.
The Iewes fayth.
Euery truth may be beleued but the beleuing of euery trueth ſaueth not.
The Papiſts fayth.
Onely.
Hope and charitie be no partes of our iuſtification, nor cauſes to make the merites of Chriſt ours.
The cauſes of our ſaluation diſtincted.

As for example, when the Turke ſayth, that he beleeueth in one lyuyng God that made heauen & earth, his beliefe therin is true, yet it iuſtifieth him not, becauſe it lacketh the right obiect, which is Chriſt. So when the Iewe ſaith that he beleeueth in one God maker of heauen and earth, and beleeueth alſo the ſame God to be omnipotent, merciful, iuſt, and true of promiſe, and that he hath elected the ſeede of Abraham: true it is that he beleeueth, and yet all this ſerueth him not, becauſe Chriſt yͤ ſonne of God is not ioyned wͭ all. And though yͤ ſaid Iew ſhould be neuer ſo deuout in his prayers, or charitable in almoſe, or preciſe in keeping yͤ law, & beleeued neuer ſo ſtedfaſtly yͭ he is elect to be ſaued: yet he is neuer the neerer to ſaluation for all this, ſo long as his faith is not grounded vpon yͤ head cornerſtone, which is the perſon and body of Chriſt Ieſus the true Sauiour. After like ſort, it may be ſayd of the Papiſt, when he ſaith that he is Baptiſed, and beleeueth in the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God, and alſo confeſſeth Ieſus Chriſt to be the ſonne of God, which died for our ſinnes, and roſe againe for our righteouſnes. &c. his beleiſe therin is true, & indede would ſaue him, if he did ſtay his ſaluation in this faith, and vpon Chriſt his Sauiour, Onely. according to the promiſe and grace of God, and go no farther. But that he doth not: for neither doth he admit Chriſt onely to be his perfect Sauiour without the helpe of the patrons, heades, aduocates, and mediatours, nor yet permitteth his faith in Chriſt, Onely to be the meanes of his iuſtification, but ſetteth vp other by meanes, as hope, charitie, ſacrifice of the Maſſe, confeſſion, penaunce, ſatiſfaction, merites, and pardons, ſuppoſing thereby to worke his iuſtification before God, contrary to the word of promiſe, to the Goſpell of grace, & to the doctrine of S. Paule whereof we ſhall ſee more (the Lord willing) hereafter.

The cauſes of our ſaluation, diſtincted.
Grace and mercy.
Election.
Vocation.
Chriſtes paſſion.
Chriſtian fayth.
The meaning and cauſe why fayth onely iuſtifieth.

And thus much of the true cauſes of our iuſtification after the doctrine of S. Paule. Concerning which cauſes this diſtinctiõ furthermore by the way is to be added, that as touching the originall cauſes of our ſaluation, which be diuers and ſondry, ſome are externall, & without vs: ſome are internall, and within vs. Of the external cauſes which are without vs, the firſt and principal is the mercy & grace of god. Of this foloweth predeſtination and election. Thẽ cõmeth vocation. The laſt and next cauſe to vs is the deth and bloudſhed of chriſt wherby we are redemed, & al theſe be external cauſes, becauſe they are without vs. Of internall cauſes that be in man through the gift of God, there is but one, & no mo in ſcripture apointed, that is, our faith in Chriſt, which is the gift of God in vs. Beſide this there is no gift of God giuen to man, vertue, work, merite, nor any thing els, that is any part or cauſe of ſaluation, but only this gyft of fayth, to beleeue in Chriſt Ieſu. And this is the cauſe why we hold that faith onely iuſtifieth; meanyng, that amongſt all the workes, deedes, actions, labours, and operations, whatſoeuer man doth, or can doe, there is nothing in that man that worketh ſaluation but onely his fayth gyuen to hym of God to beleeue in Chriſt his ſonne, following therein the trade of S. Paules teaching: who in preciſe wordes ſo aſcribeth iuſtification to fayth, that he excludeth all other actions of man, & works of the law: And therfore in the ſame Epyſtle to the Romanes, manes, S. Paule reſonyng of the glory of iuſtifiyng, aſketh this queſtion how this glory is excluded: whether by the law of works? and concludeth no: aſcribing onely ẏ glory thereof to the law of faith, And conſequently vppon the ſame he inferreth: Colligimus enim iuſtificari hominem per fidem ſine operibus legis. We hold that a man is iuſtified by faith. without the deedes of the law.

All workes of man excluded from the glory of iuſtifiyng.

Epheſ. 2.
Tit. 3.
2. Timot. 1
Gal. 2.
Rom. 4.

And how then can that be accounted for any part of our iuſtification, which S. Paule vtterly debarreth and excludeth in that behalfe? of which like excluſiues and negatiues the whole courſe of S. Paules doctrine is full, where he ſtill concludeth: Sine operibus, abſque operibus legis, non ex operibus, Dei donum eſt, non ex operibus ne quis ſed ſecundū miſericordiā glorietur, Ephe 2. Non ex operibus iuſtitiæ quæ fecimus nos ſed ſecundū propoſitū ſuum & gratiam &c. Titi 3. Non ſecundum opera noſtra. &c. Timot 1. That is to ſay, It is the gift of God, not of works, that no mā ſhould glory. &c. Not of the workes of righteouſnes, which we haue done, but of his own mercy. &c. Not after our workes, but after his owne purpoſe, & grace which is giuen to vs, &c, Agayne Gal 2. Non iuſtificatur homo ex operibus. &c. That is, A man is not iuſtified by works &c. Item, Ei qui non operatur credenti autē in eū qui iuſtificat impium fides imputatur ad iuſtitiam &c. Rom. 4. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him which iuſtifieth the wicked, his faith is imputed to righteouſnes. &c. By theſe excluſiues, and negatiues in Sainct Paules doctrine what doth he els meane, but vtterly to ſeclude all kinde of mans merits, and works of the law from the office & dignitie of iuſtifying? And although he expreſſeth not ẏ word, Onely, yet vpon his excluſiues and negatiues, this exceptiue muſt needes be inferred. For in all Logike the conſequent is neceſſary and formall, as one man is ſuffered, to come into the houſe: and no perſon els is ſuffered but one Ergo, one man only is ſuffered to enter into the houſe. And thus much concerning faith in Chriſt, proued to be the onely meane, or inſtrumentall, or conditionall cauſe of our ſaluation, and no other beſides the ſame alone, by the doctrine of S. Paule taught to the ancient Romanes.

The excluſiues, and negatiues of S. Paule to be marked.

The fift braunch.

The true vſe and end of good workes.

5. The fift branch, which I note in S. Paules doctrine, is this: that after he hath thus eſtabliſhed vs in certeinty of our ſaluation through faith in Chriſt, then after that, he exhorteth vs vehemently and with all inſtaunce of good workes, ſhewing the true vſe and ende of good workes: which is, firſt to ſhewe our obedience and dutifull ſeruice (as we may) vnto God, who hath done ſo great thinges for vs. Secondly to relieue our neighbours with our charitie and kindnes, as God hath bene kinde to vs his enimies. Thirdly, to ſtirre vp other by our example, to praiſe God, to embrace the ſame Religion, & to do the like. For requiſite it is, that as God hath bene ſo merciful to vs and gratious in eternal giftes, we ſhould be merciful likewiſe to other in temporall cōmodities. And ſeeing it hath pleaſed him of his fatherly goodnes (of our partes ſo litle deſerued) to call vs to ſo high a vocation, to giue the bloud of his ſonne for vs, to forgiue vs al our ſinnes, to deliuer vs from this preſent wicked worlde, to make vs Citizens of heauen, yea his children, more then ſeruaunts: little then can we doe, and well may we thinke thoſe benefites ill beſtowed, if we forgiue not our neigbours, and ſhewe ſome thing againe worthy that holy calling wherewith he hath called vs, in mortifying our worldly luſtes here, & ſtudying after heauenly things: and finally if we being prouoked with ſuch loue & kindnes, reder not againe ſome loue for loue, ſome kindnes for kindnes, ſeeking how to walke in the ſteps which he hath prepared for vs to walke in, ſeruing him (ſo much as we may) in holines & righteouſnes all the daies of our life. And though our obedience ſhall alwaies be imperfect, doe the beſt we can: yet reaſon would that ſome obedience we ſhould ſhew as louing children to ſuch a louing father.

Good workes iuſtifie not, but follow the iuſtified.

And this is the cauſe why S. Paule is ſo vehement & vrgent to call vpon good workes, not that workes ſhould iuſtifie, but that we being iuſtified ſo mercifully & tenderly through his grace, ſhould not abuſe his grace in vayne, but endeuour our ſelues to our vttermoſt to render our ſeruice againe to him, in ſuch conuerſation of life as may moſt make to his glorye, and profite of our neighbour. And though the words of our ſauiour ſeme in ſome places to attribute to our obedience and charitie here in earth, great rewards in heauen, that is of his owne free grace & goodnes ſo to impute ſmall matters for great deſerts, and not for vs to claime any meede thereby or thanke at hys hande, as by any worthines of our doings, no more then the ſeruaunt when he commeth from the plough and ſeruing the cattell in the field, ſerueth firſt his maſter at home and waiteth vpon his table: the maſter is not bound (ſaith Chriſt) to thanke his ſeruaunt therefore, and bid him ſit downe: So you (ſaith he) when you haue done that is cōmanded you, ſay ye are vnprofitable ſeruants: ye haue done but what your bound duety was to doe. Luc. 17.

Luke. 17.

Againe, here alſo is to be vnderſtand, that where ſuch rewardes be aſcribed vnto mens deedes, it is not for the worthines of the deede it ſelfe, but for the faith of the doer, which faith maketh the worke to bee good in Gods ſight: for els if an infidell ſhould do the ſame worke that the chriſtian doth, it were nothing but meere ſinne before god. In that therefore the chriſtian mans worke is accepted be it neuer ſo ſmall (as to giue a cup of cold water) the ſame is onely for his fayth ſake that doth it, and not for the worke which is done. Whereby againe we may learne how faith onely doth iuſtifie a man, and that three maner of wayes.

Fayth iuſtifieth three manner of wayes.

Firſt it iuſtifieth the perſon in making him accepted, and the child of God by regeneration, before he begin to doe any good worke.

Secondly, it iuſtifieth a man from ſinne, in procuring remiſſion and forgiuenes of the ſame.

Thirdly, it iuſtifieth the good deedes and workes of man, not onely in bringing forth good fruites, but alſo in making the ſame workes to be good and acceptable in the ſight of God, which otherwiſe were impure and execrable in his ſight.

The office of fayth, and the office of the law compared together.

The office therefore of faith and works is diuers, and muſt not be cōfounded. Faith firſt goeth before, and regenerateth a man to God, & iuſtifieth him in the ſight of god, both in couering his yll deedes, and in making his good deedes acceptable to God, clyming vp to heauen, & there wraſtling with God and his iudgement for righteouſnes, for ſaluation, and for euerlaſting life. Workes and charitie, folow faith, and are exerciſed here vpon the earth, & glorieth onely before man, but not before God, in ſhewing forth obedience both to God & to man. Further then this our good works doe not reach, nor haue any thing to doe in the iudgement of God touching ſaluation. I ſpeake of our good workes (as S. Paule ſpeaketh Rom. 7.) as they be ours & imperfect. For els if our workes could be perfect according to the perfection of the lawe, as Chriſt wrought them in the perfection of his fleſh, that is if we could perfect them, as it is ſayd: Qui fecerit ea viuet in eis. But now ſeeing the imbecilitie of our fleſh cannot atteine thereto it foloweth thereof that all glory of iuſtifiyng is taken from workes, and transferred onely to faith.

The workes of man be imparfect and therefore haue nothing to doe with iuſtification.

Gal. 1.

Deffection of fayth in the Church of Rome.

A vew of the Popes Catholicke Church.

And thus much concerning the principall contents of S. Paules doctrine. Wherein the Church of the auncient Romanes firſt was grounded & planted, and ſo continued in the ſame, or at leaſt did not much alter, during the prymitiue ſtate of the Church. Likewiſe the ſame forme of doctrine the latter Romanes alſo that followed ſhoulde haue mainteined, and not haue fallen away for any mans preaching, but hold him accurſed, yea if he were any Apoſtle or an Angell from heauen, teaching any other doctrine beſides that inſtitution which they haue receaued. Gal. 1, for ſo were they warned before by the Apoſtle S Paule, to doe. And yet notwithſtanding all this forewarning & diligent inſtruction of this bleſſed Apoſtle of the Gentiles, what a defection of faith is fallen among the Gentiles, eſpecially among the Romanes, whereof the ſayde Apoſtle alſo foretold them ſo long before, foreprophecying: That the day of the Lord ſhall not come, except there come a defectiō before, and that the man of ſinne ſhould be reuealed, the proude aduerſary of God. &c. Theſ. 2, meaning (no doubt) by this defection, a departing and a falling from that faith which the holy ghoſt had then planted by his miniſtery, among the Gentiles. As we ſee it now come to paſſe in the Church of Rome. Which Church is ſo gone from the faith that S. Paule taught, that if he were now aliue, and ſaw theſe decrees and decretals of the Biſhop of Rome, theſe heapes of ceremonies & traditions, theſe maſſe bokes, theſe Portuſes, theſe Feſtiuals and Legendes, theſe Proceſſionals, Hymnes and Sequences, theſe Beades and Graduals, & the maner of theſe inuocation, their Canons, Cenſures, & latter Councels, ſuch ſwarmes of ſuperſtitious Monkes and Friers, ſuch ſectes of ſo many dyuers religions, the Teſtament of S. Fraunces, the rule of S. Benedict, of S Brigit, of S. Anthony. &c. the intricate ſubtelties & labyrynthes of the ſcholemen, the infinite caſes and diſtinctiōs of the Canoniſtes, the Sermons in Churches, the aſſertions in ſchooles, the glory of the Pope, the pride of the clergie, the cruelty of perſecuting Prelates with their officials and promotors: he woulde ſaye this were not a defection, but rather a plaine deſtruction and a ruine of fayth: neyther that this were any true Church of Chriſt, but a newe found Religion, or paganiſme rather, brought in vnder the ſhadow of Chriſtianity, wherin remaineth almoſt nothing els but the name onely of Chriſt, and the outwarde forme of hys religion; the true vayne, and effect wherof is vtterly decayed, as to them which liſt to examine all the parts of this new Romiſh religion, may ſone appeare.

The Church of Rome degenerated agayne almoſt to new paganiſme.

For ſaue onely that they pretend the ſolemne forme and wordes of the Crede, and are Baptiſed, confeſſing yͤ name of the father the ſonne & holy ghoſt: As touching all other pointes and true ſinceritie of the Chriſtian faith which they outwardly profeſſe, they are vtterly degenerated from that which S. Paule & the word of God firſt had taught them.

The Popes Church onely in wordes Catholicke, in deed heatheniſh.

Firſt, they cōfeſſe the father in word, but his will in his word expreſſed they renounce, his grace they acknowledg not, his benefits and promiſſes giuen vnto vs in his ſonne they receaue not, the vigor of his law they feele not, the terrour of his iudgements earneſtly they feare not, his commaundementes they obſerue by the traditions and commaundements of their owne.

Likewiſe the name of Chriſt his ſonne in worde they confeſſe, but his office indede they deface and deminiſh: his glory they ſeeke not, but vnder his name they do ſeke their owne: the power of his bloud and paſſion they know not or els diſſemble it, whom neither they admit to be the head of his Church alone, nor ſauiour alone, nor only to be our patrone & aduocate, but match with him our Lady, and other patrons, ſo that euery Pariſh almoſt in chriſtendome hath his peculiar patrone beſides Chriſt to hold by.

In like maner they confeſſe the name of the holy Ghoſt, But God himſelfe knoweth how farre they are from the comfort, knowledge, and taſt of the holy ghoſt, as wel may appeare by their councels, by their expounding of Scripture, by their ſuperſtitious ceremonies, by their outward worſhipping and Idolatrous inuocation to ſtockes and ſtones and dead creatures, by their ſcrupulous obſeruatiō of dayes, tymes, places, numbers & geſtures: And no leſſe alſo by their doctrine, which defraudeth the poore harts of ſimple Chriſtians, of their due conſolation, ioy and liberty in the holy Ghoſt, & kepeth them ſtill in a ſeruile bondage, and a doubtfull incertaintie of their ſaluation, contrary to the working of the holy ſpirite of God.

The Religion of the Popes Church proceedeth contrary to the working of the holy Ghoſt.

The Church of Rome pretendeth a fayre face of Religion but is voyd of the effect therof

The old Phariſeis, and the latter Church of Romanes compared together.

The Popes Church vnder the name of the Catholicke Church, perſecuteth the true Catholicke Church of Chriſt.

And thus the Church of Rome pretending onely the name of Chriſt and of his Religion, is ſo farre altered from the truth of that which it pretendeth, that vnder the name of Chriſt, it perſecuteth both Chriſt & his Religion: working more harme to the Church of Chriſt, then euer did the open tirants and perſecuting Emperours among the heathen: not much vnlike herein to the olde Sinagoge of the Scribes and Phariſeis, who vnder the name of God, crucified the ſonne of God, and vnder pretence of the law, fought againſt the Goſpell, and vnder the title of Abrahams children, perſecuted the childrē of Abraham. And as they bragging ſo highly of the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lorde, did in deede deſtroye the true Temple of the Lord: rightſo theſe pretenſed Catholikes in theſe dayes, after they haue rayſed vppe a Catholike Churche of their owne, and haue armed the ſame with lawes, and haue gathered vnto them a power of Prieſtes, Prelates, Abbats, Priors, of religious men, of Cardinals, and alſo of ſecular Princes to take their part, now vnder the name of the Catholike Church, they perſecute the true Catholike church, and coloring their procedings ſtill with In nomine Domini, moſt cruelly they put to death, which die pro nomine Domini, condemning them for heretikes, ſchiſmatikes, and rebles, not which deny any part of the crede, which they themſelues profeſſe, nor ſuch whome they can conuince by any Scripture, but onely ſuch which will not ioyne wyth their errours and hereſies contrary to the honour of God and truth of his worde.

And leſt any ſhould thinke this that we here proteſt againſt the corrupt errours & manifold deformities of this latter Church of Rome, to procede of any rancor or affection, rather then grounded of neceſſary cauſes, and demōſtrations euident, my purpoſe is (by the Lordes leaue) to take herein ſome litle paine, that as I haue collected a litle before, the ſumme & cōtents of S. Paules doctrine, where with the old Church of Rome was firſt ſeaſoned and acquainted, ſo now as in a like ſummary table, to diſcrye the particular braunches and contents of the Popes doctrine now ſet forth, to the intent that all true Chriſtian readers comparing the one with the other may diſcern what great alteration there is betwene the church of Rome that now is, and the church of Rome that then was, planted by the Apoſtles in the primitiue time. And to the ende to open to the ſimple reader ſome waye whereby he may the better iudge in ſuch matters of doctrine, & not be deceaued in diſcerning truth from errour, firſt we will propound certeine principles or general poſitions, as infallible rules or truthes of the Scripture, wherby al other doctrines & opinions of men being tried and examined as in the touchſtone, may the more eaſily be iudged whether they be true or contrary, & whether they make agaynſt the ſcripture, or no.

Theſe principles and infallible rules of the Scripture, as no man can denie, ſo if they be granted, the doctrine thē of the Popes Church muſt neede be found not to be Catholike, but rather full of errours and hereſies, as in the ſequele folowing remaineth more expreſſely and particularly by the grace of Chriſt to be conuinced.

¶ Here foloweth a Summary collection of the errours, hereſies, and abſurdities conteyned in the popes doctrine, contrary to the rules of Gods word, and the firſt inſtitution of the Church of Rome.

Of Faith and Iuſtification.

The errours hereſies, and

FIrſt, as touching the onely meanes and inſtrumentall cauſe of our iuſtificatiō, wherby the merits of Chriſtes Paſſion abſurdities in the popes doctrine.

Paſſiō be applied to vs & made ours, ye heard before how S. Paule onely aſcrybeth the ſame to faith: as appeareth by all his letters, eſpecially to the Romanes. where he excluding al kind of works, aſcribeth al our ſaluation, iuſtification, righteouſnes, reconciliation, and peace with god onely to faith in Chriſt. Contrary to which doctrine the Pope and his church hath ſet vp diuers and ſondry other meanes of their owne deuiſing, whereby the merites of Chriſtes paſſion (they ſaye) are applyed to vs and made ours, to the putting away of ſinnes, and for our iuſtification, as hope, charitie, ſacrifice of the Maſſe, auricular confeſſion, ſatiſfacion, merits of Saintes, and holy orders, the Popes pardons, &c. So that Chriſts ſacrifice, ſtripes, and ſufferyng, by this teaching doth not heale vs, nor is not beneficiall to vs, though we beleeue neuer ſo well, vnles wee adde alſo theſe workes and merites aboue recited. which if it be true, then is it falſe that Eſay the prophet doth promiſe: chap.53. In his ſtripes all we are made hole.&c. This errour and hereſie of the Church of Rome, though it ſeeme at fyrſt ſight to the naturall reaſon of man to be but of ſmall importaunce yet if it be earneſtly conſidered, it is in very deede the moſt pernicious hereſie that euer almoſt crept into the Church, vpon the which as the onely foundation, all, or the moſt part of all the errours, abſurdities, and inconueniences of the Popes Church are grounded. For this being once admitted, that a man is not iuſtified by his fayth in Chriſt alone, but that other meanes muſt be ſought by our owne working and merites to apply the merites of Chriſtes Paſſiō vnto vs, then is there neither any certeinty left, of our ſaluation, nor end in ſetting vp newe meanes and merites of our owne deuiſing, for remiſſion of ſinnes. Neyther hath there beene any hereſye that eyther hath rebelled more preſumptuouſly againſt the high Maieſtie of God the Father, nor more perniciouſly hath iniuried the ſoules of the ſimple, then this doctrine.

The meanes of applying Chriſtes merites vnto vs by the Popes doctrine.

The taking away of this Article of fayth onely to iuſtifie, is the roote of great inconuenience in Chriſtes Church.

No hereſie to be cōpared to the hereſie of Papiſtes.

The firſt inconueniēce.

First of all it ſubuerteth the will and teſtament of God. For where almighty God of mercy hath giuen vs his ſon to dye for vs, and with him hath giuen out his full promiſe, that whoſoeuer beleeueth vpō him ſhould be ſaued by their fayth, & aſſigneth none other condition either of the lawe or any works, but onely of fayth, to be yͤ meanes betweene his ſonne and vs: theſe men take vpon them to alter this teſtament that God hath ſet, and adioyne other conditions, which the Lord in his word neuer appointed nor knew. To whom the wordes of Hierome may be well applyed vpon the Epiſtle to the Gal. ſpeaking of ſuch. Qui de Euangelio Chriſti faciunt hominis Euangelium, vel quod peius eſt, Diaboli, &c. That is, Which make of the Goſpell of Chriſt, the Goſpell of men, or rather the Goſpell of the deuil &c.

No condition limitted of God to man for ſaluation but one.

Hieroni. in Epiſt. ad Gal. cap. 1.

The 2. incōuenience. What hurt commeth into the Church, by taking away the Article of iuſtification.

Secondly, whereas the Chriſtian reader in the Goſpell, reading of the great grace and ſwete promiſes of god gyuen to mankinde in Chriſt his ſonne, might thereby take much comfort of ſoule, and be at reſt and peace with the Lorde his God: commeth in the peſtiferous doctrine of theſe heretikes, wherewyth they obſcure this free grace of God, to choake the ſweete comforts of man in the holy Ghoſt, and oppreſſe Chriſten libertie, and bring our ſpirituall into bondage.

The third inconuenience.

Obiection of the Papiſtes aunſwered.

The Papiſtes doe teach the mercye of God to be vncertayne.

Mercy of God made certayne by hys owne promiſes.

Thirdly, as in this their impious doctrine they ſhew themſelues manifeſt enimies to Gods grace: ſo are they no leſſe iniurious to Chriſten men, whom they leaue in a doubtfull diſtruſt of Gods fauour and of their ſaluation, contrary to the worde and will of God, and right inſtitutiō of the Apoſtolicke doctrine. And wheras our new ſchoolemen of late, to mayntaine the ſayde wicked point of doctrine, doe obiect vnto vs that wee rather leaue mens conſciences vncertaine, for ſo much as, if lyfe (ſaye they) were not a due rewarde, it were vncerteine, And nowe for ſomuch as due debt is certaine, and mercy or fauour is vncerteine, therefore (ſay they) we leauing mens conſciences to the mercy of God, doe leaue them in a doubtfull vncerteintie of their ſaluation. To this I aunſwere that due debt, if it be proued by the law duely deſerued, it muſt be certeine. But if the lawe ſhall proue it vnperfect or vnſufficiently due, then is it not certeine, neither can there be any thing duely claymed. Nowe as touching mercye, ſo long as it remaineth ſecret in the Princes wyll, and not knowne to his ſubiectes, ſo long it is vncerteine, But when this mercy ſhall be openly publiſhed by proclamation, ratified by promiſe, conferred by will and Teſtamēt, eſtabliſhed in bloude, and ſealed wyth Sacraments, then this mercy remayneth no more doubtful, but ought firmely to be beleued of euery true faythfull ſubiect. And therefore Saint Paule, to eſtabliſh our harts in this aſſuraunce, and ſo aunſwere to this doubte, in his Epiſtle to the Romaines doth teach vs, ſaying: And therefore of fayth, that after grace the promiſe might be firme & ſure to the whole ſeede of Abraham.&c. Rom.4. Meanyng hereby, that workes haue nothing to doe in this caſe of Iuſtifying, and noteth the reaſon why. For then our ſaluation ſhould ſtande in a doubtfull wauering, becauſe in working we are neuer certeine whether our deſertes be perfect and ſufficient in Gods iudgement or no. And therefore (ſayeth Saint Paule) to the intent our ſaluation ſhould be out of all doubt, and certeine, it ſtandeth not of workes, in deſeruing, but of fayth in apprehending, and of Gods free grace in promiſing.

Saluation ſtandeth ſure and certayne by Gods promiſe.

The place of S. Paule. Rom.4. expounded.

The 4. inconuenience.

Fourthly, as in this their ſiniſter doctryne they break this principle of Chriſtian Religion, which ſayth that a man is iuſtified by fayth wythout workes, ſo agayne it breaketh an other principle aboue rehearſed. For this rule beyng graunted that nothing is to be added to gods word nor taken from it: then haue theſe men done wickedly in adding (as they doe) to Gods worde. For where the word of god lymiteth to our iuſtification no cōdition but fayth: Beleeue (ſayth he) in the Lorde Ieſu and thou ſhalt be ſaued, and thy whole houſe, &c. Act.16. theſe Iuſticiaries doe adde thereto dyuers and ſondry other conditions beſides, and ſuch as the worde alſo preciſely excludeth, as hope, charitie, the ſacrifice of their Maſſe, the work of the Prieſt Ex opere operato, auricular confeſſion, ſatiſfaction, meritorious deedes. &c. And thus much concerning the doctrine of fayth and iuſtification. whereby it may appeare to what horrible blindnes and blaſphemie, the Church of Rome is now fallen: where this kinde of doctrine is not only ſuffered, but alſo publikely profeſſed, which ſpeaking againſt fayth, thus blaſphemouſly dare ſay: Fides illa qua quis firmiter credit, & certo ſtatuit propter Chriſtum ſibi remiſſa eſſe peccata, ſeſeq; poſſeſſurum vitam æternam, non fides eſt, ſed temeritas: non ſpiritus ſancti perſuaſio, ſed humanæ audaciæ preſumptio. That is, That fayth wherewith a man firmely beleueth and certeinely aſſureth himſelfe, that for Chriſtes ſake his ſinnes be forgyuen him, and that he ſhall poſſeſſe eternal life, is not faith but raſhnes: not the perſwaſion of the holy Ghoſt, but preſumption of a mans boldnes.

The 4. principle aboue recited broken.

Ex Lindano in Epitome doctrina Euangelica.

¶ Of workes, and the law.

AS touching the doctrine of good workes and the lawe, what the teaching of Saint Paule was to the Romanes, yee hearde before. Who although hee excludeth good workes from the office of Iuſtifying, yet excludeth he them not from the practiſe and conuerſation of Chriſten life, but moſt earneſtly calleth vpon all faythfull beleeuers in Chriſt, to walke worthye their vocation, to laye downe their olde conuerſation, to gyue theyr members ſeruauntes of ryghteouſnes, to offer their bodyes vppe to God a liuelye Sacrifice, &c. The like example of whoſe teachyng, if the Churches nowe reformed doe not folowe, let their Sermons, their Preachynges, wrytinges, exhortynges, and lyues alſo beare recorde. Who although they can not ſay with Chriſt. Which of you can blame me of ſinne, yet they may ſay to the aduerſaryes, whoſoeuer of you is wythout fault, caſt the fyrſt ſtone of reproch agaynſt vs. Wherefore Hoſius, Pighius, wyth their fellowes, doe them open wrong, and ſlaunderouſly belye them in comparing them in this behalfe to Ætius Eunominus, and other heretikes called Anomæi, who taking the good ſentences of S. Paule, did abuſe the ſame to filthy licence of the fleſh, and corruption of wicked life, &c.

The firſt errour of the Papiſtes touching good workes.

Hoſius in 2. tom. confeſſionis. Cap. 1.

But to let theſe ſlaunders paſſe, nowe what the errours be of the Church of Rome, touching this part of doctryne, remayneth to be declared. Whoſe errour firſt ſtandeth in this, that they myſunderſtanding the definition of good workes, doe call good workes, not ſuch as properly are commaunded by the lawe of God, but ſuch as are agreable to the Popes law: As buylding of Abbayes and churches, gyuing to the high altar, founding of trentales, fynding of chauntries, gylding of Images, hearing of Maſſes, going on pilgrimage, fyghting for the holye croſſe, keeping of vowes, entryng to orders, faſtyng of vigiles, creepyng to the Croſſe, praying to Saintes, &c. All which are not onely reputed for good workes, but ſo preferred alſo before all other workes, that to theſe is gyuen pardon from the Pope, double and triplefolde more, then to any other good worke of charitie commaunded in the law of almightie God.

The ſecond errour of the Papiſtes in the doctrine of good workes.

Fayth the roote and cauſe of good workes.

An other errour alſo may be noted in the Papiſts, touching the efficient or formall cauſe of good workes. For albeit they all confeſſe in their bookes, that Gratia dei gratis data, is the chiefe principall cauſe thereof, and worketh in vs iuſtitiam primam (as they call it) yet the good workes after regeneration, they refer to other ſubordinate cauſes vnder God, as to fre wil, or to habitum virtutis, or ad integra gra naturalia, & nothing at all to faith, when as faith onely next vnder God, is the roote and fountaine of all well doyng: as in the fruites of a good tree, albeit the planter or the huſbandman be the principall agent thereof, and ſome cauſe alſo may be in yͤ good ground, yet the next and immediate cauſe is the roote that maketh the tree fruitefull. In like maner the grace of God, in a ſoft & repentaunt mollified hart planteth the gift of fayth. Fayth as a good roote can not lye dead or vnoccupied, but ſpringeth forth and maketh both the tree fruitefull, and alſo the tree thereof to be good. which otherwiſe had no acceptatiõ nor goodnes in them, were it not for the goodnes of the roote from whence they ſpring. So Paule although he had certeine workes in him ſuch as they were, before his conuerſion, yet had he no good workes before the grace of Chriſt had rooted fayth in him. So Mary Magdelene the ſinner, and Zacheus the Publicane. So all the nations of the Gentiles began to bryng forth frute, and eſpecially good fruit, when they began to bee ingrafted in Chriſt, and to receaue the roote of hys fayth, whoſe fruites before that were all damnable and vnſauery. As touchyng the cauſe therefore of good workes, there is no other in man but fayth, whoſe office as it is to iuſtifie vs in heauen ſo the nature of it is here in earth to worke by loue, as the roote worketh by the ſappe. For as a man ſeeth and feeleth by fayth, the loue and grace of God toward him in Chriſt his ſonne: ſo begynneth he to loue agayne both God and man, and to doe for his neyghbour as God hath done to him. And hereof properly ſpringeth the runyng fountaine of al good works and deedes of charitie.

Workes are not to be called good but by reaſon of fayth.

The office of fayth to iuſtifie.

The effect of fayth to bring forth good workes.

Fides per dilectionẽ operans. Gal.5.

Thirdly, as they erre in the cauſe of good works, ſo do they erre much more in the ende of the lawe, and of good workes: for where Saint Paule teacheth the lawe to be gyuen to thys vſe and ende, to conuict our tranſgreſsions, to proue vs ſinners, to ſhewe and condemne our infirmitye, and to dryue vs to Chriſt: they take and applye no other ende to the lawe, but to make vs perfect, to keepe vs from wrath, and to make vs iuſt before God. And likewiſe where Saint Paule prooueth al our good works to be vnperfect, and vtterly ſecludeth them from the ende of Iuſtifying, they contrariwiſe doe teache, as though the ende of good workes were to merite remiſsion of ſynnes, to ſatiſfye vnto God, to deſerue grace, to redeeme ſoules from Purgatory, and that by them the perſon of the regenerate man doth pleaſe God, and is made iuſt before God. For ſo they teach moſt wickedly and horribly, ſaying. That chriſt ſuffered for originall ſinne, or ſinnes going before Baptiſme, but the actuall ſinnes, which followe after Baptiſme, muſt be done away by mens meryts. And ſo they aſſigne to Chriſt the begynning of ſaluation, or obteyning of the fyrſt grace (as they call it) but the perfection or cõſũmation of grace, they giue to works & our own ſtrẽgth. Neither can they in any caſe abide, that we be iuſtified freely by the mercy of God through fayth onely apprehending the merites of Chriſt. Howbeit neyther doe all Papiſtes in this their errour agree in one. For ſome make diſtinction and ſay: that we are iuſtified by Chriſt principaliter. i. principally: & minus principaliter. i. leſſe principally, by the dignitie of our owne deedes, contrary to the eight principle before mentioned, page. 24. Other holde that we are made ryghteous before God, not by works that go before fayth: but by our vertues that follow after. Some againe do thus expound yͤ ſaying of Saint Paule: We are iuſtified by faith: yͤ is (ſay they) by fayth, preparing vs or ſetting vs in a good way to be iuſtified. Other expoũde by it yͤ figure Sinecdoche, that is, by faith conioyned together with other vertues. Other thus: by faith, that is, being formed with charytie, &c. Thus all theſe doe derogate from the benefite of Chriſt, and attribute vnto works a great or the greateſt part of our iuſtification, directly againſt the true veine of Saint Paules doctryne and firſt inſtitucion of the auncient Church of Rome, and againſt all the principles of holy Scripture.

The diuers opinions of their Catholicke Papiſtes, how faith iuſtifieth.

The Popes doctrine agaynſt the principles of Scripture.

Furthermore, as touching the ſayde doctryne of the lawe and good workes, they erre in miſunderſtanding the nature of the lawe and workes. For where Saint Paule diſputeth that the lawe is ſpirituall, and requireth of vs perfect obedience of the whole power of man, which wee beyng carnall are neuer able to accompliſh: they affirme otherwiſe that the lawe doth require but onely outward obedience of man, and therewith is contented: And this obedience they ſay, man is not onely able to performe, but alſo to do more and greater things then the law requireth. Wherof riſeth yͤ works of ſupererogatiõ, contrary to yͤ 6. and 8. principles aboue ſpecified, page. 24. Alſo there be ſay they, among other certaine workes of the lawe, which pertayne not to all men, but are conſilia, counſayles, left for perfect men, as matter for them to merite by, and theſe they call opera perfectionis, or opera indebita, adding alſo to theſe newe deuiſes to ſerue God after their owne traditions beſides the worde of God, as Monaſticall vowes, wilfull pouerty, difference of meates and garmentes, pilgrimage to reliques and Saints, worſhipping of yͤ dead, ſuperſtitious ceremonies, roſaries, &c. with ſuch like, and theſe they call workes of perfection, which they preferre before the other commaunded in the lawe of God. In ſo much that in compariſon of theſe, the other neceſſary duties commaunded and commended by the worde of God (as to beare office in the common wealth, to liue in yͤ godlye ſtate of matrimony, to ſuſteine the office of a ſeruant in a houſe) is contemned, and accounted as prophane in cõpariſon of theſe, contrary to the 10. principle aboue mentioned, pag. 24.

❀ Of Sinne.

Of Sinne likewiſe they teach not rightly, nor after the inſtitution of the Apoſtles, and the auncient Church of Rome, while the conſider not the deepenes and largenes of ſinne, ſuppoſing ſtill to be nothing els but inwarde actions with conſent of will, or outwarde, ſuch as are agaynſt will: whereas the ſtrength of ſinne extendeth not onely to theſe, but alſo comprehendeth the blyndnes and ignorance of the minde, lacke of knowledge and true feare of God, the vntowardnes of mans minde to Godwarde, the priuy rebellion of the hart againſt the lawe of God, the vndeliting will of man to God and his worde. The ſenſe of fleſh S. Paule alſo calleth an enimie againſt God, and feeleth in himſelfe, that is, in his fleſhe nothing dwelling but ſinne.

Erroneous doctrine of the latter Church of Rome concerning ſin.

As touching alſo originall ſinne, wherin we are borne which is the deſtruction of original iuſtice, and of gods Image in vs (remayning in vs and bringing forth in vs wicked cogitations, affections, and motions of naughtynes, againſt the law of God, and neuer ceaſeth ſo long as man liueth) this originall ſinne the Popes doctrine doth not deny, but yet doth much extenuate the ſame and holdeth that this inwarde concupiſcence & vicious affections not braſting out in vs with conſent of will, are no mortall nor damnable ſinne, but only fomes peccati: And ſay moreouer, that this concupiſcentia in vs, is no depriuation of the higher, but onely of the lower partes of man, beyng as a thing ἀδιάφορον, indifferent, and no leſſe naturall in vs then is the appetite to eate and drinke, and that the ſame is left to remaine in the Saintes after Baptiſme, to be to them occaſion of more meriting, &c.

Originall ſinne what it is.

Fomes peccati. Concupiſcentia.

❀ Of Penaunce, or Repentaunce.

Of Penaunce, this latter Latterane Church of Rome, of late hath made a Sacrament (contrary to the fourth principle before pag. 24.) which penaunce ſay they, ſtandeth of three partes. Contrition, Confeſsion, and Satiſfaction canonicall. Contrition (as they teach) may be had by ſtrength of free will, without the lawe, and the holy Ghoſt per actus elicitos, through mans owne action and endeuour. which contrition firſt muſt be ſufficient, and ſo it meriteth remiſsion of ſinne. In confeſsion, they require a full rehearſall of all ſinnes, whereby the Prieſt knowing the crymes, may miniſter ſatiſfaction accordingly. And this rehearſing of ſinnes, ex opero operato deſerueth remiſsion, contrary yͤ to 14. principle before, pag. 24. Satiſfactions they call opera indebita, enioyned by the ghoſtly father. And this ſatiſfaction (ſay they) taketh away, and chaungeth eternall puniſhment, into temporall paynes, which paines alſo it doth mittigate. And againe, theſe ſatiſfactions may be taken away by the Popes indulgence. &c.

This vnſauery and hetheniſh doctrine of penaunce farre differeth from the true teaching of holye Scripture. By the which teaching repentaunce properly conteineth theſe three partes, contrition, fayth, and new life. Contrition is called in Scripture the ſorrow of hart, ryſing vpõ the conſideration of ſinne committed and of the anger of God prouoked, which ſorrowe dryueth a man to Chriſt for ſuccour: whereupon ryſeth fayth. Fayth bringeth, afterward amendement or newenes of life, whiche wee call newe obedience, working fruites worthye of repentaunce.

difference betweene the lawe and the Goſpell: ſo is the Churche of Rome much to blame in thys behalfe, becauſe it confoundeth togyther thoſe two, beyng in nature ſo dyuers ⁊ contrary one from another: as threatninges and promiſes, thynges temporall wyth thinges eternall, ſorrowfull thinges wyth glad tydinges, death wyth lyfe, bondage with freedome, ⁊c. Teachyng the people, that whatſoeuer the lawe ſayth the Goſpell confirmeth, and whatſoeuer the Goſpell ſayth the ſame is agreeable to the lawe, and ſo make they no difference betweene Moſes and Chriſt, ſaue onely that Moſes (they ſaye) was the gyuer of the olde lawe, Chriſt is the gyuer of the newe and a more perfect lawe. And thus imagine they the goſpell to be nothyng els but a newe lawe gyuen by Chriſt, bynding to the promiſes thereof, the condition of our doynges and deſeruinges, no otherwiſe then to the olde lawe. And ſo deuyde they the whole lawe after this deſtinction, into three partes, to wytte, the law of Nature, the lawe of Moſes, and the lawe of Chriſt. And as for the Goſpell (they ſaye) it is reueled for no other cauſe, but to ſhew to the world more perfect preceptes and counſayles, then were in the olde lawe: to the fulfylling whereof they attribute iuſtification, and ſo leaue the poore conſciences of men in perpetuall doubt, and induce other manyfolde errours: bryngyng the people into a falſe opinion of Chriſt, as though he were not a remedy againſt the law, but came as an other Moſes, to gyue a newe lawe to the worlde.

Furthermore, as they make no difference betweene the nature of the lawe and nature of the Goſpell, confoundyng Moſes and Chriſt together: ſo neyther doe they diſtinct or diſcerne the tyme of the lawe, and the tyme of the Goſpell a ſonder. For where S. Paule, bryngeth in the law, to be a ſchoolmaſter, ⁊ limiteth him his tyme vnto Chriſt: ⁊ ſaith that Chriſt is the end of the law, that is, wheras yͤ law ceaſeth, there Chriſt beginneth, ⁊ where chriſt beginneth there the law endeth, they cõtrary make yͤ law to haue no ende nor ceaſing, but gyue to it immortall life ⁊ kingdome equall with Chriſt, ſo that Chriſt and the lawe togither do reigne ouer the ſoule and conſcience of man. which is vntrue. For either Chriſt muſt giue place, and the lawe ſtande: Or els the law (the condemnation and malediction of the lawe I meane) muſt ende, and Chriſt reigne. For both theſe, Chriſt and the lawe, grace and malediction, can not reigne and gouerne together. But Chriſt the Sonne of God which once dyed, can die no more, but muſt reigne for euer. wherefore the lawe with his ſtrẽgth ſtyng, and curſe, muſt needes ceaſe and haue an end. And this is it that S. Paule ſpeaking of the tryumph of Chriſt, ſaieth, that he aſcendyng vp led away captiuitie captiue, ⁊ hath ſet man at lyberty, not at libertie to liue as fleſh liſteth, neither hath freed him from the vſe ⁊ exercyſe of the law, but from the dominion and power of the lawe, ſo that there is nowe no condemnation to them that bee in Chriſt Ieſu, which walke not after the fleſh, &c. Romaines, 8. And in an other place Saint Paule ſpeaking of the ſame power and dominion of the lawe, ſayth, that Chriſt hath taken the obligation written againſt vs in decrees, and hath nayled it vpon the Croſſe, tryumphing ouer all, ⁊c. ſo that as the kyngdome of Chriſt fyrſt began vpon the Croſſe, euen ſo vpon the ſame Croſſe, and at the ſame time the kingdome of the lawe expired, and the malediction of the lawe was ſo crucified vpon the Croſſe, that it ſhall neuer ryſe agayne, to haue any power agaynſt them that be in Chriſt Ieſu. For lyke as if a woman be diſcharged from her firſt huſband being dead, ⁊ hath maryed an other man, the firſt huſbande hath no more power ouer her: euen ſo we nowe beyng eſpouſed vnto Chriſt our ſeconde huſbande, are diſcharged vtterly from our firſt huſbãd the law: (⁊ as S. Paule in an other place ſayth) are no more vnder the law, that is, vnder the dominion ⁊ malediction of the lawe, but vnder grace, that is, vnder perpetual remiſſion of al ſinnes, cõmitted not only before our Baptiſme, but as well alſo after Baptiſme, and duryng all our lyfe long. For therein properly conſiſteth the grace of God, in not imputyng ſinne vnto vs, ſo often as the repenting ſinner riſing vp by fayth flyeth vnto Chriſt, and apprehendeth Gods mercy and remiſſion promiſed in him, according to the teſtimonie both of the Pſalme: Bleſſed is the man to whome the Lord imputeth no ſinne. &c. ⁊ alſo of all the Prophets, which (as Saint Peter ſaith) giue recorde to him that through his name all that beleeue in him ſhall receaue remiſſion of their ſinnes, &c. Actes. 10. which being ſo, as it cannot be denied, then what needeth theſe priuate and extraordinary remiſſions to be brought into the Church by eare confeſſion, by meritorious deedes, and by the Popes pardons? for if there be no condemnation but by the law: and if this law it ſelfe be captiued, crucified, aboliſhed, and departed, which was the firſt huſbande, what condẽnation thẽ can there be to thẽ that be in Chriſt Ieſu, or by whome ſhould it come? If there be no condemnation, but a free and generall deliueraunce for all men, once gotten by the victorie of Chriſt, from the penalty of yͤ lawe: what needeth thẽ any particular remiſſion of ſinnes, at ſondry tymes to be ſought at the Prieſtes handes or the Popes pardons? He that hath a generall pardon needeth no particular. If remedy for ſinne be generall and perpetuall once gotten for euer, to all them that be in Chriſt Ieſu, what needeth any other remedy by auricular confeſſion? If it be not generall and perpetuall, howe then, is it true that Saint Paule ſayth: the lawe is crucified, and condemnation aboliſhed? or howe ſtandeth redemption perpetuall and generall, if remiſſion be not generall? For what is redemption els, but remiſſion of ſinnes, or ſinnes bought out? or what is els to kill the lawe, but to diſcharge vs from condemnation for euer? He that deliuereth his friende for a time out of his enimies hande, doth him a pleaſure: but he that killeth the enimie once out of the way giueth perpetuall ſafety. So if remiſſion of ſinnes by Chriſt were for ſome ſinnes and not for all, the lawe then muſt needes liue ſtill. But nowe the kylling and crucifying of the law importeth full remiſſion to be abſolute, and our ſafety to be perpetuall. But here percaſe will be obiected of ſome: how ſtandeth remiſſion of ſinnes certeine and perpetuall, ſeeyng newe offences being daily committed, doe daily require newe remiſſion? Hereto I aunſwere: albeit ſinnes doe daily growe, whereby wee haue neede dailie to deſire God to forgiue vs our treſpaſſes (&c. yet notwithſtanding the cauſe of our remiſſion ſtandeth euer one and perpetuall, neither is the ſame to be repeted any more, nor any other cauſe to be ſought beſides that alone. This cauſe is the ſacrificed body of Chriſt once vpon the Croſſe for all ſinnes that either haue or ſhall be committed. Beſide this cauſe, there is no other, neither confeſſion, nor mens pardons that remitteth ſinnes.

The promiſe of remiſsion euer perpetuall.

Remiſsion of ſinnes freely promiſed without limitation of time or number.

Furthermore, as the cauſe is one and euer perpetuall, which worketh remiſſion of ſinnes vnto vs: ſo is the promiſe of God euer one, once made and ſtandeth perpetuall that offereth the ſame to the faith of the repenting ſinner. And becauſe the ſayde promiſe of God is alwayes ſure and can not fayle, which offereth remiſſion to all them that beleeue in Chriſt, being limited neyther to time nor number, therefore we may boldely conclude, that what time ſoeuer a repenting ſynner beleeueth, and by fayth applyeth to him the ſacrifice of Chriſt, he hath by Gods owne promiſe remiſſion of his ſinnes, whether they were done before, or after Baptiſme.

The meanes whereby remiſſion is promiſed is onely fayth.

And moreouer, for ſo much as the ſaid promiſe of God offereth remiſſion to the repentaunt ſynner, by no other meanes nor condition. but onely one, that is, by fayth in Chriſt: therefore excluding all other meanes and conditions of mans working, we ſay, that what repenting ſinner ſoeuer beleeueth in Chriſt, hath already in him ſelfe (and needeth not to ſeeke to any Prieſt) perpetuall aſſuraunce of remiſſion, not for this time or that tyme onely, but for euer and a day. For the promiſe ſayth not, he that beleeueth in Chriſt ſhall be pardoned this tyme, ſo he ſinne no more: neyther doth it ſay, that the law is ſtayde, or the ſentence repriued, but ſayth playnely, that the law with her condemnation and ſentence her ſelfe is condemned and hanged vp, and ſhall neuer ryſe agayne to them that be in Chriſt Ieſu: and promiſeth indeterminatelye, without limitation, remiſſion of ſinnes, to all that beleeue in his name. &c, Actes. 10. and likewiſe in an other place the Scripture ſpeaking abſolutely, ſaith, Sinne ſhall not preuayle ouer you, ⁊ addeth the reaſon why: ſaying: Becauſe ye are not vnder the law but vnder grace. Rom. 6. Adding this leſſon withall, (as it followeth in the ſame place) not that ſinners ſhoulde ſinne more therefore, becauſe they are vnder grace, but onely that weake infirmities myght be releeued, broken conſciences comforted, and repenting ſinners holpen from deſperation, to the prayſe of Gods glory. For as God forgiueth not ſynners becauſe they ſhould ſinne: ſo neither doth infirmitie of falling diminiſh the grace of Chriſt, but rather doth illuſtrate the ſame, as it is written: My ſtrength is made perfect in infirmitie. 2. Cor. 12. and againe: Where ſinne aboundeth, there ſuperaboundeth alſo grace.

Foure thinges concurre in remiſsiõ of ſinnes.

In remiſſion of ſynnes therefore, theſe foure thinges muſt concurre together: the cauſe that worketh (which is the ſacrifice of Chriſtes body) 2. the promiſe that offereth, 3. fayth that apprehendeth. 4. the repenting ſinner that receaueth. And although ſinnes daily do grow, which daily prouoke vs to craue remiſſion, yet as touching the cauſe that worketh remiſſion of our daily ſinnes: & the meanes which apprehendeth and applieth the ſayd cauſe vnto vs, they remayne alwaies one & perpetuall: beſides which no other cauſe nor meanes is to be ſought of man. So that to them that be repenting ſinners & be in Chriſt Ieſu there is no law to condemne them, though they haue deſerued condemnation: but they are vnder a perpetual kingdome and a heauen full of grace and remiſſion to couer their ſins and not to impute their iniquities, through the promiſe of God in Chriſt Ieſu our Lord.

The Popes errours touching remiſſion of ſinnes detected.

And therefore wicked and impious is the doctrine of them, fyrſt which ſeeke any other cauſe of remiſſion, then onely the bloud of our Sauiour. Secondly, which aſſigne any other meanes to apply the bloudſheding of Chriſt vnto vs, beſides onely faith. Thirdly and eſpecially, which ſo limite and reſtraine the eternall priuiledge of Chriſts paſſion, as though it ſerued but only for ſinnes done without and before faith: and that the reſt after Baptiſme committed muſt be done away by confeſſion, pardons, and ſatiſfactory deedes. And al this riſeth, becauſe the true nature of the law, & of the Goſpell is not knowen, nor the difference rightly conſidered betwene the times of the one, and of the other. Neither againe doe they make any diſtinction betweene the malediction of the law, and vſe of the law. And therfore whenſoeuer they heare vs ſpeake of the law (meanyng yͤ malediction of the law) to be aboliſhed, there vpon they maliciouſly ſlaunder vs, as though we ſpeak againſt the good exerciſes of the lawe, and giue liberty of fleſhe to carnall men to liue as they liſt. Whereof more ſhalbe ſayd (by the Lordes grace) as place and time ſhall hereafter require.

What inconuenience riſeth for lacke of diſtinction betweene the law and the Goſpell.

❧ Of free will.

Concerning free will, as it may peraduenture in ſome caſe be admitted that men without the grace may doe ſome outward functions of the law, and keepe ſome outward obſeruaunces or traditions: ſo as touching thinges ſpirituall & apperteining to ſaluation, the ſtrength of man being not regenerate by grace, is ſo infirme and impotent that he can performe nothing, neither in doing well nor willing well. Who after he be regenerated by grace may worke and doe wel, but yet in ſuch ſort, that ſtill remaineth notwithſtanding a great imperfection of fleſh, & a perpetuall repugnaunce betwene the fleſh and ſpirit. And thus was the originall Church of the auncient Romanes firſt inſtructed. From whome ſee now howe farre this latter Church of Rome hath degenerated, which holdeth and affirmeth, that men without grace may performe the obedience of the law, & prepare themſelues to receaue grace by working, ſo that thoſe works may be meritorious, and of congruitie obteine grace. Which grace once obteined, then men may (ſay they) perfectly performe the full obedience of the law, and accompliſh thoſe ſpirituall actions, and workes which God requireth, and ſo thoſe workes, of cõdignitie, deſerue euerlaſting life. As for the infirmity which ſtil remaineth in nature, that they nothing regarde nor once ſpeake of.

❧ Of Inuocation, and Adoration.

Over and beſides theſe vncatholike and almoſt vnchriſtian abſurdities and defections from the Apoſtolicall faith aboue ſpecified, let vs conſider the maner of theyr Inuocation, not to God alone, as they ſhould, but to dead men ſaying: that ſaintes are to be called vpon tanquam mediatores interceſsionis: as Mediatours of interceſſion: Chriſtum vero tanquam mediatorem Salutis, and Chriſt as the Mediator of Saluation. And affirme moreouer, yͭ Chriſt was a Medyatour onely in time of his Paſſion. Which is repugnaunt to the wordes of S. Paule writing to the old Romanes chap. 8. where he ſpeaking of the interceſſion of Chriſt: Which is (ſaith he) on the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſsion for vs, &c. And if Chriſt be a Mediatour of ſaluation, what needeth then any other interceſſion of the Saintes for other ſutes? for ſaluation being once had what can we require more? or what lacketh he more to be obtained of the Saintes, which is ſure to be ſaued only by Chriſt? And yet in their Catholicke deuotions: why doe they teach vs thus to pray to the bleſſed virgine: Salua omnes qui te glorificant, i. Saue all them that glorifie thee, &c. if ſaluation onely belong to Chriſt? vnles they ſtudy of purpoſe to ſeeme contrary to themſelues.

✻ Of Sacramentes, Baptiſme and the Lordes Supper.

As touching Sacramentes, their doctrine likewiſe is corrupt and erroneus.

1. Firſt they erre falſely in the number. For where the inſtitution of Chriſt ordeineth but two, they (contrary to the fourth principle aboue prefixed) haue added to the preſcription of the Lords worde, fiue other Sacraments.

2. Secondly, in the cauſe finall they erre. For where the word hath ordeined thoſe Sacraments to excite our faith, and to giue vs admonitions of ſpiritual things: they contrariwiſe doe teach that the Sacramentes doe not onely ſtirre vp faith, but alſo that they auayle and are effectuall without faith, Ex opere operato, ſine bono motu vtentis &c. as is to be founde in Thom. Aquine, Scotus, Catharinus, and other moe.

3. Thirdly, in the operation & effect of the Sacramentes they faile: where the contrary to the minde of the Scriptures, doe ſay, that they giue grace & not onely do ſignifie, but alſo conteine and exhibite that which they ſignifie, to wytte grace and ſaluation.

4. Fourthly, they erre alſo in Application, applying their Sacramentes both to the quicke and the dead, to thẽ alſo that be abſent, to remiſſion of ſinnes, and releaſing of payne. &c.

In the Sacrament of Baptiſme they are to be reproued, not onely for adding to the ſimple wordes of Chriſts inſtitution, diuers other newfound rites & phantaſies of men: but alſo where the vſe of the olde Church of Rome was onely to baptiſe men, they Baptiſe alſo Belles, and applye the wordes of Baptiſme to water, fire, candels, ſtockes, and ſtones. &c.

Errours and abuſes in Baptiſme.

Baptiſing of Belles.

But eſpecially in the Supper of the Lord their doctrine moſt filthely ſwarueth from the right minde of the Scripture, all order, reaſon, and faſhion, moſt worthy to be exploded out of all Chriſten Churches. Touching yͤ which Sacrament, the firſt errour is their Idolatrous abuſe by worſhipping, adoring, ſenſing, knocking and kneelyng vnto it, in reſeruing alſo and carying the ſame about in pompe and proceſſion in townes and fieldes. Secondlye alſo in the ſubſtance thereof their teaching is monſtruous, leauing there no ſubſtance of bread and wine to remayne, but onely the reall body and bloud of Chriſt, putting no difference betweene calling, and making. Becauſe Chriſt called bread, his body therfore, ſay they, he made it his body, and ſo of a wholeſome Sacramẽt, make a perilous Idole, & that which the old Church of Rome did euer take to be a miſtery, they turne into a blind miſte of meere accidences to bleare the peoples eies, making them beleeue they ſee that they ſee not: & not to ſee yͭ which they ſee: & to worſhip a thing made, for their maker, a creature for their creator: and that was threſhed out of a wheaten ſheffe they ſet vp in the Church, & worſhip for a Sauiour: and when they haue worſhipped him, then they offer him to his father: and when they haue offered him, then they eate him vp, or els cloſe him faſt in a pixe. Where if he corrupt & putrifie before he be eaten, then they burne him to pouder & aſhes. And notwithſtanding they know wel by the ſcriptures, that the body of chriſt can neuer corrupt and putrifie, yet for all this corruption, will they needes make it the body of Chriſt, and burne all them which beleeue not that, which is againſt true Chriſtian beleefe.

✻ Of Matrimony.

What order and rule S. Paule hath ſet for mariage in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians it is manifeſt. Whereas he preferreth ſingle life in ſuch as haue the gift of continence, before the maried ſtate, ſo againe in ſuch as haue not the gift he preferreth the coupled life before the other: willing euery ſuch one to haue his wife because of fornication. Furthermore, how the ſaid Apoſtle aloweth a Byſhop to be the huſband of one wife (ſo he excede not to the maner of the Iewes, which were permitted to haue many) & how vehemently he reproueth them that reſtraine mariage, his letters to Timothy do record. Moreouer, what degres be permitted by the law of God to mary, in the booke of Leu.

The third part of the yeare exempted frō the mariage.

Mariage within the fift, or ſixt degree, by the Popes law.

Goſſippes inhibited to marry by the Popes law.

What inconueniences come by reſtrayning of mariage.

Contrary to theſe ordinaunces of the Scripture, the new Catholikes of the Popes church, firſt doe repute and call mariage a ſtate of imperfection, & preferre ſingle lyfe, be it neuer ſo impure, before the ſame, pretending yͤ where the one repleniſheth the earth, the other filleth Heauen. Further, as good as yͤ third part of Chriſtendome, if it be not more both men and women, they keepe through coacted vowes from mariage, hauing no reſpect whether they haue the gift or no. Miniſters and Prieſtes, ſuch as are found to haue wiues, not onely they remoue out of place, but alſo pronounce ſentence of death vpon them & account their children for baſtardes & illegitimate. Againe, as good as the iij. part of the yeare they exempt & ſuſpend from liberty of mariage. Degrees of copulation forbidden they extend farther then euer did the law of God, euen to the fift or ſixt degree. which degree notwithſtanding they releaſe againe when they liſt for money. Ouer and beſides al this they haue added a new found prohibition of ſpiritual kindred, that is, that ſuch as haue bene goſſips, or godfathers and godmothers together in chriſtening an other mans child, muſt not by their law mary together. Briefly and finally in this their doctrine and caſes of Matrimony they gaine and rake to themſelues much money from the people, they augment horrible Sodomitry, they nouriſh wicked adultery and much fornication. They fill the worlde with offenſions, and baſtardes, and giue great occaſion of murdering infants.

Of Magiſtrates and ciuill gouernement.

The corrupt doctrine of the Popes Churche concerning ciuile rulers and magiſtrates. Rom. 13.

YE hard before what rules and leſſons S. Paule gaue to the old Romanes concerning Magiſtrats, to whoſe authoritie he would all humaine creatures to be ſubiected and how they are the miniſters of God, hauing the ſworde giuen vnto them, wherewith they ought to repreſſe falſe doctrine and idolatry, and maintaine that which is true & right. Rom. 13. Now let vs ſuruey a litle the Popes proceedinges, and marke how farre he tranſgreſſeth in this, as he doth in al other points almoſt from true chriſtianity.

1. Firſt, the Pope with all his clergy exempt themſelues from all obedience ciuill.
2. They arrogate to themſelues authoritie to ordeine and conſtitute, without all leaue or knowledge of the ordinary Magiſtrate.
3. Yea, they take vpon them to depoſe, and ſet vp rulers and Magiſtrates whom they liſt.

Of Purgatory.

The Phantaſies and Antiques of the popes Churche concerning Purgatory.

THe Paradoxes, or rather the phanteſies of the latter Church of Rome concerning purgatory, be monſtruous, neither old nor Apoſtolicall.

Ex Thom. Mono & alijs.

1. Firſt, (ſay they) there is a Purgatory, where ſoules do burne in fier after this life.
2. The paine of Purgatory differeth nothing from the paynes of hell, but onely that it hath an end, the paines of hell haue none.
3. The painefull ſuffering of this fier fretteth and ſcoureth away the ſinnes before committed in the body.
4. The time of theſe paines indureth in ſome longer, in ſome leſſe, according as their ſinnes deſerue.
5. After which time of their paines being expired, then the mercy of God doth tranſlate them to heauenly bliſſe, which the body of Chriſt hath bought for them.
6. The paines of purgatory be ſo great, that if al the beggars of the world were ſeene on the one ſide, and but one ſoule of Purgatory on the other ſide, the whole worlde woulde pitie more that one, then all the other.
7. The whole time of puniſhment in this Purgatory muſt continue ſo long, till the fier haue cleane fretted and ſcoured away the ruſty ſpots of euery ſinnefull ſoule there burning, vnleſſe there come ſome releaſe.
8. Helpes and releaſes that may ſhorten the time of their purgation, be the Popes pardons and indulgences, ſacrifice of the alter, dyrges, and trentals, prayer, faſting meritorious deedes out of the treaſure houſe of the Church, almes, and charitable deedes of the liuing in ſatiſfiyng gods Juſtice for them, &c.
9. Lacke of beliefe of Purgatory, bringeth to hell.

Manifeſt defection of the Popes Church from the olde fayth of Rome.

Many other falſe errours and great deformities, hereſies, abſurdities, vanities, & follies, biſides their blaſphemous raylinges and contumelies, may be noted in the ſaid latter church of Rome, wherein they haue made manifeſt defection from the old faith of Rome, as in depriuing the Church of one kinde of the Sacrament, in taking from the people the knowledge and reading of Gods word, in praying and ſpeaking to the people and adminiſtring ſacramentes in a tongue vnknowne, in miſtaking the authoritie of the keyes, in their vnwritten verities, in making yͤ authority of ſcripture inſufficient, in vntrue iudgement of the Churche and the wrong notes of the ſame, in the ſupremacy of the ſea of Rome, in their wrong opinion of Antichriſt.

But becauſe theſe with all other partes of doctryne are more copiouſly and at large comprehended in other bookes both in Latine and Engliſhe ſet forth in theſe our dayes, I ſhall not need further herein to trauell, eſpecially ſeeing the contrariety betweene the Popes Church, and the Church of Chriſt, betweene the doctrine of the one, and doctrine of the other, is ſo euident that he is blind that ſeeth it not, and hath no handes almoſt, that feeleth it not.

Contrarietie betweene the Religion of Chriſt and of the Pope briefly noted.

Chriſtes doctrine is wholly ſpirituall.

No outward thing is required in Chriſtes doctrine to make a Chriſten man but onely Baptiſme and the Lordes Supper.

All doctrine of the Pope ſtandeth onely in outward things.

For (briefely in one note to comprehende, which may ſuffice for all) where as the doctrine of Chriſt is altogether ſpirituall, conſiſting wholy in ſpirite and veritie, and requireth no outwarde thing to make a true Chriſten man but onely Baptiſme (which is the outwarde profeſſion of fayth) and receauing the Lordes ſupper: let vs now examine the whole religion of this latter Church of Rome, and we ſhall finde it wholy from toppe to toe, to conſiſt in nothing els but altogether in outwarde and ceremoniall exerciſes, as outward confeſſion, abſolution at the Prieſts hand, outward ſacrifice of the Maſſe, buying of pardons, purchaſing of obites, externe worſhipping of Images and reliques, pilgrimage of this place or that: building of Churches, founding of Monaſteries, outward workes of the law, outwarde geſtures, garments, colours, choiſe of meates, difference of times and places, peculiar rytes, and obſeruauncies, ſet prayers and number of prayers preſcribed, faſting of vigiles, keeping of holidayes, comming to Church, hearing of ſeruice, externe ſucceſſion of Biſhops, and of Peters ſea, externe forme and notes of the Church. &c. ſo that by this religion to make a true Chriſtian and a good Catholike, there is no working of the holy Ghoſt almoſt required: As by example to make this matter more demonſtrable, let vs here define a Chriſten man after the Popes making: whereby we may ſee the better what is to be iudged of the ſcope of his doctrine.

A Chriſten man after the Popes making defined.

A Chriſten man defined after the Popes doctrine.

AFter the Popes Catholike Religion, a true Chriſten man is thus defined: firſt to be baptiſed in the Latine tongue (where the Godfathers profeſſe they can not tell what) then confirmed by the Byſhop: the Mother of the childe to be purified. After he be growen in yeares, then to come to the Church, to keepe his faſting dayes, to faſt the Lent, to come vnder benedicite. that is, to be confeſſed of the Prieſt, to doe his penance, at Eaſter to take his rites to heare Maſſe, and diuine ſeruice, to ſet vppe candels before Images to creepe to yͤ Croſſe, to take holy bread and holy water, to go on proceſſiō, to cary his palmes & candle, and to take aſhes, to faſt the Ember daies, Rogation daies, & vigiles, to keepe the holy dayes, to pay his tithes and offeringe daies, to go on pilgrimage, to buy pardons, to worſhip his maker ouer the Prieſtes head, to receaue the Pope for his ſupreame head and to obey his lawes, to receaue S. Nicolas Clerks, to haue his beades, & to giue to the high altar, to take orders, if he will be Prieſt, to ſaye his Mattens, to ſing his Maſſe, to liſt vp fayre, to keepe his vow, and not to marry. when he is ſicke to be anneeld and take the rites of holy Church, to be buried in yͤ church yard, to be rong for, to be ſong for, to be buried in a Fryers coule, to finde a ſoule Prieſt. &c.

Corporall exerciſe ſerueth to ſmall profite.

All which pointes being obſerued, who can denie but this is a deuoute man and a perfecte Chriſtian Catholike, and ſure to be ſaued, as a true faithfull childe of the holye mother Church.

Now looke vpon this definition, and tell me (good reader) what faith or ſpirite, or what working of the holye Ghoſt in all this doctrine is to be required. The grace of our Lord Jeſus giue the true light of his Goſpell to ſhine in our hartes, Amen.

σὺν τῷ Χριστῷ.

¶ The firſt booke contayning the 300. yeares next after Chriſt.

THeſe things before premiſed, hauing thus hitherto prepared ẏ way vnto our ſtory, let vs nowe (by the grace and ſpeede of Chriſt our Lord) enter into the matter: ẏ as we haue heretofore ſet forth in a generall deſcriptiō the whole ſtate as wel of the primitiue as of the latter times of this Church of Rome: ſo now conſequently to diſcourſe in particular ſort the Actes and doings of euery age, by it ſelfe, in ſuch order as is afore prefixed.

1. Firſt, to declare of the ſuffering time of the Church, which conteineth about the time of three hundreth yeares after Chriſt.

2. Secondly, the floriſhing & growing time of the ſame: conteyning other 300. yeares.

3. Thirdly the declining time of the Church, and of true Religion, other 300. yeares.

4. Fourthly, of the time of Antichriſt, raigning & raging in the Church, ſince the looſing of Sathan.

5. Laſtly, of the reforming time of Chriſtes Church in theſe latter 300. yeares.

In the tractation of all which things our chiefe purpoſe and indeuor ſhalbe (ſo neare as the Lord will giue vs grace) not ſo much to intermedle with outward affaires of Princes, or matters ciuile,) except ſomtime for example of life) as ſpecially minding (by the helpe of the Lorde) to proſecute ſuch thinges, which to the Eccleſiaſticall ſtate of the Church are appertaining: as firſt to entreat of the ſtabliſhing of Chriſtian faith, then of the perſecutions of tyraunts, the conſtancy and patience of Gods Saintes, the firſt conuerſion of Chriſten Realmes to the faith of Chriſt namely of this Realme of England & Scotland: firſt beginning with king Lucius, and ſo forwarde following the order of our Engliſh kings here in this land, to declare the maintenaunce of true doctrine, the falſe practiſe of Prelates, the creping in of ſuperſtition, and hipocriſie, the manifold aſſaultes, warres and tumults of the princes of this world, againſt the people of God. wherein may appeare the wonderfull operation of Chriſtes mightie hand, euer working in his church, & neuer ceaſing to defend the ſame againſt his enimies, according to the verity of his owne word, promiſing to be with his Church while the worlde ſhal ſtand, ſo as by the proces of this ſtory may wel be proued, and be teſtified in the ſequell thereof.

Two thinges in this hiſtory chiefly to be noted.

In the traction of all which things 2. eſpeciall pointes I chiefly commend to the reader, as moſt requiſite and neceſſary of euery Chriſten man to obſerue & to note for his owne experience and profite, as firſt the diſpoſition & nature of this worlde: ſecondly the nature & condition of the kingdome of Chriſt, the vanitie of the one, and ſtabliſhment of the other: The vnproſperous and vnquiet ſtate of the one, ruled by mans violence & wiſdome: And the happy ſucceſſe of the other euer ruled by Gods bleſſing & prouidence. The wrath and reuenging hand of god in the one and his mercy vpon the other. The world I call al ſuch as be without or againſt Chriſt, eyther by ignoraunce not knowing him, or by heatheniſh life not following him, or by violence reſiſting him. On the otherſide the kingdome of Chriſt in this world I take to be all them which belong to the faith of Chriſt, & here take his part in this world againſt the world. The nūber of whom although it be much ſmaller then the other and alwaies lightly is hated & moleſted of the world, yet it is the number, which the Lorde peculiarly doth bleſſe and proſper, and euer will. And this number of Chriſtes ſubiects is it, which we cal the viſible Church here in earth. which viſible Church hauing in it ſelfe a difference of 2 ſorts of people, ſo is it to be deuided in two parts, of which the one ſtandeth of ſuch as be of outward profeſſion only, the other which by election inwardly are ioyned to Chriſt, the firſt in words & lips ſeemeth to honor Chriſt, and are in the viſible Church onely, but not in the Church inuiſible, & partaketh the outward Sacraments of Chriſt, but not the inward bleſſing of Chriſt: the other are both in the viſible & alſo in the inuiſible Church of Chriſt, which not in wordes onely and outward profeſſion, but alſo in hart doe truely ſerue & honour Chriſt, partaking not onely the Sacramentes, but alſo the heauenly bleſſings and grace of Chriſt.

The world.

The kingdome of Chriſt in this world.

The viſible Church.

The Church of Chriſt deuided in two ſortes of people.

And many times it happeneth, that as betweene the world, and the kingdome of Chriſt there is a continual repugnaunce: ſo betweene theſe two partes of this viſible Church aforeſaid, oft times groweth great variaunce and mortal perſecution, inſomuch that ſometime ẏ true church of Chriſt hath no greater enimes, than of their owne profeſſion and company, as happened not onely in the time of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, but alſo from time to time almoſt continually, Euſeb. Lib. 8. cap. 1. But eſpecially in theſe latter daies of the Church vnder the perſecution of Antichriſt and his retinue, as by the reading of this volume more manifeſtly hereafter may appeare.

Euſeb. Lib. 1. cap. 1.

At the firſt preaching of Chriſt, and comming of the Goſpel: who ſhould rather haue knowen & receaued him, then the Phariſeis and Scribes of that people, which had his law? And yet who perſecuted and reiected him more, then they themſelues? what followed? They in refuſing Chriſt to be their king, and choſing rather to be ſubiect vnto Cæſar, were by the ſayde their owne Cæſar at length deſtroyed: when as Chriſtes ſubiectes the ſame time eſcaped the daunger. whereby it is to be learned, what a dangerous thing it is to refuſe the Goſpell of God, when it is ſo gently offered.

Gods puniſhment for refuſing the Goſpel.

The like example of Gods wrathful puniſhment is to be noted no leſſe in the Romanes alſo themſelues. For when Tiberius Cæſar, hauing receaued by letters frō Pontius Pilate, of the doings of chriſt, of his miracles. Reſurrection, and aſcention into heauen, & how he was receiued as God of many, was himſelfe alſo moued with beliefe of the ſame, and did conferre thereof with the whole Senate of Rome, to haue Chriſt adored as god: but they not agreyng therunto refuſed him, becauſe that contrary to the law of the Romanes, he was conſecrated, (ſaid they) for God, before the Senate of Rome had ſo decreed & approued him. &c. Tertul. Apol. cap. 5. Thus the vaine Senate following rather the law of man, then of God, & which were contented with the Emperour to reigne ouer them, were not cōtented with the meeke king of glory the ſonne of God to be their king. And therfore after much like ſort to ẏ Iewes were ſcourged and intrapped for their vniuſt refuſing, by the ſame way which they themſelues did preferre. For as they preferred the Emperour, and reiected Chriſt, ſo the iuſt permiſſion of God, did ſtirre vp their owne Emperours againſt them in ſuch ſort, that both the Senatours themſelues were almoſt all deuoured, & the whole Citye moſt horrible afflicted the ſpace almoſt of 300. yeares togither. For firſt the ſame Tiberius, which for a great part of his reigne was a moderate and a tollerable Prince, afterward was to them a ſharpe and heauy tyraunt, who neyther fauoured his owne mother, nor ſpared his owne neuewes, nor the Princes of the City, ſuch as were his own counſelers, of whom to ẏ number of xx. he left not paſt two or three aliue, & ſo cruell was he to the Citye, that as the ſtory recordeth: Nullus a pæna hominum ceſſabat dies, ne religioſus quidem ac ſacer. Suet. reporteth him to be ſo ſterne of nature and tirannical, that in time of his reigne, very many were accuſed and condemned with their wiues & children, Maydes alſo firſt defloured, then put to death. In one day he recordeth .xx. perſons to be drawen to ẏ place of execution. By whom alſo, through the iuſt puniſhment of God Pilate vnder whom Chriſt was crucified, was apprehended and accuſed at Rome, depoſed, then baniſhed to the towne of Lyonce, and at length did ſlaye himſelfe. Neither did Herode and Cayphas long eſcape, of whome more followeth hereafter. Agrippa alſo by him was caſt into priſon, albeit afterward he was reſtored. His cruel condition, or els diſpleaſure was ſuch toward the Romaines, that he wiſhed that all the people of Rome had but one necke, that hee at hys pleaſure might deſtroy ſuch a multitude. By this ſayd Caligula, Herode the murtherer of Iohn Baptiſt, and condemner of Chriſt, was condemned to perpetuall baniſhment, where he died miſerably. Cayphas alſo which wickedly ſat vpon Chriſt, was the ſame tyme remoued from the high Prieſts roome, and Ionathan ſet in his place. The horrible wickednes and crueltie of Nero.
Peter and Paule ſuffered for Chriſt.
{An. 69.}

But that which this Caligula had onely conceaued, the ſame did the other two, which came after, bring to paſſe, Claudius Nero, who raygned xiii. yeares with no little crueltie. But eſpecially the third of theſe Neroes, called Domitius Nero: whiche ſucceeding after Claudius, rayned 14. yeares, with ſuch fury and tyranny, that he ſlewe the moſt part of the Senats, he deſtroyd the whole order of knighthode in Rome. So prodigious a monſter of nature was he, more like a beaſt, yea rather a deuill then a man, that he ſeemed to be borne to the deſtruction of man. Such was his monſtrous vncleannes, ẏ he abſtayned not from hys owne mother, his naturall ſiſter, nor from any degree of kindred. Such was his wretched cruelty, that he cauſed to be put to death his mother, his brother in law, his ſiſter, hys wyfe great with childe, alſo his inſtructor Seneca and Lucane, with diuers moe of his owne kindred and conſanguinitie. Moreouer, he commaunded Rome to be ſet on fire in xii. places, and ſo continued it 6. dayes and 7. nights in burning, while that he to ſee the example how Troy burned, ſang the verſes of Homere. And to auoide the infamie therof, he layd the fault vpon the Chriſtian men, & cauſed them to be perſecuted. And ſo continued this miſerable Emperour in his reigne 14. yeares, till at laſt the Senate proclaiming him a publike enemie of mankind, condemned him to be drawn through the citie, and to be whipped to death. For the feare whereof, he flying the hands of his enemies, in the night fled to a manor of his ſeruants in the countrey, where he was forced to ſlay himſelfe, complayning that he had then neither friend nor enemie left, that would do ſo much for him. In the latter end of this Domitius Nero, Peter alſo and Paul were put to death for the teſtimonie and faith of Chriſt. an. 69.

Veſpaſian Emperour and Titus his ſonne. The deſtruction of the Iewes.
A note for all Realmes to marke.

Thus ye ſee, which is worthy to be marked, how the iuſt ſcourge and heauie indignation of God from tyme to tyme euer followeth there, and how all things there go to ruine, neither doth any thing well proſper, where Chriſt Ieſus the ſonne of god is contemned, and not receiued, as by theſe examples may appeare, both of Romains which not only were thus conſumed and plagued by their owne Emperors, but alſo by ciuile warres, wherof three were fought in two yeres at Rome, after the death of Nero, and other caſualties (as in Sueton is teſtified) ſo ẏ in the dayes of Tiberius aforeſaid, 5000. Romains were hurt and ſlaine at one time by fal of a Theatre. And alſo moſt eſpecially by the deſtruction of the Iewes, which about this ſame tyme, an. 73. and 40. yeres after the paſſion of Chriſt, and the third yeare after the ſuffering of S. Peter and Paule, were deſtroied by Titus & Veſpaſian his father, (who ſucceeded after Nero in the Empire, to the number of xi. hundred thouſand beſides them which Veſpaſian ſlue in ſubduing the country of Galilie, ouer and beſide them alſo which were ſold and ſent into Egypt and other prouinces, to vile ſlauery, to the number of 17. thouſand, 2000. were brought with Titus in his triumph, of which, part he gaue to be deuoured of the wild beaſts, part otherwiſe moſt cruelly were ſlaine. By whoſe caſe al nations and realmes may take exãple, what it is to reiect the viſitation of Gods veritie being ſent, and much more to perſecute thẽ which be ſent of God for their ſaluation.

And as this wrathfull vengeaunce of God thus hath ben ſhewed vpõ this rebellious people both of the Iewes and of the Romains, for their contempt of Chriſt, whome God ſo puniſhed by their own Emperours, ſo neither the Emperors themſelues, for perſecuting Chriſt in his members eſcaped without their iuſt reward. For amongeſt ſo many Emperours, which put ſo many chriſtian Martyrs to death, during the ſpace of theſe firſt 300. yeares, fewe or none of them ſcaped either not ſlaine thẽſelues, or by ſome miſerable end or other, worthily reuenged. Firſt, of ẏ poiſoning of Tiberius, & of the ſlaughter of the other thre Neroes after him, ſufficiently is declared before. After Nero, Domitius Galba. within 7. monthes was ſlaine by Ottho. And ſo did Ottho afterward ſlay himſelfe, being ouercome by Vitellus. And was not Vitellus ſhortly after drawen through the citie of Rome, and after he was tormẽted, was thrown into Tiber? Titus a good Emperor, is thought to be poyſoned of Domitian his brother. The ſaid Domitian after he had bene a perſecutor of the chriſtians, was ſlaine in his chamber, not without the conſent of his wife. Likewiſe Commodus was murdered of Narciſſus. The like end was of Pertinax and Iulianus. Moreouer, after that Seuerus was ſlayne here in England, and lieth at Yorke, did not his ſonne Baſſianus ſlay his brother Geta, and he after ſlaine of Martialis? Macrinus with his ſonne Diadumenus were both ſlayne, of their owne ſouldiours. After whom Heliagabolus that mõſtrous bellypanch, was of his owne people ſlain, & drawn through the citie, and caſt into Tiber. Alexander Seuerus, that worthy and learned Emperour, which ſayd he would not feede his ſeruants doing nothing, with the bowels of the common wealth, although in life and vertues, was much vnlike other Emperours, yet prooued the like ende, beyng ſlayne at Mentz, with his godly mother Mammea by Maximinus whom the Emperour before of a Muletor had aduaunced to great dignities. The which Maximinus alſo after three yeres was ſlaine himſelfe of his ſouldiours. What ſhould I ſpeake of Maximus, and Balbinus, in like ſort both ſlaine in Rome? Of Gordian ſlaine by Philip: of Philip the firſt chriſtened Emperour, ſlaine or rather martired for the ſame cauſe? of wicked Decius, drowned, and his ſonne ſlaine the ſame time in battail? Of Gallus and Voluſianus his ſõne, Emperours after Decius, both ſlaine by conſpiracie of Æmilianus, who roſe againſt them both in warre, and within three monthes after was ſlaine himſelfe? Next to Æmilianus ſucceded Valerianus and Galianns his ſonne, of whome Valerianus (who was a perſecuter of the Chriſtians) was taken priſoner of the Perſians, and there made a ridyng ſtole of Sapores their king, who vſed him for a ſtoole to leap vp vpon his horſe, while his ſonne Galienus ſleepyng at Rome, either would not, or could not once proferre to reuenge his fathers ignominie. For after the taking of Valerian, ſo many Emperors roſe vp as were prouinces in the Romaine Monarch: At length Galienus alſo was killed by Aureolus, which warred againſt him. It were too long here to ſpeake of Aurelianus an other perſecuter, ſlain of his Secretarie: Of Tacitus and Florinus his brother, of whom the firſt raigned 6. months, and was ſlaine at Pontus, the other raigned two months, and was murdred at Tarſis. Of Probus, who although a good ciuill Emperour, yet was he deſtroied by his ſouldiers. After whom Carus the next emperour was ſlaine by lightning. Next to Carus followed the impious and wicked perſecuter Diocleſian, with his fellowes Maximian, Galerius, Maximinus, Maxentius, and Licinius, vnder whom all at one time (during the life of Diocleſian) the greateſt and moſt grieuous perſecution was moued againſt the Chriſtians x. yeares together. Of which, Diocleſian and Maximinian depoſed themſelues frõ the Empire. Galerius the chiefeſt miniſter of the perſecution, after his terrible perſecutions, fell into a wonderfull ſickneſſe, hauing ſuch a ſore riſen in the neather part of his belly, which conſumed his priuie members, and ſo did ſwarme with wormes, that being not curable, neither by Surgerie nor Phiſike, he confeſſed, that it happened for his crueltie toward the Chriſtians, and ſo called in his proclamations againſt them. Notwithſtanding, he not able to ſuſtain (as ſome ſay) the ſtench of his ſore ſlue himſelfe. Maximinus in his warre being tormented with payne in his guttes, there died. Maxentius was vanquiſhed by Conſtantine, and drowned in Tiber. Licinius likewiſe beyng ouercome by the ſaid Conſtantine the great, was depoſed from his Empire, and afterward ſlaine of his ſouldiours. But on the other ſide, after the tyme of Conſtantine, when as the fayth of Chriſt was receiued into Imperiall ſeate, we read of no Emperour after the like ſort deſtroied or moleſted, except it were Iulianus or Baſilius which expelled one Zeno, & was afterward expelled himſelfe: or Valende, beſides theſe we read of no Emperour to come to ruine, as the other before mentioned. Ex lib hiſt. tripart.

And thus haue we in a briefe ſumme collected out of the Chronicles, the vnquiet and miſerable ſtate of the Emperours of Rome, vntill the tyme of Chriſtian Conſtantine, with the examples no leſſe terrible then manifeſt, of Gods ſeuere iuſtice vpon them, for their contemptuous refuſing and perſecuting the faith and name of Chriſt their Lord.

Gods benefites toward England.

A caueat for England.

S. Steuen the firſt ringleader of all Chriſtes Martyrs.

Moreouer, in much like ſort and condition, if leiſure of tyme, or haſte of matter, would ſuffer me a little to digreſſe vnto more lower tymes, and to come more nere home, the like examples I could alſo inferre of this our countrey of England, concerning the terrible plagues of God againſt the churliſh and vnthankfull refuſing or abuſing the benefite of his truth. Firſt, we read how that God ſtirred vp Gildas to preach to the old Britains, and to exhort thē vnto repentance and amendment of life, and afore to warne thē of plagues to come, if they repented not. what auayled it? Gildas was laughed to ſcorne and taken for a falſe prophet, and a malicious preacher. the Britains with luſty courages, whoriſh faces, and vnrepentant hartes, went forth to ſinne, and to offend the Lord their God. what followed? God ſent in their enemies on euery ſide, & deſtroied them, and gaue the land to other nations. Not many yeres paſt, God ſeing idolatry, ſuperſtition, hipocriſie, and wicked liuing vſed in this Realme, rayſed vp that godly learned man Iohn Wickliffe, to preach vnto our fathers repentance, and to exhort them to amend their liues, to forſake their Papiſtry & Idolatry, their hypocriſy, ſuperſtition, and to walke in the feare of God. His exhortations were not regarded, He with his Sermons was deſpiſed. His bookes and he himſelf after his death were burnt, what followed? they ſlue their right king, and ſet vp three wrong kings on a rowe, vnder whom all the noble bloud was ſlaine vp, & halfe the commons thereto, what in Fraunce, & with their own ſword in fighting among themſelues for the crowne, and the Cities and townes decayed, and the land brought halfe to a wildernes, in reſpect of that it was before. O extreme plagues of Gods vengeance. Since that tyme euen of late yeares, God once againe hauing pitie of this realm of England, raiſed vp his prophets, namely, William Tindall, Thomas Bilney, Iohn Frith, Doctor Barnes, Ierome Garret, Anthonie Perſon, with diuers other, which both with their writings and ſermons earneſtly laboured to call vs vnto repentaunce, that by this meanes the fierce wrath of God might be turned away from vs. But how were they intreated? how were their painfull labours regarded? they themſelues were condemned and burnt as heretikes, and their bookes condemned and burnt as heretical. The time ſhall come ſaith Chriſt, that whoſoeuer killeth you, will thinke that he doth God hie good ſeruice. whether any thing ſince that tyme hath ſo chaunced this Realme worthy the name of a plague, let the godly wiſe iudge. If God hath deferred his puniſhment, or forgeuē vs theſe our wicked deedes, as I truſt he hath, let vs not therfore be proud and hie minded, but moſt humbly thanke him for his tender mercies, and beware of the like vngodly enterpriſes hereafter. Neither is it here any neede to ſpeake of theſe our lower and latter tymes, which haue ben in king Henry and king Edwards dayes, ſeeing the memory thereof is yet freſh, and cannot be forgotten. But let this paſſe, of this I am ſure, that God yet once againe is come on viſitation to this church of England, yea and that more louingly & beneficially then euer he did afore. For in this his viſitation he hath redreſſed many abuſes, and cleanſed his church of much vngodlines and ſuperſtition, and made it a glorious Church, if it be compared to the olde forme and ſtate. And now how gratefull receiuers we be, with what hart, ſtudy and reuerence we embrace that which he hath giuen, that I referre either to thē that ſee our fruits, or to the ſequele, which peraduenture will declare. But this by the way of digreſſion. Now to regreſſe againe to the ſtate of the firſt former tymes. It remaineth, that as I haue ſet forth the iuſtice of God vpon theſe Romain perſecutors: ſo now we declare their perſecutions raiſed vp againſt the people and ſeruauntes of Chriſt, within the ſpace of 300. yeares after Chriſt. which perſecutions in number commonly are coūted to be tenne, beſides the perſecutions firſt moued by the Iewes in Hieruſalem and other places againſt the Apoſtles. In the which, firſt S. Steuen the Deacon was put to death, with diuers other moe, in the ſame rage of tyme either ſlaine, or caſt into priſō. At the doing wherof, Saule the ſame tyme playd the doughtie Phariſie, beyng not yet cōuerted to the fayth of Chriſt, wherof the hiſtory is playne in the Actes of the Apoſtles ſet forth at large by S. Luke.

Hiſt. Eccle. lib.2.cap.9. Ex clemente Septimo Hypolypſeon.

A notable conuerſion of a wicked accuſer, and after a martyr.

After the Martyrdome of this bleſſed Steuen, ſuffered next Iames the holy Apoſtle of Chriſt, and brother of Iohn. Of which Iames, mention is made in the Actes of the Apoſtles the xij. chap. where is declared, how that not long after the ſtoning of Stephen, king Herode ſtretched forth his hand, to take and afflict certaine of the cōgregation: among whome Iames was one, whom he ſlew with the ſword, &c. Of this Iames, Euſebius alſo inferreth mention, alleaging Clement, thus writing a memorable ſtory of him. Thus Iames (ſaith Clement) when hee was brought to the tribunall ſeat, he that brought him (& was the cauſe of his trouble) ſeeing him to be condemned, and that he ſhould ſuffer death: as he went to the execution, he being moued therewith in hart and conſcience, confeſſed himſelfe alſo of his owne accord to be a Chriſtian. And ſo were they both led foorth together, where in the way he deſired of Iames to forgiue him that he had done. After that Iames had a little pauſed with him vpon the matter, turning to him Peace (ſayth he) be to thee brother, and kiſſed him, and both were beheaded together, an. 36.

Simon Cananeus crucified.

Simon called Cananeus, which was brother to Iude aboue mentioned, and to Iames the younger, which all were the ſonnes of Mary Cleopha, and of Alpheus, was Biſhop of Hieruſalem after Iames, and was crucified in a Citie of Egypt in the tyme of Traianus Emperour, as Dorotheus recordeth. But Abdias writeth, that hee with his brother Iude, were both ſlayne by a tumult of the people in Suanyr a citie of Parſidis.

Marke the Euangeliſt burned.

Marke the Euangeliſt, and firſt Biſhop of Alexandria, preached the Goſpell in Egypt, and there drawen with ropes vnto the fire, was burned, and afterward buried in a place called there Bucolus, vnder the raigne of Traianus Emperour.

Bartholomew the Apoſtle. crucified and beheaded. Ex Ioan. de Monte Regali.

Bartholomeus is ſayd alſo to preach to the Indians, and to haue conuerted the Goſpell of S. Mathew into their tonge, where he continued a great ſpace doing many miracles. At laſt in Albania a citie of greater Armenia, after diuers perſecutions, he was beaten downe with ſtaues, then crucified, and after being excoriate, he was at length beheaded. Ioan. Andrew the Apoſtle crucified for the Goſpel, Ex Hieronimo in Catologo ſcrip. Eccleſ. Ex Cypriano. lib. De duplici Martyrio Ex Barnardo ſerm 2. de Sanct. Andraa.

The words of Andrew to the Counſell.

Of Andrew the Apoſtle and brother to Peter, thus writeth Ierome in his booke De catalogo ſcriptorum Eccleſ. Andrew the brother of Peter (in the tyme and raigne of Veſpaſianus, as our aunceters haue reported) did preach in the 80. yeare of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt to the Scithians, Sogdians to the Saxons, and in a Citie which is called Anguſtia, where the Ethiopians do now inhabite. He was buried in Patris a citie of Achaia, being crucified of Egeas the gouernour of the Edeſſians: hitherto writeth Ierome. Although in the number of yeares he ſemeth a little to miſſe, for Veſpaſianus reached not to the yere 80. after Chriſt. But Bernard in his ſecond Sermon, and S. Cyprian in his booke De duplici Martyrio, doe make mention of the confeſſion and Martyrdome of this bleſſed Apoſtle, wherof partly out of theſe, partly out of other credible writers we haue collected after this maner: that when as Andrew being conuerſant in a Citie of Achaia called Patris, through his diligent preaching had brought many to the faith of Chriſt: Egeas the gouernour knowing this, reſorted thither to the intēt he might conſtraine as many as did beleeue Chriſt to bee God, by the whole conſent of the Senate, to doe ſacrifice vnto the Idols, and ſo geue diuine honor vnto them. Andrew thinking good at the beginning to reſiſt the wicked counſaile, and the doings of Egeas, went vnto him, ſaying in this effect vnto him: that it behooued him which was Iudge of men, firſt to know his Iudge which dwelleth in heauen, and then to worſhip him being knowen, and ſo in worſhipping the true God, to reuoke his mynd from falſe Gods and blynd Idols. Theſe wordes ſpake Andrew to the Conſul.

The feruencie of Andrew agaynſt Idolatry.

But he greatly therwith diſcontented, demaunded of him whether he was the ſame Andrew that did ouerthrow the Temple of yͤ gods, and perſwaded men of that ſuperſtitious ſect, which the Romaines of late had commaunded to be aboliſhed and reiected. Andrew did plainely affirme that the Princes of the Romains did not vnderſtand the truth, & that the ſonne of God comming from heauen into the world for mans ſake, hath taught & declared how theſe Idols, whom they ſo honoured as Gods, were not only not gods, but alſo moſt cruell Deuils, moſt enemies to mankind, teaching ẏ people nothing els, but that wherwith God is offended, and being offended turneth away and regardeth them not, and ſo by the wicked ſeruice of the Deuill doe fall headlong into all wickedneſſe, and after their departing, nothing remaineth vnto them, but their euill deedes.

But the Proconſul eſteeming theſe thinges to bee as vayne, eſpecially ſeing the Iewes (as he ſaid) had crucified Chriſt before, therfore charged and commaunded Andrew not to teach and preach ſuch thinges any more, or if he did, that he ſhould be faſtened to the croſſe with all ſpeede.

Andrew abiding in his former mynd very conſtãt, anſwered thus concerning the puniſhment which he threatened, he would not haue preached the honour and glory of the croſſe, if he had feared the death of the croſſe. wherupon ſentence of condemnation was pronounced, that Andrew teaching and enterpriſing a new ſect, and taking away the religion of their gods ought to be crucified. Andrew commyng to the place, and ſeyng a farre of the croſſe prepared, did chaunge neither countenance nor colour, as the imbecillitie of mortal men is wont to do, neither did his bloud ſhrinke, neither did he faile in his ſpeech, his body faynted not, neither was his mynd moleſted, his vnderſtanding did not fayle him, as it is the maner of men to do, but out of the aboundance of his hart his mouth did ſpeake. And feruent charitie did appeare in his words as kindled ſparcles. He ſaid, O croſſe moſt welcome and long looked for with a willing mynde, ioyfully and deſirouſly I come to thee, beyng the Scholer of him which did hang on thee: Becauſe I haue bene alwayes thy louer and haue coueted to embrace thee. So beyng crucified, he yelded vp the Ghoſt and fell on ſleepe, the day before the Calendes of December.

The conſtant fayth of Andrew to the end.

The croſſe here is not taken for the materiall croſſe of wood: but for the maner of death vpon the Croſſe whiche death was to him welcome.

Mathew otherwiſe named Leui, firſt of a Publicane made an Apoſtle, wrote his goſpell to the Iewes in ẏ Hebrue tongue, as recordeth Euſebius, lib. 3. 24. 39. lib 5. cap. 8. cap. 10. Item, the ſtraight prohibition not to taſte any bodily ſuſtenance, before the receiuing of the Lordes ſupper. James Byſhop of Ieruſalem.

✻ Of Iames the brother of the Lord, thus we read in the ſtory of Clement and Egeſippus.

After that Feſtus had ſent the Apoſtle Paul vnto Rome after his appellatiõ made at Cæſaria, & that the Iewes by the meanes thereof had loſt their hope of performing their malicious vow againſt him conceiued, they fel vpon Iames the brother of our Lord, who was biſhop at Ieruſalem, againſt whom they being bent with like malice, brought him forth before them, and required him to denye before all the people the faith of Chriſt. But he otherwiſe then they all looked for, freely and with a greater conſtancie before all the multitude, confeſſed Ieſus to be the ſonne of God, our Sauiour, and our Lord. Wherupon, they not being able to abide the teſtimonie of this man any longer, becauſe he was thought to be the iuſteſt among all, for the highnes of deuine wiſedome, and godlineſſe, which in liuing he declared, they killed him, finding the more opportunitie to accompliſh their miſchiefe, becauſe the kingdom the ſame tyme was vacant. For Feſtus being dead in Iewrie, the adminiſtration of that prouince was deſtitute of a ruler, and a deputie. But after what maner Iames was killed, the words of Clement do declare, which writeth that he was caſt downe from the pinacle of the temple, and being ſmitten with the inſtrument of a Fuller was ſlain, but Egeſippus which liued in the tyme next after the Apoſtles, deſcribeth this cauſe diligently, in his fift Commentarie, after this maner as followeth.

Ex Clemente.
Ex Egeſippo in Commentario.

Iames the brother of our Lord, tooke in hand to gouern the Church after the Apoſtles (beyng counted of all men from the tyme of our Lord to be a iuſt and perfect man.) Many and diuers other Iameſes there were beſide him, but this was borne holy from his mothers wombe, he dronke no wine, nor any ſtrong drinke. neither did he eate any liuing creature, the raſor neuer came vpon his head, he was not annointed with oyle, neither did he vſe bathe, to him onely was it lawfull to enter into the holy place, neyther was he clothed with woollen cloth, but with ſilke, and he onely entred into the temple, falling vpon his knees, aſking remiſſion for the people, ſo that his knees by ofte kneling, loſt the ſence of feeling, being benummed & hardened like the knees of a Camell. He was (for worſhipping God and crauing forgiuenes for the people) called iuſt, & for the excellencie of his iuſt life named Oblias, which (if you do interprete it) is the ſauegard, and iuſtice of the people as the Prophets declare of him: therefore when as many of the heretikes which were among the people aſked him what maner of dore Ieſus ſhould be, he anſwered that he was the Sauiour. Wherof ſome do beleue him to be Ieſus Chriſt, but the aforeſaid heretikes neither beleue the reſurrection, neither that any ſhall come, which ſhal render vnto euery man according to his workes, but as many as beleue, they beleued for Iames cauſe. When as many therefore of the Princes did beleue, there was a tumult made of the Scribes, Iewes, and Phariſeis, ſaying: it is daungerous leaſt that all the people do looke for this Ieſus, as for Chriſt, therfore they gathered themſelues togither, & ſayd vnto Iames: we beſeech thee reſtrain the people, for they beleue in Ieſus, as though he were Chriſt. We pray thee perſwade them all which come vnto the feaſt of the Paſſeouer of Ieſus, for we are all obedient vnto thee, and all the people do teſtifie of thee that thou art iuſt, neither that thou doeſt accept the perſon of any man, therefore perſwade the people that they be not deceiued in Ieſus, and all the people, and we will obey thee, therfore ſtand vpon the piller of the temple, that thou mayeſt be ſeene from aboue, and that thy wordes may be perceiued of all the people, for to this paſſeouer all the tribes do come with all the countrey. And thus the forenamed Scribes, and Phariſeis did ſet Iames vpon the battlements of the Church, and they cried vnto him and ſayd, thou iuſt man whom all we ought to obey, becauſe this people is led after Ieſus, which is crucified, tell what is the dore of Ieſus crucified: and he anſwered with a great voyce, what do you aſke me of Ieſus ẏ ſonne of man, ſeeyng that he ſitteth on the right hand of God in heauen, and ſhall come in the cloudes of the ſkie? But whẽ many were perſuaded of this, they glorified God vpon the witnes of Iames, and ſayd: Oſanna in the higheſt to the ſonne of Dauid. Then the Scribes and the Phariſeis ſayd among themſelues, we haue done euill that we haue cauſed ſuch a teſtimony of Ieſus. But let vs go vp and let vs take him, that they being compelled with feare, may deny that faith. And they cried out, ſaying: O, O, this iuſt man alſo is ſeduced, and they fulfilled that Scripture which is ſpoken of in Eſay. Let vs take away the iuſt man, becauſe he is not profitable for vs: wherfore let them eat the fruits of their workes. Therfore they went vp to throwe downe the iuſt man, and ſaid among themſelues: let vs ſtone this iuſt man Iames, & they toke him to ſmite him with ſtones for he was not yet dead whẽ he was caſt downe, but he turning, fell downe vpon his knees, ſaying: O Lord God, Father, I beſeech thee to forgeue them, for they know not what they do. But whẽ they had ſmitten him with ſtones one of the prieſts of the children of Rechas, the ſonne of Charobim, ſpake to them the teſtimonie which is in Ieremie the Prophet: leaue off, what do ye? The iuſt man praieth for you. And one of thoſe which were preſent, tooke a Fullers inſtrument, wherwith they did vſe to beat and purge cloth, and ſmote the iuſt man on his head, and ſo he finiſhed his Martyrdome, and they buried him in the ſame place, & his piller abideth yet by the temple. He was a true teſtimonie to the Iewes and the Gentiles. And ſhortly after Veſpaſianus the Emperour deſtroying the land of Iewrie, brought them into captiuitie. Theſe thinges being thus written at large of Egeſippus, do well agree to thoſe which Clement did write of him. This Iames was ſo notable a man, that for his iuſtice he was had in honour of all men, in ſo much that the wiſe men of the Iewes ſhortly after his Martyrdome did impute the cauſe of the beſieging of Ieruſalem and other calamities which happened vnto thē to no other cauſe, but vnto the violence and iniurie done to this man. Alſo Ioſephus hath not left this out of his hiſtorie, where he ſpeaketh of him after this maner: Theſe things ſo chanced vnto the Iewes for a vengeance becauſe of that iuſt man Iames which was the brother of Ieſu, whō they called Chriſt, for the Iewes killed him although he was a righteous man.

Ioſephus lib. 20.

The ſame Ioſephus declareth his death in the ſame booke and chapter, ſaying: Cæſar hearing of the death of Feſtus, ſent Albinus the Lieuetenant into Iewrie, but Ananus the yonger, being biſhop, and of the ſect of the Saduces, truſting that he had obtained a conuenient tyme, ſeing that Feſtus was dead, and Albinus entred on his iourney, he called a Councell, and calling many vnto him, among whom was Iames by name the brother of Ieſu which is called Chriſt, he ſtoned them, accuſing them as breakers of the law.

Martyrs.

Whereby it appeareth, that many other beſides Iames alſo the ſame tyme were Martyred and put to death amōg the Iewes, for the faith of Chriſt.

A deſcription of the X. firſt perſecutions in the Primitiue Church.

The firſt x. perſecutions in the primitiue Church.

These thinges being thus declared for the Martyrdome of the Apoſtles, and the perſecutiō of the Iewes. Now let vs (by yͤ grace of Chriſt our Lord) comprehend with like breuitie, the perſecutions raiſed by the Romaines, againſt the Chriſtians in the Primitiue age of the Church, during the ſpace of 300. yeares, till the comming of godly Conſtantine, which perſecutions are reckoned of Euſebius, and by the moſt part of writers, to the number of x. moſt ſpeciall.

The ſondry tormentes of the holy Martyrs in the Primitiue Church.

Wherin meruailous it is, to ſee and read the numbers incredible of Chriſtian innocents that were ſlaine and tormented, ſome one way, ſome an other. As Rabanus ſaith, & ſaith truly. Alij ferro perempti. Alij flammis exuſti. Alij flagris verberati. Alij vectibus perforati. Alij cruciati patibulo. Alij demerſi pelagi periculo. Alij viui decoriati. Alij vinculis mancipati. Alij linguis priuati. Alij lapidibus obruti. Alij frigore afflicti. Alij fame cruciati. Alij truncatis manibus, aliiſue cæſis membris ſpectaculum contumeliæ, nudi propter nomen Domini portantes, &c. That is, Some ſlaine with ſword. Some burnt with fire. Some with whips ſcourged. Some ſtabbed in with forkes of iron. Some faſtned to the croſſe or gibbet. Some drowned in the ſea. Some their ſkinnes pluckt of. Some their tongues cut off. Some ſtoned to death. Some killed with cold. Some ſtarued with hunger. Some their hands cut off or otherwiſe diſmembred, haue bene ſo left naked to the open ſhame of the world, &c. Whereof Auguſtine alſo in his booke De Ciuit. 22. cap. 6. thus ſaith: Ligabantur, includebantur, cædebantur, torquebantur, vrebantur, laniabantur, trucidabantur, multiplicabantur, non pugnantes pro ſalute, ſed ſalutem contemnentes pro ſeruatore. Whoſe kindes of puniſhments although they were diuers, yet the maner of conſtancie in all theſe Martyrs was one. And yet notwithſtāding the ſharpenes of theſe ſo many and ſundry tormēts, and like cruelnes of the tormentors: yet ſuch was the nūber of theſe conſtant Saintes that ſuffered, or rather ſuch was the power of the Lord in his Saints, that as Hierome in his Epiſtle to Chromatius, and Heliodorus ſaith: Nullus eſſet dies qui non vltra quinq; millium numerum Martyrum reperiri poſſet aſcriptus excepto die Kalendarum Ianuarij. That is, There is no day in the whole yeare, vnto which the nūber of fiue thouſand Martyrs cannot be aſcribed, except onely the firſt day of Ianuary.

Hiſtor. Eccleſi. Lib. 2. Cap. 24. 25. 26.

The firſt of theſe x. perſecutions, was ſtirred vp by Nero Domitius, the vj. Emperour before mentioned, about the yeare of our Lord, 67. The tyrannous rage of which Emperour, was ſo fierce againſt the Chriſtians (as Euſebius recordeth) Vſq; adeò vt videres repletas humanis corporibus ciuitates, iacentes mortuos ſimul cum paruulis ſenes: foeminarúmq; abſq; vlla ſexus reuerentia nudata in publico, reiectáq; ſtarent cadauera. That is, In ſo much that a man might then ſee cities lye full of mens bodies, the old there lying together with the yong, and the dead bodies of women caſt out naked, without all reuerence of that ſexe in the opē ſtreets. &c. Likewiſe Oroſius writing of the ſaid Nero, ſaith, that he was the firſt which in Rome did raiſe vp perſecution againſt the Chriſtians, and not onely in Rome, but alſo through all the prouinces therof, thinking to aboliſh and to deſtroy the whole name of Chriſtians in all places, &c. Whereunto accordeth moreouer the teſtimonie of Hierome vpon Daniel, ſaying: that many there were of the Chriſtians in thoſe dayes, which ſeyng the filthy abominations, and intollerable crueltie of Nero, thought that he ſhould be Antichriſt, &c.

Oroſius, Lib. 7. Nero thought to be Antichriſt.

S. Peter the Apoſtle, crucified at Rome.

In this perſecution, among many other Saintes the bleſſed Apoſtle Peter was condemned to death, and crucified as ſome doe write, at Rome, albeit otherſome, and not without cauſe doe doubt thereof, concerning whoſe lyfe and hyſtory, becauſe it is ſufficiently deſcribed in the text of the Goſpell, and in the Actes of S. Luke. chap. 4. 5. 12. I neede not heere to make any great repetytion therof. As touching the cauſe and maner of hys death, diuers ther be, which make relation, as Hierome, Egeſippus, Euſebius, Abdias, and other: although they doe not all preciſely agree in the tyme. The wordes of Hierome be theſe: Simon Peter the ſonne of Iona, of the prouince of Galile, and of the Towne of Bethſaida, the brother of Andrew. &c. After hee had bene Byſhop of the Church of Antioch, and had preached to the diſperſion of them that beleued, of the Circumciſion in Pontus, Galacia, Capadocia, Aſia, and Bithinia in the ſecond yeare of Claudius, the Emperour, (whiche was about the yeare of our Lord. 44.) came to Rome, to withſtand Simon Magus, and there kept the prieſtly chayre, the ſpace of *25. yeares, vntill the laſt yeare of the forelayd Nero, which was the 14. yeare of hys raygne, of whome he was crucified, hys head being downe, and his feete vpward, himſelfe ſo requiring, becauſe he was (he ſayd) vnworthy to be crucified after the ſame forme and maner, as the Lord was. &c. Egeſippus, proſecuting this matter ſomething more at large, and Abdias, alſo, (if any authoritie is to be geuen to hys booke, who following not onely the ſenſe, but alſo the very forme of wordes of Egeſippus in this Hyſtory, ſeemeth to be extracted out of him, and of other authors) ſayth, that Simon Magus being then a great man with Nero, and his preſident and keeper, of hys life, was required vppon a tyme to be preſent at the rayſing vp of a certayne noble young man in Rome, of Neros kindred, lately departed. Wheras Peter alſo was deſired to come to the reuiuing of the ſayd perſonage. But when Magus in the preſence of Peter could not doe it: Then Peter calling vpon the name of the Lord Ieſus, dyd rayſe him vp, and reſtored him to hys mother, wherby the eſtimation of Simon Magus, began greatly to decay, and to be deteſted in Rome. Not long after the ſayd Magus threatned the Romaynes, that he would leaue the Citie and in their ſight flye away from them into heauen. So the day being appoynted Magus taking hys winges in the Mounte Capitolinus, began to flye in the ayre. But Peter by the power of the Lord Ieſus brought him downe with his winges headlong to the ground, by the whiche fall hys legges and ioyntes were broken, and he thereupon dyed. Then Nero ſorrowing for the death of him, ſought matter agaynſt Peter to put hym to death. Which when the people perceiued, they entreated Peter with much a doe, that he would flye the Citie. Peter through their importunitie at length perſwaded, prepared himſelfe to auoyd. But comming to the gate he ſawe the Lord Chriſt come to meete him, to whom he worſhipping ſayd: Lord whether doeſt thou goe? To whome he aunſwered and ſayd, I come agayne to be crucified. By this Peter perceauing hys ſuffering to be vnderſtanded, returned backe into the Citty agayne. And ſo was he crucified, in maner as is before declared. And this out of Egeſippus.

Euſebius moreouer, writing of the death not onely of Peter, but alſo of his wife, affirmeth, that Peter ſeeing his wife goyng to her Martyrdom (belike as he was yet hanging vpon the croſſe) was greatly ioyous and glad thereof, who crying vnto her with a loud voyce, and calling her by her name, bade her remember the Lord Ieſus. Such was then (ſaith Euſebius) the bleſſed bonde of Mariage among the Saintes of God. And thus much of Peter.

Paule the Apoſtle, which before was called Saule, after his great trauail and vnſpeakable labours in promoting the Goſpell of Chriſt, ſuffred alſo in this firſt perſecution vnder Nero, and was beheaded. Of whom thus writeth Hierome in his Booke De viris illuſtr. Paule, otherwiſe called Saule, one of the Apoſtles, yet out of the number of xij. was of the tribe of Beniamin, and of a towne of Iewrie called Giſcalis: which towne beyng taken of the Romains, he with his parents fled to Tharſus a town of Cilicia. Afterward was ſent vp by his parents to Hieruſalē, and there brought vp in the knowledge of the law, at the feete of Gamaliel, and was at the death of Stephen a doer. And when he had receiued letters from the high Prieſt to perſecute the Chriſtians, by the way going to Damaſcus, was ſtroken downe of the Lordes glory, and of a perſecutor, was made a profeſſor, an Apoſtle, a Martyr, a witneſſe of the Goſpell, and a veſſell of election.

Saulus turned to Paulus. Paule ſent to the Gentiles.

Among his other manifold labors & trauails in ſpreading the doctrine of Chriſt, he wan Sergius Paulus, the Proconſul of Cyprus, to the faith of Chriſt, whereupon he toke his name as ſome ſuppoſe, turned from Saulus to Paulus. After he had paſſed through diuers places and countries in his laborious peregrinations, he toke to him Barnabas, and went vp to Hieruſalem, to Peter, Iames, and Iohn, where he was ordained and ſent out with Barnabas to preach vnto the Gentils.

Act.28.

2.Tim.4.

And becauſe it is in the Actes of the Apoſtles ſufficiently comprehended, concerning the admirable conuerſion, & conuerſation of this moſt worthy Apoſtle, that which remaineth of the reſt of his hiſtory, I will here adde, how the ſayd Apoſtle Paule, the 25. yere after the paſſion of the lord, in the ſecond yeare of Nero, what tyme Feſtus ruled in Iewrie, was ſent vp in bondes to Rome, where he remaining in his free hoſterie two yeares together, diſputed daily againſt the Iewes, prouing Chriſt to be come. And here is to be noted, that after his firſt anſwer or purgation there made at Rome, the Emperor Nero, not yet fully confirmed in his Empire, & yet not burſting out into thoſe miſchiefs, which hiſtories report of him, he was at that tyme by Nero diſcharged, and dimiſſed to preach the Goſpell in the weſt partes and about the coaſtes of Italy, as he himſelfe writing vnto Timothie, afterward in his ſecond apprehenſion, in his ſecond Epiſtle witneſſeth, ſaying: In my firſt purgation, no man ſtode with me, but did all forſake me, the Lord lay it not to their charge. But the Lord ſtood with me, & did comfort me, that the preaching of his word might proceed by me, & that all the Gentiles might heare and be taught, and I was deliuered out of the Lions mouth, &c. In which place by the Lion he plainly meaneth Nero. And afterward likewiſe ſaith: I was deliuered from the mouth of the Lion, &c. And againe, the Lord hath deliuered me out from all euill workes, and hath ſaued me vnto his heauenly kingdom, &c. ſpeaking this, becauſe he perceiued thẽ the tyme of his Martyrdome to be nere at hand. For in the ſame Epiſtle before, he ſaith: I am now offred vp, and the tyme of my diſſolution draweth on.

The Epiſtles of S. Paule to vii. Churches.

Thus then, this worthy preacher and meſſenger of the Lord, in the 14. yeare of Nero, and the ſame day in which Peter was crucified (although not in the ſame yeare as ſome write, but in the next yeare following) was beheaded at Rome for the teſtimonie of Chriſt, and was buried in the way of Oſtia. The yeare after the paſſion of the Lord 37. He wrote ix. Epiſtles to ſeuen Churches: to the Romains one, to the Corinthians two, to the Galathiãs one, to the Epheſians one, to the Philippians one, to the Coloſſians one, to the Theſſalonians two. Moreouer, he wrote to his Diſciples, to Timothie two, to Titus one, to Philemon one.

The Epiſtle to the Hebrues.

The Epiſtle which beareth the title to the Hebrues, is not thought to be his, for the difference of the ſtile & phraſe, but either iudged to be written of Timothie, as Tertullian ſuppoſeth, or of S. Luke as other do thinke: or els of Clement afterward Biſhop of Rome, who as they ſay, was adioyned with Paul, and compiling together his ſayings and ſentences, did phraſe them in his ſtile and maner. Or els, as ſome do iudge, becauſe S. Paul wrote vnto the Hebrues, for the odiouſnes of his name among that people, therefore he diſſimuled, and confeſſed his name in the firſt entre of his ſalutation, contrary to his accuſtomed condition. And as he wrote to the Hebrues he being an Hebrue, ſo he wrote in Hebrue, yͭ is, in his own tongue more eloquently. And that is thought to be the cauſe why it differeth from his other Epiſtles, and is after a more eloquent maner tranſlated into the Greeke, then his other Epiſtles be. Some alſo read the Epiſtle written to Laodicea, but that is exploſed of all men. Thus much Hierome.

The Epiſtle to Laodicea

Abdias de Viris.lib.2.

As touching the tyme and order of the death and Martyrdome of S. Paule, as Euſebius, Hierome, Maximus and other authors doe but briefly paſſe ouer: So Abdias (if his booke be of any ſubſtãtial authoritie) ſpeaking more largely of the ſame doth ſay: that after the crucifying of Peter, & the ruine of Simon Magus, Paule yet remayning in free cuſtody, was dimiſſed and deliuered at that time from Martyrdome by Gods permiſſion, that all the Gentiles might be repleniſhed with preaching of the Goſpell by him.

Paule declareth his doctrine to the Emperour.

The ſumme of Paules doctrine.

And the ſame Abdias proceeding in his ſtory, declareth moreouer, that as Paule was thus occupied at Rome, he was accuſed to the Emperour, not onely for teaching new doctrine, but alſo for ſtirring vp ſedition againſt the Empire. For this he being called before Nero, and demaunded to ſhew the order and maner of his doctrine, there declared what his doctrine was, to teach all men peace and charitie how to loue one an other, how to preuent one an other in honor, rich mẽ not to be puft in pride, nor to put their truſt in their treaſures, but in the liuing God. Meane men to be contented with foode and rayment, and with their preſent ſtate. Pore mẽ to reioyce in their pouertie with hope. Fathers to bring vp their children in the feare of God. Children to obey their parents. Huſbandes to loue their wiues. Wiues to be ſubiect vnto their huſbands. Citizens and ſubiects to giue their tribute vnto Cæſar and to be ſubiect to their magiſtrates. Maiſters to be curteous not curriſh to their ſeruaunts. Seruants to deale faithfully with their maiſters. And this to be the ſumme of his teaching, which his doctrine he receiued not of men nor by men, but by Ieſus Chriſt, and the father of glory, which ſpake to him from heauen, the Lord Ieſus ſaying to him, that he ſhould goe and preach in his name, and that he would be with him, and would be the ſpirit of life to all that beleued in him. and that whatſoeuer he did or ſaid, he would iuſtifie it, &c. After that Paule had thus declared vnto the Emperour, ſhortly after ſentence of death was pronounced againſt him, that he ſhould be headed. Unto whoſe executiõ then Nero ſent two of his Eſquiers Ferega, and Parthemius to bring him word of his death. They comming to Paule, inſtructing then the people, deſired him to pray for them that they might beleue. who told them that ſhortly after they ſhould beleue, and be baptiſed at his Sepulchre (as Abdias writeth.) This done, the ſouldiours came and led him out of the Citie to the place of execution, where he after his prayers made, gaue his necke to the ſword. Abdias reporteth, that as his head was ſtrokẽ off, in ſtead of blood iſſued out white milke, and that at laying downe his head he ſigned himſelfe with the ſigne of a croſſe in his forehead, but this being found in no other hiſtorie, Abdias ſemeth either to adde of his own, or els to borow out of the Legend as he doth many other things beſide, whereof more ſhalbe ſayd (Chriſt willing) hereafter. Although the ſame miracle of milke flowing out of his necke, is referred alſo vnto Ambroſe, who in his ſermon 68. (if it be not counterfaited) ſeemeth to affirme the ſame. Of the tyme and yeare when theſe bleſſed Apoſtles did ſuffer, hiſtories doe not all agree. They that follow the commõ opinion, and the Popes decrees ſay, that both Peter and Paul ſuffred both in one day and in one yeare, which opinion ſemeth to be taken out of Dionyſius biſhop of Corinth. Hierome in his booke De viris illuſtr. affirmeth that they ſuffred both in one day, but he expreſſeth not the yeare. So doth Iſidorus and Euſebius. Symon Metaphraſtes bringeth in the opinion of ſome, which thinke that Paul ſuffred not with Peter, but after Peter. Prudentius in his Periſtephano, noteth that they both were put to death vpon the ſame day, but not in the ſame yere, and ſaith that Paule followed Peter a yeare after.

The ſtory of Abdias ſuſpected.

Hiſtoryes doe varry about the tyme of their Martyrdome.

If this be true that Prudẽtius recordeth of Paule to ſuffer vnder Nero, and the yeare after Peter: then is it falſe, which Hierome before teſtifieth, Peter to ſuffer the laſt yeare of Nero.

Abdias aboue mentioned, recordeth that Paule ſuffered two yeares after Peter. Moreouer, if it be true which Abdias ſaith, that after the crucifiyng of Peter, Paul remained in his fyare cuſtody at Rome, mẽtioned in the Actes of the Apoſtles, which was as Hierom witneſſeth the 3. or 4. yere of Nero, then muſt it be x. yeare betwixt the Martyrdome of Peter and of Paule, for as much as it is by all writers confeſſed, that Paule ſuffered the 14. yeare, which was the laſt yeare of Nero. And ſo Abdias ſeemeth neither to agree with other authors, nor with himſelfe. And thus much of the firſt perſecution.

❧ The ſecond Perſecution.

The ſecond perſecution. Anno. 69.

THe firſt Romaine perſecution beginning vnder Nero, as is aforeſaid, ceaſed vnder Veſpaſianus who gaue ſome reſt to the pore Chriſtians. After whoſe raigne was moued not long after the ſecond perſecution, by the Emperor Domitian brother of Titus. Of whome Euſebius and Oroſius ſo write, that he firſt beginning mildly, afterward did ſo farre outrage in pride intollerable, that he commaunded himſelf to be worſhipped as God, and that images of gold and ſiluer in his honour ſhould be ſet vp in Capitolio. The chiefeſt nobles of the Senators, either vpon enuy, or for their goodes, he cauſed to be put to death, ſome openly, and ſome he ſent into baniſhment, there cauſing them to be ſlaine priuilie.

Ex Oroſio. Lib.7.

The tyranny and intemperaunce of Domitian.

And as his tiranny was vnmeaſurable, ſo the intemperancie of his life was no leſſe. He put to death all the nephewes of Iuda, called the Lordes brother, and cauſed to be ſought out, and to be ſlayne all that could be found of the ſtocke of Dauid (as Veſpaſian alſo did before him) for feare leaſt he were yet to come of the houſe of Dauid, which ſhould enioy the kingdome. Iſidorus de patribus noui Teſtamenti.

In this perſecution Iohn the Apoſtle and Euangeliſt was exiled by the ſayd Domitianus into Pathmos. Of whō diuers and ſundry memorable actes, be reported in ſundry Chronicles. As firſt how he was put in a veſſell of boiling Oile, by the Proconſul of Epheſus. The Legend and Perionius ſay, it was done at Rome. Iſidorus alſo writing of him and comprehending many things in few wordes, declareth that he turned certaine peeces of wood into gold, and ſtones by the ſea ſide into Margarites, to ſatiſfie the deſire of two, whom he had before perſwaded to renounce their riches: And afterward they repenting that for worldly treaſure, they had loſt heauen, for their ſakes agayne he changed the ſame into their former ſubſtance. Alſo, how he raiſed vp a widow and a certaine yong man from death to life. How he dronke poiſon, and it hurt him not, raiſing alſo to life two which had dronke the ſame before. Theſe and ſuch other miracles, although they may be true, & are foūd in Iſidorus & other writers mo, yet becauſe they are no articles of our Chriſtian belief, I let them paſſe, and only content my ſelfe with that which I read in Euſebius, declaring of him in this wiſe: That in the 14. yeare after Nero, in the ſecond perſecution, in the dayes of Domitian, Iohn was baniſhed into Pathmos for the teſtimonie of the word, an. 97. And after the death of the foreſaid Domitian being ſlaine, & his actes repealed by the Senate, Iohn was againe releaſed vnder Pertinax the Emperor, & came to Epheſus, an. 100. where he continued vntill the tyme of Traianus, & there gouerned the Churches in Aſia, where alſo he wrote his Goſpell, and ſo liued till the yeare after the Paſſion of our Lord, 68. which was the yeare of his age. 99.

Anno. 97.

Iohn baniſhed. Iohn releaſed out of baniſhement.

Moreouer, in the foreſayd Eccleſiaſticall ſtory of Euſebius, we read that Iohn the Apoſtle and Euangeliſt, whō the Lord did loue, was in Aſia, where he being returned out of Pathmos, after the death of Domitian, gouerned the Churches and congregations. Irenæus in his ſecond booke thus writeth: And of him all the Elders do witnes, which were with Iohn the Diſciple of the Lord in Aſia, that he ſpake and wrote theſe thinges, &c. for there he continued with them vnto the tyme of Traianus, &c. Alſo the ſaid Irenæus, Lib. 3. Hypotheſ. in like wordes declareth, ſaying: The Church of the Epheſians being firſt founded by Paul, afterward beyng confirmed of Iohn, (who continued in the ſame Citie vnto the tyme of Traianus the Emperour) is a true witneſſe of this Apoſtolicall tradition, &c. Clemens Alexandrinus moreouer noteth, both the tyme of this holy Apoſtle, and alſo addeth to the ſame a certain hiſtory of him, not vnworthy to bee remembred of ſuch which delite in things honeſt and profitable. Of the which hiſtorie Sozomenus alſo in his Commentaries maketh mention. The wordes of the author ſetting forth this hiſtorie, be theſe: Heare a fable, and not a fable, but a true report which is told vs of Iohn the Apoſtle, deliuered and commended to our remembrance. After the death of the tyrant, whē Iohn was returned to Epheſus, from the Ile of Pathmos: he was deſired to reſort to the places bordering neare vnto him, partly to conſtitute biſhops, partly to diſpoſe the cauſes and matters of the church, partly to ordaine and ſet ſuch of the Clergy in office, whom the holy ghoſt ſhould elect. Wherupon, when he was come to a certaine citie not farre of, the name of which alſo, many do yet remember, and had among other thinges comforted the brethren, he looking more earneſtly vpon him which was the chiefe biſhop among them, beheld a yong man mighty in body, and of a beautiful countenance, and of a feruent mind. I commend this man (ſaith he) to thee with great diligence, in the witneſſe here of Chriſt and of the Church.

Euſeb. lib. 3. Cap. 23.

Iren. Lib. 3. Clemens Alexandrinus.

A notable hiſtory of Iohn the Euangeliſt.

When the Biſhop had receiued of him this charge, and had promiſed his faithfull diligence therein. Agayne the ſecond tyme Iohn ſpake vnto him and deſired him in like maner and conteſtatiō as before. This done, Iohn returneth againe to Epheſus. The Biſhop receiuing the yong man, commēded & committeth to his charge, brought him home, kept him and nouriſhed him, and at length alſo did illuminate, (that is) he baptiſed him. And in ſhort tyme through his diligence, brought him into ſuch order and towardnes, that he cōmitted vnto him the ouerſight of a certaine cure in the Lordes behalfe. The yong man thus hauing more his libertie, it chanced that certaine of his companions & old familiars being idle, diſſolute, & accuſtomed of old time to wickednes, did ioyne in company with him. Who firſt brought him to ſumptuous & riotous bankets. Then entiſed him forth with them in the night to rob and ſteale. After that, he was allured by thē vnto greater miſchiefe and wickedneſſe. Wherin by cuſtome of tyme by litle and litle, he being more practiſed, and being of a good wit, and a ſtout courage, like vnto a wild or an vnbrokē horſe, leauing the right way & running at large without bridle, was caried headlong to the profunditie of all miſorder and outrage. And thus being paſt all hope of grace, vtterly forgetting and reiecting the wholeſome doctrine of ſaluatiō, which he had learned before, began to ſet his mynde vpon no ſmall matters. And foraſmuch as he was entred ſo farre in the way of perdition, he cared not how further he proceded in the ſame. And ſo aſſociating vnto him the company of his companions, and fellow thieues, toke vpon him to be as head and captaine among them, in committing all kynd of murther and felony.

What wicked company doth.

In the meane time it chaunced, that of neceſſitie Iohn was ſent for to thoſe quarters againe, and came. The cauſes being decided, and his buſines ended, for the which he came, by the way meeting with the Biſhop afore ſpecified, requireth of him the pledge, which in the witnes of Chriſt and of the congregation then preſent, he left in his handes to keepe. The biſhop ſomething amaſed at the wordes of Iohn, ſuppoſing he had meant of ſome money committed to his cuſtody, which he had not receiued, and yet durſt not miſtruſt Iohn, nor contrary his wordes could not tell what to aunſwer. Then Iohn perceauing his doubtyng, and vtteryng his mynde more plainely: The yong man (ſaith he) and the ſoule of our brother committed to your cuſtody, I do require. Then the biſhop with a loude voice, ſorrowing and weeping, ſaid, he is dead: to whom Iohn ſaid, how? And by what death? The other ſaid, he is dead to God: for he is become an euill man, and pernicious, to be briefe, a thiefe: & now he doth frequent this mountaine with a company of villains and thieues, like vnto himſelfe againſt the Church. But the Apoſtle renting his garmēts, and with great lamentation, ſaid, I haue left a good keper of my brothers ſoule. Get me a horſe, and let mee haue a guide with me, which being done, his horſe and man procured, haſted from the Churche as much as he could, and comming to the ſame place, was taken of theeues yͭ watched. But he neyther flying, nor refuſing ſayd: I came for this ſame cauſe hither, lead me (ſayd he) to your captayne. So he being brought, the captaine all armed, fiercely begā to looke vpon him. And eftſoones comming to the knowledge of him, was ſtroken with confuſion and ſhame, and began to flie. But the olde man followed him as much as he might, forgetting his age and crying: My ſonne, why doeſt thou flie from thy father? an armed man, from one naked, a yong man, from an olde man. Haue pitie on me my ſonne, and feare not, for there is yet hope of ſaluation, I will make an anſwer for thee vnto Chriſt, I will dye for thee if neede be, as Chriſt hath died for vs. I will giue my life for thee, beleeue me, Chriſt hath ſent me. He hearing theſe things, firſt as in a maſe ſtood ſtill, and therewith his courage was abated. After that he caſt downe his weapons, by and by he trembled, yea and wept bitterly: and comming to the old man, embraced him, and ſpake vnto him with wepyng (as well as he could) beyng euen then baptiſed a freſh with teares, only his right hand beyng hid and couered. Then the Apoſtle, after that he had promiſed and firmly aſcertained him that he ſhould obtain remiſſion of our Sauiour, and alſo prayed falling downe vpon his knees, & kiſſed his murdering right hand, which for ſhame he durſt not ſhew before: as now purged through repentaunce, brought him to the congregation, and when he had prayed for him with continuall prayer and daily faſtings, and had comforted and confirmed his mynde with many ſentences, went not from him (as the author reporteth) before he had reſtored him to the congregation againe, and made him a great example and triall of regeneration, and a token of the viſible reſurrection.

A notable leſſon for al miniſters to ſeeke againe their loſt ſheepe.

O vnſpeakable loue ſhewed out to a wicked ſinner.

Moreouer, the foreſayd Irenæus in Lib. 3. cap. 3. and Euſebius, Lib. 3. cap 28 and Lib. 4. cap. 14. proſecuting the hiſtorie of Iohn, declare in theſe wordes, ſaying, that there were certaine which heard Policarpus ſay; that Iohn the diſciple of our Lord, goyng into Epheſus to be waſhed, ſeyng Corinthus within, he leaped out of the bathe vnbathed, becauſe he feared the bathe ſhould haue fallen, ſeing that Cerinthus an enemy to the truth, was within. Such feare had the Apoſtles (ſaith Irenæus) that they would not communicate a word with them that adulterate the truth.

An example of the godly to flye the cōpany of the wicked.

And foraſmuch as we are here in hand with the ſtory of Iohn the bleſſed Euangeliſt, commeth in matter and occaſion, not geuē by him, but takē of other, of a great doubt and difficulty, ſuch as hath occupied all the Catholike, ſubtile, illuminate, and ſeraphicall Doctors of the Popes Catholike

A Catholique queſtion concerning auricular confeſsion.

An other Catholique queſtion.

tholike Church, theſe 500. yeares. The difficultie is this: that for ſo much as auricular confeſſion hath bene, & is yet receiued in the Popes Catholike Church for an holy and neceſſary Sacrament, extending vniuerſally to al & ſingular creatures Chriſtian. Here then riſeth a queſtion, who was our Ladies confeſſour, or ghoſtly father? But that is decreed and confeſſed with full conſent of all the Catholikes to bee S. Iohn. Whoſoeuer denieth or doubteth of this, is ſtraight wayes ipſo facto an heretike. This then ſo determined, ariſeth an other queſtion or doubt, that ſeeyng our Lady was without all originall ſinne, and alſo actuall or mortall: what need then had ſhe of any Confeſſour? or what ſhould ſhe confeſſe vnto him? For if ſhe had confeſſed any ſinne, when ſhe had none: then had ſhe made her ſelfe a lyer, & ſo had ſinned in deede. Here therefore gentle Reader, in this perplexitie, theſe our illuminate Doctours ſtād in neede of thine ayde, to helpe at a pinch. Magnus Albertus yͤ great diuine, denieth not, but that ſhe in deede, although moſt pure, yet was confeſſed to her ghoſtly father, to keepe the obſeruances of the law, appointed for ſuch as had that neede, which ſhe had not. And therfore (ſayth he) neceſſary it was that ſhe ſhould confeſſe with mouth. But then here is to be aſked, what did ſhe ſay in her confeſſion, when ſhe had nothing to confeſſe? To this Albertus aunſwereth agayne, and telleth vs plainely what ſhe ſayd in her confeſſiō which was this: that ſhe had receiued that great grace, not ex condigno, that is, not of any dignitie of her own, but yet notwithſtanding of congruitie. And this was it (ſayth Albert) that ſhe ſayd in her confeſſion. Albert cap. 74 ſuper Euang. Miſſus eſt, &c.

Moreouer, to helpe this caſe out of all doubt, commeth in famous Thomas of Watring, & thus looſeth the knot, much after like effect, ſaying: that as Chriſt, although he did owe nothing to the law, yet notwithſtanding receiued he Circumciſion, to geue to other example of humilitie and obedience: In like maner would our Lady ſhew her ſelfe obedient to the obſeruaunce of the law, albeit there was no cauſe, why ſhe had any neede thereof. And thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) this doubtful queſtiō moued and ſoluted, to the intent I would reueale to thee ſome part of the deep diuinitie of our Catholike Maiſters, that haue ruled and gouerned the Church in theſe their late Popiſh dayes.

Flauia the daughter of a Conſul. baniſhed for the teſtimony of chriſt. Ex Euſeb. Lib. 3. ca. 19

But breaking of this matter, to returne againe where we left, that is, to this foreſayd 2. perſecutiō vnder Domitianus. In which perſecution beſides theſe afore mentioned, and many other innumerable godly Martyrs, ſufferyng for the like teſtimonie of yͤ Lord Ieſus, was Flauia yͤ daughter of Flauius Clemens, one of the Romaine Conſuls, which Flauia with many other was baniſhed out of Rome into the Iſle Pontia, for the teſtimony of the Lord Ieſus by the Emperour, Domitianus, Euſeb. Lib. 3.

The Emperour maketh inquirie for all that were of Dauids ſtocke.

Dauids ſtocke feared of the Emperours.

Two Nephewes of Iude the Lordes brother preſerued.

The kingdome of Chriſt not of this world.

This Domitianus feared the comming of Chriſt as Herode did, & therefore commaunded them to be killed which were of the ſtocke of Dauid in Iewry. There were remaining aliue at that tyme certayne of the Lordes kindred, which were the nephewes of Iude, that was called the Lordes brother after the fleſh. Theſe when the Lieuetenāt of Iewry had brought vp to Domitian to be ſlayn: the Emperour demaunded of thē, whether they were of the ſtocke of Dauid: which when they had grāted, he aſked againe, what poſſeſſions, and what ſubſtaunce they had. They aunſwered, yͭ they both had no more betweene them in all, but xxxix. acres of grounde, & how they gat their liuing & ſuſtained their families with the hard labours of their hādes ſhewing forth their hands vnto the Emperor, being hard and roughworne with labours, to witnes that to be true which they had ſpoken. Then the Emperour inquiring of them concerning the kingdome of Chriſt, what maner of kingdome it was, how and when it ſhould appeare: they aunſwered that his kingdome was no worldly nor terren thing, but an heauenly and Aungelicall kingdome, & that it ſhould appeare in the conſummation & end of the world what tyme he comming in glory, ſhould iudge the quicke and the dead, and render to euery one according to his deſeruinges. Domitian, the Emperour hearing this (as the ſaying is) did not condemne them, but deſpiſing them as vile perſons, let them go, & alſo ſtaid the perſecution then moued againſt the Chriſtians. They being thus diſcharged and diſmiſſed, afterward had the gouernmēt of Churches, beyng taken for Martyrs, and as of the Lords ſtock, and ſo continued in good peace till the tyme of Traianus. Hæc Egeſip. & Euſeb Lib. 3. cap. 20.

The cauſes why the Emperours and Senate of Rome did ſo rage agaynſt the Chriſtians.

The kingdome of Chriſt feared of the Romaines.

By this ſtory here recited may appeare, what were the cauſes why the Emperours of the Romaine Monarchie did ſo perſecute the Chriſtians: which cauſes were chiefly theſe: feare, and hatred: 1. feare, for that the Emperors and Senate of blinde ignoraunce, not knowing the maner of Chriſtes kingdome, feared and miſdoubted leaſt the ſame would ſubuert their Emperie. Like as the Pope thinketh now that this Goſpel wil ouerthrow his kingdom of maieſtie. And therfore ſought they all means poſſible, how by death and all kindes of torments vtterly to extinguiſh the name and memorie of the chriſtians. And therupon ſeemeth to ſpring the old law of the Romaine Senate: Non debere dimitti Chriſtianos qui ſemel ad tribunal veniſſent, niſi propoſitum mutent. i. That the Chriſtians ſhould not bee let goe, which were once brought to the iudgement ſeate, except they chaunged their purpoſe, &c. Euſeb. Lib. 5. cap. 21. 2. Hatred, partly for that this world of his owne naturall condition hath euer hated and maliced the people of god, from the firſt beginning of the world. Partly agayne, for that the Chriſtians beyng of a contrary nature and Religion, ſeruing only the true liuing God, deſpiſed their falſe gods, ſpake againſt their idolatrous worſhippings, and many tymes ſtopped the power of Sathan, working in their Idoles. And therfore Sathan the Prince of this world, ſtirred vp the Romaine Princes & blynd Idolaters to beare the more hatred and ſpite againſt them.

The kingdome of Chriſt hated of Romaine Princes.

Falſe accuſations and ſlaunders agaynſt the Chriſtians. Ex Apologia Iuſtini. Marty.

Upon theſe cauſes and ſuch like, roſe vp theſe malicious ſlaunders, falſe ſurmiſes, infamous lies & ſlanderous accuſations, of the Heathen idolaters againſt the Chriſtian ſeruaunts of God, which incited the Princes of this world the more to perſecute them: for what crimes ſo euer malice could inuent, or raſh ſuſpicion could miniſter, that was imputed to the Chriſtians, as that they were a people inceſtuous, that in the night in their concourſes, puttyng out their candles, they ranne together in all filthy maner, that they killed their owne children, that they vſed to eate mans fleſh, that they were ſeditious and rebellious, that they would not ſweare by the fortune & proſperitie of Cæſar, that they would not adore the Image of Cæſar in the market place, that they were pernitious to the Emperie of Rome. Briefly, whatſoeuer miſhappened to the Citie or Prouinces of Rome, either famine, peſtilence, earthquake, warres, wonders, vnſeaſonablenes of weather, or what other euils ſoeuer hapned, it was imputed to the Chriſtians, as Iuſtinus recordeth. Ouer and beſide al theſe, a great occaſion that ſtirred vp the Emperours againſt the Chriſtians came by one Publius Tarquinius the chiefe Prelate of the idolatrous ſacrifices, and Mamertinus the chiefe gouernour of the Citie, in the tyme of Traianus, who partly with money, partly with ſiniſter and peſtilent counſaile, partly with infamous accuſations (as witneſſeth Nauclerus) incenſed the mynde of the Emperour ſo muche againſt Gods people.

Publius Tarquinius. Mamertinus perſecutors.

Alſo among theſe other cauſes abouesaid, crept in ſome piece of couetouſnes withal (as in all other things it doth) in that the wicked promooters and accuſers for lucre ſake, to haue the poſſeſſions of the chriſtians, were the more redy to accuſe them to haue the ſpoyle of their goods.

Thus haſt thou (Chriſtian reader) firſt the cauſes declared of theſe perſecutions. 2. The cruell law of their condemnation. 3. Now heare more what was the forme of inquiſition, which was (as is witneſſed in the ſecond Apologie of Iuſtinus) to this effect: that they ſhould ſweare to declare the truth, whether they were in very deed Chriſtians or not: and if they confeſſed then by the law the ſentence of death proceeded. Iuſt. Apol. 2.

The cruelty of tyrauntes in killing of Chriſtian men.

Neither yet were theſe tyrants and organes of Sathā thus contented with death onely, to bereaue the life from the bodye. The kindes of death were diuers, and no leſſe horrible then diuers. Whatſoeuer the cruelneſſe of mans inuention could deuiſe for the puniſhment of mans body, was practiſed againſt the Chriſtians (as partly I haue mentioned before, and more appeareth by the Epiſtle ſent from the brethren of France, hereafter following. Craftie traynes, outcries of enemies, impriſonments, ſtripes and ſcourgings, drawings, tearings, ſtonings, plates of iron layd to them burning hote, deep dungeons, racks, ſtrangling in priſons, the teeth of wild beaſts, gridirons, gibbets and gallowes, toſſing vpon the hornes of Buls: Moreouer, whē they were thus killed, their bodies laid in heaps, and dogs there left to keep them, that no man might come to bury them, neither would any prayer obtayne them to be interred and buried. Ex Nicephoro. Lib. 3. cap. 22.

And yet notwithſtanding for all theſe continual perſecutions, and horrible puniſhments, the church of the chriſtians daily increaſed, deepely rooted in the doctrine of the Apoſtles, and of men Apoſtolicall, and watered plenteouſly with the bloud of Saintes, as ſaith Nicephorus. Tib. 3.

Ex Iuſtino. Martyr in Dialogo cum Tripheo,

Whereof let vs heare the worthy teſtimony of Iuſtinus Martyr in his Dialogue with Tripheus: And that none (ſaith he) can terrifie or remoue vs which beleue in Ieſus, The Church increaſeth by perſecution.

by this it daily appeareth: for when we are ſlaine, crucified, caſt to wild beaſtes, into the fire, or geuen to other tormentes, yet we goe not from our confeſſion: but contrary, the more crueltie and ſlaughter is wrought againſt vs, the mo they be that come to pietie and faith by the name of Jeſus: no otherwiſe then if a man cut the vine tree, the better the braunches grow. For the vine tree planted by God and Chriſt our Sauiour, is his people. Hæc Iuſt.

Diſagreement in authors touching the liues and tymes of Martyrs.

¶ To comprehend the names and number of all the Martyrs that ſuffered in all theſe ten perſecutions (which are innumerable) as it is vnpoſſible, ſo it is hard in ſuch varietie and diuerſitie of matter, to keepe ſuch a perfect order and courſe of yeares and times, that either ſome be not left out, or that euery one bee reduced into his right place, eſpecially ſeeing the Authors themſelues, whome in this preſent worke we follow, doe diuerſly diſagree, both in the tymes, in the names, and alſo in the kynd of Martyrdome of them that ſuffered. As for example, where the common reading and opinion of the Church, and the Epiſtles Decretall doe take Anacletus to ſucceed after Clement, next before Euariſtus. Contrary Euſebius, Lib. 3. & Lib. 5. cap 6. making no mention of Cletus, but of Anacletus, ſayth that Euariſtus ſucceeded next to Clement. Likewiſe Ruffinus and Epiphanius, ſpeakyng nothyng of Anacletus, make mention of Linus and of Cletus, next before Clement, but ſay nothing of Anacletus, whereby it may appeare that Cletus and Anacletus were both one. Sabellicus Ænead. 7. Lib. 2. ſpeaketh of Linus and of Cletus, and ſayth that they were ordained helpers vnder Peter, while he laboured in his Apoſtleſhip abroad, and ſo ſayth alſo Marianus Scotus. Contrary Irenæus Lib. 3. contra Hæreſ. ſpeaketh of Anacletus, making no mention of Cletus. wherby it may appeare by the way, what credite is to be geuen to the Decretall Epiſtles whom all the latter hyſtories of the Popes Church do follow in this behalfe, &c. Moreouer, where Antoninus, Vincentius, Iacobus in Supplemento, Symoneta, Aloyſius, with other, declare of Linus, Cletus, Clemens, Anacletus, Euariſtus, Alexander, biſhops of Rome, that they died Martyrs. Euſebius in his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory writing of them, maketh therof no mention.

Linus Byſhop of Rome.

Cletus and Anacletus both one.

Clement Byſhop counted a Martyr.

And firſt as touching Clement (whom Marianus Scotus calleth the firſt Biſhop of Rome after Peter) they ſay that he was [illegible]ent out in baniſhment of Traianus, beyond Ponticus, with 2000. chriſtians, where he opened to them a welſpring, whiche in the wilderneſſe were condemned to the Mines. Afterward being accuſed to the Emperor, he was throwne into the ſea with a Milſtone faſtened about his necke, and that not long after his body was caſt vp & buried (as Platina ſaith) at the place where the wel was made. Some ſay it was found firſt in the dayes of Pope Nicholas the firſt, Faſcicul. tempor. But foraſmuch as I finde of his Martyrdome no firme relation in the auncient authors, but onely in ſuch new writers of latter tymes, which are wont to painte out the liues and hiſtories of good men, with fained additions of forged miracles, therfore I count the ſame of leſſe credite, as I do alſo certaine Decretall Epiſtles, vntruely (as may ſeeme) aſcribed and intituled to his name. Euſebius in his third booke, writing of Clemens, geueth no more of him, but thus: After he had gouerned the Church of Rome ix. yeares, the ſayd Clement left ẏ ſucceſſion thereof to Euariſtus.

The liues of Martyrs paynted out with fayned miracles.

Euariſtus Byſhoppe of Rome and martyr.

Of which Euariſtus next Biſhop of Rome, thus we find in Irenæus, Lib 3. cap. 3. Peter and Paule (ſayth he) cōmitted the charge of that church to Linus. After whom came Anacletus, then ſucceeded Clemens, next to Clemens followed Euariſtus, after whome came Alexander, and then Sixtus the vi. Biſhop of Rome after the Apoſtles. After Sixtus ſate Teleſphorus, then Higinus, then Pius, then Anicetus. And when Soter tooke the place after hym, then the xij. Biſhop of Rome was Eleutherius. Thus after Clement followed (as is ſayd) Euariſtus in the ſecond or third yeare of Traianus as ſayth Euſebius, or as Nicephorus ſayth, the fourth yeare of the ſayd Emperour. But howſoeuer the counte of the yeares ſtand, little or nothing remayneth of the Actes and Monuments either of this, or of other Biſhops of Rome in thoſe dayes. whereby it may appeare that no great accompt was then made of Romain Biſhops in thoſe dais, whoſe actes and deedes were then either ſo lightly reputed, or ſo ſlenderly committed to hiſtory. Notwithſtanding certaine Decretal Epiſtles are remaynyng, or rather thruſt vpon vs in their names, containing in them litle ſubſtance of any doctrine, but all together ſtuffed with lawes, iniunctions, and ſtately decrees, little to the purpoſe, and leſſe ſauoring of the nature of that time then preſent. Amongeſt whō alſo are nūbred the two epiſtles of this Euariſtus. And when he had geuen theſe orders, & had made vi. Prieſtes, two Deacons, and fiue Byſhops, for ſondry places (ſayth the ſtory,) he ſuffered Martyrdome, but what kinde of death, for what cauſe he ſuffered, what conſtancy he ſhewed what was the order or conuerſation of hys life, is nothing touched, and ſeemeth therefore the more to be doubted that which our new hiſtoryes do ſay: becauſe the olde auncient writers haue no remembraunce thereof, which otherwiſe would not haue paſſed ſuch thinges ouer in ſilence, if they had bene true. Agayne, neyther do the authors fully agree in the tyme of hys martyrdome, which Nauclerus witneſſeth to be in the laſt yere of Traianus: but Platina thinketh rather that he ſuffered vnder Hadrianus: Faſcicul temporum, referreth it to the third yeare of Hadrian, Volateranus, to the begynning of the reigne of Hadrian, Contrary, Euſebius, comming neare to the ſimple trueth (as ſeemeth) doth affirme that Euariſtus ſucceeded Clement in the third yeare of Traianus, and ſo geuing to him ix. yeares, it ſhould follow thereby that Euariſtus deceaſed the xii. yeare of Trianus.

Alexander Byſhop of Rome and Martyr.

After whome ſucceeded next Alexander, in the gouernaunce of that Church, of whoſe tyme & death the like diſcrepance is among the writers, Marianus Scotus, ſayth, he was the fourth Byſhop from Peter, but that could not be. Some ſay he was the ſixt & ſome the vii. but they likewiſe were deceiued. For the moſt part all do graunt Sixtus to be the vi. Damaſus affirmeth that hee was in the reigne of Traiane. And how can that be, when the ſayd Damaſus affirmed before that Euariſtus hys predeceſſour ſuffered in the laſt yeare of Traiane, and then the Byſhopricke ſtood at leaſt a moneth voyde, except hee meane that the ſayd Alexander ſucceeded Euariſtus in the laſt yeare of Traianus? But then how can that ſtand with Bede and Marianus Scotus, which ſay, that he ſuffered vnder Traianus, or with Otto Friſingenſis, which ſayth he ſuffered the fourth yeare of Hadrian, whē he had bene Byſhop ten yeares, by the generall conſent of moſt writers?

Authors diſagree.

They which write of the deedes and doynges of thys bleſſed Byſhop, as Bergomenſis, Antoninus, Equelinus and ſuch as follow them, declare that he had conuerted a great part of the Senators to the fayth of Chriſt, amongſt whom was Hermes a great man in Rome, whoſe ſonne being dead, Alexander rayſed agayne to lyfe, and likewiſe reſtored ſight to hys mayd being blinde. Hadrian the Emperour then abſent hearing this, ſent word to Aurelianus gouernour of Rome, to apprehend Alexander, with Euentius and Theodulus, otherwiſe called Theodorus, as Platina ſayth, hys two Deacons, and Hermes, and to commit them to warde with Quirinus the Tribune: whiche being done as their ſtory recordeth, Alexander incloſed in a diuers priſon from Hermes. Notwithſtanding by the guiding of an Aungell through three doores ẇ three lockes a peece, was brought with candle light to the lodging of Hermes. And ſo returning to the priſon agayne: cured the daughter of Quirinus his keeper, named Balbina. by reaſon whereof the ſayd Quirinus, with his whole houſhold were all Baptiſed, and ſuffered alſo for the fayth of Chriſt.

Alexander.
Euentius.
Theodulus.
Hermes with hys houſhold.
Quirinus with hys houſhold Martyrs.

Thus then ſayth the ſtory, about the ſecond yeare of Hadrian, Aurelianus the ruler tooke Alexander the Byſhop, with Hermes, hys wife children, and hys whole houſhold, to the number of a M, CC. L. and threw them in priſon. And not long after the ſayd Alexander with Euentius his Deacon, and Hermes and the reſt were burned in a fornace, Theodulus an other Deacon of Alexnder, ſeeyng and rebuking the crueltie of the tyraunt, ſuffered alſo the ſame Martyrdome.

Quirinus alſo the ſame tyme (as ſayth Antoninus) hauyng firſt his tongue cut out, then his handes and feete, afterward was beheaded and caſt to the dogs. Equilinus ſaith that he was beheaded and caſt into Tyber in the raigne of the Emperour Claudius, but that cannot be. Albeit Platina maketh relation but onely of Alexander with his two Deacons aforeſayd. Saphyra. Sabina, Martyrs.

Ex Florilego.

Florilegus, the Author of Flores Hiſtoriarum, affirmeth that Alexander Byſhoppe of Rome was beheaded ſeuen myles out of Rome, where he lyeth buried, anno. 105. but that agreeth not with the Chronicles aboue recited. Euſebius recordeth of him no more, but that in the third yeare of Hadrian, he ended his life and office, after he had bene biſhop ten yeares.

Diuers miracles are reported of this Alexander, in the Canon Legends, and liues of Saintes: which as I deny not but may be true: ſo becauſe I cannot auouch them by any graue teſtimony of auncient writers, therefore I dare not affirme them, but do referre them to the authors & Patrons thereof, where they are founde. Notwithſtandyng, whatſoeuer is to be thought of his miracles, this is to bee affirmed and not doubted, but that he was a godly & vertuous Biſhop.

The ordinaunces of Euariſtus.

Diſt. 93. cap. Diaconi.

And as I ſay of his miracles, the like iudgement alſo I haue of the ordinaunces both of him and of Euariſtus his predeceſſour teſtified in the Popes Decrees, by Gratianus, as 93. Diſt. cap. Diaconi, where is ſayd that Euariſtus deuided diuers titles in the Citie of Rome to the Prieſtes, alſo ordeined in euery Citie vij. Deacons to aſſociate and aſſiſt the biſhop in his preaching, both for his defence, and for the witnes of truth. Notwithſtāding, if probable coniectures might ſtand againſt the authoritie of Gratianus and his decrees, here might be doubted whether this abſolute ordination of Prieſtes was firſt forbidden by Euariſtus, and whether the intitulation of Prieſtes was firſt by hym brought in or not: wherein an inſtaunce may be geuen to the contrary, that this intitulation ſeemeth to take his firſt beginning at the Councell of Chalcedon, and of Pope Vrbane in the Councell of Placent. In the which Councell of Chalcedon the wordes of the Canon (making no mention of Euariſtus at all) doe expreſſely forbid, that any Eccleſiaſticall perſon eyther Prieſt or Deacon ſhould be ordayned abſolutely, otherwiſe the impoſition of handes without ſome proper title of the party ordayned, to ſtād voyde and fruſtrate. &c. And likewiſe Vrbanus in the counſell of Placentia, doth decree the ſame, alledging no name of Euariſtus, but the ſtatutes of former Councels.

Ex Diſt. 70. cap. Neminem.

Ibidem cap. Sanctorum.

Moreouer in the time of Euariſtus the Church then being vnder terrible perſecutions, was deuided in no peculiar Pariſhes or Cures, wherby any title might riſe, but was ſcattered rather in corners and deſertes, where they could beaſt hide themſelues. And as the Church of Rome, in thoſe dayes was not deuided into ſeuerall Parriſhes or Cures (as I ſuppoſe) ſo neyther was then any ſuch open or ſolemne preaching in Churches, that the aſſiſtaunce or teſtimony of vii. Deacons eyther could auayle among the multitude of the Heathen, or els needed amongſt the chriſtian ſecret congregations. Agayne the conſtitution of vii. Deacons ſeemeth rather to ſpring out of the counſell of Neoceſaria long after Euariſtus, where it was appoynted that in euery Citie were it neuer ſo ſmall, there ſhould be vij. Deacons after the rule. And this rule the ſayd Councel taketh out of the booke of the Actes of the Apoſtles, making no word or mentiō of Euariſtus at all Diſt. 93. but theſe (as is ſaid) be but onely coniectures, not denying yͤ which is commonly receiued, but onely ſhewing what may bee doubted in their Epiſtles Decretall.

Ex Diſt. 93. cap. Diaconi.

More vnlike it ſeemeth to be true that is recorded and reported of Alexander, whereof we read De conſecr. Diſt. 3. that he ſhould be the firſt founder and finder of holy water mixt with ſalt, to purge and ſanctifie them vpon whom it is ſprinckeled. The wordes of the Diſt. be theſe: Aquam ſale conſperſam in populis benedicimus, vt ea cuncti aſperſi ſanctificentur & purificentur, quod omnibus ſacerdotibus faciendū eſſe mandamus, &c. That is, we bleſſe water mixt with ſalte among the people, that all men being ſprinckled therewith may be ſanctified and purified. And this we commaund all Prieſts to do, &c.

De conſecrat. Diſt. 3.

The opinion is alſo, but how true I haue not to affirme, that by him firſt was ordained, water to bee mixte with wine in the chalice.

Item, that by him was brought in the piece of the Maſſe Canon, beginning: Qui pridie, &c. And thus much of theſe foreſayd Biſhops of Rome, martired in the dayes of Traian and Hadrian.

✻ The third Perſecution.

The third perſecution of the Church.

An. 100.

Betwene the ſecond Romain perſecution and the third, was but one yeare, vnder the Emperour Nerua. After whom ſucceeded Traianus. And after him followed the third perſecution. So the ſecond and the third, are noted of ſome to be both one, hauing no more difference but one yere betwene them. This Traianus if we looke well vpon his politike and ciuill gauernance, might ſeeme in compariſon of other, a right worthy and commendable Prince. Much familiar with inferiors, and ſo behauing himſelf toward his ſubiectes, as he himſelfe would haue yͤ Prince to be to him, if he himſelf were a ſubiect. Alſo he was noted to be a great obſeruer of iuſtice, in ſo much that when he ordained any Pretour, geuing to him the ſword, he would bid him vſe the ſword againſt his enemies in iuſt cauſes, and if he him ſelfe did otherwiſe then iuſtice, to vſe then his power againſt him alſo. But for all theſe vertues, toward chriſtian Religion, he was impious and cruel, who cauſed the third perſecution of the Church. In the which perſecution Plinie the ſecond, a man learned and famous, ſeyng the lamentable ſlaughter of Chriſtians, and moued therewith to pitie, wrote to Traianus of the pitifull perſecution: certifiyng him that there were many thouſāds of them daily put to death, of which none did any thing contrary to the Romaine lawes worthy perſecution, ſauing that they vſed to gather together in the morning before day, and ſing Hymnes to a certaine God, whom they worſhipped, called Chriſt. In all other their ordinaunces they were godly and honeſt. Wherby the perſecution by commaundement of the Emperour, was greatly ſtayd and diminiſhed. The forme and copy of which Epiſtle of Plinie I thought here not inconuenient to ſet downe as followeth.

Plinius ſecundus. wrote to Traian to ſtop the perſecutiō.

✻ The Epiſtle of Plinie an Heathen Philoſopher to Traiane the Emperour.

The Epiſtle of Plinie to Traianus.

It is my propertie and maner (my ſoueraigne,) to make relation of all thoſe thinges vnto you wherein I doubt. For who can better, either correct my ſlackeneſſe, or inſtruct mine ignoraunce then you? I was neuer yet preſent my ſelfe, at the examination and execution of theſe Chriſtians. And therfore what puniſhment is to be adminiſtred, and how farre, or how to proceede in ſuch Inquiſitions, I am plaine ignoraunt, not able to reſolue in the matter, whether any difference is to bee had in age and perſon, whether the young and tender ought to be with like crueltie intreated as the elder and ſtronger, whether repentance may haue any pardon, or whether it may profite him or not, to denie which hath bene a Chriſtiā, whether the name onely of Chriſtians without other offences, or whether the offences ioyned with the name of a Chriſtian ought to be puniſhed. In the meane ſeaſon, as touching ſuch Chriſtians as haue bene preſented vnto me, I haue kept this order, I haue inquired the ſecond and third time of them, whether they were Chriſtians, manacing them with feare of puniſhmeut, and ſuche as did perſeuere, I commaunded to execution. For thus I thought, that what ſo euer their profeſſion was, yet their ſtubburneneſſe and obſtinacie ought to be puniſhed. Whether they were alſo of the ſame madneſſe, whom becauſe they were Citizens of Rome, I thought to ſend them backe againe to the Citie. Afterward, in further proceſſe & handling of this matter, as the ſect did further ſpread, ſo the more caſes did thereof enſue.

There was a libell offred to me bearing no name, wherein was contained the names of many which denied themſelues to be Chriſtians, contented to doe ſacrifice with incenſe, and wine to the Gods and to your Image (whiche Image I for that purpoſe cauſed to be brought) and to blaſpheme Chriſt: whereunto none ſuch as were true Chriſtians in deede could be compelled, and thoſe I did diſcharge and let goe. Other ſome confeſſed that they had bene Chriſtians, but afterward denied the ſame, &c. Affirming vnto me the whole ſumme of that ſect or errour, to conſiſt in this, that they were woont at certain times appointed, to conuent before day, and to ſing certaine Hymnes to one Chriſt their God, and to confederate among themſelues to abſtaine from all theft, murther, and adulterie, to keepe their faith and to defraude no man: which done, then to departe for that time, and afterward to reſort againe to take meate in companies together both men and women, one with an other, & yet without any acte of euils.

The vſe of Chriſtians in the primitiue Churche.

The teſtimony of the Heathen of the Chriſtians.

In the truth whereof to be further certified whether it were ſo or not, I cauſed two maidens to bee laied on the Racke, and with tormentes to bee examined of the ſame. But finding no other thing in them, but onely lewde and immoderate ſuperſtition, I thought to ſurceaſe of further inquirie, til tyme that I might be further aduertiſed in the matter from you, for ſo the matter ſeemed vnto me worthy and needefull of aduiſement, eſpecially, for the great number of thoſe that were in daunger of your ſtatute. For very many there were of all ages and ſtates, both men & women which then were & more are like hereafter to incurre the ſame perill of condemnation. For that infection hath crepte not onely in Cities, but Villages alſo and Boroughs about, which ſeemeth that it may be ſtaied and reformed For as much as we ſee in many places that the Temples of our Gods whiche were woont to be deſolate, beginne now againe to be frequented, and that they bring ſacrifices from euerie parte to be ſolde, whiche before verye fewe were founde willing to buie them. Whereby it may eaſilie be coniectured, what multitudes of men may bee amended, if ſpace and tyme bee giuen them, where in they may be reclaimed.

✻ The Epiſtle of Traianus to Plinie.

The Acte and Statute my Secundus, concernyng the cauſes of the Chriſtians whiche ye ought to followe, ye haue rightlye executed. For no ſuche generall lawe can be enacted, wherin all ſpeciall caſes particularly can be comprehended. Let them not be ſought for, but if they be brought and conuicted, then let them ſuffer execution: So notwithſtanding that whoſoeuer ſhall deny himſelfe to be a Chriſtian, and that he do it vnfainedly in open audience, and do ſacrifice to our Gods, howſoeuer he hath bene ſuſpected before, let him be releaſed vpō promiſe of amendment. Such libels as haue no names, ſuffice not to any iuſt crime or accuſation, for that ſhould geue both an euill Preſident, neither doth it agree with the example of our tyme.

Tertullian writing vpon this letter of Traianus aboue prefixed, thus ſaith: O ſentence of a confuſed neceſſitie: He would not haue them to be ſought for as men innocent, & yet cauſeth them to be puniſhed as perſons gilty. And thus the rage of that perſecutiō ceaſed for a tyme, although notwithſtanding many naughty diſpoſed men and cruell officers that were, which vpon falſe pretence to accompliſhe their wicked myndes, ceaſed not to afflict the Chriſtians in diuers prouinces. And eſpecially if any occaſiō were geuē neuer ſo litle for the enemies to take hold, or if any commotion were raiſed in the Prouinces abroad, by and by the fault was laid vpon the chriſtians. As in Hieruſalem after that the emperor Traianus had ſent doune his commaundement, that whoſoeuer could be found of the ſtocke of Dauid, he ſhould be enquired out and put to death: vpon this Egeſippus writing, ſaith, that certaine ſectaries there were of the Iewiſh nation, that accuſed Simeon the biſhop then of Ieruſalem and ſonne of Cleophas to come of the ſtocke of Dauid, and that he was a Chriſtian. Of the which his accuſers it happened alſo (ſaith the ſaid Egeſippus) that certaine of them likewiſe were apprehended and taken to bee of the ſtocke of Dauid, and ſo right iuſtly were put to execution themſelues, which ſought the deſtruction of other. As concerning Simeon the bleſſed biſhop, the foreſayd Egeſippus thus writeth: That Simeon the lordes nephew, whē he was accuſed to Attalus the Proconſul, by the malicious ſect of the Iewes, to be of the line of Dauid, & to be a chriſtian, was ſcourged, during the ſpace of many dayes together, beyng of the age of an hundred and twentie yeres. In which his Martyrdome he indured ſo conſtant, that both the Conſul and all the multitude did meruaile to ſee him of that age ſo conſtantly to ſuffer, and ſo at laſt being crucified finiſhed his courſe in the Lord, for whome he ſuffered, as partly before alſo is recorded.

The ſtocke of Dauid feared and inquired for of the Romaine Emperours.

In this perſecution of Traianus aboue ſpecified, (which Traianus next followed after Nerua) beſides the other afore mentioned, alſo ſuffred Phocas biſhop of Pontus, whome Traianus becauſe he would not do ſacrifice to Neptunus, cauſed to be caſt into an hote Limekilne: and afterward to be put into a ſkalding bathe, where the conſtant godly Martyr, in yͤ teſtimony of Chriſt ended his life, or rather entred into life. Of which Sabina Iacobus Philippus author of the booke called Supplementum, reporteth that in the mount of Auentine in Rome, ſhe was beheaded of Clepidus the gouernour, in the dayes of Hadriā. In this perſecution beſide many other, ſuffred the bleſſed Martyr of Chriſt Ignatius, who vnto this day is had in famous reuerence among very many. This Ignatius was appointed to the biſhoprike of Antioch next after Peter in ſucceſſion. Some do ſay, that he beyng ſent from Syria to Rome, becauſe he profeſſed Chriſt, was giuen to the wilde beaſts to be deuoured. It is alſo ſayd of him, that when he paſſed through Aſia, being vnder the moſt ſtraight cuſtody of his garders, he ſtrengthned and confirmed the pariſhes through all the cities as he went, both with his exhortations and preaching of the word of God: and admoniſhed them eſpecially and before all other things, to beware and ſhunne thoſe hereſies riſen vp, and ſprong newly among them, and that they ſhould cleaue and ſticke faſt to the traditiō of the Apoſtles, which he for their better ſafegard, beyng about to denoūce or put in writing, thought it a thing very neceſſary to trauaile in. And thus when he came to Smyrna, where Polycarpus was, he wrote one epiſtle to the congregation of Epheſus, wherin he made mention of Oneſimus their Paſtor, & an other he wrote to the congregation of Magneſia, beyng at Meandre, wherein alſo he forgetteth not Dama their Biſhop. Alſo an other he wrote to the congregation of Trallis: the gouernour of which Citie at that time he noteth to be one Polibius. Vnto which congregation he made an exhortation, leſt they refuſing Martyrdome, ſhould looſe the hope that they deſired, Oneſimus Paſtor at Epheſus.

But it ſhalbe very requiſite that I aledge ſomewhat thereof to the declaration of this matter. He wrote therfore as the wordes lye in this ſort. From Syria (ſaith he) euen till I came to Rome had I a battell with beaſtes, as well by ſea, as land, both day & night, being bound in the midſt of ten cruell Libardes (that is, the company or band of the ſouldiers) which, the more benefites that they receaued at my hands, became ſo much the worſe vnto me. But I being exerciſed and now wel acquainted with their iniuries, am taught euery day more and more: but hereby am I not yet iuſtified. And would to God I were once come to yͤ beaſts, which are prepared for me. which alſo I wiſh with gaping mouthes were ready to come vpon me, whō alſo I will prouoke that they without delay may deuoure me, and forbeare me nothing at all, as thoſe whome before they haue not touched or hurt for feare. And if they wyll not vnleſſe they be prouoked, I will then inforce them agaynſt my ſelfe. Pardon me I pray you. How much beneficiall it is to me, I knowe. Now begin I to be a ſcholer I force or eſteeme no viſible thinges, nor yet inuiſible thinges, ſo that I may get or obtaine Chriſt Ieſu. Let the fire, the galowes, the deuouring of wild beaſtes, the breaking of bones, the pulling a ſunder of my members, the broſing or preſſing of my whole body, and the tormentes of the deuill or hell it ſelfe come vpon me, ſo that I maye winne Chriſt Ieſus.

And theſe things wrote he from the foreſayde Citye, vnto the congregations which we haue recited. And when he was euen now iudged to be throwne to the beaſtes, he ſpake for yͤ burning deſire that he had to ſuffer, what tyme he heard the Lyons roaryng: I am the wheat or grayne (ſayth he) of Chriſt, I ſhall be grounde wyth the teeth of wylde beaſtes, that I may be found pure bread. Hee ſuffered in the xj. yeare of Traian the Emperour. Hæc Euſebius, & Hieronym.

Next after this Traianus ſucceded Hadriā the Emperor, vnder whom ſuffered Alexander the Biſhop of Rome, with his two Deacons: Euentius and Theodorus: Alſo Hermes, and Quirinus, with their families, as latly before was declared.

It is ſignified moreouer in the hiſtoryes, yͭ in the time of this Hadrian, Zenon a noble man of Rome with ten thouſand, two hundreth and three, were ſlayne for Chriſt. Henr. de Erfordia, and Bergomenſis, Lib. 8. make mention of tenne thouſand, in the daies of this Hadrian, to be crucified in the mount Ararath, crowned with crownes of thorne, & thruſt into the ſides with ſharpe Dartes, after the example of the Lordes paſſion. whoſe Captaines (as Antoninus, & Vincentius in ſpec. hiſtor. declareth (were Achaicus, Heliades, Theodorus, and Carcerius, &c. whether this ſtory be yͤ ſame with the other aboue of Zenō, or not, it is doubted. As touching the miracles done, and the ſpeaking of the angell, I referre the certainty therof to Vincentius and ſuch other like authors where mo things ſeme to be told, then to be true.

There was one Euſtachius a Captaine, whom Traianus in tyme paſt had ſent out to warre againſt the Barbarians. After he had by Gods grace valiantly ſubdued his enemies, and now was returning home with victory: Hadrian for ioymeting him in his iourney, to bring him home with triumph, by the way firſt would do ſacrifice to Apollo, for the victory gotten, willing alſo Euſtachius to doe the ſame with him. But when Euſtachius could by no meanes therto be inforced, being brought to Rome, there with his wife and children ſuffred Martyrdome vnder the foreſayd Hadrian. It were a long proceſſe here to recite all the miracles conteined or rather ſuſpected in this ſtory of this Euſtachius concerning his conuerſion and death. Quadratus Byſhop of Athens, offereth an Apology of Chriſtian doctrine.

While Hadrian the Emperour was at Athens, he purpoſed to viſite the countrey of Eleuſina, and ſo did: where he ſacrifiſing to the Gentiles Gods, after the maner of the Grecians, had geuen free leaue & libertie, whoſoeuer would to perſecute the Chriſtians. Whereupon Quadratus a man of no leſſe zeale excellent, as of famous learning, being thē Biſhop of Athens, and Diſciple of the Apoſtles, or at leaſt ſucceding incontinent the age of the Apoſtles, and following after Publius (who a litle before was martyred for the teſtimony of Chriſt) did offer vp and exhibite vnto Hadrian the Emperour, a learned and excellent Apologie in the defence of the Chriſtian Religion. Wherein he declared the Chriſtians without all iuſt cauſe or deſert, to be ſo cruelly entreated and perſecuted, &c. The like alſo did Ariſtides an other no leſſe excellēt Philoſopher in Athens, who for his ſingular learning and eloquence being notified to the emperor, and comming to his preſence, there made before him an eloquent Oration. Moreouer, did exhibite vnto the ſaid Emperour a memorable Apologie for the chriſtians, ſo ful of learning and eloquence, that as Hierome ſayth, it was a ſpectacle and admiration to men in his tyme, that loued to ſee wit and learning. Ouer and beſides theſe, there was alſo an other named Serenus Granius a man of great nobility, who likewiſe did write very pithy & graue letters to Hadrian the Emperour, ſhewing and declaring therein, to be conſonant with no right nor reaſon, for the bloud of innocents ſo to be geuen to the rage and fury of the people, and ſo to be condemned for no fault, onely for the name and ſect that they followed.

Thus the goodnes of God being moued with the prayers and conſtant labour of theſe ſo excellent men, ſo turned the hart of the Emperour, that he beyng better informed concerning the order & profeſſion of the chriſtians, became more fauorable vnto them. And immediatly vpō the ſame directed his letters to Minutius Fundanus (as is partly before mencioned) Proconſul of Aſia, willing him frō henceforth to exerciſe no more ſuch extremitie againſt the Chriſtians, as to condemne any of them hauing no other crime obiected againſt them but onely their name. The copy of which his letter, becauſe that Iuſtine in his Apologie doth alleage it, I thought therefore to expreſſe the ſame in his owne wordes as followeth.

The letter of Hadrian the Emperour to Fundanus the Proconſull,

I Haue receiued an Epiſtle writen vnto me from Serennius Granianus, our right worthy and welbeloued, whoſe office you do now execute. Therefore I thinke it not good to leaue this matter without further aduiſement and circumſpection to paſſe, leaſt our ſubiects be moleſted, and malicious ſycophants boldned and ſupported in their euill. Wherefore if the ſubiects of our prouinces, doe bring forth any accuſition before the iudge agaynſt the Chriſtians, and can prooue the thing they obiect againſt them, let them doe the ſame, and no more, and otherwiſe for the name onely, not to impeach them, nor to cry out againſt them. For ſo, more conuenient it is, that if any man will be an accuſer, you to take the accuſation quietly, and iudge vpon the ſame. Therfore, if any ſhall accuſe the Chriſtians, and complaine of them as malefactors, doing contrary to the law, then geue you iudgement according to the qualitie of the crime But notwithſtanding who ſo euer vpō ſpite and maliciouſnes ſhal commence or cauil againſt them, ſee you correct and puniſh that man, for his vnordinate and malicious dealing.

Reſpite from perſecution.

Thus by the mercifull prouidence of God, ſome more quiet and reſt was geuen to the Church, although Hermannus thinketh theſe Alcione dayes did not very long continue, but that the Emperour changing his Edict, began to renue agayne perſecution againſt gods people, albeit this ſoundeth not to be ſo by the wordes of Melito in his Apologie to Antoninus hereafter enſuing. In the meane tyme this is certain, that in the dayes of this Hadrian, the Iewes rebelled agayne & ſpoyled the country of Paleſtina. Againſt whom the Emperour ſent Iulius Seuerus, who ouerthrew in Iurie, 50. caſtels, and burnt and deſtroyed 980. villages and Townes, and ſlue of the Iewes 50. thouſand, ſo that with famine, ſickenes, ſword, and fire, Iuda was almoſt deſolate. But at length Hadrian the Emperour, which otherwiſe was named Ælius, repaired and enlarged the Citie agayn of Hieruſalem, which was called after his name Æliopolis, or Ælia Capitolina, the inhabitaunce whereof, he graunted only to the Gentiles, and to the Chriſtians, forbidding the Iewes vtterly not to enter into the Citie.

Who for his clemency and modeſt behauiour, had the name of Pius, and is for the ſame in hiſtories commended. His ſaying was, that he had rather ſaue one Citizen, then deſtroy a thouſand of his aduerſaries. At the beginning of his raigne, ſuch was the ſtate of the Church, as Hadrian his predeceſſour had left it, as in which, although there was no Edict ſet forth to perſecute the Chriſtians: yet the tumultuous rage of the Heathen multitude for the cauſes aboue ſpecified, did not ceaſe to diſquiete and afflict the quiet people of God, imputing and aſcribing to the Chriſtians whatſoeuer miſfortune happened contrary to their deſires. Moreouer, inuentyng agaynſt them all falſe crimes and contumelies wherein to accuſe them. By reaſon whereof, diuers there were in ſundry places much moleſted, and ſome put to death: albeit, as it is to be ſuppoſed, not by the conſent of the Emperour, who of nature was ſo mylde and gentle, that either he rayſed vp no perſecution agaynſt the Chriſtians, or els he ſoone ſtayed the ſame beyng moued. As well may appeare by his letter ſent doune to the countreys of Aſia, the tenor whereof here inſueth.

The Epiſtle of Antoninus Pius, to the Commons of Aſia.

The letter of Antoninus Pius to the commons of Aſia.

EMperour and Cæſar, Aurelius, Antoninus, Auguſtus, Armenicus, Pontifex Maximus, Tribune eleuen tymes, Conſull thriſe, vnto the commons of Aſia greeting. I am very certayne, that the Gods haue a care of this, that they which be ſuch, ſhall be knowen, and not lye hid. For they doe puniſh them, that will not worſhip them more then you: which ſo vexe and trouble them, confirming thereby the opinion which they haue conceaued, and doe conceaue of you, that is, to bee wicked men. For this is their ioy and deſire, that when they are accuſed, rather they couet to dye for their God, then to lyue. Whereby they are Victorers, and doe ouercome you, geuing rather their lyues, then to bee obedient to you, in doyng that which you require of them. And here it ſhall not be inconuenient to aduertiſe you of the Earthquakes, which haue, and doe happen among vs, that when at the ſight of them you tremble and are afraide, then conferre your caſe with them. For they vpon a ſure confidence of their God, are bolde and feareleſſe, much more then you: who in all the tyme of this your ignoraunce, both doe worſhip other Gods, and neglect the Religion of immortalitie, and ſuch Chriſtians as worſhip him, them you doe driue out, and perſecute them vnto death. Of theſe and ſuch like matters, many Preſidents of our Prouinces, did write to our father of famous memorie heretofore. To whome he directed his aunſwere agayne, willing them in no caſe to moleſt the Chriſtians, except they were found in ſome treſpaſſe preiudiciall againſt the Empire of Rome.

A notable argument of the Emperour to proue the good conſcience of Chriſtians, and the falſe conſcience of the Heathen.

He meaneth Hadrian which adopted this Antoninus of hys ſonne in law, to be hys ſonne & heyre. O noble edict.

And to me alſo many there be, which write, ſignifiyng their mind in like maner. To whome I haue aunſwered againe, to the ſame effect and maner as my father did. Wherefore, if any hereafter ſhall offer any vexatiõ or trouble, to ſuch, hauing no other cauſe, but onely for that they are ſuch, let him that is appeached, be releaſed and diſcharged free, yea although he be founde to bee ſuch, (that is a Chriſtian) and let the accuſer ſuſtaine the puniſhment, &c.

This godly Edict of the Emperour was proclaymed at Epheſus, in the publique aſſẽbly of all Aſia, whereof Melito alſo Byſhop of Sardis, who floriſhed in the ſame tyme, maketh mention in his Apologie written in defence of our doctrine to M. Antoninus Verus as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall appeare. By this meanes then the tempeſt of perſecution in thoſe daies began to be appeaſed, through the mercifull prouidence of God, which woulde not haue hys Chuch vtterly to be ouerthrowne, though hardly yet to growe.

✻ The fourth Perſecution.

M. Antoninus Verus Emperour.

Anno. 162.

Policarpus, the bleſſed Martyr Byſhop of Smyrna.

After the deceaſe of the foreſayd quiet and milde Prince Aurelius Antonius Pius (who among all other Emperours of that tyme made the moſt quiet end, followed his ſonne M. Antoninus Verus, with Lucius his brother, about the yeare of our Lord. 162. a man of nature more ſterne and ſeuere. And although in ſtudy of Philoſophy, & in ciuile gouernement no leſſe commendable: yet toward the Chriſtians ſharpe and fierce, by whome was moued the fourth perſecution after Nero. In whoſe tyme a great number of them which truely profeſſed Chriſt, ſuffered moſt cruel tormentes, and puniſhments, both in Aſia and in Fraunce. In the number of whome was Policarpus, the worthy Biſhop of Smyrna. who in the great rage of this perſecution in Aſia, among many other moſt conſtant Saintes was alſo Martyred. Of whoſe end and Martyrdome I thought it here not vnexpedient to cõmit to hiſtory, ſo much as Euſebius declareth to be taken out of a certaine letter or Epiſtle, written by them of hys owne Churche, to the brethren of Pontus the tenor of which Epiſtle here followeth.

Ex Euſeb. hiſt. Eccleſ Lib. 4. Cap. 15. Hieron. in Catalogo.

Twelue Martyrs in Aſia.

The cruell and beaſtly handling of the Chriſtian Martyrs.

The ſingular patience, and conſtancie of the Chriſtians.

Germanicus a moſt conſtant Martyr.

Quintus a Phrigian to hardie hold.

The congregation which is at Smyrna, to the congregation which is at Philomilium, and to all the congregations throughout Pontus, mercy to you, peace, and the loue of God our father, and of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt, be multiplied, Amen. We haue written vnto you brethren of thoſe men which haue ſuffred Martyrdome, and of bleſſed Polycarpus which hath ended and appeaſed this perſecutiõ, as it were by the ſhedding of his own bloud. And in the ſame epiſtle, before they enter into farther matter of Polycarpus, they diſcourſe of other Martyrs, deſcribing what patience they abode and ſhewed in ſuffering their torments: which was ſo great and admirable (ſaith the Epiſtle) that the lookers on were amaſed, ſeeing and beholding, how they were ſo ſcourged and whipped, that the inward vaynes & arteries appeared, yea euen ſo much that the very intrailes of their bodies, their bowels and members were ſeen, & after that, were ſet vpon ſharp ſhels taken out of the ſea, edged, and ſharpe, and certaine nailes and thornes for the Martyrs to go vpon, which were ſharpned and pointed called Obeliſci. Thus ſuffred they all kind of puniſhment and torment that might be deuiſed: and laſtly, were throwne vnto the wild beaſts to be deuoured. But eſpecially in the foreſayd Epiſtle, mention is made of one Germanicus, how he moſt worthily perſeuered and ouercame by the grace of God, that feare of death which is ingraffed in the common nature of all men, whoſe notable patience & ſufferaunce was ſo notable, that the whole multitude wondring at this beloued Martyr of God, for this his ſo bold conſtancie, and alſo for the ſingular ſtrength and vertue proceeding of the whole multitude of the Chriſtians: began ſodenly to cry with a loud voyce, ſaying: deſtroy the wicked men, let Polycarpus be ſought for. And whileſt a great vprore and tumult began thus to be raiſed vpon thoſe cries: A certaine Phrigian named Quintus, lately come out of Phrigia, who ſeyng and abhorring the wilde beaſts, and the fierce rage of them, of an ouer light mynd betrayed his own ſafetie. For ſo the ſame letter of him doth report, that he, not reuerently, but more malipertly then requiſite, was together with others ruſhed into the iudgement place, and ſo being takẽ, was made a manifeſt example to all the beholders, that no man ought raſhly and vnreuerently with ſuch boldneſſe, to thruſt in himſelf, to entermeddle in matters, wherwith he hath not to do.

Policarpus prayeth for the church.

Policarpus hath a viſiõ of hys burning.

Policarpus falleth to prayer.

But now we will ſurceaſe to ſpeake more of them, and returne to Polycarpus, of whome the foreſayd letter conſequently declareth as foloweth: How that in ẏ beginning, when he heard of theſe things, was nothing at all afrayd nor diſquieted in mynd, but purpoſed to haue taried ſtil in the Citie, till beyng perſwaded by the intreatie of thẽ that were about him (which deſired him inſtatly that he would conuey himſelfe away) hid himſelfe in a grange or village not farre of from the Citie, and there abidyng with a fewe more in his company, did nothing els (night nor day) but abode in ſupplication, wherin he made his humble petitiõ for the obtaining of peace vnto all ẏ congregatiõs through out the world. For that was his accuſtomed maner ſo to doe. And as he was thus making his prayers three dayes before he was apprehended, in a viſion by night he ſaw the bed ſet on fire vnder his head, and ſodainly to be cõſumed. And when he awaked, he told by and by & expounded vnto them that were preſent, his viſion, and told them before what thing ſhould come to paſſe, that is, how that in ẏ fire he ſhould loſe his life for Chriſtes cauſe. It is further mentioned, that whẽ they were hard at hand, which ſo narowly ſought for him, that he was inforced for the affection and loue of his brethren, to fleet into an other village, to which place notwithſtanding within a little while after the purſuers came, and when they had taken a couple of children that dwelt therabouts, they ſo beat one of them wt whips, ẏ by the bewraying or confeſſion of him, they were brought to the Inne where Polycarpus was. And they ſay that the purſuers making no great haſt to enter, found him in the vppermoſt place of the houſe, from whence he might haue eſcaped into other houſes, if he would, but this he would not do, ſaying: the wil of God be done. Furthermore, whẽ he knew that they were come, as the ſaid hiſtory ſheweth: he came downe, and ſpake vnto them with a very chereful and pleaſant countenaunce, ſo that it was a wonder to ſee thoſe which a while agone knew not the man, now beholding & viewyng his comely age, and his graue & conſtant countenaunce, lamented that they had ſo much employed their labour, that ſo aged a man ſhould be apprehẽded. To conclude, he commaunded that ſtraightway without any delay the table ſhould be layd for them, and perſuaded thẽ that they would eate and dine well, and required of them boldly, that he might haue an houres reſpite to make his prayers. Which thing after it was graunted, he aroſe and went to pray, ſo being repleniſhed wich the grace of God, that they which were preſent, and hearyng the prayers that he made, were aſtonied at it, and now many of them were ſory that ſo honeſt and godly an aged man ſhould be put to death.

Policarpus refuſeth to doe ſacrifice.

Policarpus comforted by a uoyce from heauẽ.

Policarpus allured to chaunge hys name would not conſent.

After this, the foreſaid Epiſtle or letter, proſecuting the hiſtorie, addeth more as followeth: After he had made an end of his prayers, & had called to his remẽbrance al thoſe things which euer hapned vnto him, and to the vniuerſal catholike church throughout all the world (whether they were ſmall or great, glorious or els inglorious) and that the houre was now come in which they ought to ſet forward, they ſet him vpon an Aſſe, and brought him to the Citie vpon a ſolemne feaſt day. And there met him Irenarchus Herodes, and his father Nicetes, which cauſing him to come vp into the chariote where they ſate, perſuaded him & ſayd: What hurt I pray thee ſhall come thereof to thee, if thou ſay (by the way of ſalutation.) My Lord Cæſar, and to do ſacrifice, and thus to ſaue thy ſelfe? But he at the beginning made them none aunſwere. Till that when they inforced him to ſpeake, he ſayd: I wil not do as ye counſail me I ſhould. When that they ſawe he could not be perſuaded, they gaue him very rough language, & of purpoſe moleſted him, that in goyng doune the chariot from them, he might hurt or breake his legs. But he forcing very light of the matter, as though he had felt no hurt, went merily and diligently forward, making haſt vnto the place appointed. And when there was ſuch vprore in the place of execution, that he could not be heard but of a very few, there came a voyce from heauen to Polycarpus, as he was going into the Stage or appointed place of iudgement, ſaying: be of good cheare Polycarpus and play the man. No man there was, which ſaw him that ſpake, but very many of vs heard his voyce. And when he was brought in, there was a great noiſe made by them which vnderſtood that Polycarpus was apprehended. The Proconſul aſked him whẽ that he was come, whether his name was Polycarpus or not, and when he ſaid, yea it was, he gaue him counſail to deny his name, and ſaid vnto him, be good vnto thy ſelfe, and fauour thyne old age, and many other ſuch like words which they accuſtome to ſpeake. Sweare ſaith he, by the Emperours good fortune, looke vpõ this matter, ſay thou with vs: Deſtroy theſe naughtie men. Then Polycarpus beholding with conſtant countenance the whole multitude which was in the place appointed, and geuing a great ſigh, looked vp to heauen, ſaying: Thou, thou it is that wilt deſtroy theſe wicked naughty men. And the Proconſul thus being earneſtly in hand with him, ſayd, take thine othe, and I will dyſcharge thee, defye Chriſt, Policarpus aunſwered: fourreſcore and ſixe yeares haue I beene his ſeruaunt, yet in all this tyme hath he not ſo much as once hurt me: how then may I ſpeake euill of my king & ſoueraigne Lorde, which hath thus preſerued me: Then the Proconſull againe inforced him and ſayd: Sweare thou I aduiſe thee by Cæſars proſperity. Policarpus replieth, if thou require of me this fonde worde of vaine boaſting, feyning not to know (as yͧ saieſt) who I am, I doe thee to wit, that I am a Chriſtian: And if thou deſire to know the doctrin of Chriſtianity, appoint a day, & thou ſhalt heare. Perſwade the people to this ſaid the Proconſul: Truly ſayth Policarpus, I haue thought it my part, thus to ſay vnto you, for ſo much as we are commaunded to giue vnto the gouernours & powers ordayned of God, the honor meete & due to them, and not hurtfull vnto vs: but as for thoſe I doe iudge them vnworthy, to purge my ſelf vnto them. Hereupon the proconſul ſtode vp, I haue, ſaith he, wilde beaſts, to whom I will throwe thee, vnles thou take a better way: whereunto Policarpus anſwered let thẽ come: we haue determined with our ſelues that we will not by repentance turne vs from the better way, to the worſe, but rather conuenient it is, that a man turne from the thinges that be euill, to that which is good and iuſt. Agayne ſayth the Proconſul, I will tame thee with fire, if that thou ſet not by the wilde beaſtes, nor yet repent. Then ſaid Policarpus you threaten me with fyre which ſhal burne for the ſpace of an houre, & ſhalbe within a litle while after put out & extinguiſhed, but yͧ knoweſt not the fire of the iudgement that is to come and of euerlaſting puniſhment, which is reſerued for the wicked & vngodly. But why make you all theſe delayes, giue me what death ſoeuer ye liſt. Theſe & many other ſuch like thinges being by him ſpoken, he was ſo repleniſhed with ioy, and boldnes, and his countenaunce appeared ſo full of grace & fauour, that not onely he was not troubled with thoſe things which yͤ Proconſul ſpake vnto him, but contrarily the Proconſul himſelfe began to be amaſed and ſent for the crier, which in the middle of the ſtage was commaunded to cry 3. times, Policarpus, hath confeſſed himſelf to be a Chriſtian, which wordes of the cryer, were no ſooner ſpoken, but that all the whole multitude both of the Gentiles and Iewes inhabiting at Smyrna, with a vehement rage and loude voice cried. This is that Doctour or teacher of Aſia, the father of the Chriſtianes, and the deſtroyer of our gods, which hath inſtructed a great nūber that our Gods are not to be worſhipped, & after this they crid vnto Philip the gouernour of Aſia, and required him that he would let looſe the Lion to Policarpus. To whom he made aunſwere that he might not ſo doe, becauſe he had already his praye. Then they cried againe altogither with one voice that he woulde burne Policarpus a liue. For it was requiſite that yͤ viſion which he ſaw as concerning his pillow or bolſter ſhould be fulfilled: which when he had ſeene burnt, as he was in his prayer, he turned himſelfe vnto the faithful ſort which were with him, ſaying by the way of prophecie, it will ſo come, that I ſhall be burned a liue. And the Proconſul had no ſooner ſpoken, but it was out of hande performed. For why the multitude by and by brought out of their ſhops, workehouſes, and baynes, woode and other dry matter for that purpoſe and eſpecially the Iewes were moſt ſeruiceable for that matter, after their wõted maner. And thus the pile being layd, and that now hee had put of his garments & vndone his girdel, and was about to pul of his ſhooes, which he had not done before, for that all the faithfull ſort amongſt themſelues ſtriued (as it were) who ſhould firſt touch his body at their farewell, bicauſe for the good conuerſation of his life, yea, from his younger age, he was had in great eſtimation of al men. Therfore ſtraightway thoſe inſtruments which are requiſite to ſuch a bonfire, were brought vnto him, & when the would haue nayled him to the ſtake with yron hoopes, he ſaid, let me alone as I am, for he that hath giuen me ſtrength to ſuffer and abide the fire, ſhal alſo giue power, that without this your prouiſion of nayles, I ſhall abide, & ſtirre not in the middeſt of this fire or pyle of woode. Which thing when they heard, they did not nayle him, but bounde him. Therefore when his handes were bounde behinde him, euen as the chiefeſt Ramme taken out of the flocke, he was ſacrificed as an acceptable burnt offring to God ſaying: O father of thy welbeloued and bleſſed ſonne Ieſus Chriſt, by whom we haue attained the knowledge of thee, the God of aungels and powers, and of euery creature, and of al iuſt men which liue before thee, I giue thee thankes, that thou haſt vouchſafed to graũt me this day that I may haue my part amongeſt the number of the Martyrs in the cup of Chriſt vnto the reſurrection of eternall life both of body & ſoule, through the operation of the holy ſpirit, among whome I ſhalbe this day receaued into thy ſight for an acceptable ſacrifice: & as thou haſt prepared, and reueled the ſame before this time, ſo thou haſt accompliſhed the ſame. Which canſt not lye, O thou moſt true God. Wherefore I in lyke caſe for all things prayſe thee, bleſſe thee, and glorifie thee by our euerlaſting Biſhop Ieſus Chriſt to whom be glory euermore. Amen.

The thankeſgeuing of Policarpus

A miracle ſhewed.

An example of much crueltie.

The Iewes enemies alwayes to the Chriſtians.

Marke that he ſayth we loue them, and worſhippe them not.

And aſſoone as he had ended this word Amen, and finiſhed his prayer, the tormentors began to kindle the fire, & as the flame flaſhed out vehemently: we to whom it was giuẽ to diſcerne the ſame, ſaw a maruellous matter, which were alſo to this purpoſe preſerued, that we might ſhewe the ſame to other. For the fier being made like to acouſe or vaute of a houſe, and after the maner of a ſhipmans ſayle, filled with wind, compaſſed about the body of the Martir as with a certaine wall, and he in the middle of the ſame, not as fleſh, that burned, but as gold and ſiluer when it is tried in the fier. And ſurely we ſmelt a ſauour ſo ſweete as if Myrre or ſome other precious balme had giuen a ſent. At the laſt when thoſe wicked perſons ſawe yͭ hys body could not be conſumed by fire, they commaunded one of the tormentors to come vnto him, & thruſt him through with his ſworde. Which being done, ſo great a quantitie of bloude ran out of his body that the fire was quenched therewith, & the whole multitude marueyled that there was ſo much diuerſitie betwene the infidels and the elect, of whom this Policarpus was one, being a Diſciple of the Apoſtles, and a propheticall inſtructour of our times, and Biſhop of the Catholique Church of Smyrna, for what worde ſoeuer he ſpake both it was and ſhalbe accompliſhed. But the ſubtil and enuious aduerſary, when he ſaw the worthines of his martirdome, & that his conuerſation euen from his yoũger yeares could not be reproued, and that he was adourned with the crowne of martirdome, and had now obtained that incomparable benefite, gaue in charge, that we ſhould not take & deuide his body. For feare leaſt the remnaunts of the dead corps ſhould be taken away, & ſo worſhipped of the people. Wherupon diuers whiſpered Niceta the father of Herode, and his brother Dalces in the eare, to admoniſh the Proconſul, that in no caſe he ſhould deliuer his body, leaſt (ſaith he) they leaue Chriſt & begin to worſhip him. And this ſpake they becauſe the Iewes had gyuen them ſecret warning & prouoked them therunto, who alſo watched vs that we ſhoulde not take him out of the fire. not being ignoraunt how that we ment, at no time to forſake Chriſt, which gaue his life for the ſaluation of the whole world, (as many I meane as are elected to ſaluatiõ by him) neither yet that we could worſhip any other. For why? him we worſhip as the ſonne of God, but the Martirs do we loue as diſciples of the Lord (& that worthely) for their aboundaunt loue towardes their king and maiſter, of whom we alſo deſire and wiſh to be companions, & to be made his diſciples. Whẽ therfore the Centurion ſaw & perceaued the labour of the Iewes, the corps being layd abroad, they burnt the ſame, as was their maner to doe.

Twelue Martyrs put to death in Smyrna.

Thus good Policarpus with xij. other that came from Philadelphia, ſuffered Martyrdome at Smyrna, which Policarpus ſpecially aboue the reſt is had in memory, ſo that hee in all places among the Gentiles is moſt famous. And this was the ende of this worthy diſciple of the Apoſtles. Whoſe hyſtory the brethren of the congregation at Smyrna, haue wrytten in this their Epiſtle as is aboue recited.

Ex Irenæo. lib. 3 cap. 3.
Euſeb. Lib. 4. cap. 14.

{Anno. 167.}

Iræneus in his 3. booke againſt hereſies, the 3, chap. and Euſæbius in his 4. booke, and 14. chap. of his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory reporteth this worthy ſaying of Poticarpus: This Policarpus (ſayth hee) meeting at a certeine time Martion, the heretick, who ſaid vnto him, doeſt thou not know me? made anſwere, I know that thou art the firſt begotten of Sathan. So great feare what euil might enſue therof, had the Diſciples of the Apoſtles, that they would not ſpeake to them whom they knew to be the deprauers of the veritie, euen as Paule ſaith: The hereticke after the firſt and ſecond admonition, ſhonne, and auoyd: Knowing that he which is ſuch one, is peruerte or frowarde, and damneth himſelfe. This moſt holy confeſſour and Martyr of Chriſt Policarpus, ſuffered death in the fourth perſecution after Nero, when Marcus Antonius, and Lucius Aurelius Commodus raigned, an, Dom. 167. as Vrſperg. affirmeth, an. 170. as Euſebius witneſſeth in his Chronicles the 7. before the Calendes of Februarie.

Germanicus.
Ex. Euſeb. lib. 4. cap. 15. Hiſtor. eccle.

Of Germanicus mention is made aboue in the ſtorye of Policarpus of whome writeth Euſebius Lib. 4. cap. 15. notyng him to be a younge man, and moſt conſtantly to perſeuere in the profeſſion of Chriſtes doctrine, whom whẽ the Proconſul went about to perſwade, to remember his age, and to fauor him ſelfe, being in the floure of his age, he woulde not be allured: but conſtātly and boldly, and of his owne accorde incited and prouoked the wild beaſt to come vpon him, and to deuour him, to be deliuerd more ſpedely out of this wretched life. Hæc Euſebius, an, 170.

The olde age of Policarpus.

Thus haue you heard out of the Epiſtle of the brethren of Smyrna, the whole order and life of Policarpus, wherby it may appeare that he was a very aged mā who had ſerued Chriſt, lxxxvj. yeares ſince the firſt knowledge of him, and ſerued alſo in the miniſtery about the ſpace of 70. yeares.

Policarpus the ſcholler of Iohn.

Irenaus lib. 3.*Cap.*1.

This Policarpus was the ſcholer and hearer of Iohn the Euangeliſt, and was placed by the ſayde Iohn in Smyrna. Of him alſo Ignatius maketh mention in his Epiſtle which he wrote in his iourney to Rome, going toward his martyrdome, and commended to him the gouernement of hys Church at Antioch, whereby it appeareth that Policarpus then was in yͤ miniſtery. Likewiſe Iræneus writeth of the ſayd Policarpus after this maner. He alwaies taught (ſayd he) thoſe things which he learned of the Apoſtles, leauing them to the Church, and are onely true. Whereunto alſo al the Churches that be in Aſia, and all they which ſucceeded after Policarpus to this day beareth witnes, And the ſame Irenæus witneſſeth alſo that the ſayd Policarpus wrote an Epiſtle to the Philippians, which whether it be the ſame that is now extant and read in the name of Policarpus, it is doubted of ſome: notwithſtanding in the ſayd Epiſtle diuers things are founde very holeſome and Apoſtolicke: as where he teacheth of Chriſt, of iudgement and of the reſurrection. Alſo he writeth of faith very worthily, thus declaryng that by grace we are ſaued, and not by works, but in the will of God by Jeſus Chriſt.

Ex Euſeb. lib.5. cap.20.

Irenaus conuerſaunt with policarpus.

Policarpus conuerſaunt with the Apoſtles.

In Euſebius we reade in like maner a part of an Epiſtle written by Irenæus to Florinus, wherin is declared how that the ſaid Irenæus being yet yong, was with Policarpus in Aſia: at what time he ſaw & well remembred, what Policarpus did, and the place where he ſat teaching, his whole order of life and proportion of his body, with the ſermons & wordes which he ſaid to the people. And furthermore, he perfectly remembred howe that the ſaide Policarpus often times reported vnto him thoſe thinges which hee learned and heard them ſpeake of the Lord, his doinges, power, and doctrine, who heard the worde of life with their owne eares, all which were more conſonant and agreable to the holy Scripture. Thus with much more hath Irenæus, concerning Policarpus.

The authoritie of Policarpus in the Churches of Aſia.

Hierome alſo writing of the ſame Policarpus, hath howe he was in great eſtimation throughout all Aſia, for that he was ſcholer to the Apoſtles and to them which did ſee and were conuerſant with Chriſt himſelfe, whereby it is to be coniectured his authority to be much not onely with them of his owne Church, but wyth all other Churches about him.

Policarpus came to Rome.

Polycarpus conferreth with Anicetus

The Eaſt church and Romaine Church differre about Eaſterday

Ex Nicepho. Lib.4. cap 39.

Ouer and beſides, it is witneſſed by the ſayd Irenæus, that Policarpus came to Rome in the time of Anicetus Byſhop of Rome about the yere of our Lord. 157. in yͤ raigne of Antoninus Pius, whoſe cauſe of his comming thether appeareth to be about the controuerſie of Eaſterday: wherin the Aſians and the Romanes ſomthing diſagreed amonge theſelues. And therfore the ſaid Policarpus in the behalfe of the brethren and Church of Aſia, tooke his long iourneye thether to come and conferre with Anicetus. Wherof wryteth alſo Nicephorus Lib.4. declaring that Policarpus and Anicetus, ſomething varied in opinions and iudgement about that mater. And that notwithſtanding, yet both frendly communicated either with the other, inſomuch that Anicetus in his Church gaue place to Policarpus to miniſter the Communion and Sacrament of the Lordes Supper for honour ſake, which may be a notable teſtimony now to vs, that the doctrine concerning the free vſe and liberty of ceremonies, was at that time retained in the church without any offence of ſtomacke, or breach of Chriſtian peace in the Church.

Difference of ceremonyes cauſed no breach of charitie in the Primitiue Church.

This Policarpus (as is aboue mentioned) ſuffered his Martyrdome euen in his owne Church at Smyrna, where he had laboured ſo many yeares in planting of the Goſpel of Chriſt, which was about the yeare of our Lorde 170. as Euſebius rekoneth in his Chronicle, and in the 7. yeare of Antoninus Verus his raigne: wherby it appeareth that Socrates in Hiſtoria tripartita was much deceaued ſaying that Policarpus ſuffered in the time of Gordianus.

Agathonica.

Martyrs.

In this fourth perſecution beſide Policarpus and other mentioned before, we read alſo in Euſebius of diuers other, who at the ſame time likewiſe did ſuffer at Smyrna.

Ouer and beſides in the ſaid perſecution ſuffered moreouer Metrodorus a miniſter: who was giuen to the fire, & ſo conſumed. An other was worthy Pionius, which after much boldnes of ſpeeche, with his Apologies exhibited, & his ſermons made to the people in the defence of chriſtian fayth, and after much releuyng and comforting of ſuch as were in priſons, and otherwiſe diſcōforted, at laſt was put to cruell torments and afflictions, then giuen likewiſe to the fire, ſo finiſhed his bleſſed martyrdome.

After theſe alſo ſuffered Carpus Papylus, and Agathonyca, a woman who after their moſt conſtaunt and worthye confeſſions were put to death at Pergamopolis in Aſia, witneſſing Euſebius Lib.4, cap 7.

And as theſe ſuffered in Aſia, ſo in Rome ſuffered Felicitas with her 7. children, who vnder this M. Antoninus Verus, ſuſtayned alſo the cruelty of this perſecution. The names of whoſe children Bergomenſis and other hiſtories doe thus recite, Ianuarius. Felix, Philippe, Siluanus, Alexander, Vitalis, Martialis. Of whom her firſt and eldeſt ſonne Ianuarius after he was whipped and ſcourged with roddes, was preſt to death with leaden waightes. Felix and Phillippe had their braynes beaten out with maules. Siluanus was caſt downe headlong, and had his necke broken. Furthermore, Alexander, Vitalis, and Martialis was beheaded. Laſt of all Felicitas the mother (otherwiſe then the accuſtomed maner was, for ſuch as hadde borne Children) was ſlayne with the ſword. Ex Supplem.

Iuſtinus

Martyr.

Ex Euſeb. Lib.4. Cap. 16.

In the rage of this fourth perſecution, vnder the raigne of Antonius Pius, ſuffered alſo good Iuſtinus, a man in learning and Philoſophy excellent, & a great defender of Chriſtian Religion. Who firſt exhibited vnto the Emperour & to the Senate, a booke or Apologie in the defence of the Chriſtians, and afterward himſelfe alſo dyed a Martyr. Of whom in the hiſtory of Euſeb. Lib.4.cap.16. it is thus recorded: That about what tyme, or a little before that Polycarpus with other diuers Saincts ſuffered Martyrdome in Pargamopolis, a Cittie of Aſia, this Iuſtinus (as is aforeſayd) preſented a booke in defence of our doctrine to the Emperour, to wit vnto Antonius, and to the Senate. After which he was alſo crowned with like Martyrdome vnto thoſe, whome he in his booke had defended, through the malicious meanes, and crafty circumuention of Creſcens.

Creſcens A Philoſopher procurer of the death of Iuſtinus.

This Creſcens was a Philoſopher confirming hys lyfe and maners to the Cynical ſect, whom for becauſe this Iuſtinus had reproued in open audience, and had borne away the victory of the trueth which he defended, he therefore as much as in him lay, did worke & procure vnto him this crowne of Martyrdome. And this did alſo Iuſtine him ſelfe a Philoſopher, no leſſe famous by hys profeſſion, foreſee and declare in hys foreſayd Apology, telling almoſt all thoſe thinges before hand which ſhould happen vnto him, by theſe words ſaying: And I looke after this good turne, that I be ſlayne goyng by the way, eyther of ſome of thoſe whom I haue named, and to haue my braynes beaten out with a bat, or els of Creſcens, whom I cannot call a Phyloſopher, but rather a vayne boaſter. For it is not conuenient to call him a Philoſopher, whiche openly profeſſeth thinges to him vnknowne, and whereof he hath no ſkil, ſaying and reporting of vs, that the Chriſtians be vngodly & irreligiouſe: And all to pleaſe and flatter them, which are reduced by errour.

Creſcens a rayling Philoſopher, and a malicious rayler.

A ſlaue of fame and feare.

Creſcens proued an vnlearned Philoſopher.

For whether he obiecteth againſt vs the doctrine of the Chriſtians whiche he hath not read, yet is he very malicious, and worſe then the vnlearned ideotes, who for the moſt part vſe not to diſpute or iudge of thinges they know not, and to beare witnes of the ſame. Or put caſe that he had read them, yet vnderſtandeth he not the maieſtie of the matters therein conteined, or if peraduenture he vnderſtandeth them, and doth it for thys purpoſe, that he would not be counted as one of them: then is he ſo much the more wicked and malicious, and the bondſlaue of vyle & beaſtly both fame and feare. For this I teſtifie of him, geuing you truely to vnderſtand that for a truth, which I declare vnto you, how that I haue appoſed him, and haue put vnto him many queſtions, whereby I know and perceaue, that he vnderſtandeth nothing. But if ſo be that this our diſputatiō with him, hath not come vnto your eares, I am ready to communicate vnto you agayn thoſe queſtions which I demaunded of him, whiche things ſhall not be vnfit for your Princely honour to heare. But if ye knowe and vnderſtand both what thinges I haue examined him of, as alſo what aunſwere he hath made, it ſhal be apparant vnto you, that he is altogether ignoraunt of our doctrine and learning, or els if he knoweth the ſame, he dare not vtter it for feare of hys auditors, which thing, as I ſayd before, is a proofe that he is no Philoſopher, but a ſlaue to vayne glory, which maketh none accompt of that, which his own Mayſter Socrates had in ſo great eſtimation. And thus much of Iuſtine, out of Iuſtine himſelfe.

Now to verifie that, which Iuſtine here of him ſelfe doth prophecie, that Creſcens would and did procure his death, Tacianus cōmended.

The prayſe of Iuſtinus Martyr.

Tacianus (a man brought vp of a childe in the inſtitutions of the Gentiles, and obtayned in the ſame not a little fame, and which alſo left behinde him many good monumentes and Commentaries) writeth in hys booke agaynſt yͤ Gentiles in this ſort: And Iuſtine ſayth he, that moſt excellent learned man, full well ſpake and vttered his minde, that the afore recited men were lyke vnto theeues or lyers by yͤ high way ſide. And in the ſayd book ſpeaking afterward of certaine Philoſophers, the ſayd Tacianus inferreth thus: Creſcens therefore (ſayth he) when he came firſt into that great Cittie, paſſed all other in the vicious loue of children, and was very much geuen to couetouſnes, and where he taught that men ought not to regard death, he himſelf doth feare death, that he did all his indeuour to oppreſſe Iuſtine with death, as with the moſt greateſt euill that was, and all becauſe that Iuſtine ſpeaking trueth, reproued the Philoſophers to be men onely for the belly and deceauers, and this was the cauſe of Iuſtines Martyrdome. Hierome in his Eccleſiaſticall Catalogue thus writeth: Iuſtine when in the Cittie of Rome he had his diſputations, and had reproued Creſcens the Cinike, for a great blaſphemer of the Chriſtians: for a bellygod and a man fearing death, and alſo a follower of luſt and lechery: at the laſt by his indeuour and conſpiracie was accuſed to be a Chriſtian, and for Chriſt ſhed his bloud in the yeare of our Lord. 154. vnder Marcus Antonius, as the Cronicles doe witnes, Abb Vrſperg: and Euſebius in his Cronicle in the xiii. yeare of the Emperour Antoninus.

The death and martirdome of Iuſtinus. the noble Philoſopher and a Chriſtian Martyr.

Praxedis, Potentiana Chriſtian virgines.

Among theſe aboue recited is alſo to be numbred Praxedis a bleſſed virgine, the daughter of a Citizen of Rome, who in the tyme of Anicetus there Byſhop, was ſo brought vp in the doctrine of Chriſt, and ſo affected to hys religion, that ſhe with her ſiſter Potentiana, beſtowed all her patrimony vpon the relieuing of poore Chriſtians, geuing all her time to faſting and prayer, and to the buriyng of yͤ bodyes of the Martyrs. And after ſhe had made free all her famelie with her ſeruauntes, after the death of her ſiſter, ſhe alſo departed and was buryed in peace.

Ptolomeus. Lucius Martyrs.

Vnder the ſame Antoninus alſo ſuffered Ptolomeus, and Lucius for the confeſſion of Chriſt, in a Cittie of Egipt called Alexandria, whoſe hiſtory becauſe it is deſcribed in the Apology of Iuſtinus Martyr, I thought therefore ſo to ſet forth the ſame, as it is alledged in Euſebius, declaring the manner and occaſion therof. Lib. 4 cap. 17. in wordes and effect as followeth, &c.

Euſeb. lib. 4. Cap. 17.

There was (ſayth he) a certayne woman maryed vnto a huſband, who was geuen much to laciuiouſnes, whereunto ſhe her ſelfe in tymes paſt was alſo addict. But ſhe afterward being inſtructed in the Chriſtian religion, became chaſte her ſelf and alſo perſwaded her huſband to liue chaſtly: often times telling him that it was written in the preceptes of the Chriſtians, that they ſhould be puniſhed eternally, which liued not chaſtely and iuſtly in this life. But he ſtill continuing in his filthines, thereby cauſed his wife to eſtraunge her ſelfe from his company. For why? the woman thought it not conuenient to continue in her huſbandes company, which contemning the lawe of nature, ſought otherwiſe to ſatiſfie hys filthy appetite. Therefore ſhe was purpoſed to be deuorced frō him. But her neighbours and kinſfolkes prouoked her, by promiſing hys amendment, to keepe company agayne with hym, and ſo ſhe did. But he after this, tooke hys iourny into Alexandria and when it was ſhewed her, that there hee liued more licenciouſly, then at any time before, for that ſhe would not be counted partaker of his inceſtuous lyfe by coupling her ſelfe any longer with him, ſhe gaue him a letter of diuorce, & ſo departed frō him. Then her huſbād, who ought rather to haue reioyced to haue ſo honoſt and chaſte a wife, which not onely would not commit any diſhoneſt thing her ſelfe, but alſo could not abide any lewde or miſordered behauiour in her huſband, and that by this her ſeperation ſhee went about to reclayme hym from hys inceſt and wickednes to better amendment of lyfe: He in recompence to hys wyfe agayne, accuſed her to be a Chriſtian, whiche at that tyme was no leſſe then death. Whereupon ſhe being in great periſl and daunger deliuered vp vnto the Emperour (as Iuſtinus in his Apology writing to the Emperour him ſelfe declareth) a ſupplication, deſiring and crauing of hys maieſty, firſt to graunt her ſo much licence as to ſet her famiIie in order, and that done, afterward to come agayne & make aunſwere to all that might or ſhould be layd agaynſt her: whereunto the Emperour condeſcended. Then her huſband ſeing that he could haue no vauntage agaynſt her deuiſed wͭ himſelfe, how he might bring Ptolomeus (which was her inſtructor in the fayth of Chriſt) in trouble and accuſation: vſing the meanes of a certayne Centurion who was hys very frend, whom he perſwaded to examine Ptolomeus whether he were a Chriſtian or not. Ptolomeus (as one yͭ loued the trueth, & not thinking good to hide hys profeſſion) confeſſed no leſſe then to the examinour, openly declaring that he had (as truth was) taught and profeſſed the veritie of Chriſtian doctrine. For who ſo denyeth him ſelfe to be that he is, eyther cōdemneth in denying that thing that he is, or maketh himſelfe vnworthy of that, the confeſſion whereof he flyeth, whiche thing is neuer found in a true and ſincere Chriſtian. Thus thē he being brought before Vrbicius the iudge and by him condemned to ſuffer: One Lucius being alſo a Chriſtian, ſtanding by, and ſeing the wrong iudgement, and haſty ſentence of the Iudge, ſayd to Vrbicius: what reaſon, I pray you or equitie is this, that this man, who neyther is adulterer, nor fornicator, nor homicide, nor fealon, neyther hath committed any ſuch crime, wherein hee may be charged, thus is condemned onely for hys name and confeſſion of a Chriſtian. This cōdemnation and theſe maner of Iudgementes (O Vrbici) are neither ſeemely for the vertuous Emperour, nor to the Philoſopher hys ſonne, nor yet for the eſtate of hys Senate of Rome.

The boldnes & Chriſtian conſtancie of Lucius.

Which wordes being heard, Vrbitius making no farther examination of the matter, ſayd vnto Lucius: me thinketh thou art alſo a Chriſtian. And when Lucius had geuen him to vnderſtand that he was alſo a Chriſtian, the Iudge without further delay commaunded him to be had away to the place of execution. To whom he aunſwered: I thanke you withal my hart, that you releaſe me from moſt wicked gouernours, and ſend me vnto my good and moſt louing father, being alſo the king of all Gods. And in like maner the third man alſo, comming vnto him, and vſing the like libertie of ſpeeche, had alſo the like ſentence of death and condemnation, and crowned alſo with the ſame crowne of Martyrdome. And thus much out of the Apology of Iuſtinus, by the which ſtory it may appeare not to be true, that Gratianus attributeth vnto Higynus Byſhop of Rome, the deciding of cauſes matrimoniall, ſeeing that in Iuſtinus tyme (who was in the ſame age of Higynus) the deuorcement of this woman in this hiſtory aboue touched, was not decided by any Eccleſiaſticall law, or brought before any Byſhop, but was brought before a Heathen Prince, and determined by the law ciuill.

Concordus Martyr.

Henricus de Erfordia recordeth out of the Martyrologe of Iſuardus, of one Concordus a miniſter of the Citie of Spolete, who in the reigne of this Antoninus Verus, becauſe he would not ſacrifice vnto Iupiter, but did ſpit in the face of the Idole, after diuers and ſundry puniſhments ſuſtaynd, at laſt with the ſword was beheaded. Vincentius in hys x. booke, chap. 108. reciteth a long ſtory of his actes and life, wherof ſome part perhappes may ſeeme tollerable. But this verily appeareth to be falſe and fabulous, concerning the water flowing beſides his ſepulchre in the forenamed Cittie of Spolete, vnto the whiche water was geuen (ſayth Vincentius) by the vertue of hym, for whoſe name hee ſuffered, to reſtore ſight to the blinde, to heale the ſicke, and to caſt out deuils. &c. Which kinde of vertue to open the eyes of the blinde, and to expell deuils, neither doth God geue to any creature of water, neither is it like that Concordius the bleſſed Martyr did or would require any ſuch thing at the handes of God.

Ex Iſuardo. Vincentio. & Henrico de Erford.

Iſuardus and Bede, Vincentius, and Henricus de Erſordia, with other authors moe, make relation of diuers other Martyrs that by ſondry kindes of tormentes were put to death, vnder the foreſayd Antoninus Verus: the names of whome be Simmetrius, Florellus, Pontianus, Alexander, Caius, Fpipodus, Victor, Corona, Marcellus, Valerianus. The cauſe of whoſe Martyrdome was the reprehending of Idolatry and becauſe at the Emperours cōmandement, they would not ſacrifice to Idols. Many ſortes of puniſhmentes and of miracles are tolde of them, but at length the end of them all is this, that they were beheaded. Whereby it may be the more ſuſpected, the hiſtories of theſe writers not to be certayne or true, aswell touching theſe, as alſo other Martyrs, as may appeare in Vincentius, in Petrus de Natalibus, & other authors of like ſort. In which authors they which liſt to read more of their miracles, there may finde them.

A little before, pag 41 mention was made of Symphoriſſa, otherwiſe named Symphoroſa, wife of Getulus, with her vii. ſonnes. This Getulus or Getulius, was a miniſter or a teacher (as witneſſeth Martyrol. Adonis) in the Cittie of Tyber, which Getulus with Cerealis, Amantius, and Primitiuus, by the commaundement of Adria were condemned to the fire, wherein they were Martyred and put to death. The perſecution in Lyons and Vienna, two Cities in Fraunce. Ex Euſeb. lib. 5. Cap. 2.

Under the ſayd Antoninus Verus, and in the ſame perſecution, which raged not in Rome and Aſia onely, but in other countryes alſo, ſuffered the glorious & moſt cōſtant Martirs of Lyons and Vienna, two Cities in Fraunce, gyuing to Chriſt a glorious teſtimony, & to all Chriſtian men a ſpectacle, or example of ſingular conſtancie, and fortitude in Chriſt our ſauiour. The hiſtory of whom, becauſe it is written and ſet forth by their owne Churches, where they did ſuffer, mentioned in Euſeb. Lib. 5. cap. 2. I thought here to expreſſe the ſame in the forme and effecte of their owne wordes, as there is to be ſeene. The title of which their Epiſtle written to the brethren of Aſia and Phrigia thus beginneth.

✠ The ſeruauntes of Chriſt inhabiting the Cities of Vienna and Lyons, to the brethren in Aſia and Phrigia, hauing the ſame faith and hope of redemption with vs: peace, and grace, and glory, from God the father, and from Ieſus Chriſt our Lorde.

A letter of the brethren of Fraunce to the brethrē of Aſia.

The greatnes of this our tribulation, the furious rage of the Gentiles againſt vs, & the tormentes which the bleſſed martyrs ſuffered, neither can we in wordes, nor yet in writing exactly, as they deſerue, ſet forth. For the aduerſary with all his force gaue his endeuor to the working of ſuch preparatiues, as he himſelfe liſted, againſt his tyrannous comming, & in euery place practiſed he and inſtructed his miniſters, how in moſt ſpitefull maner to ſet them againſt the ſeruauntes of God: ſo that not onely in our houſes ſhoppes and markets we were reſtrained, but alſo were vniuerſally cōmaunded, that none (ſo hardy) ſhould be ſene in any place. But God hath alwaies mercy in ſtore and toke out of their hands ſuch as were weake amongſt them, and other ſome did he ſet vp as firme and immoueable pillers, which by ſufferance were able to abide all violent force, and valiantly to withſtand the ennmie, induring all their opprobrious puniſhment they could deuiſe: to cōclude, they fought this battell for that intent to come vnto Chriſt, eſteming their great troubles but as light: therby ſhewing that al that may be ſuffered in this preſent life, is not able to counteruayle the great glorye which ſhall be ſhewed vpō vs after this life. And firſt they patiently ſuffered whatſouer the multitude of frantike people running vpon head did vnto them, as railings, ſcourgings, drawynges and hailings, flynging of ſtones, impriſoninges, & what other thing ſoeuer the rage of the multitude are wōt to vſe and practiſe againſt their profeſſed enimies. Then afterwarde they being led into the marked place, and there iudged of the Captayne and reſt of the Potentates of the Citie, after their confeſſion made openly before the multitude were commaunded againe to priſō, vntil the returne of their chiefe gouernor. After this they being brought before him, and he vſing all extremity that poſſibly he might againſt them: One Vetius Epagathus, one of the brethren, replenished with feruent zeale, both towards god and his brethren (whoſe conuerſation, although he were a young man was counted as perfect, as was the life of Zachary the Prieſt, for he walked diligently in al the commaundements and iuſtifications of the Lord, and in all obedience towards his brethren blamles) he hauing within him the feruent zeale of loue, and ſpirit of god, could not ſuffer that wicked iudgement which was giuen vpon the Chriſtians but being vehemently diſpleaſed, deſired that the Iudge woulde heare the excuſe which he was minded to make in the behalfe of the chriſtians, in whom ſaith he is no impietie founde, But the people cryed againe to thoſe that were aſſiſtentes to the chiefe Iuſtice, that it might not be ſo (for indede he was a noble man borne) neither did the Iuſtice graunt him his lawfull requeſt, but onely aſked him whether he himſelfe were a Chriſtian or not. And he immediatly with a loude and boulde voice, aunſwered and ſayde, I am a Chriſtian. And thus was he receiued into the felowſhip of the martirs, and called the aduocate of the Chriſtians. And he hauing the ſpirite of God more plentifully in tyme, then had Zachary, the abundaunce thereof he declared, in that he gaue his life in the defence of his brethren, being a true diſciple of Chriſt, following the Lamb whereſoeuer he goeth.

Vetius Epagathus Martir.

The ſtoutnes of a godly young man.

By this mans example the reſt of the Martirs were the more animated to martirdome, and made more ioious with al courage of mind to accompliſh the ſame. Some other there were vnready and not ſo well prepared, and as yet weak, not well able to beare the vehemency of ſo great conflict: of whom x. there were in number, that faynted, miniſtring to vs much heauines & lamentation. who by their example cauſed the reſt which were not yet apprehēded, to be leſſe willing thereunto. Then were we all for the variablenes of confeſſion not a litle aſtonied: not ye we feared the puniſhment intended againſt vs, but rather as hauing reſpect to the ende, and fearing leaſt any ſhoulde fal. Euery day there were apprehended ſuch as were worthy to fulful the number of them which were fallen. In ſo much that of two churches, ſuch as were chiefeſt, & which were the principall gouernors of our Churches were apprehended. with theſe alſo certeine of the Ethnicks, being our men ſeruaunts, were apprehended (for ſo the gouernour commaunded, that all of vs ingenerall without any reſpect, ſhould be taken) which ſeruants being ouercome by Sathan, and fearing the torments which they ſaw the Saintes doe ſuffer, being alſo compelled thereunto by the meanes of the ſouldiers, fained againſt vs that we kept the feaſtinges of Thieſtes, and inceſt of Oedipus, and many ſuch other crimes, which are neither to be remembred, nor named of vs, nor yet to bee thought that euer any man would commit the like.

The faynting of certaine weake Chriſtians.

Falſe ſlaunders of the Chriſtians.

These things being now bruted abroad, euery man began to ſhewe crueltie againſt vs, inſomuch that thoſe which before for familiarities ſake were more gentle toward vs, now vehemently diſdained vs, and waxed mad againſt vs. And thus was now fulfilled that, which was ſpoken by Chriſt, ſaying, the time will come that whoſoeuer killeth you, ſhall thinke that he doth God great good ſeruice. Thē ſuffered the Martirs of God ſuch bitter perſecution as is paſſing to be tolde: Sathan ſtill ſhooting at this marke, to make them to vtter ſome blaſphemy by all meanes poſſible. Marueilous therefore was the rage both of the people & Prince, ſpecially againſt one Sanctus, which was Deacon of the congregation of Vienna, and agaynſt Maturus, being but a litle before baptiſed, but yet a worthy ſouldiour of Chriſt, and alſo againſt Attalus, being borne in Pergama, which was the foundation and pyller of that congregation, and alſo againſt Blandina, by whome Chriſt ſheweth, that thoſe things which the world eſteemed vyle and abiect, to be glorious in Gods ſight, for the very loue which in hart and deede they beare vnto him, not in outward face onely. For when all we were afrayd, & ſpecially her miſtres in fleſh, who alſo was her ſelfe one of the nūber of the foreſayd martirs, leaſt happely for the weakenes of body ſhe woulde not ſtande ſtrongly to her confeſſion, the foreſaid Blandina was ſo repleniſhed with ſtrength & boldnes, that they which had the tormenting of her by courſe from morning to night, for very werines gaue ouer & fell downe, & were themſelues ouercome, confeſſing that they could do no more againſt her, & marueiled that yet ſhe liued hauing her body ſo torne and rent. And teſtified that any one of thoſe torments alone without any moe had ben inough to haue plucke the life from her body. But that bleſſed woman, fighting this worthy battell, became strōger & ſtronger, (& as often as ſhe ſpake theſe words) I am a Chriſtian, neither haue we commi tted any euill) it was to her a marueilous comfort and bolding to abide the torments.

The rage of the Heathen againſt the Chriſtians.

The cruell handling and great patience of Blandina.

Sanctus alſo another of the Martyrs, who in the middeſt of his tormentes, induring more paines, then the nature of a man might away with, alſo at what time ye wicked ſuppoſed, to haue heard him vtter ſome blaſphemous words, for the greatnes & intollerablenes of his torments & paines, that he was in, abode notwithſtanding in ſuch conſtancy of mind, that neither he told them his name, nor what countryman he was, nor in what Citie brought vp, neither whether he was a free man or a ſeruaunt, but vnto euery queſtion yt was aſked him, he aunſwered in the Latine toung, I am a Chriſtian, and this was al that he confeſſed both of his name, citie, kinred, and all other thinges in the place of execution, neither yet could the Gentils, get any more of him: whereupon both the Gouernour & tormentours, were the more vehemently bent againſt him. And when they had nothing to vexe him with all, they clapped plates of Braſſe red hote, to ye moſt tendereſt parts of his body, wherewith his body indede being ſchorched, yet he neuer ſhronke for the matter, but was bold and conſtant, in his confeſſion, being ſtrengthened and moyſtened with the fountaine of liuely water, flowing out of Chriſts ſide. Truely his body was a ſufficient witnes, what tormentes he ſuffered for it was all drawne together and moſt pitifully wounded and ſcoarched, ſo that it had therwith loſt the proper ſhape of a man, in whoſe ſuffering Chriſt obtained vnpeakeable glory, for that he ouercame his aduerſary, and to the inſtruction of other declared, that nothing els is terrible, or ought to be feared where the loue of God is, nor nothing greeuous, wherein the glory of Chriſt is manifeſted.

A miraculous working of God.

And when thoſe wicked men, began after a certayne time againe to torment the Martyr, & hoped well to bring it to paſſe, that either they ſhould ouercome him in cauſing him to recant, by reiterating his torments, now whē his body was ſo ſore & ſwollen, that he might not ſuffer a man to touch him with his hande, or els that if hee died vnder their handes, yet that thereby they ſhould ſtrike ſuch feare into the harts of the reſt, to cauſe them to deny Chriſt. But they were not only diſappointed herein, but alſo contrary to the expectation of men, his bodye was in the latter puniſhment & torments ſuppled & reſtored, and toke the fyrſt ſhape and vſe of the members of the ſame, ſo that the ſame his ſecond torment was by the grace of Chriſt (in ſteede of puniſhment) a ſafe medecine.

Alſo Sathan now thinking to haue ſetteled himſelfe in the hart of one Byblides, being one of them which had denied Chriſt, and thinking to haue cauſed her, beyng a weake and feable woman in faith, to haue damned her ſoule, in blaſpheming the name of God, brought her to the place of execution: inforcing to wreſt ſome wicked thing out of the mouth of the Chriſtians. But ſhe in midle of her torments, returning to her ſelfe, and waked as it were out of her dead ſlepe, by that temporall paine, called to her remembraunce the paynes of hell fire, and againſt all mens expectations reuiled the tormentors, ſaying. How ſhould we Chriſtians eate young infants (as ye reported of vs) for whom it is not lawfull to eate the bloud of any beaſt? Vpon that ſo ſoone as ſhe had confeſſed her ſelfe to bee a Chriſtian, ſhe was Martyred with the reſt. Thus when Chriſt had ended thoſe tyrannicall torments, by the patience & ſufferaunce of our Saintes, the diuell yet inuented other engynes and inſtruments. For when the Chriſtians were caſt into priſon, they were ſhut vp in darke and ougly dongeons, and were drawne by the feete, in a racke or ingine made for that purpoſe, euen vnto the fift hole. And many other ſuch puniſhmentes ſuffered they which the furious miniſters ſtirred vp with deuiliſh furye, are wont to put men vnto: ſo that very manye of them were ſtrangled & killed in the priſons, whom the Lorde in thys maner would haue to enioy euerlaſting life, & ſet forth his glory. And ſurely theſe good men were ſo pitifully tormented, that and if they had had all the helpe, & medicines in the world, it was thought impoſſible for them to lyue, & to be reſtored. And thus they remaining in priſon deſtitute of al humaine helpe, were ſo ſtrengthened of the Lord, and both in body and minde confirmed, that they comforted & ſtirred vp the myndes of the reſt, the yonger ſorte of them, whiche were latter apprehended, & put in priſon, whoſe bodies had not yet felt yͤ laſh of yͤ whip, were not able to indure yͤ ſharpneſſ of their impriſonment, but died of yͤ ſame.

Photinus a bleſſed martyr.

The rage of the people agaynſt Photinus.

The bleſſed Photinus, who was Deacon to the biſhop of Lyons, about .90. yeares old, and a very feeble or weake man, & could ſcarſely draw breath for the imbecilitie of his body: yet was he of a liuely courage & ſpirit. For the great deſire he had of martyrdome, when he was brought vnto the iudgement ſeate: although his bodye was feeble and weake, both becauſe of his old age, and alſo through ſicknes, yet was his ſoule or life preſerued to this purpoſe, that by the ſame Chriſt might triumph & be glorified. He, being by the ſouldiers brought to the place of iudgement, many Citizens & men of great ability following him, and the whole multitude cried vpon him diuerſly, as though he had beene Chriſt himſelfe, gaue a good teſtimony. For being demaunded of the chiefe ruler, what was the Chriſtian mans God, he aunſwered: If thou be worthy to know thou ſhalt know. He being with theſe wordes ſomewhat neere touched, cauſed him to be very ſore beaten. For thoſe that ſtood next him, did him all the ſpit & diſpleaſure yͭ they could both with hand and foote, hauing no regarde at all to his olde age or white heares. And they which were further of, whatſoeuer came next to hande, they threwe at him, & euery man thought yͭ he did very wickedly refraine that withheld his hande from not doing the like. For by this meanes they thought that they did reuenge the quarell of their Gods. Photinus, now euen as it were gaſping after life, was throwen into priſon, and within two daies after dyed.

The comfort of the godly ſtanding to their confeſsion. The denyers of their confeſsion comfortles and notwithſtanding puniſhed.

And here is the mighty prouidence of God, and the vnſpeakable mercy of Ieſus Chriſt declared, which prouidence being aſſured amongeſt al eternity, is neuer deſtitute of the aide of Ieſus Chriſt. For thoſe which in their firſt perſecution denied Chriſt, they alſo were put in pryſon, and made pertakers of the others affliction. Neither yet did it any whit at all at that time helpe them that had denied Chriſt, but they which confeſſed him, were impriſoned as chriſtians, neither was there any other crime obiected againſt them, but the other ſort taken like homicides and wicked doers, were layd hand on, and had double more puniſhment then the others had. Theſe mē were refreſhed with the ioy of martyrdome, the hope of Gods promiſes, the loue toward Chriſt, and the ſpirite of God: The other their conſciences accuſed them, & that very ſore in ſo much that by their gate, their countenaunces bewrayed vnto the reſt their giltie conſciences. For the Chriſtians went forth hauing cheerefull countenaunces, very much adourned with glory and grace, inſomuch that the verye bondes wherewith they were tyed, ſet them out as men in ſeemely apparel: and like as brides when they be decked in gorgeous and gay garmentes, and therewithal laud ed as of the redolent ſmell of Chriſt, ſo that it might be ſuppoſ d them to be annointed with ſome ſwete baulme: whereas the other were doubtfull and ſad, abiect, ſorowed, filled, to al ſhame, and furthermore rebuked of the Gentils themſelues, as wretches, degenerate, hauing the crime of homicid and deſtitute of the moſt precious, glorious, and liuely calling of the Chriſtian name. And truly by theſe ſightes the reſt were confirmed, & being apprehended, confeſſing chriſt without any ſtickering, not hauing ſo much as yͤ thought of any ſuch deuiliſh minde of denial. And in the ſame Epiſtle of the foreſayd brethren of Fraunce, writing to the brethren of Aſia, it followeth in this maner: After theſe things done, the Martirdome of theſe holy Saintes were deuided diuerſly, into diuers kindes and formes, as the offering to God the Father a garland decked with diuers and ſundry kindes of colours and flowres. For it ſo behoued the worthy Champions of God, after they had ſuffered diuers kindes of tormentes, and ſo winning a triumphaunt victory to obtaine great reward of immortalitie.

The ſpitefull handling of Gods people.

Maturus and Sanctio Martyred.

Then Maturus Blandina, and Attalus together were brought to the cōmon ſcaffolde, there in the face of the people to be caſt & deuoured of the beaſts. And Maturus with Sanctus being brought yͤ ſecond time to the ſcaffolde, ſuffered againe all kinde of torments, as though hetherto they had ſuffered nothing at all, yea rather as though yͤ aduerſarye being oftentimes put to the worſt, they as ſtriuyng for the crowne, ſuffered againe more ſcourginges, the tearing of wilde beaſtes, & what thing els ſoeuer the frantike people on euery ſide cryed for and willed. And aboue al the reſt they brought an yron chayre, in the which their bodies being ſet, were ſo fryed and ſcorched as on a gridiron fried vpon the coales, filled with the ſauour of the frying all the people that ſtode by. And yet for all that the tormentours ceaſed not, but waxed more fierce and mad againſt thē, laboring to ouercome the patience of the Saints. Notwithſtanding al this they could not get out of Sanctus mouth any other thing but the confeſſion which at the beginning he declared. And thus theſe holy men, after they had long continued aliue in this their moſt horrible conflicte, at the length were ſlaine, being made al that whole day a ſpectacle vnto the worlde in place and in ſtede of the games and ſightes, which were woont to be exhibited to the people. And thus much concerning Maturus and Sanctus.

Blandina brought forth agayne.

Now concerning Blandina, who being faſtened vpon a ſtake, was caſt to the rauening beaſtes to be deuoured, which thing was not done without the determinate wyll of God: to this ende that while ſhe ſeemed to hang vpon a croſſe (as it were) by the feruentnes of her praier, ſhe much cōforted the reſt of the ſaints, as beholding vnto her chriſt, with their bodily eyes, which in that agonie ſuffered for them all, and that al which beleue in him, and ſuffer for the glory of Chriſt, might be aſſured to liue with him for euer. And when they ſawe that no beaſt woulde come neare her thus hanging, they toke her downe from the tree, and caſt her againe into priſon till an other time, that ſhe hauing yͤ victory of many battels, might triumphe ouer that ougly Serpent the deuill, & that ſhe being a weake and ſely woman, and not regarded, armed with Chriſt the inuincible conquerour, might incourage her brethren, and by the induring of this battaile might winne a crowne of incorruptible glory.

Now to Attalus, who being alſo required and cald for of the people to puniſhment, already prepared (for his conſcience ſake) commeth forth to the fight. For he being worthely exerciſed in the Chriſtian profeſſion, was alwayes a witnes and a mayntayner of our doctrine. Therfore when the preſſe of people was about the ſcaffolde, and the table caried before him, wherein was written in the Romayne toung. This is Attalus the Chriſtian. Then the people were in a marueilous rage againſt him, but the gouernor vnderſtanding yͤ he was a Romane, commaunded him againe to priſon, with the reſt of his priſon fellowes: whereof he wrote to the Emperour, and waited for aunſwere what his pleaſure herein was. The priſoners were not ydle in yͤ meane ſeaſō, nor vnprofitable to their brethrē, but by their patience the vnſpeakable mercy of Chriſt ſhined out. For thoſe which were dead before, were now reuiued by them that liued and they which were Martyrs, profited them which were none, & the Church did much reioyce, as receiuing them againe aliue, whō ſhe had loſt before as dead For many of them which before had denied, now by theyr denial were reſtored and ſtirred vp, and learned to be confeſſours. And now being reuiued and ſtrengthned, and taſting the ſweetenes of him which deſireth not the death of a ſinner, but is mercifull to the penitent, came of their own accorde to the iudgement ſeate againe, that they might bee examined of the Iudge. And for that the Emperour had written backe againe to him, that all the confeſſors ſhould be puniſhed and the other let go, and that the Seſſions or Siſes were now begun, which for the multitude that had repayre thether out of euery quarter, was marueilous great: he cauſed all the holy martirs to be brought thether, that the multitude might beholde them, & once againe examined them, and as many of them as he thought had the Romane fredome, he beheaded, the reſidue he gaue to the beaſtes to be deuoured. And truely Chriſt was much glorified by thoſe which a little before had denied him, which againe contrary to yͤ expectation of the Infidels, confeſſed him euen to the death. For they were examined a part frō the reſt, becauſe of their deliuery, which being found Confeſſours, were ioined to the company of the martirs, & had with them their part. But there were then abroade, which had no faith at all, neither yet ſo much as the feeling of the wedding garment, nor any cogitation at all, of the feare of God, but blaſphemed his waies, by the lewd conuerſatiō of their life, euen ſuch as were the children of damnation. Al the reſidue ioined thēſelues to the congregation: which whē they were examined one Alexander a phrigian, borne, and a Phiſition, which had dwelt long in Fraunce, and knowen almoſt of euery man, for the loue he had to God, & boldnes of ſpeaking (neither was he voide of the Apoſtolicall loue) this Alexander ſtanding ſomewhat neare to the barre, by ſignes and beckes perſwaded ſuch as were examined to confeſſe Chriſt: ſo that by his countenaunce ſomtime reioiſing, and ſome other while ſorrowing, he was deſcryed of the ſtanders by. The people not taking in good part to ſee thoſe which now recanted, by and by againe to ſticke to their firſt confeſſion, they cried out againſt Alexander, as one that was the cauſe of all this matter. And when he was inforced by the Iudge and cōmaunded what Religion he was of, he aunſwered: I am a Chriſtian. He had no ſooner ſpoken the worde, but he was iudged to the beaſtes, of them to be deuoured.

The worthy pacience and conſtancie of Attalus.

The next day following, Attalus, of whome I made mention a litle before, and Alexander, were brought forth together (for the gouernour graunting Attalus vnto the people, was baited againe of the beaſts.) when theſe men were brought to the ſcaffold, and had taken a taſt of all the inſtruments that there were prepared for their execution, and had ſuffered the greateſt agonie they could put thē to, were alſo at the length ſlaine: Of whome Alexander neuer gaue ſo much as a ſigh, nor held his peace, but frō the bottome of his hart praiſed and praied to the Lorde. But Attalus when he was ſet in the yron chaire, and began to frye, and the frying ſauour of his burning body began to ſmell, he ſpake to the multitude in yͤ Romane language: Behold (ſayth hee) this is to eate mans fleſh which you doe, for we neither eate men, nor yet cōmit any other wickednes. And being demaunded what was the name of their God: our God (ſaith he) hath no ſuch name as men haue. Then ſaid they, now let vs ſee whether your God can helpe you, and take you out of our handes or not.

Blandina and Ponticus agayne brought forth.

Ponticus Martyred.

Blandina Martyred.

Apoc. 11.

After this, being the laſt day of the ſpectacle, Blandine againe, & one Pōticus, a child of xv. yeare old was brought forth, and this was euery day, to the intent they ſeing the puniſhment of their fellowes, might be compelled thereby to ſweare by their Idoles. But becauſe they conſtantly abode in their purpoſe, & defied their idols, the whole multitude was in a rage with them, neither ſparing the age of the child, nor fauoring the ſexe of the woman, but put them to all the puniſhment and paine they could deuiſe, & often times inforced them to ſweare, & yet were not able to cōpel them thereunto. For Ponticus ſo being animated of his ſiſter, as the Heathnikes ſtanding by did ſee, after he had ſuffered all torments and paynes gaue vp the ghoſt. This bleſſed Blandina therefore being the laſt that ſuffered, after ſhe had like a worthy mother giuen exhortations vnto her children, and had ſent them before as conquerours to their heauenly king, and had called to her remembraunce al their batels & conflicts, ſo much reioiced of her childrens death, & ſo haſtened her owne, as though ſhe had bene bidden to a bridall, & not in caſe to be throwne to the wilde beaſtes. After this her pittifull whipping, her deliuery to yͤ beaſts, & her tormentes vpon the gridiron, at the length ſhe was put in a net, and throwne to the wild Bull, and when ſhe had bene ſufficiently gored & wounded with the hornes of the ſame beaſt, & felt nothing of all that chaunced to her, for the great hope and conſolation ſhe had in Chriſt & heauenly thinges, was thus ſlaine, inſomuch that the verye Heathen men themſelues confeſſed that there was neuer woman put to death of them that ſuffered ſo much as this woman did. Neither yet was their furious crueltie thus aſſwaged againſt the Chriſtians. For the cruel barbarous people, like wilde beaſtes when they be moued, knew not when the time was to make an ende, but inuented new & ſundry torments euery day againſt our bodies. Neyther yet did it content thē when they had put the Chriſtians to death, for yͤ they wanted the ſenſe of men: for which cauſe both the magiſtrate & people were vexed at the very harts that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, which ſaith, he that is wicked, let him be wicked ſtil, and he that is iuſt let him be more iuſt. For thoſe which in their priſons they ſtrangled they threw after to the dogs ſetting keepers both day and night to watch them, that they ſhoulde not be buryed, and bringing forth the remnaunt of their bones & bodies, ſome halfe burnt, ſome left of the wilde beaſts, & ſome al to be mangled, alſo bringing forth heads of other which were cut of, and like maner committed by them to the charge of the keepers to ſee them remaine vnburied.

The Gentiles grinded & gnaſhed at the Chriſtians with their teeth, ſeeking which way they might amplifie their puniſhment: ſome other flouted and mocked them, extolling their idoles, attributing vnto them the cauſe of thys crueltie and vengeaunce ſhewed to vs. Such which were of the meeker ſort, and ſeemed to be moued with ſome pyty, did hit vs in the teeth, ſaying, where is your God, that you ſo much boaſt of: & what helpeth this your religion: for which you giue your liues? These were the ſundrye paſſions and affects of the Gentiles, but the Chriſtians in the meane while were in great heauines, that they might not burye the bodies and reliques of the holy Martirs. Neither could the dark night ſerue them to that purpoſe, nor any intreaty, nor waging them with money, whiche were appointed for watchmen: but they ſo narowly loked vnto the matter, as though they ſhould haue gotten great benefite and profite thereby.

Thus were the bodies of the martirs made a wonderyng ſtocke, and laye ſixe dayes in the open ſtreetes, at the length they burned them, & threwe their aſhes into yͤ riuer of Rods, ſo that there might appeare no remnaunt of thē vpō the earth. And this did they as though they had beene able to haue pulled god out of his ſeat, & to haue let the regeneration of the Saintes, and taken from them the hope of the reſurrection, whereof they being perſwaded (ſayd they) bring in this newe and ſtraunge Religion, and ſet thus light by death and puniſhment. Atque hæc: hæc ex Epiſtola Viennenſium. &c.

Iuſtinus.

Priſcus Bachius. Iuſtinus father.

Iuſtine deſirous of Philoſophy.

Amongeſt other that ſuffered vnder Antoninus, mention was made alſo of Iuſtinus, who as it is ſaid before, exhibited two Apologies, concerning the defence of chriſtian doctrine, the one to the Senate of Rome, and the other to Antoninus Pius the Emperour, cōcerning whoſe ſuffering, and the cauſes therof is partly before declared: this Iuſtine was borne in Neapoli, in the countrey of Paleſtine, whoſe father was Priſcus Bachius, as he himſelſe doth teſtifie. By whom in his youth he was ſet to ſchole to learne, wherin proceſſe of time he became a famous and worthy Philoſopher, of whoſe excellency many learned & notable men doe record, For firſt, he being altogither inflamed and rauiſhed with deſire of knowledge, would in no wiſe be ſatiſfied in his mind, before he had gotten inſtructors ſingularly ſeene in all kinde of Philoſophy, whereupon he writeth of himſelfe in the beginning of his Dialogue Cum Tripone, thus declaring, that in the beginning he being deſirous of that ſect and ſocietie, applied himſelſe to be the ſcholer to a certaine Stoicke, & remaining with him a time, when he nothing profited in diuine knowledge (wherof the Stoicke had no ſkill, and affirmed the knowledge therof not to be neceſſary) he forſoke him, and went to another of the ſect of the Pereparetick, a ſharp witted man, as he thought with whom after he had beene a while, he demaunded of him a ſtipende for his teaching, for the better confirmatiõ of their familiaritie. Whereupon Iuſtine accõpting him as no Philoſopher left him, & departed. And yet not ſatiſfied in mind but deſirous to heare of further learning in Philoſophye, adioyned himſelfe to one that profeſſed ẏ Pithagorian ſect, a man of great fame, and one who made no ſmall accompt of himſelfe. Who after he had followed a time, his maiſter, demaunded of him whether he had any ſight in Muſicke, Aſtronomy, and Geometry, wythout the ſight of whiche ſcience, he ſaide he coulde not be apte to receiue the knowledge of vertue and felicitie, vnles before he had vſed to apply his minde from ſenſible matters to the contemplation of things intellible. And ſpeaking much in the commendation of theſe ſciences, how profitable and neceſſary they were: after that Iuſtine had declared him ſelfe not to bee ſene therin, the Philoſopher gaue him ouer, which greued Iuſtine not a little, & ſo much the more becauſe he thought his maſter to haue ſome knowledge in thoſe ſciences. After this Iuſtine conſidering with himſelfe what time was requiſite to the learning of theſe ſciences, and thinking not to differre any longer, thought beſt to reſort to the ſecte of the Platoniſtes for the great fame that ran of them: wherefore he choſe vnto him a ſinguler learned man of that ſecte, which lately was come to thoſe parties & ſo remaining wͭ him ſeemed to profite not a litle in contemplation of ſupernall things, & inuiſible formes, inſomuch that he thought ſhortly to aſpire to ſuch ſharpnes of witte and wiſedome, that out of hand he might atchiue to the comprehenſion & contẽplation of god, which is the end of Plato his Philoſophie. And in this maner he beſtowed his youth: but afterward he growing to a riper age, howe & by what meanes the ſaid Iuſtine came to the knowledge & profeſſion of chriſtianitie, it foloweth likewiſe in his ſaide firſt Apologie: where he affirmeth of him ſelfe (as witneſſeth Euſebius in his fourth booke) that when he did behold the chriſtians in their tormentes and ſufferinges to be ſo conſtaunt in theyr profeſſion, was therwith marueilouſly moued: after this maner reaſoning with himſelfe, that it was impoſſible for that kinde of people to be ſubiect to any vice or carnalitie, which vices of their owne nature are not able to ſuſtayne any ſharpe aduerſitie, much leſſe the bytterneſſe of death. The ſight wherof helped him not a litle (being of his own nature inclined to the ſearching of true knowledge & vertue) to begin thereby to loue and imbrace Chriſtian Relygion, for ſo he doth witnes of himſelfe in the ende of ẏ fyrſt Apologie: ſignifiyng there how it was his ſeking and indeuor to attaine to Chriſtianitie: Underſtanding how the Chriſtians by malice of wicked perſons were cõpelled to ſuffer wrong and tormentes, and to be euill ſpoken of. By ſight wherof, as he ſaith himſelfe, he became a Chriſtian, through this occaſion, for being thus afflicted in his minde as is aforeſaid, it came in his head for his more quietnes to go aſide to ſome deſert and ſolitary place void of concourſe of people, vnto a village or graſige neare to ẏ ſea ſide: whither as he approched, thinking there to be al alone, there meeteth with him an old auntient father of a comly viſage and gentle behauior, who folowing him a litle of began to reaſon with him, where after lõg diſputation, when ẏ old man had declared vnto him that there was no knowledge of truth amongſt the Philoſophers, which neither knewe God, neither were aided by the holy Ghoſt: & further had reaſoned wͭ him of ẏ immortality of ẏ ſoule, of the reward of the godly, & puniſhment of the wicked: then Iuſtine being confirmed with his reaſons and arguments, yelded to him of his owne accorde, and demaunded of him by what meanes he might attaine to that true knowledge of God, wherof he had ſpoken. Who then counſailed him to read & ſearche the Prophetes, adioyning therewith prayer: but what maſter, quoth Iuſtine ſhould I vſe for the inſtruction therof. & who ſhalbe able to helpe vs if theſe philoſophers (as you ſay) lacke the truth, & are voide of the ſame? To whom the old father aunſwering, there haue bene ſaide he many yeres before theſe philoſophers, other more aũtient then all theſe, which beyng accompted for Philoſophers were iuſt and beloued of God: who ſpake by the ſpirite of God, foreſeing and propheſiyng theſe thinges which wee ſee now come to paſſe, & therfore they are called Prophets. Theſe only haue knowen the truth and reueled it to men, neither fearing nor paſſyng for any: who were ſeduced wͭ no opinions of mans inuention, but only ſpake & taught thoſe things which they themſelues both heard and ſawe, being inſpired with the holy ſpirit of god: whoſe writings and works yet to this day remaine. Out of which the reader may receiue great profite & knowledge of thinges, as concerning the firſt creation of the worlde & end of ẏ ſame, with al other things neceſſary to be knowne of euery true Philoſopher which wil giue credite vnto them. Neither in their teaching they do vſe any demonſtration, as being more certaine of themſelues, then that they neede any ſuch demonſtration to be made. For aſmuch as the accomplyſhing and the end of things both paſte, & now preſent conſtraineth vs of neceſſitie to beleue the wordes and doctrine which they taught: which men not only therefore are to be beleued, but alſo for their miracles and wonders done are worthy of credite, for that they both preached of God the maker and creator of all thinges: And alſo did propheſye before of Chriſt his ſonne to be ſent of him. The which the falſe Prophets being ſeduced with falſe and wicked ſpyrits, neither haue done, nor do, but onely take vpon them to worke certaine prodigious wonders for men to gaſe at, ſetting out thereby to the worlde falſe & vncleane ſpirites: But then afore all thinges make thy prayer, that ẏ gate of light may be opened vnto thee, for otherwiſe theſe things cannot be attained vnto of euery man, but onely of ſuch, to whom God and his Chriſt giueth vnderſtanding. Theſe thinges with much more (which now leaſure ſerueth not, to proſecute) after the foreſaid old father had declared vnto him he departed: exhortyng him well to follow the things which he had ſpoken. And after that Iuſtine as he himſelfe witneſſeth, ſaw him no more. Immediatly after thys Iuſtine being all inflamed as with fyre kindled in his breaſt, began to conceiue a loue & zeale toward the Prophets and all ſuch as were fauoured of Chriſt. And thus he reuolning in his mind more and more theſe wordes, found onely this Philoſophie among all other profeſſions, both ſure and profitable, and ſo became he a Philoſopher, & in time by theſe meanes afterwards he was made a Chriſtian and Baptiſed. But where he receiued this holy Sacrament of Baptiſme, it is not read of, nor yet by what occaſiõ he left his country and came to Rome. This only we read in Ierome that he was in Rome, & there vſed certaine exerciſes which he called Diatribas, diſputing there with Creſcens, a Cinycal philoſopher, as is before touched. But this is certaine how that Iuſtine after he had receaued the profeſſiõ of Chriſtian Religiõ, became an earneſt defẽder of the ſame, trauelling and diſputing againſt al the aduerſaries therof fearing neither peril of life nor daunger of death whereby he might maintaine the doctrine of Chriſt, againſt the malicious blaſphemers and alſo augment the number of Chriſtian beleuers. As may appeare by his vehement diſputations againſt ẏ heathen Philoſophers. Alſo moreouer aſwell appeareth in that long diſputatiõ which he had with one Tripho at Epheſus: as alſo in his confutations of heretikes. Furthermore his conflictes and Apologies which with great courage & ſecurity he exhibited againſt the perſecutors of the Chriſtians, both the Emperour and the Magiſtrates, yea and the whole Senate of Rome, doe teſtifie the ſame.

Prophetes to be credited for two cauſes.

Iuſtinus baptiſed.

Diatriba.

Iuſtinus an earneſt defender of Chriſt.

Two Apologies of Iuſtinus.

The ſumme of his Apologies.

Of the which Apologies the firſt he wrote to the Senate of Rome, and after to Antoninus Pius the Emperour as is before mentioned, where, in the fyrſt writing wyth great liberty to the Senate he declared: that of neceſſitie he was compelled to write and vtter his minde and conſciẽce to them. For that in perſecuting of the Chriſtians they did neglect their duety, and highly offended God, and therfore neede they had to be admoniſhed. And further writing to Vrbitius liefetenaunt of the Citie, ſayd, that hee put men to death and tormentes for no offence committed, but for the confeſſion onely of the name of Chriſt: which proceedinges and iudgementes neyther became the Emperour nor hys ſonne, nor the Senate: defending moreouer in the ſayd Apology and purgyng the Chriſtiãs of ſuch crimes as falſely were layd and obiected agaynſt them by the Ethnikes.

The ſecond Apology of Iuſtine.

And likewiſe in hys ſecond Apology writing to Antonius the Emperour and his ſucceſſours, with like grauity and free libertie, declareth vnto them how they had the name, cõmonly beyng reputed & taken as vertuous Philoſophers, mayntayners of iuſtice, louers of learning, but whether they were ſo, their actes declared. As for him neither for flattery nor fauour at their hands, he was cõſtrayned thus to write vnto them, but onely to ſue vnto thẽ and deſire a ſerious & righteous kind of dealing in their iudgements and ſentences. For it becommeth Princes to folow vprightnes & pietie in their iudgements, not tiranny and violence: & alſo in playne wordes chargeth as wel the emperour as the Senate with manifeſt wrong. For that they did not graunt the Chriſtians, that which is not denied to all other malefactors, iudging men to death not conuicted but onely for the hatred of the name: Other men which be appeached (ſaid he) in iudgement, are not condemned, before they are cõuicted: but on vs you take your name only for the crime, when as indede you ought to ſee iuſtice done vpõ our accuſers. And againe (ſaith he) if a Chriſtian being accuſed onely denie that name, him you releaſe beyng not able to charge him with any other offence. But if he ſtande to his name, onely for his confeſſion you may caſt him, where indeede it were your duety rather to examine their maner of life what thing they confeſſe or denye, and according to their demerites to ſee iuſtice done.

And in the ſame further he ſaith, you examine not the cauſes. but incenſed with raſh affections as with the ſpur of fury, ye ſlay & murder them not conuicted, without any reſpect of iuſtice. And further he addeth: Some peraduenture wil ſay certaine of them haue bene apprehended & taken in euill doinges, as though (ſaith he) you vſed to enquire vpō them being brought afore you, & not commonly to condemne thē before due examination of their offence for the cauſe aboue mentioned. Where alſo in the ende of yͤ ſaid Apology after this maner he reprehendeth thē. You do degenerate (quoth he) from the goodnes of your predeceſſours, whoſe exāple you followe not: for your father Adrian of famous memorye, cauſed to bee proclaymed that Chriſtians accuſed before the iudge, ſhould not be cōdemned, vnles they were found gilty of ſome notorious crime I finde that all his vehement and graue Apologie ſtādeth vpon moſt ſtrong & firme probations: denying yͭ the chriſtians ought by conſcience at the will & commaundement of the Emperour & Senate to doe ſacrifice to the Idols. For the which they being condemned, affirme yͭ they ſuffer open wrong: approuing moreouer that the true & only Religion, is the Religion of the Chriſtians: whoſe both doctrine and conuerſation hath no fault. Iuſtinus although with theſe and ſuch like perſwaſions did not ſo preuayle with the Emperour to cauſe him to loue his Religion & become a chriſtian (for that is not written) yet thus much he obtained, that Antoninus writing to his Officers in Aſia in the behalfe of the Chriſtians, required and cōmaunded them, that thoſe Chriſtians which onely were founde giltie of any treſpaſſe, ſhould ſuffer, and ſuch as were not conuicted, ſhould not therfore onely for the name be puniſhed, becauſe they were called Chriſtians. By theſe it is apparant with what zeale and faith this Iuſtinus did ſtriue againſt the perſecutors, which (as he ſaid) could kill onely but could not hurt.

The Lord take away this ſpirit of fury, condemning innocentes before they be conuicted.

This Iuſtinus by the meanes and malice of Creſcens the Philoſopher as is before declared, ſuffered Martyrdome vnder Marcus Antoninus Verus a little after that Polycarpus was martired in Aſia, as witneſſeth Euſebius. Lib. 4. Here is to be gathered how Epiphanius was deceiued in the time of his death, ſaying that he ſuffered vnder Ruſticus the preſident, and Adrian the Emperour, being of xxx. yeares of age, which indeede agreeth not neither with Euſebius, nor Ierome, nor Swide, nor other moe, which manifeſtly declare and teſtifie how he exhibited his Apology vnto Antoninus Pius which came after Adrian. Thus haſt thou good Reader the life of this learned & bleſſed martir although partly touched before, yet now more fully & amply diſcourſed, for the better commendatiō of his excellent & notable vertues of whoſe finall ende thus writeth Photius ſaying that he ſuffering for Chriſt died cheerefully & with honor.

Ex Euſeb. lib 4. Cap 16.
A place of Epiphanius found faulty.

Thus haue ye heard the whole diſcourſe of Iuſtinus and of the bleſſed Saints of Fraunce, Vetius, Zacharias, Sanctus, Maturus, Attalus, Blandina, Alexander, Alcibiades, with other, recorded and ſet forth by the writing of certaine Chriſtian brethren of the ſame Church & place of Fraunce. In the which foreſaid writing of theirs moreouer appeareth the great meekenes and modeſt conſtancie of the ſaid martirs deſcribed in theſe wordes: ſuch folowers were they of chriſt who when he was in the forme of God thought it no robbery to be equal with god, being in yͤ ſame glory with him, that they not once nor twiſe, but oft times ſuffered martyrdome, & taken againe from the beaſtes & bearing woundes tearinges and ſkarres in their bodies, yet neither woulde counte them ſelues Martirs, neyther woulde they ſuffer vs ſo to cal thē: but if any of vs either by word or letter woulde call them Martirs, they did vehementlye rebuke them: ſaying that yͤ name of martirdome was to be gyuen to Chriſt the faithfull and true martir, the firſt borne of the dead, & the captaine of life, teſtifiyng moreouer that martirdome belongeth to ſuch, who by their martirdome were already paſſed out of this life, and whom as chriſt by their worthy confeſſion hath receiued vnto him ſelfe and hath ſealed vp their Martirdome by their ende finiſhed: As for thē, which were not yet conſūmated, they (ſaid they) were not worthy the names of martirs, but only were humble and worthy confeſſours, deſiring alſo their brethren with teares, to praye without ceaſing for their confirmation. Thus they performing in deede that whiche belonged to true Martirs, in reſiſting the heathen with much lybertie, and great patience, without all feare of man, being repleniſhed with the feare of God, refuſed to be named of their brethren for martirs. And after in the ſaid writing it followeth more: they humbled themſelues vnder the mightye hand of God, by which they were greatly exalted. Then they rendred to all men a reaſon of their faith, they accuſed no man, they looſed all, they bounde none. And for them which ſo euill did intreate them, they praied, following the example of Stephen the perfect Martir, which ſayde: O Lord impute not their ſinne to them. And after againe: Neither did they proudly diſdaine againſt them which fell but of ſuch as they had, they imparted to them that lacked bearing toward them a motherly affection, ſhedding their plentifull teares for them to God the Father, and prayed for their life and ſaluation, and as God gaue it them, they alſo did communicate to their neighbours. And thus they as conquerers of all thynges departed to God. They loued peace, and leauing the ſame to vs, they went to God, neither leauyng any moleſtation to their mother, nor ſedition or trouble to their brethren, but ioye, peace, concorde, and loue to all.

The holy Martyrs refuſe to be called Martyrs.

Out of the ſame writyng moreouer concernyng theſe Martyrs of Fraunce afore mentioned, is recorded alſo an other hiſtory, not vnworthy to be noted, taken out of the ſame booke of Euſebius. cap. 3. which hiſtory is this.

There was among theſe conſtaunt and bleſſed Martirs, one Alcibiades, as is aboue ſpecified: which Alcibiades euer vſed a very ſtraight diet, receiuing for his foode and ſuſtenaunce nothing els but only bread and water: when this Alcibiades now being caſt into priſon, went about to accuſtome the ſame ſtraightnes of diet, after his vſual maner before it was reueiled by God to Attalus afore mentioned, one of the ſaid company, being alſo the ſame time impriſoned after his firſt conflict vpon the ſcaffolde that Alcibiades did not well in that hee refuſed to vſe and take the creatures of God: & alſo thereby miniſtred to other a pernicious occaſion of offenſiue example. Whereupon Alcibiades being aduertiſed, & reformed, began to take al thinges boldly and with giuing thankes, whereby may appeare to all ſcrupulous conſciences, not only a wholeſome inſtrucion of the holy Ghoſt, but alſo here is to be noted how in thoſe dayes they were not deſtytute of the grace of God: but had the holy ſpirite of God to be their inſtructor, Hæc Euſeb.

A leſſon for ſcripulous conſciences.

The foreſaide martirs of Fraunce alſo the ſame tyme, commended Irenæus newly then made miniſter, with their letters vnto Eleutherus Biſhop of Rome: as witneſſeth Euſeb. in the x. chap. of the ſame booke, which Irenæus fyrſt was the hearer of Polycarpus, then made miniſter (as is ſayde) vnder theſe Martyrs. And after their death, made Byſhop afterward of Lyons in Fraunce and ſucceded after Photinus. Beſides this Iuſtinus there was alſo the ſame time in Aſia, Claudius Apolinaris, or Apolinarius Byſhop of Hierapolis, And alſo Melito Biſhop of Sardis an eloquent & learned man, much commended of Tertullian, who ſucceeding after the time of the apoſtles, in the reigne of this Antoninus Verus, exhibited vnto him, learned and eloquent Apologies, in defence of Chriſtes Religion, like as Quadratus and Ariſtides aboue mentioned, did vnto the Emperour Hadrian whereby they moued him ſomewhat to ſtay, the rage of his perſecution. In like maner did this Apolinaris and Melito (ſtirred vp by God) aduenture to defende in writing the cauſe of the chriſtians vnto this Antoninus. Of this Melito, Euſebius in his fourth booke making mention, excerpeth certaine places of his Apologie, in theſe wordes as followeth. Nowe ſaith he which was neuer ſeene before, the godly ſuffereth perſecution by occaſion of certaine Proclamations & Edictes proclaimed throughout Aſia, for vilanous Sichophantes, robbers & ſpoylers of other mens goods grounding them ſelues vpon thoſe Proclamations, and taking occaſion of them, robbe openlye night and daye, and ſpoyle thoſe which doe no harme: And it followeth after: which if it be done by your commaundement, be it ſo well done. For a good Prince wyll neuer commaund but good things. And ſo we wil be contented to ſuſtaine the honor of his death. This onely wee moſt humblye beſeech your Maieſtie, that callyng before you and examining the authors of this tumult and cōtention. then your grace would iuſtly iudge whether we are worthy of cruell death or quiet life. And then if it be not your pleaſure, and that it proceedeth not by your occaſion (which indeede againſt your barbarous enimies were to badde) the more a great deale we are petitioners to your hyghnes, that hereafter you wyll vouchſafe to heare vs thus ſo vexed and oppreſſed with theſe kinde of vylanous robberies. And verily our Philoſophy & doctryne did firſt among the barbarous take place, which doctrine fyrſt in the daies of Auguſtus your predeceſſor, when it did raygne and floriſh, thereby your Empire became moſt famous & fortunate: and from that time more and more the ſtate of the Romane Empire increaſed in honor whereof you moſt happely were made ſucceſſour, and ſo ſhall your ſonne to. Honor therefore this Philoſophie, which with your Empire ſprang vp and came in with Auguſtus whiche your progenitors aboue al other honored & moſt eſteemed. And verily this is no ſmall argumēt of a good beginning, that ſince our doctrine flouriſhed in the Empire, no misfortune or loſſe happened frō Auguſtus time: but contrary alwaies victory, good and honorable yeres, as euer any mā would wiſhe. Onely among all, and of all Nero and Domitian beyng kindled by diuers naughty and ſpitfull perſons cauillingly obiected againſt our doctrine, of whom this Sicophanticall ſlaundring of vs by naughty cuſtome firſt came and ſprang vp. But your godly fathers eſpying the ignoraunce of theſe, oftentimes by their writing corrected their temerous attemptes in that behalfe. Among whom your granfather Adrian to many other is read of, to haue wrytten of Fundayne the Proconſul and Lieutenāt of Aſia. And your father, your own father I ſay, with whom you ruled in al things, wrote to the Cities vnder his ſignet, as the Laerſens, Theſſalonicenſes, Athenienſes and Grecians raſhly to innouate or alter nothing of your highnes: therfore, who in this caſe is of that ſect as your predeceſſours were, yea & of a more benigne & Philoſophicall minde, we are in good hope to obtaine our peticion and requeſt.

The bookes of tho olde Teſtament autentike and receaued.

Thus much out of the Apologie of Melito, who writing to Oneſimus, geueth to vs this benefite to knowe the true Catalogue, & the names of al the autentike bookes of the olde Teſtament, receaued in the auncient time of the prymitiue Church. Concerning the number & names whereof the ſaid Melito in his letter to Oneſimus declareth, howe that he returning into the parts where theſe things were done and preached, there hee diligently inquired out the bookes approued of the old Teſtament, the names whereof in order he ſubſcribeth & ſendeth vnto him as followeth: The fiue bookes of Moſes, Geneſis, Exodus, Leuiticus, Numeri, Deuteronomi, Ieſus Naue, The Iudges, Ruth, Foure bookes of Kings: Two bookes Paralipomenon. The Pſalmes Prouerbes of Salomon The booke of Wiſedome: The Preacher. The ſong of ſongs. Iob. The Prophets, Eſay, Hieromie, twelue Prophetes in one booke, Daniel, Ezechiel, Eſdras. And thus much of thys matter, which I thought here to record, for that it is not vnprofitable for theſe latter times to vnderſtande what in the firſt times was receaued, and admitted as autentike, and what otherwiſe.

But from this little digreſſion to returne to our matter omitted, that is, to the Apologies of Apolinarius and Melito, in the ſtory ſo it followeth, that whether it was by the occaſiō of theſe two Apologies, or whether it was through the writing of Athenagoras a Philoſopher, and a Legate of the Chriſtians, it is vncertaine: but this is certaine that the perſecution the ſame time was ſtaid. Some do thinke, which moſt probably ſeeme to touch the truthe, that the cauſe of ſtaying this perſecution, did riſe vpon a wonderfull myracle of God, ſhewed in the Emperours campe by the Chriſtians the ſtory whereof is this: At what time the two brethren Marcus Antonius, and Marcus Aurelius Commodus Emperours, ioyning together, warred againſt the Quades, Vandales, Sarmates, and Germaines, in the expeditiō againſt them their army by reaſon of the imminent aſſault of their enimies, was cooped & ſhut in within the ſtraights and hoate dry places, where their ſouldiours beſides other difficulties of battaile, being deſtitute of water, fyue dayes, were like to haue periſhed, which dread not a little diſcomfited them, & did abate their courage. Wherin this their ſo great diſtreſſe and ieopardy, ſodainely wythdrew from the army a legian of the chriſtian ſouldiours for their ſuccour: who falling proſtrate vpon the earth, by ardent praier, by & by obtained of God double reliefe: by meanes of whom God gaue certaine pleaſaunt ſhowers from the element, whereby as their ſouldiors quenched their thirſt ſo were a great number of their enimies diſcomfited & put to flight by the continual lightnings which ſhooted out of the aire. This miracle ſo pleaſed & won the Emperour, that euer after he waxed gentler & gentler to the Chriſtians & directed his letters to diuers of his rulers, as Tertullian in his Apologie witneſſeth, commaūding thē therin to giue thankes to the Chriſtians, no leſſe for his victory, then for the preſeruation of him and all his men. The copy of which letter hereafter enſueth.

Ex Euſebio ibidem. A miraculous rayne obtayned by the Chriſtians.

¶ Marcus Aurelius Antonius Emperour,

to the Senate and people of Rome.

I Giue you hereby to vnderſtande, what I intend to doe, as alſo, what ſucceſſe I haue had in my warres in Germany, and with how much difficultie I haue viteled my campe, being compaſſed about with 74. fierce Dragons, whome my Scottes deſcryed to be within ix. miles of vs, and Pompeianus our Lieſetenaunt hath viewed as he ſignified vnto vs by hys letters: Wherefore I thought no leſſe but to be ouerunne and all my bandes of ſo great multitude, as well my vaward mayne warde as reere warde, with all my ſouldiours of Ephrata. In whoſe hoſt there were numbred of fighting men ix. hundreth ſeuenty and fiue thouſand. But when I ſaw my ſelfe not able to encounter with the enemy, I craued ayde of our countrey Gods, at whoſe hands I finding no comfort, and being driuen of the enemye vnto an exegent, I cauſed to be ſent for thoſe men which we call Chriſtians who being muſtred were found a good indifferent number, with whom I was in farther rage, then I had good cauſe, as afterwardes I had experience by their merueilous power, who forthwith did their indeuour, but without either weapon, munition, armour or trumpets, as men abhorring ſuch preparation and furniture but onely ſatiſfied in truſt of their God, whome they cary about with them in their conſciences. It is therefore to be credited, although we call them wicked men, that they worſhip God in their hartes. For they falling proſtrate vpon the ground, prayed not onely for me, but for the hoſt alſo, which was with me, beſeeching their God for helpe in that our extremitie of vittels and freſh water. For we had bene now v. dayes without water, and were in our enemies land, euen in the middeſt of Germany. who thus falling vppon their faces, made their prayer to a GOD vnknowne of me: and there fell amongeſt vs from heauen a moſt pleaſaunt and cold ſhower, but amongeſt our enemies a great ſtorme of hayle mixt with lightning ſo that immediately we perceiued the inuincible ayde of the moſt mighty God to be with vs. Therefore we geue thoſe men leaue to profeſſe Chriſtianitie, leaſt perhap by their prayer, we be puniſhed with the lyke, and thereby make my ſelfe the author of ſuch hurt as ſhalbe receiued by the Chriſtian profeſsion. And if any ſhall apprehend one that is a Chriſtian, onely for that cauſe: I will that he being apprended without puniſhment, may haue leaue to confeſſe the ſame, ſo that there be none other cauſe obiected agaynſt hym, more then that he is a Chriſtian: But let his accuſer be burned aliue. Neither will I that he confeſsing and being founde a Chriſtian, ſhalbe enforced to alter the ſame his opinion by the gouernour of any of our prouinces, but left to hys owne choyſe. And this decree of myne I will to be ratified in the Senate houſe, and commaund the ſame publiquely to be proclaymed and read in the Court of Traianus and that farther from thence it may be ſent into all our Prouinces by the diligence of Veratius gouernour of our Citie Polione. And further we geue leaue to all men to vſe and write out this our decree, taking the ſame out of our copie publiquely in the common Hall ſet forth.

Thus the tempeſtuous rage of perſecution againſt the Chriſtians began for a tyme to aſſwage partly by the occaſion hereof. partly alſo vpon other cauſes incident, cōpelling the enimies to ſurceaſe their perſecutiō, as great plagues & peſtilence lying vpon the countrie of Italy: lykewiſe great warres, as well in ẏ Eaſt partes, as alſo in Italy and Fraunce, terrible earthquakes great floods, noiſome ſwarmes of flies and vermine deuouring their corne fieldes, &c. And thus much of thinges done vnder Antoninus Verus which Antoninus in the beginning of his raygne ioyned with him in the gouernement of the Empire, hys brother Marcus Aurelius Commodus, who alſo was wyth hym at the miraculous victory gotten by the Chriſtiās, as Euſebius cap. 5. Lib. 5 recordeth. contrary Platina in vita Soteris, and the book intituled Flores hiſtoriarū, referre the ſame to the time of Antoninus verus, and his ſonne Lucius Antoninus Commodus, and not of Marcus Aurelius Commodus hys brother. But howſoeuer the truth of yeares doe ſtand, certaine it is, that after the death of Antoninus Verus, and of Aurelius Commodus, ſucceeded Lucius Antoninus, Commodus the ſonne of Verus who raigned 13. yeares.

Antoninus Verus. M. Aurelius Commodus Emperours. The diſcrepance betweene Euſebius and Platina.

{ Anno. 175. }

Quietnes geuen to the Church.

In the time of this Commodus, although he was an incōmodious Prince to the Senatours of Rome, yet notwithſtanding there was ſome quietnes vniuerſally through the whole Church of Chriſt from perſecution by what occaſion it is not certaine. Some thinke of whom is Xiphilinus that it came through Marcia the Emperours concubine, which fauoured the Chriſtians: but how ſoeuer it came ſaith Euſebius, the furye of the raging enimies was then ſomwhat mittigated. & peace was giuen by the grace of Chriſt, vnto the Church throughout the whole worlde. At what time the wholeſome doctrine of the Goſpel allured and reduced the harts of all ſortes of people, vnto the true Religion of God, inſomuch that many both rich and noble perſonages of Rome, with their whole families and houſholdes to their ſaluation, adioyned thē to the Church of Chriſt.

Appollonius Martyr.

Among whom there was one Apollonius, a noble man and a Senatour of Rome, mentioned in Euſebius. Lib. 5. ca. 21, who being maliciouſly accuſed vnto the Senate by one whom Hierome writeth to be the ſeruaunt of yͤ ſaid Apollonius, and nameth him Seuerus: but whoſe ſeruaunt ſoeuer he was, the wretched man came ſoone inough before the iudge, being condignely rewarded, for that his malicious diligence. For by a law which yͤ Emperour made that no man vpon paine of death ſhoulde falſely accuſe the Chriſtians, he was put to execution, & had his legs broken forthwith, by the ſentence of Perenninus the iudge, which being an heathen man, he pronounced againſt him: but the beloued martyr of God, when the iudge with much a doe had obtained of hym to render an accoũt before the honorable Senate of his faith, vnder whoſe defence and warrant of lyfe he did the ſame, deliuered vnto them an eloquẽt Apologie of the chriſtian beliefe: but the former warrant notwithſtanding, he by the decree of the Senate, was beheaded, and ſo ended his life: For that there was an auncient law among them decreed, that none that profeſſed Chriſt, and therefore araigned, ſhould be releaſed without recantation, or altering his opinion.

An old wicked lawe of the Romaines.

The ridiculous pride of the Emperour.

This Commodus is ſaid in ſtories to be ſo ſure & ſteddy handed in caſting the dart, that in the open Theatre before the people, he would encounter with the wild beaſts, and be ſure to hit them in place where he appointed. Among diuers other his vicious and wild parts he was to farre ſurpreſſed in pride & arrogancy, that he would be called Hercules, and many times would ſhewe himſelfe to the people in the ſkinne of a Lion, to bee counted thereby the king of men, like as the Lion is of the beaſtes.

Vincentius. Euſebius. Peregrinus. Potentianus. Martyrs.

Iulius a Senator conuerted to Chriſt. Ex Vincen. lib. 10. cap 119. Henr. de Erfor.

Vpon a certaine time being his birth day, this Commodus, calling the people of Rome togither, in a great roialtye hauing his lions ſkinne vpon him, made ſacrifice to Hercules & Iupiter, cauſing it to be cried through the Citty that Hercules was the patrone and defender of the Citye. There were the ſame time at Rome. Vincentius, Euſebius, Peregrinus, Potentianus, learned men, and inſtructors of the people, who folowing the ſteps of the Apoſtles, went about from place to place where the Goſpell was not yet preached, conuerting the Gentiles to the fayth of Chriſt, Theſe hearing the madnes of the Emperour & of the people, began to reproue their idolatrous blindnes, teaching in villages & townes al that heard them, to beleue vpon yͤ true and only God, and to come away from ſuch worſhipping of deuils, and to giue honor to God alone, which only is to be worſhipped, willing them to repent and to bee Baptiſed, leaſt they periſhed with Commodus. With thys their preaching, they conuerted one Iulius a Senatour and other to the Religion of Chriſt. The Emperour hearyng thereof, cauſed thẽ to be apprehended of Vitellus his Captaine, and to be compelled to ſacrifice vnto Hercules, which when they ſtoutly refuſed, after diuers greuous torments and great miracles by them done, at laſt they were preſſed with leaden waightes to death, Vincentius. Lib. 10. cap. 119. & Chron. Henr. de Erfordia.

Peregrinus ſent to Fraunce and Martyred at at Rome. Ex Platina in Vita Sixti.

This Peregrinus aboue mentioned had bene ſent before by Xiſtus Byſhop of Rome, into the parties of Fraunce, to ſupply there yͤ rowme of a Biſhop and teacher, by reaſon yͭ for the continuall and horrible perſecutions there aboue touched, thoſe places were left deſolat and deſtitute of miniſters and inſtructors, where after he had occupied hym ſelfe wͭ much frute among the flocke of Chriſt, and had ſtabliſhed the congregation there, returning home againe to Rome, there finiſhed at laſt (as it is ſaid) his martirdome.

Iulius with hys family baptiſed and after Martyred.

Now remaineth likewiſe to ſpeake of Iulius, which Iulius being as is afore deſcribed, a Senator of Rome, and now won by yͤ preaching of theſe bleſſed men, to the fayth of Chriſt, did eftſoones inuite them & brought them home to his houſe, where being by them more fully inſtructed in chriſtian religiõ, he beleued in the goſpel. And ſending for one Ruffinus a Prieſt, was with all his family by him baptiſed, who (not as the common ſort was wont to do) kept cloſe and ſecret his faith: but incenſed with a marueylous and ſincere zeale openly profeſſed the ſame: altogither wiſhing and praying to be giuen to him by God, not only to beleue in Chriſt, but alſo to haſarde his life for him. Which thing the Emperour hearing, how that Iulius had forſakẽ his old religion, and became a chriſtian, forthwith ſent for him to come before him, vnto whom he ſpake on this wiſe O Iuly, what madnes hath poſſeſſed thee, that this thou doeſt fall from the olde & common Religion of thy forefathers who acknowledged and worſhipped Iupiter & Hercules their gods, & now doeſt embrace a new & fond kind of Religion of the Chriſtians: At which time Iulius hauing good occaſion to ſhew and opẽ his faith gaue ſtraight way accompt thereof to him, and affirmed that Hercules & Iupiter were falſe Gods, & how the worſhippers of thẽ ſhould periſh with eternall damnation & puniſhmentes. Which the Emperour hearing, how that he condemned & deſpiſed his Gods, being then inflamed with a great wrath as he was by nature very cholericke, committed him forthwith to Vitellus, the maſter of the ſouldiours, a very cruell & fierce man, to ſee Iulius either to ſacrifice to mighty Hercules or refuſing the ſame to ſlea him. Vitellus as hee was commaunded) exhorted Iulius to obey the Emperors cõmaundement and to worſhip his Gods, Alledging how that the whole Empire of Rome was not onely conſtituted, but alſo preſerued and maintained by them. Which Iulius denied vtterly to do, admoniſhing ſharply in like maner Vitellus to acknowledge the true God, and obey hys commaundementes, leaſt he with his maiſter ſhould dye ſome greeuous death. Whereat Vitellus being moued, cauſed Iulius with cougels to be beaten vnto death.

Xiſtus Byſhop of Rome.

The triſling ordinaunces of Xiſtus.

S. Peter celebrated the Lordes ſupper onely with the Lords praier Platina in Vita Sixti.

The ordinaunce of Xiſtus ſuſpected.

Theſe things being thus briefly recited touching ſuch holy martirs, as hetherto haue ſuffered, nowe remayneth that wee returne againe to the order of the Romaine Byſhops ſuch as followed next after Alexander, at whome we left, whoſe ſucceder next was Xiſtus or Sixtus, the firt Byſhoppe counted after Peter, and gouerned that miniſterye the ſpace of x. yeares as Damaſcus & other do write. Vrſpergenſis maketh mention but of ix. yeares. Platina recordeth that he died a Martir, and was buried at Vaticane. But Euſebius ſpeaking of his diſceaſe, maketh no word mentiõ of any Martyrdome. In the 2. tome of the Councelles certaine Epiſtles be attributed to him, whereof Euſebius Damaſus, Hierome, and other olde authors, as they make no relation, ſo ſeeme they to haue no intelligence nor knowledge of any ſuch matter. In theſe coũterfeit epiſtles, & in Platina appeareth yͭ Xiſtus was the firſt author of theſe ordinaunces. Firſt that the holy miſteries and holy veſſels ſhoulde be touched, but onely of perſons holy and conſecrated, eſpecially of no woman, Itẽ that the corporas cloth ſhould be made of no other cloth, but of fine linnen. Item that biſhops ſuch as were called vp to the Apoſtolicke ſea, returning home againe, ſhould not be receiued at their returne, vnleſſe they brought with them letters from the biſhop of Rome, ſaluting the people. Itẽ, at the celebration he ordained to be ſong this verſe, Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Dominus Deus Sabaoth. Where moreouer is to be noted, that the ſaide Platina, in the life of thys Xiſtus, doeth teſtifie that Peter miniſtred the celebration of the cõmunion onlie wyth the Lordes prayer. Theſe tryflyng ordinaunces of Xiſtus, who is ſo rude that ſeeth not or may not eaſly cõiecture to be falſly fathered of Xiſtus, or of anye father of that time, firſt by the vniforme rudenes and ſtile of all thoſe decretal letters, nothing ſauouryng of that age, but rather of yͤ later dunſticall times that followed. Alſo by the matter and argument in thoſe leters contained, nothing agreeing with the ſtate of thoſe troubleſome daies. Neither againe is it to be ſuppoſed that any ſuch recourſe of biſhops was then to the Apoſtolicall ſea of Rome, that it was not lawfull to returne without their letters: when as the perſecution againſt the Chriſtians was then ſo hoate, in the daies of Hadrian that the Biſhoppes of Rome themſelues were more glad to flee out of the Citie, then other biſhops were to come to them vnto Rome. And if Xiſtus added the Sanctus vnto the Maſſe cannon, what peece then of the canon went before it, when they which put to the other patches came after Xiſtus: And if they came after Xiſtus that aded the reſt, why did they ſet their peeces before his, ſeing they yͭ began the firſt peece of the canon, came after him?

Teleſphorus Byſhop of Rome and Martyr.

The ordinaunces of Teleſphorus.

Lent faſt and the originall therof examined.

The ſame likewiſe is to be iudged of the Epiſtles & ordinaunces of Teleſphorus, who ſucceded next vnto Xiſtus, and being Biſhop of that congregation the terme of a 11, yeares, the firſt yeare of the raigne of Antoninus Pius, dyed Martyr, about the yeare of our Lorde. 138. His Epiſtle like vnto the reſt containing in it no great matter of doctrine, hath theſe ordinaunces: Firſt he cõmaundeth al that were of the Clergy to faſt and abſtaine from fleſh eatyng, vij. weekes before Eaſter. That three Maſſes ſhoulde bee ſaid vpon the Natiuity day of the Lord. That no lay man ſhould accuſe either biſhop or prieſt. He ordained moreouer Gloria in excelſis, to be added to the Maſſe, &c. but theſe things falſely to be fained vpon him may eaſely be coniectured. For as touching the vij. weekes faſt neither doth it agree with the old Romane terme cõmonly receaued, calling it Quadrageſima, that is the xl. daies faſt: neither with the example of our Sauiour, who faſted not ſeuen wekes but onely xl. dayes. Moreouer, as concernyng this xl. daies faſt, wee reade of the ſame in the Epiſtle of Ignatius, which was lõg before Teleſphorus: wherby it may appere that this Teleſphorus was not the firſt inuentour thereof. And if it be true, that is lately come out in the name of Abdias (but vntruſly, as by many coniectures may be proued) there is read, that in the daies of S. Mathewe this Lent, faſt of xl. dayes was obſerued long before Teleſphorus: by theſe wordes that followe: In the dayes ſayd he, either of Lente, or in the time of other lawfull faſtinges, he that abſtaineth not as well from the eating meate as alſo from yͤ mixture of bodies, doth incurre in ſo doing not onely pollution, but alſo cōmitteth offence, which muſt be waſhed away with the teares of repentaunce. Agayne, Apollonius, affirmeth that Montanus the heretike, was the firſt deuiſer and brynger in of theſe lawes of faſting into the Churche, which before was vſed to be free. Euſeb. Lib. 5. cap. 18. but eſpecially by Socrates, wryter of the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory, who lyued after the daies of Theodoſius, maye bee argued, that this vij. wekes faſt is falſely imputed to Teleſphorus. For Socrates in his firſt booke, ſpeaking of this time hath theſe wordes: Romani namque tres ante Paſcha ſeptimanas præter Sabbatum & Dominicam continuas ieiuuant, that is: the Romanes (ſaith he) doe faſt three weekes continually before Eaſter, beſide the Sabbaoth and the Sonday. And moreouer, ſpeaking of the diuers and ſundry faſtings of Lent in ſundry and diuers Churches, he addeth theſe wordes: And becauſe that no man can bring forth any commaundement written of this matter, it is therefore apparant, that the Apoſtles left this kind of faſt free to euery mans will and iudgement, leaſt anye ſhould be conſtrayned by feare and neceſſitie to doe that which is good, &c. With this of Socrates, agreeth alſo the wordes of Sozomenus, liuing much about yͤ ſame time, in his ſeuenth boke, where he thus writeth: The whole faſt of Lent (ſaith he) ſome comprehend in ſixe weekes, as doe the Illyrians, and the weſt churches, with al Libia, Egipt, & Paleſtina: ſome in vij. weekes, as at Cōſtantinople, & yͤ parties bordering to Phœnicia: other ſome in three weekes, next before the day of Eaſter, & ſome againe in ij. weekes. &c. By yͤ whiche it may be collected, yͤ Teleſph. neuer ordained any ſuch faſt of vij. wekes: whiche otherwiſe neither woulde haue ben neglected in Rome, & in yͤ weſt churches: neither againe woulde haue bene vnremembred of theſe auncient Eccleſiaſticall writers, if any ſuch thing had bene. The like is to be thought alſo of the reſt, not onely of his conſtitutions: but alſo of the other auntient Byſhops & Martyrs, which followed after him, as of Higinus. an. 142. who ſucceding him & dying alſo a Martyr, as Volateranus, Lib. 22. declareth, is ſaide or rather fained to bring in the creame, one Godfather and Godmother in Baptiſme, to ordayne the dedication of Churches: when as in his time ſo far it was of, that anye ſolemne Churches were ſtanding in Rome, that vnneth the Chriſtians could ſafely conuent in their own houſes. Likewiſe they diſtincting the orders of Metropolitanes, Byſhops, and other degres, ſauour nothing leſſe then of that tyme.

After Higynus followed Pius, who as Platina reporteth was ſo preciſely deuout aboute the holye miſteries of the Lords Table, that if any one croome therof did fall downe to the grounde, he ordained that the Prieſt ſhoulde doe penaunce xl. daies. If any fell vpō the Superalter, he ſhould doe penaunce iij. daies: if vpon the linen Corporas cloth iiij. daies: if vpon any other linnen cloth. ix. daies. And if any drop of the bloude (ſaith he) ſhould chaunce be ſpilled, whereſoeuer it fell it ſhould be licked vp, if it were poſſible if not the place ſhould be waſhed or pared, & ſo being waſhed or pared, ſhould be burned and layd in the veſtry. All which toies may ſeeme to a wiſe man, more vaine and trifling, then to ſauour of thoſe pure and ſtraight times of thoſe holy Martyrs. This Pius (as is reported) was much conuerſaunt with Hermes called otherwiſe Paſtor. Damaſus ſaith he was his brother, but how is that like that Hermes being the diſciple of Paule, or one of the lx. diſciples, could be the brother of this Pius? Of this Hermes & of the reuelations the foreſaid Pius in his Epiſtle decretall (if it be not forged) maketh mentiō, declaring that vnto him appeared the aungel of God in the habite of a ſhepherde, commaunding him, yͤ Eaſter day ſhould be celebrated of al men vpō no other day, but vpon a ſonday, whereupon, ſaith the Epiſtle, Pius the Byſhop, by his authoritie Apoſtolicall, decreed and commaunded the ſame to be obſerued of al men.

Then ſucceeded Anicetus, Soter, and Eleutharius, about the yeare of our Lord. 180. This Eleutherius, at the requeſt of Lucius king of Britanes, ſent to him Damianus, and Fugatius, by whom the king was conuerted to Chriſtes faith, and baptiſed about the yeare of our Lorde 179. Timotheus in his ſtorye thinketh that Eleutherius came himſelf: but that is not like And as there is a variaunce among the writers for yͤ count of yeres: So doth there riſe a queſtion among ſome, whether Eleutherius was the firſt that brought the faith from Rome into this lande or not. Nicephorus, Lib. 2. cap. 4. ſaith that Symō Zelotes, came into Britaine. Some other alledge out of Gildas de victoria Aurel Ambroſi, that Ioſeph of Arimathie after the diſperſion of the Iewes, was ſent to Philip the Apoſtle from Fraunce to Britaine, about the yeare of our Lord 63. and here remained in this land al his time, and ſo with his fellowes laide the firſt foundation of chriſtian fayth among the Britaine people. Whereupon other preachers and teachers cōming afterwarde confirmed the ſame & increaſed it more. And therefore doth Petrus Cluniacenſis call the Scotiſhmen & ſo doth count them as more auntient Chriſtians. For the confirmation hereof might be alledged the teſtimonie of Origene, of Tertulian, and the wordes alſo of the letter of Eleutherius whiche importe no leſſe, but that the faith of Chriſt was here in Englande among the Britaine people, before Eleutherius time, & before the king was cōuerted, but hereof more ſhalbe ſpokē hereafter (Chriſt willing,) when after the tractation of theſe. x. perſecutiōs, we ſhal enter yͤ matter of our Engliſh ſtories.

Whether this land of Brittaine receiued the Goſpell before kinge Lucius dayes.

About this time of Commodus aforementioned among diuers other learned men and famous teachers whō God ſtirred vp at that time (as he doth at all other times rayſe vp ſome) in his church, to confound yͤ perſecutors by learning and writing, as the Martirs to confirme the truth with their bloud, was Serapion Byſhop of Antioche, Egeſippus a writer of the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorye from Chriſtes Paſſion to his time, as witneſſeth Hierome, & Euſebius Lib. 4. cap. 8. & 22. which bookes of his be not nowe remayning. And thoſe that be remaining (which be 5. de excidio Hieroſol.) be not mentioned neither of Hierome, nor of Euſebius Miltiades which alſo wrote his Apology in defence of chriſtian Religion, as did Melito Quadratus, and Ariſtides before mentioned. About yͤ ſame time alſo wrote Heraclitus, who firſt began to write annotations & enarrations vpon the newe Teſtament, and Epiſtles of the Apoſtles. Alſo Theophilus Byſhop of Cæſaria, Dionyſius Byſhoppe of Corinthe a man famouſly learned, which wrote diuers Epiſtles to diuers Churches, & among other writeth, exhorting Penitus a certaine Byſhop, Ne graue ſeruandæ caſtitatis onus neceſſario fratribus imponat, ſed multorum ſeſe imbecilitati attemperet, that is, that he would lay no yoke of chaſtitie of any neceſſity vpon his brethren: but that he would conſider the infirmitie of other, and beare with it. Euſeb. Lib. 4. cap. 23. Moreouer yͤ ſayd Dioniſius in his Epiſtles writing of Dioniſius Agiopagites, declareth of him how that he was firſt cōuerted to the Chriſtian faith by S. Paule, according as in the actes is recorded, and afterwarde was made the firſt Byſhop of Athens, but maketh there no mention of his booke de Hierarchia. Whereby it maye eaſely appeare, what is to be iudged of that booke. Furthermore, by the Epiſtles of the ſaide Dioniſius Corint. this wee haue to vnderſtande, to be the vſe at that time in Churches to reade the letters and Epiſtles, ſuch as were ſent by learned Biſhops and teachers vnto the Congregations, as may appeare by theſe words of Dioniſius, who writing to yͤ church of the Romanes, and to Soter ſaith. In which we haue read your Epiſtle, which alwaies we wil read for our exhortation, like as we doe reade alſo the Epiſtle of Clement ſent to vs before, &c. Euſeb. ibid. where alſo mention is made of keepyng the Sonday holy. Whereof wee finde no mention made in auntient authors, before his time, except onely in Iuſtinus Martyr, who in his deſcription declareth two tymes moſt eſpecially vſed for Chriſten men to congregate together, firſt, when any conuert was to be Baptiſed. The ſecond was vpon the Sonday, which was wont for ij. cauſes then to be halowed. Ouer and beſide theſe aboue named, about the daies of Commodus, wrote alſo Clemens Alexandrinus, a man of notable and ſingular learning, whoſe bookes, although for a great part be loſt, yet certaine of them yet remaine wherin is declared among other thinges, the order and number of the bookes and Goſpels of the new teſtament, &c.

of certaine holy Martyrs, as is aboue declared, vnto his Church. In the which time of tranquillitie, the Chriſtians hauing now ſome laiſure from the forraine enemy, begā to haue a little contention among themſelues, about the ceremonie of Eaſter: which contention albeit of long time before had bene ſtirring in the church as is before mentioned of Polycarpus and Anicetus: yet the variance and difference of that ceremonie brought no breach of Chriſtian concorde and ſocietie among them: Neither as yet did the matter exceede ſo farre, but that the band of loue, and communion of brotherly life continued, although they differed in the ceremonie of the day. For they of the weſt Church pretending the tradition of Paule and Peter, but in deede beyng the traditiō of Hermes and of Pius, kept one day, which was vpon the Sonday after the 14. day of the firſt moneth. The Church of Aſia following the ordinance of Iohn the Apoſtle, obſerued an other, as more ſhalbe declared (the Lord willing) when we come to the tyme of Victor Biſhop of Rome. In the meane tyme as concerning the fourth perſecution, let this hetherto ſuffiſe.

The fift Perſecution.

Seuerus Emperour.
Anno. 195.

The 5. perſecution. Ex Euſe. Lib. 6. cap. 2.

Anno. 205.

The falſe accuſations agaynſt the Chriſtians.

After the death of Commodus, raigned Pertinax but few monthes, after whom ſucceeded Seuerus. Vnder whom was raiſed the fift perſecution againſt the chriſtian ſaints: who raigning the terme of 18. yeares, the firſt x. yeares of the ſame, was very fauourable and curteous to the Chriſtians. Afterward through ſiniſter ſuggeſtions and malicious accuſations of the malignāt, was ſo incenſed againſt them, that by Proclamations he commaunded no Chriſtians any more to be ſuffered. Thus the rage of the Emperour beyng inflamed agaynſt them, great perſecution was ſtirred vpon euery ſide, wherby an infinite nūber of Martyrs were ſlayne, as Euſebius in his ſixt booke recordeth, which was about the yeare of our Lord, 205. The crimes and falſe accuſations obiected againſt the Chriſtians, are partly touched before, pag. 37. as ſedition and rebellion againſt the Emperour, ſacriledge, murthering of Infants, inceſtuous polution, eating rawe fleſh, libidinous cōmixture, whereof certaine in deede called then Gnoſtici, were infamed. Item, it was obiected againſt them, for worſhipping the head of an Aſſe, which whereof it ſhould riſe, I finde no certain cauſe, except it were perhaps by yͤ Iewes. Alſo they were charged with worſhipping the ſunne, for that peraduenture before the ſunne riſe, they conuented together, ſinging their morning Hymnes vnto the Lord, or els becauſe they prayed toward yͤ Eaſt: but eſpecially for that they would not with them worſhip their idolatrous gods and were counted as enemies to all men, &c.

The captaines and miniſters of this perſecution. Ex Tertul ad Scapulam.

The Captaines and Preſidentes of this perſecution vnder the Emperour were Hilarianus, Vigellius, Claudius, Hermianus Ruler of Cappadocia, Cecilius, Capella, Veſpronius, alſo Demetrius mentioned of Cyprian. And Aquila Iudge of Alexandria, of whom Euſeb. Lib. 6. cap. 5. maketh relation.

The places where the force of this perſecution moſt raged, were Affrica, Alexandria, Cappadocia, and Carthage.

Leonides father of Origene Martyr.

Origene kept from Martyrdome by hys mother.

The number of them that ſuffered in this perſecution, by the report of the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory was innumerable. Of whō the firſt was Leonides, the father of Origene, who was beheaded: with whō alſo Origene his ſonne, beyng of the age thē of xvij. yeares, ſhould haue ſuffered (ſuch a feruent deſire hee had to be Martired for Chriſt) had not hys mother priuily in the night ſeaſon conueied away his clothes & his ſhirt, wherupō more for ſhame to be ſeen, then for feare to die, he was cōſtrained to remaine at home: and when he could do nothing els, yet he writing to his father a letter with theſe words: Caue tibi, ne quid propter nos aliud quam martyrij conſtanter faciendi propoſitum cogites, that is, Take heede to your ſelfe, that you tourne not your thought and purpoſe for our ſake, &c. Such a feruency had this Origene being yet young, to the doctrine of Chriſtes faith, by the operation of Gods heauenly prouidence, and partlye alſo by the diligent education of his Father, who brought him vp from his youth moſt ſtudiouſly in all good literature, but eſpecially in yͤ reding & exerciſe of holy ſcripture, wherin he had ſuch inward & miſtical ſpeculatiō, that many times he would moue queſtions to his father, of the meaning of this place, or yͭ place in yͤ ſcripture. Inſomuch yͭ his father diuers times would vncouer his breſt being a ſleepe, & kiſſe it, giuing thanks to God which had made him ſo happy a father of ſuch a happy child. After the death of his father, and all his goodes confiſcated to the Emperour, he wyth his poore mother, and ſixe brethren, beyng brought to ſuch extreme pouerty, did ſuſtaine both himſelf and them by teaching a ſchole. Til at length being wearye of yͤ profeſſion, he transferred his ſtudy onely to the knowledge and ſeeking of diuine Scripture, & ſuch other learning conducible to the ſame. So much he profited both in the Hebrue and other toungs, that he conferred yͤ Hebrue text with the tranſlation of the lxx. And moreouer did conferre and find out the other tranſlations which we call the common tranſlation of Aquila, of Symmachus, and Theodotion. Alſo he adioyned to theſe aforeſaid other foure tranſlations, whereof more is in the ſtory of Euſebius expreſſed.

Origene commended. Ex Euſeb. Lib. 6. cap. 3.

Ex Euſeb. Antonino. Symoneta. &c.

They that write of the life of Origene, teſtifie of him that he was of wit quicke and ſharpe, much patient of labour, a great traueler in the tongues, of a ſpare dyet, of a ſtraight life, a great faſter, his teaching & his liuing were both one: his going was much barefoot. A ſtraight obſeruer of that ſaying of the Lorde, bydding to haue but one coate, &c, he is ſaid to haue written ſo much as ſeuen Notaries, & ſo many maides euery day could penne. The nūber of his bookes by the accōpt of Hierome, came to 7000. Volumes, yͤ copies whereof he vſed to ſel for 3. d. or a little more, for the ſuſtentation of his liuing. But of hym more ſhalbe touched hereafter. So zelous he was in the cauſe of Chriſt, and of Chriſtes Martirs, that he nothing fearyng his owne perill would aſſiſt & exhort them going to theyr death, & kiſſe them, inſomuch that he was oft in ieopardie to be ſtoned of the multitude. And ſometimes by the prouiſion of Chriſten men had his houſe garded about wyth ſouldiers, for the ſafety of them, which daily reſorted to heare his readings, & many times he was cōpelled to ſhift places & houſes, for ſuch as laid waite for him in al places, But ſuch was the prouidence of God to preſerue him in the middeſt of all this tempeſt of Seuerus. Among other which reſorted vnto him, & were his hearers. Plutarchus, was one, and died a martyr, & with him Serenus hys brother who was burned. The third after theſe was Heraclides, The fourth Heron, who were both beheaded. The fift, was an other Serenus alſo beheaded, Rhais, and Potamiena. who was tormented with pitch poured vpon her, & martyred with her mother, Marcella, who died alſo in the fyre. This Potamiena was of a freſh and flouriſhing beautie, who becauſe ſhe could not be remoued from her profeſſion was committed to Baſilides one of the Captaines there in the armie, to ſee the execution done, Baſilides receyuing her at the Iudges hand, & leading her to the place, ſhewed to her ſome compaſſion in repreſſing the rebukes and raylinges of the wicked aduerſaries: for the which Potamiena, the virgine, to requite againe his kindnes, bad him bee of good comfort, ſaying that ſhe would pray yͤ Lord to ſhewe mercy vpon him. And ſo went ſhe to her Martyrdome, which ſhe both ſtrongly and quietly did ſuſtaine.

Baſilides of a perſecutour made a martyr.

Not long after it happened that Baſilides was required to giue an othe in a matter cōcerning his fellowe souldiours: which thing he denied to doe, plainely affirming yͭ he was a Chriſtian. For their othe then, was wont to be by the Idoles & the Emperor. At the firſt he was thought diſſimulingly to ieſt, but after whē he was heard conſtantly, & in earneſt to confirme the ſame, he was had before the iudge, and ſo by him committed to warde. The Chriſtians marueiling thereat, as they came to him in the priſon inquired of him the cauſe of that his ſodaine conuerſion. To whom he aunſwered againe and ſaide, that Potamiena had praied for him to the Lord, & ſo he ſaw a crowne put vpon his head: adding moreouer that it ſhould not be long, but he ſhould be receiued. which things thus done, yͤ next day following, he was had to the place of execution, and there beheaded, Euſeb. Alexander confeſſor and Byſhop of Hieruſalem.

The notable age of Narciſſus Byſhop of Hieruſalem.

As diuers and many there were that ſuffered in the daies of this Seuerus: ſo ſome were againe which through the protection of God his prouidence, being put to great torments, yet eſcaped wͭ life. Of whom was one Alexander who for his conſtant confeſſiō and torments ſuffered, was made Biſhop afterwarde of Hieruſalem, together with Narciſſus, who being then an olde man of an hundred and threeſcore yeares and three, as ſayeth Euſebius, was vnwieldy for his age to gouerne that function alone.

A miracle of water turned into oyle. Ex Euſeb. Lib. 6. Ca. 9.

Of this Narciſſus is reported in the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie, that certaine miracles by him were wrought verye notable, if they be true. Firſt of water by him turned into oyle at the ſolemne vigile of Eaſter, what time the cōgregation wanted oyle for their lampes. Another miracle is alſo told of him, which is this. There were three euill diſpoſed perſons, who ſeing the ſoundnes & graue conſtancy of his vertuous life, & fearyng their owne puniſhment, as a conſcience that is giltie, is alwaies fearefull, thought to preuent his accuſations, in accuſing him firſt, & laying an haynous crime to his charge, And to make their accuſatiō more probable before the people, they bound their accuſation with a great othe: One wiſhing to be deſtroied with fire if he ſayd not true. The other to bee conſumed with a grieuous ſickenes. The third to looſe both his eyes if they did lye. Narciſſus although hauing his conſcience cleare, yet not able beyng but one man to withſtand their accuſation bound with ſuch othes gaue place, and remoued himſelfe from the multitude, into a ſolitarie deſert by himſelf, where he continued the ſpace of many yeares. In the meane time to them which ſo willingly and wickedly forſweare themſelues, this happened: the firſt by caſualtie of one litle ſmal ſparkle of fire, was burnt with his goods and all his familie. The ſecond, was taken with a great ſickneſſe from the top to the toe, and deuoured with the ſame. The third, hearing and ſeyng the puniſhment of the other, confeſſed his fault, but through great repentance poured out ſuch tears, that he loſt both his eyes. And thus was their falſe periurie puniſhed. Narciſſus after long abſence returning home agayne, was by this meanes both cleared of the facte, and receiued into his biſhoprike agayne. To whom, as is ſaid, for impotencie of his age, Alexander was ioined with him in execution of the function. Euſeb.Hiſt.Eccleſ.Lib.6.cap.10. Of this Alexander is recorded in the ſayd Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, that after his agonies and conſtancie of his confeſſiō ſhewed in the perſecution of Seuerus, he was admoniſhed by a viſion in the night ſeaſon to make his iourney vp to Hieruſalem & Paleſtina (for that place remained free from this perſecution) to ſee there the congregation, & to pray. Thus he taking his iourney, and drawing nere to the city, a viſion with playne wordes was geuen to certaine chiefe heads of Hieruſalem, to go out of the gate of the city, there to receiue the Biſhop appointed to them of God. And ſo was Alexander met and receiued, and ioyned partner with aged Narciſſus, as is before expreſſed in the Citie of Hieruſalem, where he continued biſhop aboue 40. yeares, vntill the perſecution of Decius, and there erected a famous Librarie, where Euſebius had his chiefeſt helpe in writing his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory. He wrote alſo diuers Epiſtles to diuers churches, and licenſed Origene openly to teach in his Church. At length beyng very aged, was brought frō Ieruſalem to Ceſaria before the Iudge vnder Decius, where after his conſtant confeſſion the ſecond tyme, he was committed to priſon, and there died.

A terrible example of periury puniſhed.

The conſtācie & death of Alexander Byſhop

Beſides theſe that ſuffred in this perſecution of Seuerus recited of Euſebius, Vincentius alſo, Lib.11.cap.6. Ex Martyrol. ſpeaketh of one Andoclus, whom Polycarpus before had ſent into Fraunce: which Andoclus becauſe he ſpread there the doctrine of Chriſt, was apprehended of Seuerus, and firſt beaten with ſtaues and battes, after was beheaded.

Andoclus, Martyr.

To theſe aboue named, may alſo be added Aſclepiades, who although was not put to death in this perſecution of Seuerus, yet conſtantly he did abide the trial of his confeſſiō & ſuffred much for the ſame, as Alexander did before mentioned. wherfore afterward he was ordained biſhop of Antioch, where he continued the ſpace of vij. yeares of whom Alexander writeth to the Church of Antioche, out of priſon, much reioyſing and geuing thankes to God, to heare that he was their Biſhop.

Aſclepiades Byſhop of Antioche confeſſor.

About the ſame tyme during the raigne of Seuerus, died Irenæus, Henr. de Erfordia, Ado, and other Martyr writers, do hold, that he was martyred with a great multitude of other moe, for the confeſſion and doctrine of Chriſt, about the fourth or fift yeare of Seuerus. This Irenæus as he was a great writer, ſo was he greatly commended of Tertullian for his learning, whom he calleth omnium doctrinarum curioſiſſimum exploratorem: a great ſearcher of all kynde of learning. He was firſt ſcholer and hearer of Polycarpus, frō thence either was ſent or came to Fraunce, and there by Photinus, and the reſt of the Martyrs was inſtituted into the miniſtery, commended by their letter vnto Eleutherius, as is before premoniſhed. At length after yͤ Martyrdom of Photinus, he was appointed biſhop of Lions, where he cōtinued about the ſpace of 23. yeres. In yͤ tyme of this Irenęus, the ſtate of the Church was much troubled, not only for the outward perſecution of the foraine enemy, but alſo for diuers ſectes and errours then ſtirring, againſt which he diligently laboured, and wrote much, although but few of his bookes be now remayning. The nature of this man well agreeyng with his name, was ſuch, that he euer loued peace, and ſought to ſet agreement when any controuerſie roſe in the Church. And therfore, when the queſtion of keeping the Eaſter day was renued to the Church, bebetwene Victor biſhop of Rome, and the churches of Aſia, and when Victor would haue excommunicated them as ſchiſmatikes, for diſagreeyng from him therein: Irenæus with other brethren, of the French Church, ſory to ſee ſuch a contention among brethren for ſuch a trifle, conuented themſelues together in a common Councell, and directing their letter with their common conſent ſubſcribed, ſent vnto Victor, intreating him to ſtay his purpoſe, & not to proceed in excommunicating his brethren for that matter. Although they themſelues agreed with him in obſeruing the Sonday Eaſter as he did: yet with great reaſons and arguments exhorted him not to deale ſo rigorouſly with his other brethren, following the ancient cuſtome of their countrey maner in that behalf. And beſide this he wrote diuers other letters abroad concerning the ſame contentiō, declaring the excommunication of Victor to be of no force.

Irenæus Byſhop of Lyons, and Martyr.

Not long after Irenæus followed alſo Tertullian about the tyme of this Seuerus, and Antoninus Caracalla his ſonne, a man both in Greeke and Latin wel expert, hauing great gifts in diſputing, and in writing eloquent, as his bookes declare, & as the commendation of al learned men doth teſtifie no leſſe. To whom Vincentius Lirinenſis geueth ſuch prayſe, that he calleth him the floure of all Latine writers, and of the eloquence of his ſtile ſo he writeth, that with the force of his reaſons, he ſaith, whom he could not perſuade, them he cōpelled to conſent vnto him. How many words, ſo many ſentences, and how many ſentences, ſo many victories he had, &c.

Tertullian Eccleſiaſticall writer.

Such men of doing and writing, God raiſeth vp from tyme to tyme, as pillers and ſtayes for his poore Church, as he did this Tertullian in theſe dangerous dayes of perſecution. For whē the chriſtians were vexed with wrongs, & falſly accuſed of the Gentils, Tertullian taking their cauſe in hand, defendeth them againſt the perſecutors, & againſt their ſlaunderous accuſations: Firſt, that they neuer minded any ſtyrre or rebellion, either againſt the Empire or Emperors of Rome: forſomuch as the vſe of Chriſtians was to pray for the ſtate of their Emperours and gouernours. And where as they were accuſed falſly to bee enemies to all mankind, how could that be (ſaith Tertullian to Scapula) ſeyng the proper office of the Chriſtians is by their profeſſion to pray for all men, to loue their enemies, neuer requiting euil for euil, when as all other do loue but onely their friends, and ſcarcely them? As touching the horrible ſlaunder of murdering infants, how can that be true in the Chriſtians (ſaith he), whoſe order is to abſtayne from all bloud, & ſtrangled: in ſo much, that it is not lawful for thē to touch the bloud of any beaſt at their tables when they feede? From filthy copulation no ſort more free then they? which are and euer hath ben the greateſt obſeruers of chaſtitie, of whom, ſuch as may, liue in perpetuall Virginitie all their life, ſuch as cannot, contract matrimony, for auoyding all whoredom and fornication. Neither can it be proued of the chriſtians to worſhip the ſunne, which falſe ſurmiſe, Tertulliā declareth to riſe hereof, for that the maner of the Chriſtians was to pray toward the Eaſt. Much leſſe was there any of them ſo mad as to worſhip an Aſſes head whereof the occaſion beyng taken onely of the Iewes, the ſlaunder therof therfore he proueth to be falſly and wrōgfully laid to the charge of the Chriſtians.

The Apology of Tertullian defending the Chriſtians.

Tertullianus ad Scapulam.

The occaſion hereof, belike came of the Iewes worſhipping the iawe of an Aſſe in the ſtory of Sampſon.

And likewiſe againſt all other lies and ſlaunders, obiected of the Heathen againſt the Chriſtians, the ſayd Tertullian purgeth the Chriſtians, declaring them falſly to be belied, & wrongfully perſecuted, not for any deſert of theirs but only for the hatred of their name. And yet notwithſtāding by the ſame perſecutions, he proueth in the ſame Apologie, the religion of the chriſtians nothing to be empaired, but rather encreaſed. The more (ſaith he) we are mowen doune of you, the moe riſe vp. The bloud of Chriſtians is ſeede. For what man ſayth he, in beholding the painfull torments, and the perfect patience of them will not ſearch and inquire what is in the cauſe? And when he hath found it out, who will not agree vnto it? And when he agreeth to it, who wil not deſire to ſuffer for it? Thus (ſaith he) this ſect will neuer die, which the more it is cut doune, the more it groweth. For euery man ſeing and wondring at the ſufferance of the Saints, is moued the more therby to ſearch the cauſe in ſearching, he findeth it, and in finding, he followeth it. Tertul in eodem Apolog.

Tertul. in Apologetico.

Thus Tertullian in this daungerous tyme of perſecution, being ſtirred vp of God, defended the innocēcie of the Chriſtians, againſt the blaſphemy of the aduerſaries, and moreouer for the inſtruction of the church compiled many fruitfull workes, wherof ſome are extant, ſome are not to be found. Notwithſtanding the great learning & famous vertues of this worthy mā, certaine errors and blemiſhes are noted in his doctrine, as were before both of Origine, & Irenæus, and likewiſe of them were they neuer ſo excellent, that followed them. which errors all here in order to note and comprehend, were too long a matter for this ſtory to proſecute. This by the way ſhall be ſufficient to admoniſh the Reader, neuer to looke for any ſuch perfection of any man in this world, how ſingular ſo euer he be (Chriſt onely excepted) but ſome blemiſhe or other ioyneth himſelfe withall, whereof more perchaunce ſhall be ſayd when we come to Cyprian.

Victor Byſhop of Rome.

Victor reported of ſome to dye a Martyr.

The cauſe diſcuſſed why the holy Ghoſt forbad bloud and ſtrangled in the primitiue Church.

Ex Euſeb. lib. 5. Cap. 26.

The doctrine of Chriſtian libertie in outward vſages.

Anno. 200.

And now to returne agayne to the order of biſhops of Rome intermitted: after Eleutherius afore mentioned, next in the biſhoprike of Rome ſucceded Victor, who as Platina ſayth, died quietly in the dayes of Seuerus. But Damaſus Supplementum, Lib.8. and ſuch as folow the common Chronicles, affirme that he died a Martyr, after he had ſitten x. or as ſome ſay xij. yeares. This Victor was a great ſtyrrer (as partly before is ſignified) in the controuerſie and contention of Eaſterday. For the which he would haue proceded in excommunication againſt the churches of Aſia, had not Irenæus then biſhop of Lions, with the counſaile of other his brethren there aſſēbled, repreſſed his intended violence. As touching that cōtrouerſie of Eaſter in thoſe dais of the primitiue Church, the originall thereof was this, as Euſebius, Socrates, Platina, and other record. Firſt, certain it is, that the Apoſtles onely being intentiue and attendaunt to the doctrine of ſaluation, gaue no heed nor regard to the obſeruation of dayes & times, neither bound the Church to any ceremonies and rites, except thoſe things neceſſary mentioned in the Actes of the Apoſtles, as ſtrangled and bloud, which was ordayned then of the holy Ghoſt, notwithout a moſt vrgent and neceſſary cauſe, touched partly in yͤ hiſtory before. For when the murdering and bloud of Infants was commonly obiected by the Heathen perſecutors agaynſt the Chriſtians, they had no other argumēt to help thēſelues, nor to refell the aduerſarie, but only their own law, by the which they were commaūded to abſtaine not onely from all mens bloud, but alſo from the bloud of all cōmon beaſtes. And therefore that law ſeemeth by the holy Ghoſt to be geuen, & alſo to the ſame end & continued in the Church, ſo long as the cauſe, that is the perſecutions of the Heathen Gentiles continued. Beſide theſe we read of no other ceremonies or rites, which the Apoſtles greatly regarded, but left ſuch things free to the libertie of Chriſtians, euery man to vſe therein his own diſcretion, for the vſing or not vſing thereof. Whereupon, as concerning all the ceremoniall obſeruations of dayes, tymes, places, meates, drinks, veſtures, and ſuch other, of all theſe things neither was the diuerſitie among men greatly noted, nor any vniformitie greatly required. In ſo much, that Irenæus writing to Victor of the tradition of dayes, and of faſtings, and of the diuerſitie of theſe things then vſed among yͤ primitiue fathers, ſaith: Nihilo tamen minus omnes illi pacem inter ſe retinuerunt, & retinemus etiamnū, & ieiunij diſſonantia, fidei concordiam commendat, &c. That is, Notwithſtanding all this varietie, all they kept peace among themſelues, & yet we keepe it ſtill, and this difference of faſting among vs, commendeth more the concord of faith. And ſo long did the doctrine of Chriſtian libertie remaine whole & ſounde in the Church till the tyme of Victor, which was about the yeare of our Lord, 200. Although the diuerſitie of theſe vſages, began ſomething before alſo in the dayes of Pius and Anicetus, about the yere of our Lord, 163. to be miſliked: yet reſtraint hereof was not ſo much vrged before, as in yͤ time of Victor. And yet neither did the violēce of Victor take ſuch place, but that the doctrine of Chriſtian libertie was defended and maintained by meanes of Irenæus and other, and ſo continued in the Church till after the Councell of Nice. And thus much concerning the doctrine of Chriſtian libertie of the differences of rites and ceremonies.

Ex Euſeb. Lib. 4. Cap 26.

Polycarpus and Anicetus diſagreeing in controuerſie, yet agreed in charitie.

Vniformitie in ceremonies not to be required as a thing neceſſary.

Now to returne to Victor agayne, to ſhew what diuerſitie there was in obſeruing the day of Eaſter, and how it came, thus is the ſtory: Firſt, in the tyme of Pius and Anicetus, an.163. the queſtiō of Eaſter day began firſt to be moued, at what tyme Pius, by the reuelation of Hermes, decreed the obſeruatiō of that day to be chaunged from the wonted maner of the 14. day of the moone in the firſt moneth, vnto the next Sonday after. After him came Anicetus, Soter, and Eleutherius Biſhops of Rome, which alſo determined the ſame. Agaynſt theſe ſtode Melito Biſhop of Sardis, Polycarpus, and as ſome thinke, Egeſippus, with other learned men of Aſia which Polycarpus being ſent by the brethren of Aſia, came to Rome as is aforeſayd, to cōferre with Anicetus in that matter: wherin when they could not agree after long debating, yet notwithſtanding, they did both cōmunicate together with reuerēce, & departed in peace. And ſo the celebration of Eaſterday remained Adiaphoron, as a thing indifferent in the Church, till the time of Victor: who folowing after Anicetus and hys fellowes, and chiefly ſtirring in this matter, endeuoured by all meanes and might, to draw, or rather ſubdue the Churches of Aſia vnto hys opinion, thinking moreouer to excommunicate all thoſe Byſhops and churches of Aſia, as heretickes and ſchiſmatickes, which diſagreed from the Romaine order, had not Irenæus otherwiſe reſtrayned him from that doyng, as is aforeſayd, whiche was about the yeare of our Lord.191. in the reigne of Commodus. Thus then began the vniformitie of keeping that holy day to be firſt required, as a thing neceſſary, & all they accompted as heretickes and ſchiſmatickes, which diſſented from yͤ Biſhop & traditiō of Rome.

With Victor ſtoode Theophilus Byſhop of Ceſarea, Narciſſus of Hieruſalem, Irenæus of Lyons, Palmas of Pontus, Banchillus of Corinthe, the Byſhop of Oſroena, and other moe. All which condeſcended to haue the celebration of Eaſter vpon the Sonday, becauſe they would differ frō the Iewes in all things, as neare as they might, and partly becauſe the reſurrection of the Lord fell on the ſame day.

Polycrates Byſhop of Epheſus.

Byſhop in thoſe dayes maryed.

On the contrary ſide diuers Byſhop were in Aſia, of whom the principall was Policrates Byſhop of Epheſus, who being aſſembled with a great multitude of Biſhops and brethren of thoſe parties, by the common aſſent of the reſt, wrote agayne to Victor, and to the Church of Rome, declaring, that they had euer from the beginning obſerued that day, according to the rule of Scripture vnchaunged, neither adding nor altering any thing frō the ſame. Alledging moreouer for them the examples of the Apoſtles and holy fathers their predeceſſours, as Phillip the Apoſtle, with hys three daughters at Hierapolis: alſo Iohn the Apoſtle and Euangeliſt at Epheſus, Polycarpus at Smyrna Thraſeas at Eumenia, Byſhoppe and Martyr, lykewiſe of Sagaris at Laodicæa Byſhop and Martyr, Holy Papyrius, and Melito at Sardis. Beſide theſe biſhops alſo of his own kindred, and his owne auncetors, to the number of ſeuen which all were biſhops before him, & he the eight now after them. All which obſerued (ſaith he) the ſolemnitie of the ſame day, after the ſame wiſe and ſort as we do now.

Victor excommunicating the Churches of Aſia.

Irenæus to Victor.

Diuerſitie commendeth the concorde of fayth.

Victor being not a litle moued herewith, by letters agayne denounceth againſt them (more bold vpon authoritie, then wiſe in his commiſſion) violent excommunicatiō, Albeit by the wiſe handlyng of Irenæus, and other learned men, that matter was ſtaid, and Victor otherwiſe perſwaded. What the perſwaſiōs of Irenæus were, partly may appeare in Euſeb.Lib.5.cap.26. the ſumme whereof tendeth to this effect: That the variance and difference of ceremonies is no ſtraunge matter in the Church of Chriſt, when as this varietie is not onely in the day of Eaſter, but alſo in the maner of faſting, & in diuers other vſages among the chriſtians. For ſome faſt one day, ſome two days, ſome other faſt moe. Other there be, which counting xl. houres, both day & night, take that for a ful dayes faſt. And this ſo diuers faſhion of faſting in the church of Chriſt, began not onely in this our tyme, but was before among our forelders. And yet notwithſtāding they with all this diuerſity, were in vnitie among themſelues, and ſo be we, neyther doth this difference of ceremonies any thing hinder, but rather commendeth the concorde of fayth. And bringeth forth the examples of the fathers of Teleſphorus, Pius, Anicetus, Soter, Eleutherius, and ſuch other, who neither obſerued the ſame vſage themſelues, neither preſcribed it to others, and yet notwithſtanding kept chriſtian charitie with ſuch as came to cōmunicate with them, not obſeruing the ſame forme of things which they obſerued, as well appeared by Polycarpus and Anicetus, which although they agreed not in one vniforme cuſtome of rites, yet refuſed not to cōmunicate together, the one geuing reuerence vnto the other. Thus the controuerſie being taken vp betwene Irenæus & Victor, remained free to the time of Nicene Councell. Hæc ex Iren. Euſebius. And thus much cōcerning the controuerſie of that matter, and concerning the doings of Victor.

Zephyrinus Byſhop of Rome.

The Epiſtle and ordinaunces of Zephyrinus ſuſpected to be counterfet.

After Victor, ſucceded in the ſea of Rome Zephyrinus, in the dayes of the foreſayd Seuerus, about the yeare of our Lord.203. To this Zephyrinus be aſcribed two Epiſtles, in the firſt Tome of the Councels. But as I haue ſayd before of the decretall Epiſtles of other Romaine Biſhops: ſo I ſay and verily ſuppoſe of this, that neither the countenāce of the ſtile, nor the matter therin contained, nor the condition of the tyme, doth otherwiſe giue to thinke of theſe letters, but that they be verily baſtard letters, not written by theſe fathers, nor in theſe tymes, but craftily and wickedly pact in by ſome, which to ſet vp yͤ primacie of Rome, haue moſt peſtilently abuſed the authoritie of theſe holy & auncient fathers, to deceaue the ſimple Church. For who is ſo rude, but that in conſidering onely the ſtate of thoſe terrible tymes, may eaſily vnderſtand except affectiō blind him, beſide a nomber of other probable coniectures to lead him, that the poore perſecuted biſhops in that time, would haue bene glad to haue any ſafe couert to put their heades in: ſo far was it of, that they had any luſt or laiſure, thē to ſeeke for any Primacie or Patriarkeſhip, or to driue all other churches to appeale to the ſea of Rome, or to exempt all Prieſts from the accuſation of any lay man: as in the firſt Epiſtle of Zephyrinus is to be ſeene, written to the Biſhops of Sicilia, And likewiſe the ſecond Epiſtle of his, to the Biſhops of the prouince of Egypt, containing no maner of doctrine, nor conſolation neceſſary for that time, but only certain ritual decrees to no purpoſe, argueth no leſſe but the ſaid epiſtles neither to ſauor of that man, nor taſte of the tyme.

The firſt Epiſtle of Zephyrinus to the Byſhops of Sicilia.

Patins of glaſſe borne before the Prieſt. The ordinaunces of Zepherinus of ſmall credite.

Golden chalices. Concilium Tiburtinum Rhenenſe.

Of like credite alſo ſeemeth the conſtitution of the Patines of glaſſe, which Damaſus ſayth that the ſame Zephyrinus ordained to be caried before the Prieſt, at the celebratiõ of the Maſſe. Againe Platina writeth that he ordayned the miniſtration of the Sacramẽt to be no more vſed in veſſels of wood, or of glaſſe, or of any other mettall, except only ſiluer, gold, and tinne, &c. But how theſe two teſtimonies of Damaſus and Platina ioyne together, let the reader iudge: eſpecially ſeyng the ſame decree is referred to Vrbanus, that came after him. Againe, what needed this decree of golden chalices to be ſtabliſhed afterward in the Councell of Tybur and Rhenes, if it had bene enacted before by Zephyrinus? How long this Zephyrinus ſate, our writers do varie. Euſebius ſayth, he died in the raigne of Caracalla, and ſate 17. yeares, Platina writeth that he died vnder Seuerus, and ſate 8. yeares, and ſo ſaith alſo Nauclerus. Damaſus affirmeth that he ſate 16. yeares and two monthes.

Ex Florilego. Perpetua. Felicitas. Reuocatus Saturninus. Satyrus. Secundulus. Martyrs.

Matthæus author of the ſtory intituled, Flores Hiſtoriarũ, with other latter Chronicles, maketh mention of Perpetua, and Felicitas, and Reuocatus, her brother, alſo of Saturninus and Satyrus brethren, and Secundulus, which in the perſecution of this Seuerus, gaue ouer their liues to Martyrdome for Chriſt, beyng throwen to wild beaſts, and deuoured of the ſame, in Carthage and in Affrike, ſaue that Saturninus brought agayne from the beaſts, was beheaded, and Secũdulus dyed in priſon, about the yeare of our Lord, 202. as writeth Florilegus.

Seuerus warreth in Brittayne. A wall betweene England builded, 132. miles in length. Seuerus the perſecutour ſlayne at Yorke. An. 215. Baſsianus Emperour. Macrinus with hys ſonne Diadumenus Emperour. An. 219.

This Seuerus the perſecutor raigned, as the moſt part of writers accord the terme of 18. yeares, who about yͤ latter tyme of his raigne, came with his army hether into Britaine, where after many conflictes had with the Britains, in the borders of the North, he caſt vp a ditche with a mighty walle made of earth and turues, & ſtrong ſtakes, to the length of 132. myles from the one ſide of the ſea to the other, beginning at Tine, and reached to the Scottiſh ſea, which done, he remooued to Yorke, and there by the breaking in of the Northren men and the Scots, was beſieged and ſlaine, about the yere of our Lord, 214. leauing behind him two ſonnes, Baſsianus, and Geta. Which Baſsianus ſurnamed Caracalla, after he had ſlayne his brother Geta here in Britaine, gouerned the Empire alone, the ſpace of ſixe yeares. After whoſe death, he beyng ſlayne alſo of his ſeruaunts (as he had ſlayne his brother before) ſucceded Macrinus with his ſonne Diadumenus, to be Emperour, who after they had raigned one yeare, were both ſlayne of their owne people.

The monſtrous life of Heliogabolus Emperour.

A prodigious beliged.

After them followed Varius Heliogabalus, in the empire, rather to be called a Monſter, then a man, ſo prodigious was his life in all glotonie, filthines, and ribaudry. Such was his pompe, that in his lampes he vſed balme, & filled his fiſhpondes with roſewater. To let paſſe his ſumptuous veſtures which he would not weare but only of gold, and moſt coſtly ſilkes: his ſhoes gliſtering with precious ſtones finely engraued he was neuer ij. dayes ſerued with one kynd of meate, he neuer wore one garment twiſe, and likewiſe for his fleſhly wickednes: ſome dayes his company was ſerued at meale with the braynes of Oſtriges, and a ſtraunge foule called Phenocapterie, an other day with the toungs of Popiniayes, and other ſweete ſinging birdes. Beyng nye to the ſea, he neuer vſed fiſh: in places farre diſtant from the ſea, all his houſe was ſerued with moſt delicate fiſhes. At one ſupper he was ſerued with 7000. fiſhes, and 5000. foules. At his remoouing in his progreſſe, often there followed him 600. chariots, laden only with baudes, common harlots, and ribaudes. He ſacrificed with young children, and preferred to the beſt aduauncementes in the common weale, moſt light perſonages, as baudes, Minſtrels, Carters, and ſuch like. In one word he was an enemy to all honeſty & good order. And when he was foretold by his Sorcerers and Aſtronomers, that he ſhould dye a violent death, he prouided ropes of ſilke to hang himſelfe, ſwordes of gold to kill himſelfe, and ſtrong poyſon in Iacincts and Emerandes to poyſon himſelf, if needs he muſt thereto be forced. Moreouer, he made an high tower, hauing the floore of boordes couered with gold plate, bordred with precious ſtones, frõ the which toure he would throw himſelf downe, if he ſhould be purſued of his enemies. But notwithſtanding all his prouiſion, he was ſlayne of the ſouldiours, drawen through the Citie, and caſt into Tiber after he had raigned two yeres and viij. monthes, as witneſſeth Eutropius, other ſay foure yeares.

Heliogabalus ſlayne of hys ſouldiours. Ex Eutropio.

Alexander Seuerus Emperour. Anno. 224.

This Heliogabalus hauing no iſſue, adopted to his ſõne and heyre Aurelius Alexander Seuerus, the ſonne of Mammea who entring his raigne the yeare of our Lorde, 224. cõtinued 13. yeares, well commended for vertuous, wiſe, gẽtle, liberal, & to no man hurtful. And as he was not vnlerned himſelf, through the diligent education of Mammea his mother, ſo he was a great fauourer of men, wiſe and learned. Neither did he any thing in the common weale, without the aſſiſtance of learned and ſage counſailors. It is reported of him, to beare ſuch ſtomacke againſt corrupt iudges, that when he chaunced to meete with any of them, by the commotion of his mind, he would caſt vp choler, being ſo mooued with them that he could not ſpeake, and was redy with his two fingers to put out their eyes. From his court he diſmiſſed all ſuperfluous and vnneedful ſeruants ſaying, that he was no good pupil, which fed idle ſeruants with the bowels of his common weale.

Againſt corrupt Iudges. The ſaying of Alexander to be noted and followed. Idle ſeruauntes eate vp the bowels of the common weale.

Among his other good vertues, it appeareth alſo that he was frendly and fauourable vnto the Chriſtians, as by this act may be gathered: For when the chriſtians had occupied a certaine publike place in ſome good vſe, belike for the aſſembling and conuenting together of the congregation, the company of the Cookes or tiplers, made chalenge of that place to belõg vnto thẽ. The matter being brought before the Emperour, he iudged it more honeſt, the place to ſerue to the worſhip of God, howſoeuer it were, then to the dirtie ſlubbering of Cookes and Skullians.

A note worthy to be marked.

By this it may be vnderſtand, that in Rome no Chriſtian churches were erected vnto this tyme, when as yet (notwithſtanding this fauour of the Emperour) no publike houſe could quietly be obtained for the chriſtians. So that by the reaſon hereof may appeare the decretall epiſtle and ordinance of Pope Higynus concerning the dedication of churches aboue mentioned, pag. 53. to bee falſified. And likewiſe the ordinaunce of Pius his ſucceſſour, concernyng the Altar, or Superaltare, to be alſo falſe. For what Superaltare was it like, they had in the tyme of Higynus and Pius, when as at this tyme which was long after, no publike place almoſt could be graunted them for the Chriſtians to aſſemble together?

Platina in vita Pontiani.

Of this Alexander, Platina writeth, that as hee was a great hater of all boaſters & flatterers, ſo he was of ſuche prudence, that no deceit could eſcape him, and bringeth in a ſtory of one Turinus, who had gotten craftily many great bribes and gifts, in making the people beleue that he was of great authoritie with the Emperour, and that he could helpe them to haue whatſoeuer they ſued for. Whereof the Emperour being certified, cauſed him in the open market to be faſtned to a ſtake, and there killed with ſmoke, where the Crier ſtood thus crying to the people: Smoke he ſold, and with ſmoke he is puniſhed.

Puniſhed with ſmoke, that ſold ſmoke.

Mammea the mother of the Emperour.

Mammea the mother of this Alexander aboue mentioned (whom Hierome calleth a deuout and religious woman) hearing of the fame and the excellent learning of Origene, being then at Alexandria, ſent for him to Antioche, deſirous to heare and ſee him, Unto whom the foreſayd Origene according to her requeſt, reſorted, and after that he had there remained a ſpace with the Emperour, and his mother, returned againe to Alexandria.

And thus continued this good Emperor his raigne the ſpace of 13. yeares, at length at a commotion in Germany, with his mother Mammea he was ſlaine. After whome ſucceded Maximinus, contrary to the mynd of the Senate, only appointed by the ſouldiours to be Emperour. During all this tyme betwene Seuerus and this Maximinus, the church of Chriſt, although it had not perfect peace, yet it had ſome meane tranquillitie from perſecution. Albeit ſome Martyrs there were at this tyme that ſuffred, whereof Nauclerus giueth this reaſon: For although (ſaith he) Alexander beyng perſwaded through the entreating of his mother Mãmea, did fauour the Chriſtians: yet notwithſtanding, there was no publike Edict or Proclamation prouided for their ſafegard. By reaſõ whereof, diuers there were which ſuffered Martyrdome vnder Almachius & other iudges. In the number of whom after ſome ſtories, was Calixtus Biſhop of Rome, who ſucceded next vnto Zephyrinus, aboue mentioned. And after him Vrbanus alſo, which both beyng Biſhops of Rome, did both ſuffer, by the opiniõ of ſome writers, vnder Alexander Seuerus.

Ex Nauclero.

Calixtus Byſhop of Rome and Martyr.

The decretall Epiſtles of Calixtus examined.

This Calixtus in his two decretal Epiſtles, written to Benedictus, and to the Biſhops of Fraunce, geueth theſe ordinances, that no actions or accuſations agaynſt the Prelates or teachers of the church ſhould be receaued, that no ſecret conſpiracies ſhould be made againſt biſhops. Item, no man to communicate with perſons excõmunicate. Alſo

The place of S. Paule vnfitly expounded.

Imber faſt firſt ordayned.

no biſhop to excommunicate or to deale in an other Dioces. And here he expoundeth the Dioces or the Pariſh of any biſhop or miniſter to be his wife. The wife (ſayth the Apoſtle) is bound to the law, ſo long as the husbād liueth, when he is dead, ſhe is free from the law: So (ſaith Calixtus) the wife of a biſhop (which is his Church) ſo long as he liueth, is bound duely to him, neither ought to be iudged or diſpoſed by any other man, without his will and iudgement: after his death ſhe is free from the lawe, to marrie to whō ſhe will, ſo it be in the Lord, that is, regulariter, regularly. In the end of the ſayd his epiſtle decretall, he confuteth the error of them which hold, that they which are fallen, are not to be receiued agayne. which hereſie after the tyme of Calixtus or Caliſtus, came in firſt by Nouatus, in the dayes of Cornelius. Moreouer, in his ſayd firſt Epiſtle decretall, is contayned the faſt of the foure tymes, commonly called the Imber faſt, whereof alſo Marianus Scotus, maketh mention. But Damaſus ſpeaking of the ſame faſt, ſayth, he ordayned the faſt but of three tymes, which was for the encreaſe of corne, wyne, and oyle.

By theſe hetherto premiſed, it is not hard for a quicke Reader to ſinel out the crafty iugling of that perſon or perſons whoſoeuer they were, ẏ falſly haue aſcribed theſe decretall inſtitutions to thoſe holy fathers. For firſt, what layſure had the Chriſtians to lay in their accuſations againſt their biſhops, when we neuer read nor finde in any ſtory any kynde of variaunce in thoſe dayes among them, but all loue, mutuall compaſſion, and harty communion among the Saintes. And as we read of no variaunce among the people in thoſe dayes, nor of any fault or backſliding among the Biſhops, who for the moſt part then died all conſtant Martirs: ſo neither do we read of any tribunall ſeat or Conſiſtorie vſed or frequented then about any ſuch matters. Agayne, if a man examine well the dangers of thoſe buſie days, he ſhall ſee the poore flocke of the chriſtians, ſo occupied and piteouſly oppreſſed by the cruell accuſations of the Heathen Infidels, that though the cauſe did, yet the tyme would not ſerue them to commenſe any law againſt their biſhops. Secōdly, as touching their conſpiracie againſt biſhops, what conſpiracie either would they then practiſe agaynſt them, which always gaue their liues for their defence? Or how could they then conſpire in any cōpanies together, when neuer a true chriſtian man durſt once put his head out of his dores, neither was there in the church any Chriſtian man in thoſe perilous dayes, except he were a true man in deed, ſuch as was farre from all falſe conſpiracies? And when as all the world almoſt in all places conſpired agaynſt them: what tyme, what cauſe, or what hart trow ye could they haue to cōſpire againſt their inſtructors? Thirdly, concerning the confutation of that hereſie, how ſtandeth the confutation with the tyme of Caliſtus, whē Nouatus the author of that hereſie was after him in the tyme of Cornelius? Fourthly, if by the lawe of Calixtus, euery Dioces be the proper wife of euery biſhop or miniſter, then how many biſhops wiues, and perſons wiues hath the adulterous Pope of Rome deflowred in theſe latter dayes of the Church, which ſo proudly and impudently hath intermedled and taken his pleaſure & his owne profit in euery Dioces and Pariſh almoſt through all Chriſtendome, without all leaue and licence of the good man, who hath bene in the meane tyme, & yet is compelled ſtil, where ſo euer the Popes holines commeth, Vigilante ſternere naſo, and to giue him leaue vnaſked, to do what he liſt. wherefore if this Canon decretall be truly his, why is it not obſerued, ſo as it doth ſtand without exceptiō? If it bee not, why is it then falſly forged vpon him, and the Church of Chriſt deceaued? And certes, lamentable it is, that this falſifiyng of ſuch trifling traditions vnder the falſe pretēce of antiquitie, either was begon in the Church, to deceaue the people: or that it hath remayned ſo long vndetected. For as I thinke, the church of Chriſt will neuer be perfectly reformed, before theſe decretall conſtitutions & Epiſtles which haue ſo long put on the viſard of antiquitie, ſhalbe fully detected, and appeare in their owne colour, wherein they were firſt paynted.

Agaynſt the decretall Epiſtles and conſtitutions.

Calixtus a Martyr. Ex Vincen. in ſpecul Hiſt. Et Antonino. tit. 7. cap. 6.

And yet neither do I ſay this, or thinke contrary, but that it may be, that biſhops of Rome and of the ſame name haue bene the true authors of theſe traditions: but here cōmeth in the error (as I credibly ſuppoſe) that when other later biſhops of the like name, haue deuiſed theſe ceremoniall inuentions, the vulgar opinion of men hath transferred them to the firſt primitiue fathers, although beyng of an other time, yet bearing the ſame name with the true inuentors thereof. But of Calixtus enough: who as Damaſus ſayth in the dayes of this Alexander Seuerus, died a Martyr. Vincentius affirmeth that he was tied to a great ſtone, and ſo out of a window was thrown into a ditch. Euſebius ſpeakyng of his death, maketh no mention of his Martyrdom, and ſayth he ſate v. yeares. Platina ſayth vj. yeres, Sabellicus giueth him vij. yeares, and ſo doth Damaſus.

Vrbanus Byſhop of Rome. {An. 227.}

Confirmation of children inſtituted.

Vrbanus Martyred.

After Caliſtus folowed Vrbanus, about the yeare of our Lord 227. who in his epiſtle decretall (comming out of the ſame forge) which he wrote in common to all biſhops, making no mention of the heauy perſecutions of the Church, nor miniſtring any exhortation of comfort or conſtancie to the brethren, onely geueth many ſtraight precepts, for not tranſporting or alienating the goods of the Church, and to pay truly their offrings, which they vow: alſo to haue all common among the Clergie. Moreouer, about the ende of his epiſtle he inſtituteth the confirmation of children after Baptiſme (which the Papiſtes bee woont to take into the number of their vij. Sacraments) affirming and denouncing more then Scripture will beare, that the impoſition of the Biſhops hand bringeth the holy ghoſt, and thereby to be made full Chriſtiās, &c. But of theſe decretall epiſtles inough is ſayd before, more may bee conſidered of the diſcrete Reader. Marianus Scotus, Sabellicus, Nauclerus, & other late ſtory writers doe hold as is aforeſayd, that he dyed a Martyr in the dayes of Alexander Seuerus, after he had gouerned that ſeat, 4. yeares, as Damaſus and Platina do witnes, as Marianus ſayth, eight yeares.

Tiburtius. Valerianus Martyrs.

The ſame Damaſus and Platina do teſtifie of him, that he by his preaching and holines of life cōuerted diuers Ethnikes to the fayth. Among whom were Tiburtius, and Valerianus the huſband of Cecilia, which both being noble men of Rome, remained conſtant in the fayth vnto the end and Martyrdome.

Cecilia Martyr Ex martyrologio Adonis.

The Martyrdome of Cecilia.

Of this Cecilia thus it is is written in the Martyrologe by Ado, that Cecilie the virgin, after ſhe had brought Valerian her huſband eſpouſed, and Tiburtius his brother to the knowledge and fayth of Chriſt, and with her exhortations had made them conſtant vnto Martyrdome: after the ſuffryng of them ſhe was alſo apprehended by Almachius the ruler, and brought to the Idols to do ſacrifice, which thing when ſhe abhorred to do, ſhe ſhould be preſented before the iudge to haue the condēnation of death. In the meane time the Sergeants and officers which were about her, beholdyng her comely beautie, and the prudent behauior in her conuerſation, began with many perſuaſions of wordes to ſollicite her mynd, to fauour her ſelfe, and that ſo excellent beautie, and not to caſt her ſelfe away, &c. But ſhe agayne ſo replied to them with reaſons & godly exhortations, that by the grace of almighty God their hartes began to kindle and at length to yeld to that Religion, which before they did perſecute. which thing ſhe perceauing, deſired of the iudge Almachius a litle reſpite. which beyng graunted, ſhe ſendeth for Vrbanus the Biſhop home to her houſe, to ſtabliſh and ground them in the fayth of Chriſt. And ſo were they, with diuers other at the ſame tyme Baptiſed, both men & women, to the number (as the ſtory ſayth) of 400. perſons, among whome was one Gordianus a noble man. This done, this bleſſed Martyr was brought before the iudge, where ſhe was condemned: then after was brought to the houſe of the Iudge, where ſhe was encloſed in a whote bath, but ſhe remayning there a whole day & night without any hurt, as in a cold place, was brought out again, and cōmaundement giuen that in the bath ſhe ſhould be beheaded. The executor is ſaid to haue foure ſtrokes at her necke, & yet her head beyng cut off, ſhe (as the ſtory geueth) liued three days after. And ſo died this holy Virgine martyr, whoſe body in the night ſeaſon Vrbanus the biſhop toke and buried among the other Biſhops. Ado the compiler of this Martyrologe addeth that this was done in yͤ tyme of Marcus Aurelius, and Commodus. But that cannot be, for ſo much as Vrbanus by all hiſtories, was long after thoſe Emperors, and liued in the dayes of this Alexander as is aboue declared. Antoninus, Bergomēſis, Equilinus with ſuch other writers, ſet forth this hiſtory with many ſtrāge miracles, wrought by the ſaid Cecilia, in conuerting her huſband Valerianus, and his brother, in ſhewyng them the Angell which was the keeper of her virginitie, and of the Angell putting on crowns vpon their heads. But as touching theſe miracles, as I do not diſpute whether they be true or fabulous: ſo becauſe they haue no ground vpon any ancient or graue authors, but taken out of certain new Legends, I do therfore referre them thether from whence they came.

Agapitus a bleſſed Martyr. Ex Bergomenſe. Lib. 8.

Vnder the ſame Alexander diuers other there be whom Bergomenſis mentioned to haue ſuffred martyrdom, as one Agapitus of the age of xv. yeares, who beyng apprehended and condemned at Preneſte in Italy, becauſe he would not ſacrifice to Idoles, was aſſayled with ſundry tormentes: firſt with whips ſcourged, then hanged vp by the feete, after hauing hote water poured vpon him, at laſt caſt to the wild beaſts. With all which tormentes, when he could not be hurt, finally with ſword was beheaded. The executor of theſe puniſhments (as by Henricus Erford, may be gathered) was one Antiochus, who in the executing of the foreſayd tormentes, ſodenly fell downe from his iudiciall ſeate, crying out, that al his inward bowels burned within him and ſo gaue vp the breath, Henr. de Erfordia, Lib. 6. cap. 29.

Calepodius, Martyr.

Alſo with the ſame Agapitus is numbred Calepodius a miniſter of Rome, whoſe body firſt was drawen through the citie of Rome, & after caſt into Tiber. Bergo. ibidem.

Pammachius with his wife and children Martyrs. 42. Martyrs.

Then followeth Pammachius a Senatour of Rome, with his wife and children, and other both men and women, to the number of xlij.

Simplicius, Martyr.

Item an other noble Senator of Rome named Simplicius all which together in one day had their heads ſmitten off, and their heads after hanged vp in diuers gates of the Citie, for a terrour of other, that none ſhould profeſſe the name of Chriſt.

Quiritius, Iulia, hys mother Martyrs.

Beſide theſe ſuffred alſo Quiritius a noble man of Rome, who with his mother Iulia, and a great number moe, were put likewiſe to death.

Tyberius, Valerianus, brethren and martirs.

Alſo Tiberius and Valerianus, Citizens of Rome, and brethren, ſuffered (as Bergomenſis ſayth) the ſame tyme, who firſt being bruiſed and broken with bats, after were beheaded.

Martina a Virgine & Martyr.

Alſo Vincentius, Bergomenſis, and Erfordienſis, make mētion of Martina a Chriſtian virgine, which after diuers bitter puniſhments, beyng conſtant in her fayth, ſuffered in like maner by the ſword.

Albeit as touching the tyme of theſe forenamed Martyrs, as I find them not in elder writers: ſo do I ſuppoſe them to ſuffer vnder Maximinus, or Decius, rather then vnder Alexander.

* The ſixt Perſecution.

Maximinus Emperour and perſecutour. The vi. perſecution. An. 237.

AFter the death of Alexander the Emperour, who with his mother Mammea (as is ſaid) was murdred in Germany folowed Maximinus, choſen by the will of the ſouldiours, rather then by the authoritie of the Senate, about the yeare of our Lord, 237. who for the hatred hee had to the houſe of Alexander (as Euſebius recordeth) rayſed vp the vj. perſecution againſt the Chriſtians: eſpecially againſt the teachers and leaders of the Church, thinking thereby the ſooner to vanquiſh the reſt, if the captains of them were remoued out of the way. whereby I ſuppoſe rather ẏ Martyrdome of Vrbanus the biſhop, and of the reſt aboue ſpecified, to haue happened vnder the tiranny of this Maximinus then vnder Alexander. In the tyme of this perſecution, Origene wrote his booke De Martyrio: which booke if it were extant would geue vs ſome knowledge, I doubt not, of ſuch as in this perſecution did ſuffer, which now lye in ſilence vnknowne. And no doubt but a great number they were, & moe ſhould haue bene, had not the prouidēt mercy of God ſhortened his dayes, & brideled his tiranny, for he raigned but three yeares. After whom ſucceded Gordianus an 240. a man no leſſe ſtudious for the vtilitie of the commō wealth, as mild and gentle to the chriſtians. This Gordian after he had gouerned with much peace and tranquilitie the Monarchie of Rome the ſpace of vj. yeares was ſlayne of Phillip Emperour after him.

Origenes de Martyrio.

Gordianus Emperour. An. 240.

Pontianus Byſhop of Rome. Diuerſity betweene Damaſus and Euſeb. Pontianus baniſhed.

In the dayes of theſe Emperours aboue recited, was Pontianus biſhop of Rome, who ſucceded next after Vrbanus aboue reherſed, about the yeare of our Lord, 236. in the xij. yeare of Alexander, as Euſebius, Lib. 6. cap. 28. noteth: declaring him to ſit vj. yeares. Contrary Damaſus and Platina write, that he was biſhop ix. yeares and a halfe. And that in the tyme of Alexander, he with Philippus his Prieſt was baniſhed into Sardina, and there died, But it ſemeth more credible that he was baniſhed rather vnder Maximinus, and died in the beginning of the raigne of Gordianus. In his Epiſtles decretal (which ſeeme likewiſe to be fayned) he appeareth very deuout, after the common example of other biſhops to vphold the dignitie of Prieſts, and of Clergie men, ſaying: that God hath them ſo familiar with him, that by them he accepteth the offrings and oblations of other, and forgiueth their ſinnes, and reconcileth them vnto him. Alſo, that they do make the body of the lord with their owne mouth, and geue it to other, &c. which doctrine how it ſtandeth with the Teſtament of God, & glory of Chriſt, let the Reader vſe his owne iudgement.

This doctrine ſeemeth derogatory to Chriſt and blaſphemous.

Other notable fathers alſo in the ſame time were rayſed vp in the church, as Philetus Biſhop of Antioch, which ſucceded after Aſclepiades afore mentioned, an. 220. and after him Zebennus biſhop of the ſame place, an. 231.

Ammonius a Chriſtian writer.

To theſe alſo may be added Ammonius the ſchoolemaiſter of Origene, as Suidas ſuppoſeth, alſo the kinſmen of Porphiry the great enemy of Chriſt. Notwithſtanding, this Ammonius endued with better grace, as he left diuers bookes in defence of Chriſtes religion: ſo he did conſtantly perſeuere (as Euſebius reporteth) in ẏ doctrine of Chriſt, which he had in the beginning receaued, who was about ẏ days of Alexander.

Iulius Aphricanus writer.

Iulius Aphricanus alſo about the tyme of Gordianus aforeſayd, is numbred among the old and auncient writers, of whom Nicephorus writeth to be the ſcholer of Origene, and a great writer of hiſtories of that tyme.

Natalius, Confeſſor. Ex Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 28.

Unto theſe Doctors and Confeſſors may be adioyned the ſtory of Natalius, mentioned in the fift booke of Euſebius. This Natalius had ſuffred perſecution before like a conſtant confeſſor, who being ſeduced and perſuaded by Aſclepiodotus and Theodorus (which were the Diſciples of Theodocus) to take vpon him to be biſhop of their ſect, promiſing to geue him euery month an hundreth and fiftie pieces of ſiluer, and ſo he ioyning himſelfe to them, was admoniſhed by viſion and reuelatiō from the Lord. For ſuch was the great mercy of God, and of our Lord Chriſt Ieſu, that he would not his Martyr, which had ſuffered ſo much for his name before, now to periſh out of his church. For the which cauſe (ſayth Euſebius) God by certaine viſions did admoniſh him. But he not taking great heede thereunto, beyng blynded partly with lucre, partly with honor, was at length all the night long ſcourged of the Angels: In ſo much that he beyng made thereby very ſore, and early on the morow putting on ſackcloth, with much weeping and lamentation went to Zephyrinus the biſhop aboue mentioned, where he falling down before him and all the Chriſtian congregation, ſhewed them the ſtripes of his body, and prayed them for the mercies of Chriſt, that he might be receiued into their communion again, from which he had ſequeſtred himſelfe before. And ſo was admitted according as he deſired.

The Lord will not looſe them which haue done or ſuffered anye thing for him.

Anterius, Byſhop of Rome martyr.

After the deceaſe of Pontianus Biſhoppe of Rome afore mentioned, ſucceded next in that place Anterius of whom Iſuardus writeth that Pontianus departing away, did ſubſtitute him his roome. But Euſebius writeth that he ſucceded immediately after him. Damaſus ſayth, that becauſe he cauſed the actes and deathes of the Martyrs to be written, therefore he was put to martirdome himſelfe, by Maximinus the Iudge. Concerning the tyme of this Byſhop, our writers do greatly iarre. Euſebius and Marianus Scotus affirme that he was Biſhop but one moneth. Sabellicus ſayth that not to be ſo. Damaſus aſſigneth to him xij. yeares & one moneth. Volateranus, Bergomenſis, and Henricus Erford, geue to him three yeares & one moneth. Nauclerus writeth that he ſat one yeare and one moneth. All which are ſo farr diſcrepant one from an other, that which of them moſt agreeth with truth, it lyeth in doubt. Next to this Biſhop was Fabianus, of whom more is to be ſayd hereafter.

Authors diſagree.

Hyppolitus Byſhop and Martyr.

Of Hippolytus, alſo both Euſebius and Hieronymus maketh mention that he was a biſhop, but where, they make no relation. And ſo likewiſe doth Theodoretus witnes him to be a biſhop, and alſo a Martyr, but namyng no place. Gelaſius contra Eutichen ſayth, he dyed a Martyr, and that he was biſhop of an head Citie in Arabie. Nicephorus writeth, that he was Biſhop of Oſtia, a port towne neare to Rome. Certain it is, he was a great writer, and left many workes in the Church, which Euſebius and Hierome do recite: by the ſupputation of Euſebius, he was about the yeare of our Lord, 230.

Prudentius Periſtepha.

Prudentius in his Periſtephanon, making mentiō of great heapes of Martyrs buried by lx. together, ſpeaketh alſo of Hippolytus, and ſayth that he was drawn with wild horſes through fields, dales and buſhes, and deſcribeth thereof a pitifull ſtory.

After the Emperour Gordianus, the Empire fell to Philippus, who with Philip his ſonne, gouerned the ſpace of vj. yeares, an. 246. This Philippus with his ſonne and all his familie, was chriſtened & conuerted by Fabianus & Origene, who by letters exhorted him and Seuera his wife to be baptiſed, being the firſt of all the Emperours that brought in Chriſtianity into the emperiall ſeat. Howſoeuer Pomponius Letus reporteth of him to be a diſſembling prince, this is certayne, that for his Chriſtianitye, he with his ſonne was ſlayne of Decius one of his Captaynes. Sabellicus Bergomenſis Lib 8. ſheweth this hatred of Decius agaynſt Philippus to be conceaued, for that the Emperour Philip both the Father and the ſonne had committed their treaſures vnto Fabianus then Biſhop of Rome.

Euſeb.Lib.6.

The miraculous election of Fabianus.

Fabianus Martyr.

This Fabian firſt being a maryed man, as Platina writeth, was made Biſhop of Rome after Anterius aboue mẽtioned by the miraculous appointment of God, which Euſebius doth thus deſcribe in this ſixt booke: when the brethren (ſayth he) were together in the Congregation, about the electiõ of their Biſhop, and had purpoſed among themſelues vpon the nominatiõ of ſome noble and worthy perſonage of Rome, it chaũced that Fabianus amõg other was there preſẽt, who of late before was newly come out of the countrey to inhabite in the Citie. This Fabian, as is ſayd, thinking nothyng leſſe then of any ſuch matter ſodenly cõmeth a Doue fleing from aboue, and ſitteth vpon his head. Whereupon all yͤ Congregation beyng moued, wyth one minde and one voyce, dyd choſe hym for their Biſhop. In the which function he remayned the ſpace of xiij. yeares, as Euſebius writeth. Damaſus, Marianus, and Sabellicus ſay. xiiij. yeares vnto yͤ tyme of Decius. Who, whether for that Philippus had committed to him his treaſures, or whether for the hatred he bare to Philippus, in the beginning of his raigne cauſed him to be put to death. Sendyng out moreouer his Proclamation into al quarters that al which profeſſed the name of Chriſt, ſhould be ſlayne.

The ordinaunces of Fabianus pretenſed. Oyle and creame. Accuſing of Byſhops. Appealing to the ſea Apoſtolicall. Marrying not within the fift degree.

False doctrine detected.

To this Fabian be aſcribed certaine ordinaunces, as of conſecrating new oyle once euery yeare, and burnyng the olde, of accuſations againſt Byſhops, of appealing to the ſea Apoſtolicke, of not marying within the fift degree, of communicating thriſe a yeare, of offering euery Sonday, with ſuch other things moe in his. iij. Epiſtles decretall, the which Epiſtles, as by diuers other euidences may be ſuppoſed to be vntruely named vpon hym, gyuing no ſignification of any matter agreeing to that tyme: ſo do I finde the moſt part of the iij. Epiſtle, worde for wordſtanding in the Epiſtle of Sixtus yͤ 3. which folowed almoſt 200. yeares after him, beſide the vnſeemely doctrine alſo in the ende of the ſayd Epiſtles contayned, where he contrary to the tenour of the Goſpell, applyeth remiſſion of ſinnes (onely due to the bloud of Chriſt) vnto the offerings of bread and wyne by men and women euery Sonday in the Church.

Origene.

Ex Euſeb.lib.6. Cap.39. The perſecutions of Origene.

Ex Suida & Nicepho.Lib.5.Cap.32.

The fall of Origene.

Origene excommunicated.

The repe taunce of Origene.

To this Fabianus wrote Origine De orthodoxia ſuæ fidei, that is, of the rightnes o fhis fayth. Whereby is to be vnderſtode, that he continued to the tyme of Decius, ſome ſay alſo to the tyme of Gallus. Of this Origene partly mention is touched before, declaring how bolde and feruente he was in the dayes of Seuerus, in aſſiſting, comforting, exhorting and kiſſing the Martyrs that were impriſoned & ſuffered for the name of Chriſt, with ſuch daunger of his owne life, that had not bene the ſingular protectiõ of God, he had bene ſtoned to death many tymes of the Heathen multitude. Such great concourſe of men and women was daily to his houſe to be catechiſed & inſtructed in the chriſtian fayth by him, that ſouldiours were hyred of purpoſe to defend the place where he taught them. Agayn, ſuch ſearch ſometymes was ſet for him, that vnneth any ſhiftyng of place or countrey could couer him. In thoſe laborious trauailes and aſſayes of the Church, in teaching, writing, confuting, exhorting, and expounding, he continued about the ſpace of 52. yeares, vnto the tyme of Decius and Gallus. Diuers and great perſecutions he ſuſtayned, but ſpecially vnder Decius, as teſtifieth Euſebius in his ſixt booke, declaring, that for the doctrine of Chriſt he ſuſtained bands and torments in his body, rackings with barres of iron, dungeons, beſides terrible threates of death and burning. All this he ſuffred in the perſecution of Decius, as Euſebius recordeth of him, and maketh no relatiõ of any further matter. But Suidas and Nicephorus following the ſame, ſayth further concerning him, that the ſayd Origene, after diuers and ſundry other torments, which he manfully and conſtantly ſuffred for Chriſt, at length was brought to an altar where a foule filthy Ethiope was appointed to be, and there this option or choyſe was offred vnto him, whether he would ſacrifice to the idole, or to haue his body polluted with that foule and ouglie Ethiope. Then Origene (ſayth he) who with a Philoſophicall mynd, euer kept his chaſtitie vndefiled, much abhorring yͤ filthy villany to be done to his body, condeſcended to their requeſt. Wherupon, the iudge puttyng incenſe in his hand, cauſed him to ſet it to the fire vpõ the altar. For the which impietie, he afterward was excommunicated of the Church. Epiphanius writeth that he beyng vrged to ſacrifice to Idols, and takyng the boughes in his hand, wherwith the Heathen were wont to honour their Gods, called vpon the Chriſtians to cary them in the honour of Chriſt. The which fact the church of Alexandria miſliking, remoued him from their communion. Wherupon Origene driuen away with ſhame and ſorow out of Alexandria, went into Iewry, where beyng in Hieruſalem among the congregation, and there requeſted of the Prieſtes and Miniſters (he being alſo a Prieſt) to make ſome exhortation in the church, refuſed a great while ſo to do. At length by importunate petition being cõſtrained therunto, roſe vp, and turning the booke, as though he would haue expounded ſome place of the Scripture, only read the verſe of the 49. Pſalme: but God ſayd to the ſinner, why doeſt thou preach my iuſtifications, & why doeſt thou take my teſtament in thy mouth, &c. Which verſe beyng read, he ſhut the booke, and ſate downe weepyng and wayling, the whole congregation alſo weeping & lamentyng with him, Suid. Niceph. More what became of Origene it is not found in hiſtory, but onely that Suidas addeth, he dyed and was buried at Tyrus. Euſebius affirmeth, that he departed vnder the Emperour Gallus, about the yeare of our Lord 255. and the 70. yeare of his age, in great miſerie (as appeareth) and pouertie.

Blemiſhes noted in Origene.

Origene commended for his learning.

Ex. Socrat. Lib.6.cap. 13.

In this Origene diuers blemiſhes of doctrine be noted wherupon Hierome ſome tymes doth inueigh againſt him. Albeit in ſome places agayne he doth extoll and commend him for his excellent learning, as in his Apologie agaynſt Ruff. and in his Epiſtle to Pammachus and Ocean, where he prayſeth Origene, although not for the perfection of his faith and doctrine, nor for an apoſtle, yet for an excellent interpreter, for his wit, and for a Philoſopher. And yet in his Prologue vpõ the Homelies of Origene vpon Ezechiel, he calleth him an other maiſter of the churches, after the Apoſtles. And in an other Preface vpon his queſtions vpon Geneſis, he wiſheth to himſelf the knowledge of the ſcriptures, which Origene had, alſo with the enuy of his name. Athanaſius moreouer calleth him ſingular, and laborious, and vſeth alſo his teſtimonies againſt the Arrians. Socrates, Lib. 6. cap. 13.

Heraclas Byſhop of Alexandria.

Euſeb.Lib. 6.cap.29.

After Origene, the congrue order of hiſtory requireth. next to ſpeak of Heraclas his Vſher, a man ſingularly comẽded for his knowledge, not only in Philoſophy, but alſo in all ſuch faculties as for a chriſtiã diuine doth appertain. This great towardnes of wit and learning when Origene perceiued in him, he appointed him aboue all other, to bee his Vſher or vnderteacher, to helpe in his ſchoole or Vniuerſitie of Alexandria, in the raigne of Antoninus Caracalla, ſonne of Seuerus. And after in the x. yeare of Alexander, Origene departing vnto Ceſarea, he ſucceeded in his roome to gouerne the ſchoole in Alexandria. Further alſo, in the time of Gordianus, after the deceaſe of Demetrius, biſhop of Alexandria, this Heraclas ſucceeded to be Biſhop of the ſaid Citie. Euſebius. Lib. 6. cap. 29. In the which functiõ he miniſtred the terme of xvj. yeares, Euſebius, Lib. 6. cap. 35. Of this Heraclas writeth alſo Origene himſelfe, that he, although beyng Prieſt, yet ceaſed not to read ouer and peruſe yͤ bookes of the Gentils, to the intent he might the better out of their owne bookes confute their errour. &c.

Heraclas called Pope yet no Byſhop of Rome.

{ An. 250. }

Ex Nicepho. Lib 5.cap. 29.

After Heraclas ſucceeded Dionyſius Alexandrinus, in the biſhopricke of Alexandria, like as he ſucceded him in yͤ ſchole before. Which Dionyſius alſo writeth of the ſame Heraclas vnto Philemon a Prieſt of Rome, thus ſaying: Hunc ego canonem & typum a beato Heracla Papa noſtro accepi, &c. that is, This Canon and type I receaued of bleſſed Heraclas our Pope, &c. This Heraclas was no Martyr which dyed 3. yeares before Decius, about the yeare of our Lord, 250. After whom ſucceded next in the ſame ſeat of Alexandria, Dionyſius Alexandrinus, who alſo ſuffered much vnder the tiranny of Decius, as hereafter ſhalbe ſhewed (Chriſt willing) when we come to the tyme of Valerian.

Perſecutors.

Nicephorus in his fift booke, and other which write of this perſecutiõ vnder Decius, declare the horriblenes therof to be ſo great and ſo innumerable Martyrs to ſuffer in the ſame, that he ſayth it is as eaſie to number the ſandes of the ſea, as to recite the perticular names of them, whõ this perſecution did deuour. In the which perſecutiõ the chiefeſt doers and tormenters vnder the Emperour, appeare in the hiſtory of Vincentius to be theſe: Optimus the vnder Conſull, Secundianus, Verianus, and Marcellianus, &c. Although therfore it be hard here to inſerte all and ſingular perſons in order that dyed in this perſecution: yet ſuch as remayne moſt notable in ſtories I will briefly touche, by the grace of him for whoſe cauſe they ſuffred.

Alexander. Byſhop of Ieruſalem. Martyr.

In the former tractation of the fift perſecution, mentiõ was made before of Alexander biſhop of Hieruſalem, and of his troubles ſuffred vnder Seuerus, and how afterward by the miracle of God he was appointed biſhop of Hieruſalem, where he continued a very aged man, aboue the terme of 40. yeares gouernour of that Church, til the time of the firſt yeare of Decius. At what tyme he being brought from Hieruſalem to Ceſarea into the iudgement place, after a conſtant and euident confeſſion of his fayth made before the Iudge, was committed vnto priſon, and there finiſhed his lyfe, as teſtifieth Dionyſius Alexandrinus in the ſixt booke of Euſebius. After whome ſucceded in that ſeate Mezabanes the xxxvi. Biſhop of that Citie, after Iames the Apoſtle.

Ex Euſeb. Lib.6.cap. 41.

Mention was made alſo before of Aſclepiades Biſhop of Antioch, who ſucceeded after Serapion, and in the perſecution of Seuerus did likewiſe perſeuer a conſtant confeſſor, and as Vincentius teſtifieth in his xi. booke ſuffered Martyrdome at laſt vnder this Decius. But this computation of Vincentius can in no wiſe agree with the truth of tyme, for as much as by probable writers, as Zonaras, Nicephorus and other, the ſayd Aſclepiades after Serapion, entred the biſhops ſeate of Antioch, an. 214. and ſate vij. yeares before the tyme of Gordianus. After whom ſucceeded Philetus, an. 221. gouerning the function xij. yeares. And after him Zebinus followed, an. 232. and ſo after him Babylas, which Babylas if he dyed in this perſecution of Decius, then could not Aſclepiades alſo ſuffer in the ſame tyme, who dyed ſo long before him, as is declared.

Aſclepiades Byſhop of Antioche Martyr. Ex ſpecu. Vincent. Lib.11.ca. 52.

A place of Vincentius reproued.

Of this Babylas biſhop of Antioche, Euſebus and Zonaras record, that vnder Decius he dyed in priſon, as did Alexander biſhop of Hieruſalem aboue rehearſed.

We read in a certaine treatiſe of Chryſoſtome, intituled Contra Gentiles, a notable and a long hiſtory of one Babylas a martyr, who about theſe times was put to death for reſiſtyng a certaine Emperour, not ſuffring him to enter into the temple of the Chriſtians, after a cruell murder cōmitted, the ſtory of which murder is this: There was a certaine Emperour, who vpon concluſiō of peace made with a certain nation, had receiued for hoſtage or ſuretie of peace the ſonne of the king beyng of yong and tender age, with conditions vpon the ſame, that neither he ſhould be moleſted of them, nor that they ſhould euer be vexed of him. Vpon this the kings ſonne was deliuered not without great care and feare of the father vnto the Emperour, whom the cruell Emperor, contrary to promiſe, cauſed in ſhort tyme, without all iuſt cauſe to be ſlayne. This fact ſo horrible beyng committed, the tyrant with all haſt would enter into the temple of the chriſtians: where Babylas beyng biſhop or miniſter withſtode him that he ſhould not into yͤ place approch. The Emperour therewith not a litle incenſed, in great rage commaunded him forthwith to be laid in priſon with as many irons as he could beare, & from thẽce ſhortly after to be brought forth to death and execution. Babylas going conſtantly and boldly to his Martyrdome, deſired after his death to be buried with his irons and bands, & ſo he was. The ſtory proceedeth moreouer, and ſaith, that in continuaunce of tyme in the raigne of Conſtantinus, Gallus then made the ouerſear of the Eaſt partes, cauſed his body to be tranſlated into the ſuburbes of Antioch called Daphnes, where was a temple of Apollo, famous with diueliſh Oracles & anſwers, geuen by that Idole, or by the deuill rather in that place. In the which temple after yͤ bringing of the body of Babylas, the idole ceaſed to geue any more Oracles, ſaying, that for the body of Babylas, he could geue no moe anſwers, but complaining that that place was wont to bee conſecrated vnto him, but now it was full of dead mens bodies. And thus the Oracles there ceaſed for that tyme, till the comming of Iulianus: who inquiring out the cauſe why the Oracles ceaſed, cauſed the bones of the holy Martyr to be remoued agayne from thence by the chriſtians, whom he then called Galileans. They commyng in a great multitude both men, maydens, and children, to the tombe of Babylas, tranſported his bones according to the commaundement of the emperour, ſinging by the way as they went, the verſe of the Pſalme in wordes as followeth: Confounded be all that worſhip Images and all that glory in Idoles, &c. which comming to the Emperours eares, ſet him in great rage againſt the Chriſtians, ſtirring vp perſecution againſt them. Albeit Zonaras declareth the cauſe ſomething otherwiſe: ſaying, that ſo ſone as the body of him and other Martyrs were remoued away, incontinent the temple of the Idole with the Image, in the night was conſumed with fire. For the which cauſe (ſayth Zonaras) Iulian ſtirred vp with anger, perſecuted the Chriſtians, as ſhall be ſhewed (Chriſt willyng) in his order and place hereafter.

The body of Babylas ſtoppeth the oracles of Idols.

Ex Zonara Tom,3.

And thus much of Babylas, which whether it was the ſame Babylas Biſhop then of Antioche, or an other of the ſame name, it appeareth not by Chryſoſtome: which neither maketh mention of the Emperours name, nor of the place where this Babylas was biſhop. Agayne the ſtopping out of the Emperour out of the Church importeth as much as that Emperour to haue bene a Chriſtian. For otherwiſe if he had come in as an Heathen and as a perſecutor, it was not then the maner of chriſtian biſhops violently to withſtand the Emperours or to ſtop them out. Ouer & beſide the teſtimony of Euſebius, Zonaras doth witneſſe contrary in his vj. booke, that this Babylas which was then Biſhop of Antioch after Zebinus, was not put to death by the tormentors, but died in priſon. Wherfore it is not vnpoſſible, but this Babylas, and this Emperour which Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh off may be an other Babylas, then that which ſuffered vnder Decius. Nicephorus in his v. booke maketh mention of an other Babylas beſide this that ſuffered vnder Decius, which was biſhop of Nicomedia.

Euſebius moreouer in his ſixt booke, reciteth out of the Epiſtles of Dionyſius Alexandrinus, diuers that ſuffred diuerſly at Alexandria, the which places of Dionyſius, as they be cited in Euſebius, I thought here good for the auncientnes of the author, to inſert and notifie in his own wordes, and in our language, as he wrote them to Fabius biſhop of Antioch, as followeth.

Ex Euſeb.lib.6. cap.40.41.42.

This perſecution (ſaith he) began not with the proclamation ſet forth by the Emperor, but began a whole yeare before, by the occaſion and meanes of a wicked perſon, a Southſayer, and a follower of wicked Artes: who comming to our Citie here, ſtirred vp the multitude of yͤ Heathen agaynſt vs, and incited them to maintaine their own olde ſuperſtition and gentilitie of their countrey, whereby they beyng ſet a gog, and obtayning full power to proſecute their wicked purpoſe ſo thought & no leſſe declared, all their pietie & religiō to conſiſt only in the idolatrous worſhip of deuils, and in our deſtruction. And firſt flying vpon a certaine prieſt of ours named Metra, apprehended him & brought him forth, to make him ſpeake after theyr wicked blaſphemy, which when he would not do, they layd vpon him with ſtaues and clubs, and with ſharp reedes pricked his face and eyes, and afterward bringing him out into the ſuburbes, there they ſtoned him to death. Then they tooke a faithfull woman called Quinta, and brought her to the temple of their Idols, to compell her to worſhip with them, which whē ſhe refuſed to do, and abhorred their Idols, they bound her feete, and drew her through yͤ whole ſtreete of the citie, vpon the hard ſtones, & ſo daſhyng her againſt milſtones, & ſcourging her with whippes brought her to the ſame place of the ſuburbes, as they did the other before, where ſhe likewiſe ended her lyfe. This done, in a great outrage, & with a multitude running together, they bruſt into houſes of the religious & godly chriſtians, ſpoiling, ſacking, and carying away all that they could finde of any price. The reſt of things, ſuch as were of leſſe value & of wood, they brought into the open market, & ſet them on fire. In the meane time the brethren voyded aſide, & withdrew themſelues, taking patiently and no leſſe ioyfully the ſpoyling of their goods, then did they of whome S. Paule doth teſtifie. Neither do I know any of them all (one only excepted) apprehended of them, which reuoltyng from his profeſſion, denied the Lord yet to this preſent day.

Metra, Martyr.

Quinta a faithfull woeman and Martyr.

Patience and ioy in affliction.

The conſtancy of the Martyrs of Alexandria.

Among the reſt that were taken, there was a certayne virgin wel ſtriken in yeres, named Apollonia, whome they brought forth, & daſhing out all her teeth out of her iawes, made a great fire before the citie, threatning to caſt her into the ſame, vnleſſe ſhe would blaſpheme with them and deny Chriſt. Whereat ſhe ſtaying a litle with her ſelfe, as one that would take a pauſe, ſodenly leaped into the midſt of the fire, and there was burned.

Apollonia a bleſſed virgine and Martyr.

Serapion Martyr.

There was one alſo Serapion, whom they tooke in his owne houſe, and after they had aſſayled him with ſundrye kyndes of torments, and had broken almoſt all the ioyntes of his body, they caſt him downe from an vpper loft, & ſo did he complete his Martirdom. Thus was there no way neither priuie nor publike, nor corner nor alley left for vs, neither by day nor by night to eſcape, al the people making an outcry againſt vs, that vnleſſe we vttred wordes of blaſphemy, we ſhould be drawn to the fire & burned. And this outragious tumult endured a certaine ſpace, but at length as the Lord would, the miſerable wretches fell at diſſentiõ among themſelues, which turned the crueltie they exerciſed againſt vs, vpon their own heads. And ſo had we a litle breathyng tyme for a ſeaſon, while the fury of the Heathen people by this occaſion aſwaged.

The iuſt puniſhment of God turning the cruelty of aduerſaries vpõ them ſelues.

Shortly then after this, word was brought vnto vs of the ſtate of the Empire, which before was ſomthing fauorable to vs, to be altered and changed agaynſt vs, putting vs in great feare. And conſequently vpon the ſame folowed the Edict of the Emperor ſo terrible & cruell, that accordĩng to the forewarning of the lord, the elect if it had bene poſſible, might haue bene therby ſubuerted. Vpon that Edict ſuch feare came ouer vs al, that many there were eſpecially of the richer ſort, of whõ ſome for feare came rũning, ſome were led by the occaſion of time, ſome were drawne by their neighbours beyng cited by name, to thoſe vnpure and idolatrous ſacrifices. Other ſome came trembling & ſhaking, as men not which ſhould do ſacrifice, but which ſhould be ſacrificed themſelues, the multitude laughyng them to ſcorne. Some agayne came boldly to the aultars, declaring themſelues neuer to haue bene of that profeſſiõ, of whom it is ſaid, that hardly they ſhalbe ſaued. Of the reſidue, ſome followed one part, ſome an other, ſome ran away, ſome were taken. Of whome certaine continued to bands & torments conſtant. Other agayne after long impriſonment, before they ſhould come before the Iudge, renounced their faith. Some alſo after they ſuffred tormẽts, yet after reuolted. But other being as ſtrong as bleſſed, & valiant pillers of the Lord, fortified with conſtancie agreeing to their fayth, were made faithfull Martyrs of yͤ kingdome of God.

Iulianus Martyr.

Of whom the firſt was Iulianus, a man diſeaſed with the gout, and not able to go, being caried of two men, of whõ the one quickly denied, the other Cronion ſurnamed Eunus, with the forſayd Iulianus, the old man, confeſſing the Lord with a perfect fayth, were layd vpon Camels, and there ſcourged, at length caſt into the fire, with great conſtancie were ſo conſumed.

A certayne ſouldiour Martyr.

As theſe aforeſaid were going to their Martyrdome, there was a certaine ſouldiour, who in their defence tooke part agaynſt them that rayled vpon them. For the which cauſe the people crying out agaynſt hym, he alſo was apprehended, and beyng conſtant in his profeſſiõ, was forthwith beheaded.

Macar a bleſſed Martyr.

Likewiſe one Macar, a man borne in Lybia, beyng admoniſhed and exhorted of the Iudge to deny his fayth, and not agreyng to his perſuaſions was burned alyue.

Epimachus. Alexander, with foure woemen Martyrs.

After theſe ſuffred Epimachus, and one Alexander, who beyng long deteined in priſon and in bandes, after innumerable paynes & torments with razers & ſcourges, were alſo caſt into the burning fire with foure other women with them, which all there ended their Martyrdome.

Ammonarion Virgine martyr.

Alſo Ammonarion an holy virgine, whõ the cruel iudge had long and bitterly tormented, for that ſhe promiſing the Iudge before, that for no puniſhment ſhe would yelde to his requeſt, and conſtantly performyng the ſame, ſuffred likewiſe Martyrdome, with two other women, of whom there was an aged Matrone, named Mercuria, the other was called Dionyſia, beyng a mother of many fayre childrẽ, whom yet notwithſtanding ſhe loued not aboue the Lord. These after they could not be ouercome by no tormẽts of yͤ cruell iudge, but he rather aſhamed and confounded to be ouercome of ſely women, at length they beyng paſt feeling of all torments, were ſlayne with the ſword, firſt Ammonarion like a valiant Captaine ſuffryng before them.

Mercuria, Dyonyſia, Martyrs.

Heron, Ater, Iſidorus, Dioſcorus, Martyrs.

Heron, Ater, and Iſidorus Egyptians, and with them Dioſcorus alſo a child of xv. yeres, were crowned with yͤ ſame crowne of Martyrdom. And firſt the iudge began with the child, thinking him more eaſie to be wonne, with wordes to entiſe him, then with torments to conſtrain him, but he perſiſted immouable, geuing neither place to perſuaſions nor puniſhments. The reſt after he had greuouſly tormẽted being conſtant in their profeſſion, he committed to the fire. At Dioſcorus, the iudge greatly meruailing for his wiſe anſwers & graue conſtancie diſmiſſed him, ſparing (as he ſaid) his age to a longer reſpite: which Dioſcorus is yet alſo with vs at this preſent, wayting for a longer triall.

Nemeſion, Martyr. Theeues i the olde tyme amongſt th Romain burned.

Nemeſion beyng alſo an Egyptian, firſt was accuſed for a companion of theeues, but beyng purged thereof before the Centurion, was then accuſed of Chriſtianitie, and for that cauſe being in bands, was brought to the Preſident, who moſt vnrighteouſly tormenting and ſcourging hym double to al other theeues and felons, at length among the theeues burned him to death, making him a bleſſed martir.

Ammon, Zenon, Ptolomeu Ingenuu, Theophil Martyrs co fellours.

A notable example of Chriſtian courage in confeſſing Chriſt.

There were ſtanding before the tribunall ſeate certaine of the warriors or Knightes, whoſe names were Ammon, Zenon, Ptolomeus, Ingenuus, and with them a certayne aged man called Theophilus, who ſtanding by, at what tyme a certaine chriſtian man was before the iudge examined, and there ſeyng him for feare redy to incline and fall away, did burſt almoſt for ſorow within themſelues, making ſignes to him with their hands, and all ieſtures of their body, to be conſtant. This beyng noted of all the ſtanders by, they were redy to lay hold vpon them, but they preuenting the matter, preaſed vp of their owne accord before to the bench of the iudge, profeſſing themſelues to be Chriſtians. In ſo much, that both the Preſident with the benchers were all aſtonied, the chriſtians which were iudged, more emboldned to ſuffer, and the Iudges therby terrified. This done, they departed away from the place, glad and reioycing for the teſtimony that they had geuen of their fayth. Many other beſides were in other cities and townes rent and torne aſunder by the Heathen, among whom, one I wil ſpeake off for cauſe worthy of memory.

Iſchyrion, Martyr.

Iſchirion one that was in ſeruice with a certaine noble man, was commaunded of his maiſter to make ſacrifice, who for not obeying, was therefore rebuked: After perſiſting in the ſame, was greuouſly threatned with ſharp and manacing wordes. At laſt his maiſter when he could not preuaile againſt him, taking a ſtake or pike in his handes, ran him through into the body and ſlue him.

What ſhould I ſpeake of the multitude of them which wandering in deſertes and mountaines, were conſumed with hunger, thirſt, cold, ſicknes, theeues, or wilde beaſts, of whoſe bleſſed victorie they which be aliue, are yet witneſſes. In the number of whom, one I will ſpeake off, among diuers other, named Cheremon Biſhop of the Citie called Nilus, an aged man, he with his wife flying to the mountain of Arabia, neuer returned again, nor euer could be ſeene after. And though they were ſought for diligently by their brethren, yet neither they nor their bodies were found. Many other there were which flying to theſe moũtains of Arabia, were taken of the barbarous Arabians: of whom ſome with much mony could ſcarſe be ranſomed, ſome were neuer heard off yet to this preſent day. Thus much out of the Epiſtle of Dionyſius alledged in Euſeb. Lib. 6 cap. 41 42. &c.

The Epiſtle of Dionyſius Alexād. to Germanus.

This Germanus was a Byſhop in that tyme, whiche charged Dionyſius for hys flyeng perſecution, agaynſt whõ he purgeth hymſelfe.

God willed Dionyſius to flee in perſecution.

Moreouer, the foreſaid Dionyſius in an other place writyng to Germanus, of his owne daungers and of other, ſuſtained in this perſecution, & before this perſecution of Decius, thus inferreth as followeth: I, ſayth he, behold before the ſight of God, I lye not: and he knoweth, I lie not, how that I hauing no regard of myne owne life, and not without the motion of God, did flye and auoyde the daunger of this perſecution. Yea and alſo before that this perſecution of Decius did rage againſt vs: Sabinus the ſeme houre ſent a Farmer to ſeeke me, at what tyme I remaining at home waited iij. dayes for his comming. But he ſearching narowly for me by all wayes, fields, floods, & corners, where he thought I might beſt haue hid my ſelf, or to haue paſſed by, was ſtroken with ſuch a blindneſſe, that he could not find myne houſe, thinking with himſelf nothing leſſe, then that I would abide at home in ſuch ſo dangerous perſecution. Thus theſe iij. days beyng paſt, vpon the fourth day, the Lord God ſo willing and commanding me to flie, and alſo maruelouſly opening to me the way, I with my* children and many other brethren went out together. And this not to come of my ſelfe, but to be the worke of Gods prouidence, the ſequel of thoſe things declared, wherein afterward I was not vnprofitable peraduenture to ſome, &c.

Ergo* Byſhops then had wiues and Children.

Againe in another place ſhortly after the foreſayd Dionyſius proceedyng in the narration of himſelfe, thus inferreth: Then I comming to Hieruſalem with them which were with me, was brought by ſouldiours vnto Tapoſixis, where as Timotheus (by the prouidence of God) neyther was preſent, nor yet takẽ. who then returning home foũd his houſe deſert, and officers watching about the ſame, & vs within taken, &c. And agayne ſhortly after it foloweth: And to ſee (ſayth he) the admirable diſpoſing of God his workes. As Timotheus was thus flying with much haſt & great feare, a certain man, as happened, a dweller neere by met him by the way, & aſked, whether he went ſo haſtely: to whome Timotheus aunſwering declared all the matter ſimply as it was, which done, the man proceedeth on hys iourney, whether he was purpoſed to go, which was to a mariage, the maner of which mariages then was to ſit vp all the night long feaſting and drinking. Thus as he was come, ſitting with them at the feaſt, he telleth his companions what was done, & what he heard by the way. This was no ſooner told, but all they forthwith vpon a head, as ſtroken with a ſodain fury ruſhing out together, made toward vs as faſt as they could, with ſuch crying & noyſe, as might ſeeme very terrible. At the firſt hearing wherof, the ſouldiours that had vs in keping, being afraid, ran away, by reaſon wherof we were left alone, & found as we were lying vpon fourmes & benches. I then, (the Lord knoweth) thinking with my ſelfe that they had bene thieues, which came to ſpoyle and rob, being in my couch, lay ſtill in my ſhirt onely as I was, the reſt of my garments lying by me, I offred to them. They then willed me in all haſt to riſe and get away, wherby I then perceauing the cauſe of their commyng, cryed vnto them deſiring that they would ſuffer vs ſo to do: And if they would do any benefit for me for ſo much as I could not eſcape the hands of thē which would purſue me and cary me away, I prayed them that they would preuent them, and cut off my head before. And as I was crying thus vnto them, caſting my ſelfe groueling vpon the pauement as my companions can teſtifie, who were pertakers of all theſe thinges, they bruſt forth violently, takyng me by the handes and feete, and caried me out of the dores, and led me away. There followed me Gaius, Fauſtus, Petrus, Paulus, (who were witneſſes of all the ſame) which brought me alſo out of the Citie, and ſo ſetting me vpon a bare Aſſe, conueyed me away. Thus much writeth Dionyſius of himſelfe, the example of whoſe Epiſtle is cited in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory of Euſebius, Lib. 6. cap. 40. alſo Lib. 7. cap. 11.

Nicephorus in his fift booke, cap. 27. maketh mention of one named Chriſtophorus, which alſo ſuffered in this perſecution of Decius. Of which Chriſtophorus, whether the fable riſeth of that mighty Giant ſet vp in Churches, wadyng through the Seas, with Chriſt on his ſhoulder, and a tree in his hand for a walking ſtaffe. &c. it is vncertayne. Georg. Wicelius alledgeth out of Ruggerus Fuldenſ. and mentioneth of one Chriſtophorus, borne of the nation of the Cananites, which ſuffered vnder Decius, beyng, as he ſayth of xii. cubites hye. But the reſt of the hiſtory paynted in Churches, the ſayd Wicelius he derideth as fables of Centaurus, or other Poeticall fictions.

Meniatus, Agatha. Martyrs. Ex Bergomenſ. Lib. 8. Ex Martyrologio Adonis.

Bergomenſis in hys viii. booke maketh relation of diuers martyred vnder Decius, as Meniatus which ſuffered at Florence, of Agatha an holy virgine of Sicile, who is ſayd to ſuffer diuers and bitter tormentes vnder Quintinianus the Proconſul, with priſonment, with beatinges, with famine, with racking, roled alſo vpon ſharpe ſhelles and hot coles, hauing moreouer her breſtes cut from her body, as Bergomenſis, and the Martyrologe of Ado recorde. In the whiche Authors as I denye not, but part of the ſtory may be true, ſo agayne concernyng the myracles of the aged man appearing to her, and of the yong man clothed in a ſilken veſture, with an hundreth yong mē after him, and of the marble table with the inſcription, Mentem ſanctam, &c. I doubt.

Martyrs wandring in mountaynes.

Hard it is to recite all that ſuffred in this perſecution, whē as whole multitudes went into wildernes & mountains, wandring without ſuccour or comfort, ſome ſtarued with hunger and cold, ſome with ſicknes conſumed, ſome deuoured of beaſtes, ſome with barbarous theeues taken and caried away. Vincentius in his xi. booke ſpeakyng of Aſclepiades, writeth alſo of xl. virgins and Martyrs, which by ſundry kindes of torments were put to death about the ſame tyme, in the perſecution of this tirant.

Fourty Virgines Martyrs. Tryphon Martyr.

Likewiſe in the ſaid Vincentius, mentiō is made of Tryphon, a man of great holines, and conſtant in his ſuffryng, who beyng brought to the Citie of Nice, before the Preſident Aquilus, for his conſtant confeſſion of Chriſtes name was afflicted with diuers and grieuous torments, and at length with the ſword put to death.

Maximianus. Malchus, Martinianus. Dyoniſius. Ioannes. Serapion. Conſtantinus. 7. Martyrs.

At what tyme Decius had erected a temple in the midſt of the Citie of Epheſus, compelling all that were in the Citie there, to ſacrifice to the Idoles, ſeuen Chriſtians were found, whoſe names were Maximianus, Malchus, Martianus, Dionyſius, Ioannes, Serapion, and Conſtantinus, who refuſing the Idolatrous worſhip, were accuſed for the ſame vnto the Emperour to be Chriſtians. which when they conſtantly profeſſed, and did not deny, notwithſtanding, becauſe they were ſouldiours, retayning to the Emperours ſeruice, reſpite was geuen them for a certaine ſpace to deliberate with themſelues, til the returne agayne of the Emperour, which then was goyng to warre. In the meane ſpace, the Emperour being departed, they taking counſail together, went and hidde themſelues in ſecret caues of the Mount Cælius. The Emperour returnyng agayne, after great inquiſitiō made for them, hearing where they were, cauſed the mouth of the place where they were, to be cloſed vp with heapes of ſtones, that they not able to get out, ſhould be famiſhed within. And thus were thoſe good men martired. The ſtory (if it be true) goeth further that they betwene feare and ſorow fell a ſleepe, in which ſleepe they continued the ſpace of certaine ages after, till the tyme of Theodoſius the Emperour, before they did awake, as reporteth Vincentius, Nicephorus, Lib. 5. ca. 27. and partly alſo Henr. Erfordienſ. But of their awakyng, that I referre to them that liſt beleue it. Certain it is, that at the laſt day they ſhall awake in dede without any fable.

The fable of the awaking of theſe ſeuen martyrs. Ex Vincent. Nicepho. Erfordienſ.

A ſouldiour martyr. Ex Hierony. in Vita Pauli Eremitæ. A notable example of a chaſt ſouldiour byting of hys toung, and ſpitting it in the face of an harlot.

Hieronymus in the lyfe of Paulus the Hermite, reciteth a ſtory of a certaine ſouldiour, whom the Pretor could not otherwiſe with torments remoue frō his Chriſtianitie, he deuiſed an other way, which was this: he commaunded the ſouldiour to be layd vpon a ſoft bed in a pleaſant garden among the flouriſhing Lillies and red Roſes, which done, all other beyng remoued away, & himſelf there left alone, a beautifull harlot came to him, who embracing him, & with al other intiſements of an harlot, laboured to prouoke him to her naughtines. But the godly ſouldiour fearyng God more, then obeying fleſh, bitte of his tong with hys owne teeth, and ſpit it in the face of the harlot, as ſhe was kiſſing him, and ſo gat he the victorie, by the conſtant grace of the Lord aſſiſting him.

A like example of chaſtitie betweene two Chriſtians. Ex Ambr. lib. 2. de Virgin.

An other like example of ſingular chaſtitie is written of the virgin Theodora, and an other ſouldiour, by Ambroſe Lib. 2. De virginibus. At Antioche, this Theodora refuſing to do ſacrifice to the Idols, was condemned by the Iudge to ẏ ſtewes, which notwithſtanding by the ſingular prouidence of god was wel deliuered. For as there was a great company of wanton yong men ready at the dore to preaſe into the houſe where ſhe was, one of the brethren, named Didimus (as Ado ſayth) moued with fayth and motiō of God, putting on a ſouldioures habite, made himſelfe one of the firſt that came in, who rounding her in the eare, tolde her the cauſe and purpoſe of his commyng, beyng a chriſtiā as ſhe was: his counſaile was that ſhe ſhould put on ẏ ſouldiors habite, and ſo ſlip away. And he puttyng on her garmentes would there remaine to abide their force. And ſo did, whereby the virgine eſcaped vnknowen. Didimus left vnto the rage and wondring of the people beyng a man in ſtead of a woman, was preſented vnto the Preſident, vnto whom without delay he vttered all the whole matter as it was done, profeſſing him ſo as he was, to be a chriſtiā, and therupon was condemned to ſuffer. Theodora vnderſtanding thereof, and thinking to excuſe him by accuſing her ſelfe, offred her ſelfe as the partie guiltie, vnto the Iudge, claymyng and requiring the condemnation to light vpon her, the other as innocent to be diſcharged. But the cruell Iudge (crueller then Dionyſius, which ſpared Damon & Pithias) neither conſidering the vertue of the perſons, nor the innocency of the cauſe, vniuſtly and inhumanely proceded in execution againſt thē both, who firſt hauing their heads cut off, after were caſt in the fire, Ambroſ. Ado. Although what tyme, or in what perſecution theſe did ſuffer, in the authors of this narration it doth not appeare.

Theodora, Didimus, Martyrs.

Agathon, Martyr.

Agathon a man of armes in the Citie of Alexandria, for rebuking certaine lewd perſons, ſcornefully deridyng the dead bodies of the Chriſtians, was cried out off and rayled on of the people. Afterward accuſed to the iudge, was condemned to looſe his head. Erfordienſis

Paulus, Andreas, Martyrs.

The ſayd Erfordienſis alſo maketh mention of Paulus, and Andræas, whome the Proconſul of Troada gaue to the people beyng ſcourged, and after drawne out of the Citie, they were troden to death with the feete of the people. Hen. de Erford.

Iuſtinus, Nicoſtratus, Portius Martyrs.

Among other that ſuffered vnder this wicked Decius, Bergomenſis alſo maketh mention of one Iuſtinus a Prieſt of Rome, and of an other Nicoſtratus a Deacon. To theſe Vincentius alſo addeth Portius a Prieſt of Rome, whom he reporteth to be the conuerter of Phillip the Emperor afore mentioned.

Abdon, Sēnas. Martyrs.

Of Abdon and Sennas we read alſo in the foreſayd Bergomenſis and Vincentius, two noble men, who becauſe they had buried the chriſtians, whom Decius had brought from Babylon to Corduba, and there put them to death, were therfore accuſed to Decius, & brought to Rome, where they beyng commaunded to ſacrifice to dead Idols, would not obey, and for the ſame were geuen to the wilde beaſtes to be deuoured: but when the wild beaſtes more gentle then the men would not touch them, they were at length with the ſword beheaded. Bergom. Vincent. Lib. 11. cap. 4. Albeit to me it ſeemeth not vnpoſſible nor vnlike, this Abdon and Sennas, to be the ſame, whome in other ſtoryes we finde, and before haue mentioned to be Ammon and Zenon.

Secundianus. Verianus. Marcellianus. Martyrs.

One Secundianus was accuſed to Valerian a Captayne of Decius, to be a Chriſtian, which profeſſiō when he ſtoutly did maynetayne, was commaunded to priſon. By the way as the ſouldiours were leading him to the gaile, Verianus and Marcellianus ſeing the matter, cried to the ſouldiours, aſking them whether they drew the innocent. At the which worde, when they alſo confeſſed them ſelues to be Chriſtians, they were likewiſe apprehended, and brought to a Citie named Centumcellas: where being willed to ſacrifice, they did ſpit vpon the Idols, and ſo after ſentence and iudgement geuen, firſt they were beaten with waſters or trunſhons, after that were hanged and tormented vpō the gibbet, hauing fire ſet to their ſides. Vincentius addeth moreouer that the tormentors ſome of them fallē ſodainly dead, other ſome being taken wͭ wicked ſpirites, the Martyrs wͭ ſword at length were beheaded. Vinc. Lib. 11. cap. 51.

Ex Vincent. lib.11.cap.51.

To proſecute in length of hiſtory, the liues and ſufferings of all them, which in this terrible perſecution, were Martyred, it were to long, & almoſt infinite: briefly therefore to rehearſe the names of ſuch as we finde alledged out of a certaine brief treatiſe of Bede intituled De temporibus, cited by Henricus De Erford, it ſhalbe at this tyme ſufficient. Vnder Decius ſuffered Hyppolitus and Concordia, Hiereneus and Abnudus, Victoria a virgine, being noble perſonages of Antioche. Bellias Byſhoppe of the Citie of Apollonia. Leacus, Tyrſus, and Gallinetus, Nazanzo, Tryphon in the Citie of Egypt called Tanais. Phileas Biſhop, Philocomus with many other in Perſide. Philcronius byſhop of Babylon, Theſiphon Byſhop of Pamphilia. Neſtor Byſhop in Corduba. Parmenius Prieſt with diuers moe. In the Prouince called Colonia, Circenſis, Marianus and Iacobus. In Africa, Nemeſianus, Felix, Rogatianus prieſt. Feliciſſimus. At Rome Iouinus, Baſileus, alſo Ruffina, and Secunda Virgines, Tertullianus, Valerianus, Nemeſius, Sempronianus, and Olympius. In Spayne Teragone, at Verona Zeno Byſhop. At Cæſarea, Marinus, and Archemius. In the towne of Miliane Priuatus Byſhop, Theodorus ſurnamed Gregorius Byſhop of Pontus. Hæc Beda.

A briefe Cataloge of diuers which ſuffered vnder Decius ex Beda.

Vincentius in his xi. booke, maketh alſo mention, citing Ex Hugone, of certaine children ſuffering Martyrdome vnder the ſame perſecution, in a Citie of Tuſcia called Aretium: whoſe names I finde not, except they be Pergentius & Laurentius mentioned in Equilinus, Lib. 5. cap. 80.

Children Martyrs. Ex Vincent lib. 11.cap.52.

Nowe that I haue recorded of them ſufficiently, which vnder this tempeſt of Decius, conſtantly gaue their liues to Martyrdome for the teſtimonie of Chriſt: it remaineth, that a fewe wordes alſo be ſpoken of ſuch that for feare or frailtie in this perſecution did ſhrinke backe, & ſlide from the truth of their confeſſion. In the number of whome firſt commeth in the remembrāce of Serapion an aged olde man. Of whom writeth Dionyſius Alexandrinus, vnto Fabius, declaring: that this Serapion was an olde man, which liued amongeſt them a ſincere and vpright life of long time, but at length fell. This Serapion oft and many times deſired to be receaued againe, but no man liſtened to him, for hee had ſacrificed before. After this not long after he fell into ſickeneſſe where he remained three dayes dombe, and benummed of all his ſēſes. The fourth day following, beginning a litle to recouer, he called to him his ſiſters ſonne, & ſaide: how long, how lōg (my ſonne) do ye hold me here? Make haſt I pray you, that I were abſolued. Call hether ſome of the miniſters to me, and ſo ſaying no more, held his peace, as dombe & ſpeachles. The boy ranne, it was then night, vnto the miniſter, who at the ſame time being ſicke, could not come with the meſſenger, but ſayde: for ſomuch as he willed herretofore (as he ſayde) that ſuch as lay a dying, if they couet to be receaued & reconciled, and eſpecially if they required it earneſtly, ſhould be admitted, wherby with the better hope & confidence they may depart hence: therefore he gaue to the boy a litle of the *Euchariſt, willing him to crumble it into the cup, & ſo to drop it into the mouth of the olde man. With this the boy returned, bringing wͭ him the holy Euchariſt. As he was now nere at hād, before he had entred in, Serapiō the old mā, ſpeaking againe, cōmeſt thou (ſayd he) my ſonne? The Prieſt, quoth the meſſenger, is ſicke & can not come, but do, as he willeth you, & let me go. And the boy immixed the Euchariſt, & dropt it in ſoftly into the mouth of the old mā. Who after he had taſted a litle, immediatly gaue vp the Ghoſt. &c. Hæc Dionyſ. ex Euſ.

The goodnes of God ſhewed to Serapion.

Ex Henr. de Erford.

In the Citie of Troade, as the Proconſul was grieuouſly tormenting one Nicomachus, he cried out, that he was no Chriſtian, and ſo was let downe againe. And when after he had ſacrificed, he was taken eftſoones with a wicked ſpirite, and ſo throwen downe vpon the ground, where he byting of his toung with his teeth, ſo departed. Henr. de Erfordia.

Dionyſius in his Epiſtles alſo writyng to Fabius, and lamentyng the great terrour of this perſecution declareth, how that many worthy and notable Chriſtians, for feare and horror of the great tiranny therof, did ſhew themſelues feeble and weake men. Of whome ſome for dread, ſome of their owne accord, other after great torments ſuffered, yet after reuolted from the conſtancy of their profeſſion. Alſo S. Cyprian in his treatiſe De lapſis, reciteth with great ſorrow, and teſtifieth, how that a great number at the firſt threatnyng of the aduerſary, neither beyng cōpelled nor throwen downe with any violence of the enemy, but of their volūtary weakenes fell downe themſelues. Neither (ſayth he) tarying while the iudge ſhould put incenſe in their hands, but before any ſtroke ſtroken in the fielde, turned their backes, & played the cowards, not only commyng to their ſacrifices, but preuētyng the ſame, and pretending to come without compulſion, bringing moreouer theyr infantes & children eyther put into their hands, or taking them with them of their owne accord, and exhortyng moreouer other to do the lyke after their example.

The weaknes of chriſtians denying their fayth.

Of this weakneſſe and falling, the ſaid author ſheweth two cauſes, either loue of their goodes and patrimonie, or feare of torments. And addeth moreouer examples of the puniſhmentes of them which ſo reuolted: affirmyng that many of them were taken and vexed with wicked ſprites. And of one man among other which after his voluntary deniall, ſodainly was ſtroken dombe. Agayn, an other after his abiuration as he ſhould communicate with other, in ſtead of bread receiued aſhes in his hād. The ſacrament called bread of S. Cyprian, De lapſis.

Among other of this ſort, S. Cyprian, Lib. 2 cap. 8. maketh alſo mention of one Euariſtus a Biſhop in Aphrica, who leauing his charge, and making a ſhipwracke of his faith, went wandering about in other countreys, forſakyng his owne flocke. In like maner he maketh alſo mention of Nicoſtratus a Deacon, who forſakyng his Deaconſhip, and takyng the goods of the Church with him, fled away into other countreys, &c. Albeit Bergomenſis geueth that this Nicoſtratus the Deacon afterward dyed a Martyr. Thus then although ſome did relent, yet a very great nūber ſaith he, there was, whom neither feare could remoue, nor pain could ouerthrow to cauſe them to betray their confeſſion, but that they ſtoode like glorious Martyrs vnto the ende, Cyprian.

The ſame Cyprianus alſo in an other booke De mortalitate, reciteth a notable ſtory of one of his owne Colleges and fellow Prieſt: who beyng oppreſſed with weakneſſe, and greatly afrayd with death drawyng at hand, deſired leaue to depart, and to be diſcharged. As he was thus entreating, and almoſt now dying, there appeared by him a yong man, of an honorable and of reuerend maieſtie, of a tall ſtature, and comely behauior, ſo bright & cleare to behold, that ſcarce mans carnall eyes was able to beare the beholding of him, but that he was able ſo to do, which was now redy to depart this world. To whom this yong man ſpeaking with a certaine indignation of mynd and voyce, thus ſaid: Pati timetis, exire non vultis, quid faciam vobis? To ſuffer ye dare not, to goe out ye will not, what would ye me to do vnto you?

A notable voyce of God to a Prieſt of Carthage.

Vpon the occaſion of theſe and ſuch other, which were a great number, that fell and did renounce, as is aforeſaid, in this perſecution of Decius, roſe vp firſt the quarell & hereſie of Nouatus, who in theſe dayes made a great diſturbance in the church, holding this opinion, that they which once renounced the faith, and for feare of torments had offred incenſe to the idols, although they repented therefore, yet could not afterward be reconciled, nor admitted to the Church of Chriſt. This Nouatus beyng firſt Prieſt vnder Cyprian at Carthage, afterward by ſtirring vp diſcord and factions, began to diſturbe the Biſhopricke of Cyprian, to appoint there a Deacon called Feliciſſimus, agaynſt the biſhops mynd or knowledge, alſo to allure and ſeparate certayne of the brethren from the Biſhop, all which Cyprian, Lib. 1. Epiſt. 8. doth well declare. After this the ſayd Nouatus goyng to Rome, kept there the like ſtirre with Cornelius (as the ſame Cornelius in Euſebius, Lib. 6. cap. 43. doth teſtifie) ſettyng himſelfe vp as Biſhop of Rome againſt Cornelius, which was the lawfull Biſhop of Rome before. The which to bring to paſſe, he vſed this practiſe: firſt he had allured to him to be his adherents, thre or foure of good men and holy confeſſours, which had ſuffered before great tormentes for their confeſſion, whoſe names were Maximus, Vrbanus, Sydonius, and Celerinus. After this he entiſed three ſimple biſhops about the coaſtes of Italy to repayre to Rome, vnder pretence to make an end of certain controuerſies then in hand. This done, he cauſed the ſame, whether by making them dronke, or by other craftye counſell, to lay theyr handes vpon him, and to make him Biſhop, & ſo did. wherefore the one of thoſe three Byſhops hardly was receiued to the communion, by the great interceſſion of his people: the other two by diſcipline of yͤ church, were diſplaced from their Byſhoprickes, & other poſſeſſed with their roomes. Thus then were there two Byſhops together in one church of Rome, Nouatus and Cornelius, which was vnſemely, & contrary to the diſcipline of the Church. And hereupon riſeth the true cauſe and meaning of S. Cyprian, writing in his Epiſtles ſo much of one Byſhop, and of the vnity to be kept in Eccleſiaſticall regimēt, as appeareth, Lib.4.Epiſt.2. De ſimplicit.prælat. item.Lib 3. Epiſt.11.&c. And in like ſort writeth alſo Cornelius himſelfe of one Byſhop, ſaying: Itaq; vindex ille Euangelij ignorauit vnum eſſe debere Epiſcopū in Catholica Eccleſia.&c. That is, He knew not that there ought to be one Byſhoppe in a Catholicke Church. &c. This by the way, not out of the way I truſt, I haue touched briefly, to detect or refute the cauiling wraſtling of the Papiſtes, which falſely apply theſe places of Cyprian and Cornelius to maintayne the Popes ſupreme maiſterſhippe alone, ouer the whole vniuerſall Church of Chriſt in all places. whē their meaning is otherwiſe, how that euery one Catholicke Church or dioces ought to haue one Byſhop ouer it, not that the whole world ought to be ſubiect to the dominion of him onely that is Byſhop of Rome. Now to the ſtory againe. Nouatus beyng thus Biſhop tooke not a little vpon him, goyng about by all meanes to defeat Cornelius, and to allure the people from him. Inſomuch that (as in the foreſayd book of Euſebius appeareth) whē Nouatus came to the diſtributing of the offrings, and ſhould geue euery man his part, he cōpelled the ſimple perſōs euery man to ſweare, before they ſhould receiue of the benediction, & of the collectes or oblations, holding both their handes in his, & holding them ſo long, ſpeaking theſe wordes vnto them, (Sweare to me by the body and bloud of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt, that thou wilt not leaue me and goe to Cornelius,) till that they ſwearing vnto him, in ſtead of Amē (to be ſayd at yͤ receauing of the* bread, ſhould aunſwere, I will not returne to Cornelius, &c. where note by the way, that the Latine booke of Chriſtoferſons tanſlation, in this place, craftely leaueth out the name of bread. This ſtory being written in Euſebius, alſo contained in Nicephorus, although not in the ſame order of wordes, yet in effect drawne out of him, doth declare in playne wordes in both the Authors (who ſo will marke the ſame) that the ſacrament of the bodye of Chriſt, is termed with the playne name of bread, after the conſecration.

The meaning of Cyprian opened, writing of one Biſhop onely to gouerne in a Catholicke church falſely wraſted of the Papiſtes for the Papacy.

It followeth more in the ſtory, that Maximus, Vrbanus, Sydonius, and Celerinus before mentioned, perceiuing at length the crafty diſſimulation and arrogancy, of Nouatus, left him, and with great repentance returned agayne to the Church, & were reconciled to Cornelius, as they thēſelues writing to Cyprian, and Cyprian likewiſe writing to them an Epiſtle gratulatory doth declare. Lib 3. Epiſt.3. & Cornelius alſo in his Epiſtle to Fabꝰ witneſſeth the ſame. In this Epiſtle the ſayd Cornelius moreouer writeth of one Moſes a worthy Martyr, which once being a follower alſo of Nouatus, after perceiuing his wickedneſſe forſooke him, and did excommunicate him. Of him Cyprian alſo maketh mention, & calleth him a bleſſed confeſſour. Lib.2 Epi.4. Damaſus in his pontificall ſayth, that he was apprehended with Maximus and Nicoſtratus aboue mentioned, & was put with them in priſon, where he ended his life. And thus much of Nouatus (agaynſt whom, as Euſebius teſtifieth) a Synode was holdē at Rome of lx. ſondry Byſhops in the tyme of Cornelius, and vnder the reigne of Decius an. 255. whereby it may be ſuppoſed that the heat of the perſecutiō at that tyme was ſomewhat calmed.

An. 255.

After Fabianus (or as Zonaras calleth him Flauianus) next ſucceeded into the biſhoprick of Rome Cornelius, whō Cyprian noteth to be a worthy Byſhop, and for his great vertue & maydenlye continency much commedable, choſen to that roome, not ſo much of his owne conſent, as of yͤ full greement both of the Clergy men, and alſo of the people. Hierome addeth alſo that he was a man of great eloquēce, wherby it may appeare thoſe two Epiſtles decretal, which go in his name not to be his, both for the rudenes of the barbarous and groſe ſtile, and alſo for the matter therin conteined, nothing taſting of that tyme, nor of that age nor doings then of the Church. wherof in the firſt he writeth to all miniſters & brethren of the Church, concerning the lifting vp of the bodyes & bones of Peter & Paule, De cathecumbis, and tranſpoſed to Vaticanum, at the inſtance of a certayne deuoute woman named Lucina, hauing no great argumēt or cauſe to write therof vnto the churches, but onely that he in that letter doth deſire thē to pray vnto the Lord, that through the interceſſion of thoſe Apoſtolicall Sayntes, their ſinnes might be forgeuen them. &c. In the ſecond Epiſtle writing to Ruffus a Byſhop of the Eaſt Church, he decreeth and ordaineth that no oth ought to be required or exacted of any head or chiefe Byſhop, for any cauſe, or by any power. Alſo that no cauſe of Prieſtes or Miniſters ought to be handled in any ſtraunge or forreine Court, without his precinct, except onely in the Court of Rome by appellation, wherby who ſeeth not the trayn of our latter Byſhops, going about craftely to aduaunce the dignity of the Court of Rome, vnder and by the pretenced title of Cornelius, and of ſuch auncient Byſhops. If Cornelius did write any Epiſtles to any in deede in thoſe ſo turbulent times of perſecution, no doubt but ſome ſignification thereof he would haue touched in the ſayd his letters, either in miniſtring conſolation to his brethrē, or in requiring conſolation and prayers of others. Neither is there any doubt, but he would haue geuē ſome touch alſo of the matter of Nouatus, with whom he had ſo much to do, as in deed he did: for ſo we finde it recorded both in Euſebius, and in Hierome that he wrote vnto Fabius Byſhop of Antioche, of the decreementes of the counſell of Rome, and an other letter of the maner of the Counſell: the third alſo of the cauſe of Nouatus, and agayne of the repentaunce of ſuch as fell, wherof there is no word touched at all in theſe foreſayd Epiſtles decretall.

Cornelius Byſhop of Rome, and Martyr.

Byſhops were choſen then not without the voice of the people.

A cenſure of the decretall Epiſtles of Cornelius.

What trouble this Cornelius had with Nouatus, ſufficiently is before ſignified. In this perſecution of Decius, he demeaned himſelfe very conſtantly and faythfully, whiche ſuſtayned great conflictes with the aduerſaries, as S. Cyprian geueth wineſſe, Lib.1.Epiſt.1. Hierome teſtifieth that he remayned Byſhop after the death of Decius, to the tyme of Gallus, and ſo appeareth alſo by S.Cyprian, which hath theſe wordes: Et tyrannum armis & bello poſtmodum victum, prior ſacerdotio ſuo vicit. But Damaſus and Sabellicus, his folowers, affirm that he was both exiled & alſo martired vnder the tyrannous reigne of Decius. Of whom Sabellicus writeth this ſtory, taken out (as it ſeemeth) of Damaſus, and ſayth: that Cornelius by the commaūdement of Decius, was baniſhed a towne called Centumcellas, bordering in Hetruria, from whence he ſent letters to Cyprian Byſhop of Carthage, and Cyprian agayne to him. This comming to the eares of Decius the Emperour, he ſendeth for Cornelius, aſking him: how he durſt be ſo bolde to ſhew ſuche ſtubbernes, that he neither caring for the Gods, nor fearing the diſpleaſure of his Princes, durſt, agaynſt the cōmon wealth, geue and receiue letters from other. To whom Cornelius anſwering agayne, thus purged himſelfe, declaring to the Emperour, that letters in deede he had written and receiued agayne concerning the prayſes & honoring of Chriſt, & of ſaluation of ſoules, but nothing as touching any matter of the common wealth. And it foloweth in the ſtorye: Then Decius moued with anger commaunded him to be beaten with plumbattes (which is ſayth Sabellicus a kinde of ſcourging) and ſo to be brought to the temple of Mars: either there to do ſacrifice, or to ſuffer the extremitye. But he rather willing to dye, then to committe ſuch iniquity, prepared himſelfe to Martyrdome, beyng ſure that he ſhould dye. And ſo commending the charge of the Churche vnto Stephanus his Archdeacon, was brought to the way of Appius, where he ended his life in faythfull Martyrdome. Euſebius in one place ſayth, that he ſat ij. yeares, in an other place ſayth, that he ſat three yeares, and ſo doth Marianus Scotus, following alſo the diuerſity of the ſayd Euſebius. Damaſus geueth him onely two yeares.

In this foreſayde perſecution of Decius, it ſeemeth by ſome writers alſo that Cyprian was baniſhed, but I ſuppoſe rather his baniſhment to be referred to the reigne of Gallus next Emperour after Decius, whereof more ſhall be ſayd, (Chriſt willing) in this place hereafter. In the mean time the ſayd Cyprian in his ſecond booke, Epiſt.5.&.6. maketh mention of two that ſuffered either in the time of this Decius, or much about the ſame time. Of whom one was Aurelius a worthy and valiant yong man, who was twiſe in tormentes for his confeſſion, which he neuer denied, but manfully and boldely withſtood the aduerſary, till he was baniſhed, and alſo after. And therefore was commended of Cyprian to certayne brethren, to haue him for their lectorer, as in the forenamed Epiſtle of Cyprian appeareth. The other was named Mappalicus, who the day before he ſuffered, declaring to the Proconſul, in the midſt of his tormentes, & ſaying: Videbis cras agonem: that is, to morrow you ſhall ſee the running for a wager. &c. was brought forth according as he foreſpake, to Martyrdome, and there with no leſſe conſtancie then patience did ſuffer.

The iuſt reuenge of God agaynſt perſecutours.

And thus much of the tyrannie of this wicked Decius agaynſt God his Saintes, now to touch alſo the power of God his vengeance and puniſhment agaynſt him, like as we ſee commonly a tempeſt that is vehement, not long to continue: ſo it happened with this tyrannicall tormenter, who raigning but two yeares as ſayth Euſebius, or three at moſt, as writeth Oroſius among the middle of the Barbarians with whom he did warre, was there ſlayne with his ſonne, like as he had ſlayn Philippus, and his ſonne his predeceſſours before, ſo was he with his ſonne ſlayne by the righteous iudgement of God himſelfe. Euſeb. Lib.7. cap.1. Platin. The iuſt puniſhment of God vpon the Heathen multitude, for perſecuting his people.

The plague and hand of God.

The brotherly loue and piety among the chriſtians, ſhewed in the time of plague.

Neither did the iuſt hand of God plague the Emperor onely, but alſo reuenged as well the heathen Gentils and perſecutors of hys word, throughout all prouinces & dominions of the Romain Monarchie, amongſt whom the lord immediatly after the death of Decius, ſent ſuch a plage and peſtilence, laſtyng for the ſpace of x. yeares together, that horrible it is to heare, and almoſt incredible to beleue. Of this plague or peſtilence, teſtifieth Dionyſius to Hierax a biſhop in Egypt, Euſeb.Lib.7.cap.21.22. Where he declareth the mortalitie of this plague to bee ſo great in Alexandria, where he was biſhop, that there was no houſe in ỹ whole Citie free. And although the greatnes of the plague touched alſo the Chriſtians ſomwhat, yet it ſcourged the heathen Idolaters much more: beſide that the order of their behauiour in the one, and in the other was much diuers. For, as the foreſayd Dionyſius doth recorde, the Chriſtians through brotherly loue and pietie, did not refuſe one to viſit and comfort an other, and to miniſter to him, what need required. Notwithſtanding it was to them great danger: for diuers there were, who in cloſing vp their eyes, in waſhyng their bodies, & interryng them in the ground, were next themſelues which folowed them to their graues. Yet all this ſtayed not them frõ doyng their duetie, and ſhewyng mercy one to another. Where as the Gentils contrarily, beyng extremely viſited by the hand of God, felt the plague, but conſidered not the ſtriker, neyther yet conſidered they their neighbour, but euery man ſhifting for himſelfe, neither cared one for an other: but ſuch as were infected, ſome they would caſt out of the dores halfe dead, to be deuoured of dogges and wilde beaſts, some they let dye within theyr houſes without all ſuccour, ſome they ſuffred to lye vnburied, for that no mā durſt come neare him. And yet notwithſtandyng, for all their voyding and ſhiftyng, the peſtilence followed them whetherſoeuer they went, & miſerably conſumed them. In ſo much, that Dionyſius biſhop ỹ ſame tyme of Alexandria, thus reporteth of his owne City: that ſuch a great mortalitie was then among them, that the ſayd City of Alexandria had not in number of all together, both old and yong, as it was wont to contayn before of the old men onely from the age of 60. to 70. ſuch as were found in tyme paſt commonly almoſt in that Citie. Pomponius Lætus, and other Latine writers alſo makyng mention of the ſayd peſtilitie, declare how the beginnyng therof firſt came (as they thinke) out of Ethiope, and from the hote countreys, and ſo inuading and waſtyng firſt the South partes, from thence ſpread into the Eaſt, & ſo further running and increaſing into all other quarters of the world, eſpecially, whereſoeuer the Edicts of the Emperor went agaynſt the Chriſtians, it followed after, and conſumed the moſt part of the inhabitauntes, whereby manye places became deſolate and voyde of all concourſe, and ſo continued the terme of x. yeares together.

A terrible peſtilence raygning through all the Romaine Monarchy.

This peſtiferous mortalitie (by the occaſion whereof Cyprian tooke the ground to write hys booke De mortalitate) began as is ſayd, immediately after the death of Decius the perſecutor, in the beginning of the raigne of Vibias Gallus, and Voluſianus hys ſonne: who ſucceeded through treaſon, next vnto Decius, about the yeare of our Lord. 255. and continued their raygne but two yeares.

Cyprianus Lib. de mortalitate. Gallus and Voluſianus Emperours.

{Anno. 255.}

This Gallus although the firſt beginning of the raygne was ſome thing quiet, yet ſhortly after following the ſteps of Decius, by whõ rather he ſhould haue taken better heed, ſet forth Edictes in like maner, for ỹ perſecution of Chriſtians, albeit in this Edict we finde no number of Martyrs to haue ſuffered, but only all this perſecution to reſt onely in the exilement of biſhops or guides of the flock. Of other ſufferings or executions we do not read: for the terrible peſtilence following immediatly, kept the barbarous heathẽ otherwiſe occupied. Unto this tyme of Gallus, rather then to the tyme of Decius, I referre the baniſhment of Cyprian, who was then biſhop of Carthage. Of the which baniſhment, he himſelfe teſtifieth in diuers of his epiſtles, declaryng the cauſe therof to riſe vpon a commotion or ſedition among the people, out of the which he withdrew himſelfe, leſt the ſedition ſhould grow greater. Notwithſtãding the ſayd Cyprian, though beyng abſent, yet had no leſſe care of his flocke and of the whole church, then if he had bene preſent with them. And therfore neuer ceaſed in his Epiſtles continually to exhort and call vpon them to be conſtant in their profeſſion, and pacient in theyr afflictions. Amongſt diuers other, whom he doth comfort in his baniſhmẽt, although he was in that caſe to be comforted himſelfe, writing to certayne that were condemned to minyng for metals, whoſe names were Nemeſianus, Felix, Lucius, with other biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, declareth vnto them, how it is no ſhame but a glory not to be feared, but to be reioyced at, to ſuffer baniſhment or other paynes for Chriſt. And confirming them in the ſame, or rather commending them, ſignifieth, how worthily they do ſhew themſelues to be as valiant captaines of vertue, prouoking both by the confeſsions of their mouth, and by the ſuffring of their body, the hartes of the brethren to Chriſtian Martyrdome, whoſe example was and is, a great confirmation to many, both maydes and children to follow the like. As for puniſhment and ſufferyng, it is (ſayth he) a thing not execrable to a Chriſtian. For a Chriſtian mans breſt, whoſe hope doth wholy conſiſt in the * tree, dreadeth neyther batte nor club, woundes and skarres of the body be ornaments to a Chriſtian man, ſuch as bring no ſhame nor diſhoneſtie to the partie, but rather preferreth and freeth him with the Lord. And although in the mines where the mettals be digged there be no beds for Chriſtian mens bodies to take their reſt, yet they haue their reſt in Chriſt. And though their wearie bones lye vpon the cold ground, yet it is no payne to lye with Chriſt. Their feete haue bene fettered with bandes and chaynes, but happily he is bound of man, whome the Lord Chriſt doth looſe: happily doth he lye tyed in the ſtockes, whoſe feete therby are made ſwifter to runne to heauen. Neither can any man tye a Chriſtian ſo faſt, but he runneth ſo much the faſter for his garland of life. They haue no garmentes to ſaue them from colde, but he that putteth on Chriſt, is ſufficiently coated. Doth bread lacke to their hungry bodies? But man liueth not onely by bread, but by euery worde proceedyng from the mouth of God. Your deformitie (ſayth he) ſhall be turned to honour, your mourning to ioy, your payne to pleaſure, and felicitie infinite. And if this doe grieue you, that ye cannot now employ your ſacrifices and oblations after your wonted maner: yet your ſacrifice daily ceaſeth not, which is a contrite and humble hart, as when you offer vp daily your bodies a liuely and a glorious ſacrifice vnto the Lorde, which is the ſacrifice that pleaſeth God. And though your trauaile be great, yet is the rewarde greater, which is moſt certaine to follow. For God beholding and looking downe vpon them that confeſſe his name, in their willyng mynd approoueth them, in their ſtriuyng helpeth them, in their victory crowneth them, rewarding that in vs, which he hath performed, and crowning that which he hath in vs perfected. With theſe and ſuch like comfortable wordes he doth animate his brethren, admoniſhing them, that they are now in a ioyfull iourney, haſting apace to the manſions of the Martyrs, there to enioy after this darknes a ſtable light, and brightnes greater then all their paſsions, according to the Apoſtles ſaying: Theſe ſufferings of this preſent tyme be nothing like comparable to the brightneſſe of the glory that ſhall be reuealed in vs, &c.

The põpous ſtile of the Church of Rome.

In the ſame time and vnder the ſaid Gallus reignyng with his ſonne Voluſianus was alſo Lucius biſhop of Rome ſent to banyſhment who next ſucceded after Cornelius, in that byſhopricke, about the yeare of our Lorde 256. Albeit in this baniſhment he did not long continue, but returned againe home to his Church: as by the Epiſtle of, S. Cyprian, Lib 3. Epiſt. 1. maye appeare. As to all other Biſhops of Rome in thoſe primitiue daies certaine decretall Epyſtles with ſeuerall ordinaunces be aſcribed, bearing theyr names and titles, as hath bene afore declared: ſo alſo hath Lucius one Epiſtle, fathered vpon him, in the which Epiſtle he writing to the brethren of Fraunce and of Spayne, appointeth ſuch an order and forme of the church, as ſeemeth not to agree with the time then preſent: For ſo hee declareth in that Epiſtle that a Byſhop in al places, whether ſoeuer he goeth, ſhould haue two Prieſtes with three deacons waiting vpõ him, to be witneſſes of al his waies and doings. which ordinaunce although I deny not, but it may be and is conuenient, yet I ſe not how that time of Lucius could ſerue then, for a Biſhop to cary ſuch a pompe of Prieſtes & Deacons about him, or to ſtudy for any ſuch matter: for ſo much as Biſhops commonly in thoſe daies were ſeldome free to go abroad, went they neuer ſo ſecrete: but either were in houſes cloſe and ſecret, or in priſon, or els in baniſhment. Moreouer in the ſaid Epiſtle how põpouſly he writeth to the Church of Rome: This holy and Apoſtolycall Church of Rome (ſayth he) the mother of all Churches of Chriſt, which by the grace of God omnipotent, hath neuer bene proued to ſwerue out of the pathe of Apoſtolicall tradition, neyther hath euer fallen, or bene depraued with heretical innouations: but euen as in the firſt beginning it receaued the rule of the Apoſtolicall faith by his firſt inſtructers, the Princes of the Apoſtles, ſo it continueth euer immaculate and vndefiled vnto the end.

Unto this Lucius alſo is referred in the decrees of Gratian this conſtitution, that no miniſter whatſoeuer, after his ordination, ſhould at any time reenter to the chamber of his owne wife, in paine of looſing his Miniſtery in the Church. &c. Euſebius in his vij. booke, making mention of the death of Lucius, and not of his Martyrdome, ſaith that he ſate but eight monethes. But Damaſus in his Martyrologe holdeth that hee ſat thre yeares, & was beheaded the ſecond yeare of Valerian and Galienus Emperours. And ſo doth alſo Marianus Scotus, and Nauclerus, with other that folow Damaſus, affirme the ſame.

No Byſhop ought to be accuſed, after he be expulſed, before he be reſtored agayne.

The number of the poore found at Rome by the Church goodes.

After him came Stephanus next Biſhop of Rome following Lucius: whome Damaſus, Platina, and Sabellicus, affirme to haue ſit vij. yeares fiue monethes, & to die a martir. Contrary Euſebius and Volateranus holding with hym, giue him but two yeares, which part commeth moſt neare to the truth, I leaue to the readers iudgement, of his two Epiſtles decretall, and of his ordinaunces out of the ſame collected, I nede not much to tary, for two reſpects, eyther for that concerning theſe decretal Epiſtles ſuſpiciouſly intituled to the names of the fathers of the primitiue church, ſufficiently hath bene ſaid before: or els becauſe both the phraſe barbarous and incongrue and alſo the matter it ſelf therin contained is ſuch, that although no teſtimony came againſt it, yet it eaſely refelleth it ſelfe. As wherein the ſecond Epiſtle he decreeth, that no Byſhop being expulſed out of hys ſeate or depriued of his goodes, ought to be accuſed of anye, or is bound to aunſwere for himſelfe, before that by the lawe regularly he be reſtored agayne fully to his former ſtate, and that the Primates and the Synode render to him agayne all ſuch poſſeſsions and fruites, as were taken frõ him before his accuſation, as is agreeing both to the lawes Canon & alſo ſeculare. Firſt here I would deſire yͤ Reader a little to ſtay, & this to conſider to himſelf, who be theſe here ment, which either vſed or might deſpoile theſe biſhops of their goods, & expulſe thẽ frõ their ſeates for ſuch wrõgfull cauſes, but only Kings & Emperours, which at this time were not yet Chriſtened nor vſed any ſuch proceedinges againſt theſe Biſhops, in ſuch ſort as either Primates or Synodes coulde reſtore them again to their places and poſſeſsiõs. Againe what priuate goodes or poſſeſsions had Byſhops then to be taken from them, when as Churches yet neither were indued wyth patrimonies nor poſſeſsions. And if any treaſures were cõmitted to the church, it pertained not properly to yͤ Byſhop, but went in general to the ſubuention of the poore in the Church, as in the Epiſtle of Cornelius to Fabius maye appeare, alleaged in Euſebius, Lib. 6. cap. 43. where he ſpeaking of his Church, & declaring how there ought to bee but one Byſhoppe in the ſame, inferreth mention of xlvi. Prieſtes, vij. Deacons, with vij. Subdeacons, xlij. Acolutes, of widowes and poore afflicted perſons to the number of a 1500, and aboue, founde and nouriſhed in the ſame Church, by the mercifull benignitie and prouidence of god Euſebius. Lib. 6. cap. 43. It followeth more in the ende of the ſaid Canon. which thing is forbidden both by the lawes Eccleſiaſtical, & alſo ſeculer, &c. Now what lawes ſeculer were in the time of Stephen, for biſhops not to be charged wt any accuſation before they were reſtored againe to their ſtate, let any Reader marking well the ſtate of the Heathen lawes that then were, iudge, and in iudgeing, I doubte not but this matter alone, though there were no other, will be ynough to deſcry the vntruth hereof.

Primates Metropolitanes, Archbiſhops.

Moreouer, by diuers other probable notes and arguments in the ſaide ſeconde Epiſtle of Stephanus, it maye be eaſely eſpied, this Epiſtle to be fained and miſauthorized, eſpeciall by the firſt Canon of the ſaide Epiſtle, where hee ſo ſolemnely entreateth of the difference betweene Primats, Metropolitanes, and Archbyſhops, which diſtinction of degres and titles, ſauoring more of ambition, then of perſecution, giueth me verily to ſuppoſe this Epiſtle not to be written by this Stephen, but by ſome other man, either of that name or of ſome other time when the Churche began to be ſetled in more proſperitie, and orders therein to bee taken, for euery man to know his degree and limits of his authoritie according as is ſpecified by the vi. and vij. Canon, of Nicene Councell decreeing of the ſame matter.

Lawfull to appeale to Rome.

Veſtiments and holy veſſels ſeruing for the aultare.

The like eſtimation may be conceiued alſo of the ſeuenth Canon of the ſaid Epiſtle, where he willeth and appointeth all cauſes iudiciarie to be decided & determined within the precinct of their owne proper Prouince, and not to paſſe ouer the boundes thereof, vnleſſe (ſaith he) the appeale be made to the Apoſtolical ſea of Rome: which ſauoreth in my noſe, rather of a ſmacke of Popery then of the veine of Chriſtianity, eſpecially in theſe times, during this terrible perſecution among yͤ Byſhops of Chriſt. And thus much of the ſecond decretall Epiſtle of Stephanus: although of the firſt Epiſtle alſo written to Hilarius, ſome thing may be ſaid, as where he ſpeaketh in the ſaid Epiſtle of holy veſtimentes, and holy veſſels, and other ornaments of the aulter, ſeruing to diuine worſhip, and therfore not to be touched nor handled of any mã, ſauing of Prieſts alone. Concerning all which implements, my opinion is this, that I thinke the Church of Rome not to haue beene in ſo good ſtate thẽ, that either Stephanus or Sixtus before him beyng occupied about other more earneſt maters, and ſcarce able to hide their owne heades, had any minde or cogitation to ſtudie vpon ſuch vnneceſſary inuentions, ſeruing in publike Churches. Neither doe I ſee howe the Heathen in thoſe daies would haue ſuffered theſe ornaments to be vnconſumed, which would not ſuffer the Biſhops themſelues to liue amongſt them. Notwithſtanding Iſidorus and Polydorus iudge the contrary. Betweene this Stephen and Cyprian Byſhop of Carthage was a great contention, about rebaptiſing of heretickes, whereof more hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be ſaide.

Byſhops baniſhed in the time of Gallus.

Beſides theſe Byſhops aboue ſpecified, diuers other there were alſo ſent into baniſhmẽt vnder the forenamed Emperours Gallus & Voluſianus, as appeareth by Dionyſius writing to Hermammon on this wiſe: that Gallus not ſeeyng the euill of Decius, nor foreſeeing the occaſion of his ſeductiõ and ruine, ſtumbled himſelfe alſo at the ſame ſtone, lying open before his eyes. For at yͤ firſt beginning when his Empire went proſperouſly forward, and all thinges went luckely with him, afterward he draue out holy men, which praied for his peace and ſafegarde, and ſo with them reiected alſo the praiers which they made for him. &c. Euſebius. Lib. 7 cap. 1. Otherwiſe of any bloudſhed or any Martirs that in the time of this Emperour were put to death, we doe not read.

Gallus and Voluſianus Emperours ſlayne.

Emelianus Emperour three monethes.

Valerianus and Gallienus hys ſonne Emperours.

After the raigne of which Emperour Gallus and of his ſonne Voluſianus being expired who reigned but ij. yeares, Emelianus which ſlewe them both by ciuill ſedition, ſucceded in their place, who reigned but three monethes, & was alſo ſlayne. Next to whom Valerianus, & his ſonne Gallienus were aduaunced to the Empire.

Perſecution ceaſed for a tyme.

The good beginning of Valerian.

About the chaunging of theſe Emperours, the perſecution which firſt began at Decius, & afterwarde ſlacked in the time of Gallus, was now extinguiſhed for a time, partly for the great plague raigning in all places, partly by yͤ change of the Emperors, although it was not very long. For Valerianus in the firſt entraunce of the Empire for the ſpace of iij. or foure yeres, was right courteous and gentle to the people of God, & well accepted to the Senate. Neither was there any of all the Emperors before him, no not of the which openly profeſſed Chriſt, that ſhewed himſelfe ſo louing and familiar toward the Chriſtians as he did: in ſo much that (as Dionyſius, writing to Herman doth teſtifie) all hys whole courte was repleniſhed wt holy Saintes & ſeruantes of Chriſt, and godly perſons, ſo that his houſe might ſeeme to be made a Church of God. But by the malice of Sathan, through wicked counſell theſe quiet dayes endured not very long. For in proceſſe of tyme this Valerianus beyng charmed or incenſed by a certayne Egiptian, a chiefe ruler of the Heathen Synagoge of the Egiptians, a mayſter of the Charmers or inchaunters, who in deede was troubled, for that he could not do his Magicall feates for the Chriſtians, was ſo farre infatuated and bewitched, that through the deteſtable prouocations of that deuiliſhe Egyptian, he was wholly turned vnto abhominable Idols, and to execrable impietie, in ſacrifiſing young infãts and quartering bodies, and deuiding the entrals of childrẽ new borne, and ſo proceeding in his fury, moued the eight perſecution, agaynſt the Chriſtians, whom the wicked Egyptian coulde not abide, as being the hinderers and deſtroyars of hys Magicall enchauntinges, about the yeare of our Lord, 259.

❧ The eight Perſecution.

The eight perſecution.

Anno. 259.

The chiefe executours of this perſecution.

IN the which perſecution the chiefe adminiſters and executours were Emilianus Preſident of Egipt, Paternus and Galerius Maximus, Proconſuls in Aphrica, Bergomenſis alſo maketh mention of Paternus. Vicegerent of Rome, and of Perennius. Vincentius ſpeaketh alſo of Nicerius, and Claudius Preſidentes. &c.

The ſpeciall cauſes of this perſecution.

Cypria. Lib 4. Epiſt. 4.

The ſinnes of the Chriſtians cauſe of perſecution.

What was the chiefe originall cauſe of this perſecution, partly is ſignified before, where mention was made of the wicked Egiptian. But as this was the outward and politicall cauſe, ſo S Cyprian ſheweth other cauſes more ſpeciall, and Eccleſiaſticall, in his iiii. booke. Epiſt.4. Whoſe wordes be theſe: but we (ſayth he) muſt vnderſtand and confeſſe, that thys turbulent oppreſſion & calamitie, which hath waſted for the moſt part all our whole company, and doth dayly conſume, riſeth chiefly of our owne wickednes & ſinnes: while we walke not in the way of the Lord, nor obſerue his preceptes left vnto vs for our inſtitution. The Lord obſerued the will of his father in all poynts: but we obſerue not the will of the Lord, hauing all our minde and ſtudy ſet vpon lucre & poſſeſſions, geuen to pryde, full of emulation and diſſention, voyde of ſimplicitie and faythfull dealing, renouncing thys world in word onely, but nothing in deede, euery man pleaſing himſelfe, and diſpleaſing all other. And therefore are we thus ſcourged, and worthely. For what ſtripes and ſcourges doe wee not deſerue, when the confeſſors themſelues (ſuch as haue byd the tryall of their confeſſion) and ſuch as ought to be an example to the reſt of well doyng, doe keepe no diſcipline? And therfore becauſe ſome ſuch there be, proudly puſt vp with this ſwelling and vnmannerly bragging of their confeſſion, theſe tormentes come: ſuch as doe not eaſely ſend vs to the crowne, except by the mercy of God, ſome being takẽ away by quicknes of death, do preuẽt the tediouſnes of puniſhimẽt. Theſe things do we ſuffer for our ſinnes and deſertes, as by the Lordes cenſure we haue bene forewarned, ſaying: If they ſhall forſake my lawe, and will not walke in my iudgementes: If they ſhall prophane my inſtitutions, and will not obſerue my preceptes, I will viſite their iniquities with the rod, and their tranſgreſsions with ſcourges. Theſe rods and ſcourges (ſayth he) we feele, which neyther pleaſe God in our good deedes, nor repent in our euill deedes. Wherefore the ſayd Cyprian, adding this exhortation withall, exhorted them to pray and intreate from the bottome of their hart and whole minde, the mercy of God which promiſeth, ſaying: but yet my mercy I will not ſcatter from them. &c. Let vs aske, and wee ſhall obtayne, and though (ſayth Cyprian) it be with tariance, yet for ſo much as we haue greeuouſly offended, let vs continue knocking, for to him that knocketh, it ſhalbe opened, if our prayers, ſighinges, aud weepinges knocke ſtill at the dore with continuance, and if our prayers be ioyned together with brotherly agreement &c.

Diſcord and deuiſion among the brethren.

Moreouer, what vices were then principally raygning among the Chriſtians, hee further ſpecifieth in the ſayd Epiſtle: which chiefly were deuiſion and diſſention among the brethren. For when it was ſpoken to them in a viſion, by theſe wordes Petite & impetrabitis, that is: Pray, and ye ſhall obtayne, afterward it was required of the congregation there preſent, to direct their prayers, for certayne perſons aſſigned to them by name: but they could not agree and cõdeſcend altogether of the names and perſons of them which they ſhould pray for, but were diſſonant in their conſent and petition: whiche thing (ſayth Cyprian) did greatly diſpleaſe hym, that ſpake vnto them: Pray, and ye ſhal obtayne, for that there was no vniforme equalitie of voyce and hart nor one ſimple and ioynt concorde among the brethren, whereof it is written the Pſalme.67. God which maketh to dwell in the houſe together men of one accord. &c. And ſo by the occaſion hereof, he writeth vnto them in the foreſayd Epiſtle, and moueth them to prayer and mutuall agreemẽt. For (ſayth he) if it be promiſed in the Goſpell, to be graunted whatſoeuer any two conſenting together ſhall aske, what ſhall then the whole Churche do agreeing together? or what if this vnanimitie were among the whole fraternitie, which vnanimitie (ſayeth Cyprian) if it had bene then among the brethren, non veniſſent fratribus hac mala, ſi in vnum fraternitas fuiſſet animata, that is: theſe euiles had not happened to the brethren, if the brethren had ioyned together in brotherly vnanimitie. &c.

Pſal.67.

A viſion foreſhewing perſecutiõ to come.

Cyprian. Lib.4. Epiſt.4.

After the cauſes thus declared of this, or other perſecutions, the ſayd, S. Cyprian moreouer in the forenamed Epiſtle (worthy to be read of al men) deſcribeth likewiſe a certayne viſion, wherin was ſhewed vnto them by the Lord, before the perſecutiõ came, what ſhould happen. The viſion was this: There was a certayne aged father ſitting, at whoſe right hand ſet a young man very ſad and penſiue: as one with an indignation ſorrowfull, holding hys hand vpon hys breſt, hys countenaunce heauy and vnchearefull. On the left hand ſate an other perſon, hauing in hys hand a net, whiche he threatned to lay to catch the people that ſtode about. And as he was marueiling that ſaw the ſight thereof, it was ſayd vnto him: The young man whõ thou ſeeſt ſit on the right hand, is ſad and ſory, that hys preceptes be not obſerued. But he on the left hand daunceth and is merry, for that occaſion is geuen him to haue power of the aged Father geuen him to afflict men. And this viſion was ſeene long before this tempeſt of perſecution happened, Wherein is declared the ſame that before is ſayd, the ſinnes of the people to be the cauſe, why Sathan in this perſecution and all other, hath had and hath ſtill ſuch power with hys net of deſtruction, to rage agaynſt the bloud of Chriſten men, and all becauſe (ſayth Cyprian) we forſlacke our praying, or be not ſo vigilant therein as wee ſhoulde: wherefore the Lord becauſe he loueth vs, correcteth vs, correcteth vs, to amend vs, amendeth vs to ſaue vs. &c. Cyprian.

Our ſinnes geue Sathã power agaynſt vs.

An other reuelation ſhewed to S. Cyprian.

Furthermore, the ſame Cyprian, and in the ſame Epiſtle, writing of his own reuelation or meſſage ſent to him, thus ſayth: And to hys leaſt ſeruaunt both ſinfull and vnworthy (meaning by himſelfe) God of his tender goodnes hath vouched ſafe to direct this word. Tell him ſayth he that hee be quiet and of good comfort, for peace will come. Albeit a litle ſtay there is for a while, for that ſome remain yet to be proued and tryed. &c. And ſheweth alſo in ye ſame place of an other reuelation of his, wherein he was admoniſhed to be ſpare in hys feeding, and ſober in hys drinke, leaſt hys minde geuen to heauenly meditation might be caryed away with worldly allurements, or oppreſſed with to much ſurfet of meates and drinkes, ſhould be leſſe apt or able to prayer and ſpirituall exerciſe.

Spare dyet and ſober drinke conuenient in Chriſtian biſhops.

The peace of the Church to come, foreſhewed by the Lord.

Finally in the latter end of the foreſayd Epiſtle, mention alſo followeth of other reuelations or ſhewinges, wherein the Lord (ſayth Cyprian) doth vouchſafe in many of hys ſeruantes to foreſhew to come the reſtauring of hys Church, the ſtable quiet of our health and ſafegard, after rayne fayre weather, after darcknes light, after ſtormy tempeſt, peaceable calme, the fatherly helpe of his loue, the wont & old glory of hys diuine maieſty whereby both the blaſphemy of the perſecutors ſhall be repreſſed, and the repentance of ſuch as haue fallen be reformed, and the ſtrong and ſtable confidence of them that ſtand, ſhall reioyce and glory. Thus much hath S. Cyprian, writing of theſe thinges to the Clergy. Lib.4. Epiſt.4.

Crimes and cauſes falſely layd to the Chriſtians.

The Apology of Cyprian for the Chriſtians.

Cyprian contra Demetrianum.

Cyprian de idolorum vanitate.

As touching now the crymes and accuſations in this perſecution layd to the charge of the Chriſtians, thys was the principall, firſt becauſe they refuſed to doe worſhip to their Idols and to the Emperours: then for that they profeſſed the name of Chriſt. Beſides all the calamities and euils that happened in the world, as warres, famine, and peſtilence, were onely imputed to the Chriſtians. Agaynſt all which quarreling accuſations Cyprian doth eloquently defend the Chriſtians in his booke Contra Demetrianum: Like as Tertulian had done before, writing Contra Scapulam page.55. And firſt touching the obiection for not worſhipping Idoles, he cleareth the Chriſtians both in his booke Contra Demetr. & alſo De vanitate idol. prouing thoſe Idols to be no true Gods, but Images of certayne dead kinges, which neyther could ſaue themſelues from death, nor ſuch as worſhip them. The true God to be but one, and that by the teſtimony of Soſthenes, Plato, and Triſmegiſtus, the which God the Chriſtians doe truely worſhip. And as concerning that the Chriſtians were thought to be cauſes of publique calamities, becauſe they worſhipped not the Gentiles Idoles, he purgeth the Chriſtians thereof, prouing that if there be any defect in increaſe of thinges, it is not to be aſcribed to them, but rather to the decreaſe of nature, languiſhing now toward her age and latter end. Agayne for that it hath bene ſo foreſayd and prophecied, that toward the end of the worlde ſhould come warres, famine, and peſtilence. Moreouer if there be anye cauſe therof more proper then other, it is moſt like to be imputed to their vaine Idolatry, and to the contempt of the true God. Alſo that ſuch euils be increaſed by the wickednes of the people, ſo that to ſpeake in his owne words famem maiorem facias rapacitas quam ſiccitas, i. famine cometh more by auarice of men, then by drought of the aire, but eſpecially the cauſe therof to procede of the cruell ſhedding of the innocent bloud of the Chriſtians &c.

The countrey and education of Cyprian.

The conuerſion of Cyprian.

Cyprian made firſt Prieſt, then Byſhop of Carthage.

Thus with many other mo probations doth Cyprian defend the Chriſtians, againſt the barbarous exclamatiõs of the heathẽ Gentiles. Of which Cyprian forſomuch as he ſuffered in the time of his perſecution, I mynde (Chriſt wylling) to recapitulate here in ample diſcourſe, the ful ſumme, firſt of his life and bringing vp, then of his death, & Martyrdome, as the worthines of that man deſerueth to be remembred. Of this Cyprian therfore, otherwiſe named Statius, thus writeth Nicephorus, Nazianzenus, Iacobus de Voragine, Henricus de Erfordia, Volateranus, Hieronymus, and other, that he being an Aphrican, and borne in Carthage, firſt was an Idolater and Gentill, altogether giuen to the ſtudy and practiſe of the Magicall Artes, of whoſe parentage and education in letters from his youth, no mention is made but ẏ he was a worthy Rethorician in Aphrica. Of whoſe conuerſion and baptiſme he himſelfe in his firſt booke & ſecond Epiſtle, writeth a floriſhing and eloquent Hyſtory. Which his conuerſion vnto the chriſtian fayth as Hieronimus affirmeth in his commentary vpon Ionas, was through the grace of God and the meanes of Cecilius a Prieſt, whoſe name after he bare, and through the occaſion of hearing the hiſtory of the Prophet Ionas. The ſame Hierome moreouer teſtifieth how he immediatly vpon his conuerſion, diſtributed among the poore al his ſubſtaunce and after that being ordained a Prieſt, was not long after conſtituted biſhop of the congregation of Carthage. But whether he ſucceded Agrippinus of whom he often maketh mention, which alſo was the firſt author of rebaptization, or ſome other biſhop of Carthage, it remaineth vncertain. But this is moſt true, he himſelfe ſhined in his office and dignitie with ſuch good giftes, and vertues, that as Nazianzenus writeth, he had the gouernment of the whole eaſt Church, and church of Spain, and was called the Biſhop of the Chriſtian men.

The vertues of Cyprians lyfe deſcribed.

The care of Cyprian toward the afflicted brethren.

And to the further ſetting forth (to the praiſe of God) of his godly vertues wherwith he was indued appearing as well in his owne workes, to them that liſt to peruſe the ſame, as alſo deſcribed by other worthy writers, he was curteous and gentle, louing and ful of patience, and therwithall ſharpe & ſeuere in his office, according as the cauſe required, as appeareth in his firſt booke and third epiſtle. Furthermore he was moſt louing and kinde towarde his brethren, and tooke much payne in helping and relieuyng the Martyrs, as appeareth by his letters to the Elders, and Deacons of his Biſhopricke, that with all ſtudy and indeuour they ſhould gently entertaine and ſhewe pleaſure vnto the Martirs in his abſence, as partly is touched before.

The modeſty of Cyprian in conferring with hys fellow brethren.

Viſions cõcerning the troubles and peace of the church, recited and expounded by Cyprian before pag. 67.

The third Epiſtle of his firſt booke doth declare of what ſtomacke and godly courage he was, in executyng his office, and handling his matters. Neither was he void of prudence & circumſpection, but was adorned with maruelous modeſtie, wherby he attempted nothing vpon his owne head and iudgement, but with the conſent of his fellow byſhops and other inferiour Miniſters, & that chiefly (amõg others) doth the 10. Epiſtle of his third booke witnes. He was of a maruellous liberal diſpoſition towards the poore brethren of other countries: for ſo often as he had cauſe of abſence he committed the care of thoſe poore men to his fellow officers, and wrote vnto them, that of their own proper goods, they would helpe their baniſhed brethren, to that which was neceſſary for them, as witneſſeth the 24. Epiſtle of his thirde booke. He reciteth among other gifts wherewith he was indued, as touching the viſions and heauenly admonitions of the perſecutions that ſhould follow, and of other matters touching the gouernment of ẏ Church in his firſt booke & third Epiſtle, and fourth booke and fourth Epiſtle, where he reciteth and expoundeth the forme or maner of a certaine viſion, which we haue before ſufficiently expreſſed.

Cyprian meeke and pacient.

Cyprian a great reader of Tertullian.

He had moreouer great ſkill in the foreknowledge of things that ſhould chaunce, as may be gathered in the vj. Epiſtle of his fourth booke. Alſo Auguſtine doth attribute vnto him many worthy vertues, which wryteth much in ſetting forth his giftes of humilitie, in his ſeconde booke of Baptiſme, the fourth chapter, againſt the Donatiſtes, and in his vij. booke and xj. chap. of his long ſufferaunce and patience. Alſo of his curteſie and meekenes by which vertues he concealed nothing that he vnderſtoode, but vttered the ſame meekely and patiently. Alſo that he kept the Eccleſiaſticall peace & concorde with thoſe that were of an other opinion then he was of: laſtly, that he neither circumuented nor did preiudice any man, but followed ẏ thing which ſeemed good in his iudgement, it is manifeſt in S. Auguſtine his fift booke, De Baptiſmo contra Donatiſtas. Neyther is this to be paſſed with ſilence, that Hierome writeth that he was very diligent in reading, eſpecially the works of Tertullian, For he ſaieth that he ſaw a certaine olde man whoſe name was Paulus, which tolde him he ſaw the notarye of bleſſed Cyprian, being then an olde man when he him ſelfe was but a ſpringal in the Citie of Rome, and told him that it was Cyprians wont neuer to let one daye paſſe wythout ſome reading of Tertullian, and that he was accuſtomed oftentimes to ſay vnto him: giue me my maſter, meanyng thereby Tertullian.

The ſecond baniſhment of Cyprian.

The apprehenſion of Cyprian.

The martirdome of Cyprian.

{ Anno. 259. }

Now a few wordes touching his exile, and Martyrdome. Of his Epiſtles which he wrote backe to his congregation, leading his life in exile, mention is made aboue wherin he ſheweth the vertue beſeeming a faithfull paſtor in that he tooke no leſſe care, as wel of his owne church, as of other Biſhops being abſent, then he did beyng preſente. Wherin alſo he himſelfe doth ſignifie ẏ voluntarily he abſented himſelfe, leaſt he ſhould doe more hurt then good to the congregation, by reaſon of his preſence, as is likewyſe declared before. Thus from the deſolate places of his baniſhment, wherein he was oftentimes ſought for, he writeth vnto his brethren, as in his third booke and x. Epiſtle is manifeſt, which thing ſemeth to be done in the raigne of Decius or Gallus. But after that he returned againe out of exile, in the raigne of this Valerianus, he was alſo after that the ſecond tyme baniſhed of Paternus the Proconſull of Aphrica, into the Citie of Thurbin, as the oration of Auguſtine touching Cyprian ſheweth, or els as Pontius the Deacon ſaith, into a Citie named Furubilitana, or Curabilitana. But when Paternus the Proconſull was dead, Galienus Maximus ſucceded in the rowme and office of Paternus, who fynding Cyprian in a garden, cauſed him to be apprehended by his Sergeauntes, and to be brought before the Idoles, to offer ſacrifice, which when he woulde not doe, then the Proconſul breaking forth in theſe words ſayd: Long haſt thou liued in a ſacrilegious mind, and haſt gathered togither men of wicked conſpiracie, and haſt ſhewed thy ſelfe an enimie to the Gods of the Romanes, and to their holye lawes: neither could the ſacrete Emperours Valerianus & Galienus reuoke thee to the ſecte of their ceremonies. At length the wicked tyraunt condemnyng him to haue hys head cut of, he patiently and willingly ſubmitted his necke to the ſtroke of the ſword (as Hieronimus affirmeth.) And ſo this bleſſed Martyr ended this preſent life in the Lorde, Xiſtus then being Byſhop of Rome, as Euſebius noteth, in the yeare of our Lorde. 259. Sabellicus ſaith that he was Martired in the raigne of Gallus and Voluſianus, Lucius, being biſhop of Rome, but that ſeemeth not like.

The books of Cyprian.

The iudgement of Auſten vpon the bookes of Cyprian.

Auguſt. contra Creſconium. Lib. 12. cap. 32.

Now remayneth to ſpeake ſomething likewiſe of hys workes and bookes left behind him, although al peraduẽture doe not remaine, that he wrote: wherof ſome are miſſing, ſome againe which in the liuery of his name & title, are not his, but ſuch as be certainly his by the ſtyle & ſenſe may ſoone be diſcerned: ſuch is the eloquence of his phraſe, & grauity of his ſentence, vigour of wit, power in perſwaſion, ſo much differing from many other, as he can lightlye be imitated but of fewe. Of the which his bookes with vs extant, as the floriſhing eloquence is worthely cõmended, proceeding out of the ſchoole of Rhetoricians, ſo is the authoritie therof no leſſe reputation, not onely among vs of this age of the Church, but alſo among the Auncient fathers. Whereof S. Auſten ſpeaking of his commendation ſayth, Ego inquit, literas Cypriani non vt canonicas habeo, ſed eas ex canoniſis conſidero: & quod in eis deuinarum Scripturarum autoritati congruit cum laude eius accipio: quod autem non congruit, cum pace eius reſpuo. &c. By which wordes it may appeare that Auſten, although he did not repute ẏ bookes and writings of Cyprian, to be equiualent with the holy Scripture, yet notwithſtanding next after the ſcriptures he had the ſame in great admiration.

The place of ſcripture expounded. Eleemaſina ab omni peccato & morte liberat. Tob. 4. Ex Cypri. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 2.

¶ Moreouer, leaſt the Papiſts here ſhould take an occaſion by this text, grounded vpon the text of Tobi, cap. 4. Almoſe (ſaith he) deliuereth from al ſinne and death: to build vp the workes of ſatiſfactiō, the ſaid Cyprian, Lib. 4. Epiſt, 2. more plainely expoundeth both himſelfe, and that place of Scripture, writing in theſe wordes: Quia ſcriptum eſt, Eleemoſina ab omni peccato, & morte liberat. Tob. 4 non vtique ab ea morte, quam ſemel Chriſti ſanguis extinxit, & a qua nos ſalutaris Baptiſmi & tedemptoris noſtri gratia liberauit, ſed ab illa quæ per delicta poſtmodum ſerpit. &c. That is: Almoſe doth deliuer from all ſinne and from death. Tob. 4. not from that (ſaith Cyprian) which the bloude of Chriſt hath once extincted, and from which the wholſome grace of our Baptiſme, and of our redeemer hath deliuered vs, but frō that death which afterward creepeth in by ſinne. &c. Cyprian. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 2. by which words it is apparant, that Cyprian meaneth this deliueraunce (which commeth by almoſe gyuing) from death and ſinne, not to be expounded nor to be taken for death euerlaſting, from which only the bloude of Chriſt doth ſaue vs, but for temporall or tranſitory puniſhment, which is wont to be inflicted in this body of ſin. For ſo it is nothing repugnaunt, but that temporall vertues may haue their temporall rewards in this life, & likwiſe ſinnes committed may haue temporal puniſhments both of vs and in our families, our eternal ſaluation ſtanding euermore firme in Chriſt yet notwithſtanding.

The foreſaide Vincentius moreouer ſpeaking of an other booke of Cyprian (although the ſaid booke be not numbred in the Catalogue of his workes) maketh mention of xij. abuſes, or abſurdities in the life of man, which in order be theſe:

Twelue abuſes in the lyfe of man noted out of Cyprian.

1. Sapiens ſine operibus. A wiſe man without good workes.
2. Senex ſine religione. An old man without religion.
3. Adoleſcens ſine obedientia. A young man without obedience.
4. Diues ſine eleemoſina. A rich man without almoſe.
5. Fœmina ſine pudicitia. A woman ſhameles.
6. Dominus ſine virtute. A guide without vertue.
7. Chriſtianus contentioſus. A Chriſtian man contentious.
8. Pauper ſuperbus. A poore man proude.
9. Rex iniquus. A king vnrighteous.
10. Epiſcopus negligens. A byſhop negligent.
11. Plebs ſine diſciplina. People without diſcipline.
12. Populus ſine lege. Subiectes without law.

The learning of Cyprian, ioyned with hys blemiſhes.

The faulte of Papiſtes to make to much of euery thing.

As I haue hetherto ſet forth the commendation of Cyprian this bleſſed Martyr: ſo muſt we nowe take heede againe, ẏ we do not here incurre the old & common daunger, whiche the Papyſtes are commonlye accuſtomed to runne into, whoſe fault is alwayes almoſt to be immoderate and exceſſiue in their procedings, making to much almoſt of euery thing. So in ſpeaking of the holye Sacraments, they make more of them then doth ẏ nature of Sacraments require, not vſing them, but abuſing thē, not referring or applying them, but adoring them, not taking thē in their kind for thinges godly as they are, but taking thē for God himſelfe, turning religion into ſuperſtition, & ẏ creature to the creator, ẏ things ſignifying to the things them ſelues ſignified, &c. To the Church likewiſe and ceremonies of the church, to generall Councels, to the bleſſed virgin Mary mother of Chriſt, to the biſhop of Rome, and to all other in like caſe, not contented to attribute that which is ſufficient, they excede moreouer the bounds of iudgement and veritie, iudging ſo of the Church, & general cōſicels, as though they could neuer, or did neuer erre in any iote. That the bleſſed mother of Chriſt amongeſt al women was bleſſed, and a virgine ful of grace, the Scripture & truth doth giue, but to ſay that ſhe was borne without al original ſinne, or to make of her an aduocate, or mother of mercy, there they run further then truth wil beare. The ceremonies were firſt ordained to ſerue but onely for order ſake, vnto the which they haue attributed ſo much at length, that they haue ſet in them a great part of our Religion yea & alſo ſaluation. And what thing is there els almoſt, wherein the Papiſtes haue not exceeded?

How farre the authoritie of the doctors ought to extend.

Wherfore to auoyd this common error of the papiſts, we muſt beware in cōmending the Doctors & writers of the Church, & ſo commend them, that truth and conſideratiō, go with our cōmendation. For though this cannot be denied, but that holy Cyprian, and other bleſſed Martyrs were holy men, yet notwithſtanding they were men that is ſuch as might haue, & had their falles & faultes, men I ſay, & not aungels, nor gods, ſaued by God, not ſauiours of men, nor patrons of grace: and though they were alſo men of excellent learning, & worthy Doctors, yet wt theyr learning they had their errors alſo annexed. And though their bookes be (as they ought to be of great authority, yet ought they not to be equall with the Scriptures. And albeit the ſaide well in moſt things, yet it is not therefore inough that what they ſaid it muſt ſtande for a truth. That preeminence of authority onely belongeth to the worde of God, and not to the pen of man. For of men and Doctors, be they neuer ſo famous, there is none that is voyde of his reprehenſion. In Origene (although in his time the admiratiō of his learning was ſinguler) yet how many things be there, which the Church nowe holdeth not? but examining him by Scriptures, where he ſayd well, they admit him, where otherwiſe they leaue him. In Polycarpus the church hath corrected and altered that which he did holde in celebrating the Eaſter day after the Iewes. Neither cā holy and bleſſed Ignatius be defended in al his ſayings: as where he maketh the faſting vpon ẏ Sonday or the Sabboth day as great an offence, as to kil Chriſt him ſelfe, Ignat Epiſt. ad Phillip. contrary to this ſaying of Saint Paule. Let no man iudge you in meate & drinke. Alſo where the ſaid Ignatius ſpeaketh De virginitate, and of other thinges mo. Irenæus did hold that man was not made perfect in the beginning. He ſeemeth alſo to defend free will in man, in thoſe thinges alſo that be ſpirituall. He ſayeth that Chriſt ſuffered after he was fifty yeares old, abuſing this place of the Goſpell: Quinquaginta annos nondum habes. &c. Tertulianus (whom S. Cyprian neuer laide out of his handes almoſt) is noted to be a Chiliaſte: alſo to haue bene of Mōtanus ſect. The ſame did hold alſo wt Iuſtine, Cyprian, & other, that the Aungels fel firſt for the concupiſcence of women, Lib. de habitu mulierum. He defendeth fre wil of man after ẏ corruption of nature, inclining alſo to the errour of them, which defend the poſſibilitie of keeping God his law. Cōcerning Mariage. we know one God condemning the ſecond maryage. Lib, de Monogam. Diuers other things of like abſurditie in him be noted. Iuſtinus alſo ſeemeth to haue inclined vnto the errour of the Chiliaſtes, of the fall of certaine Aungels by wemen, of free will of man, of poſſibilitie of keeping the lawe and ſuch other. Neither was this our Cyprian, the great ſchooler of Tertulian, vtterly exempt from the blot of them, who contrary to the doctrine of the Church, did hold with rebaptiſing of ſuch, as were before Baptiſed of heretikes, whereof ſpeaketh S. Auſten, myſlyking the ſame errour of Cyprian, in theſe words contained in his 2. booke, Contra Creſconium. Cypriani, inquit, laudem ego conſequi non valeo eius multis literis mea ſcripta non comparo, eius ingenium diligo eius ore delector, eius charitatem miror, eius Martyrium veneror. Non accipio quod de baptiſandis hæreticis & ſchiſmaticis ſenſit, &c. Vppon the whiche matter there was a great contention betwene the ſayd Cyprian, and Stephen Biſhop of Rome, as partly afore is noted. Of Auſten himſelfe likewiſe, of Ambroſe, Hierome, Chriſoſtome, the ſame maye be ſaid, that none of them alſo clearely paſſed away, but their peculiar faultes and errours went with them, whereof it were to long, and out of our purpoſe at this preſent to entreate. And thus much concerning the ſtory of Cyprian the holy learned Martyr of Chriſt.

Cyprians diuers of that name.

Diſt. 10. Quoniam.

Gloſa Ibid. A blinde gloſe chalenging both the ſwordes to the Popes hand.

Albeit here is to be noted by the way, touching the life and ſtory of Cyprian that this Cyprian was not he, whome the narration of Nazianzen ſpeaketh of (as is aboue mentioned) who from Arte Magicke was conuerted to bee a Chriſtian, which Cyprian was a Citizen of Antioche, and afterward Biſhop of the ſame Citie, and was Martyred vnder Diocletian. Where as this Cyprian was Byſhop of Carthage, and died vnder Valerianus, as is ſayd, &c. By the decrees of Gratiã. Diſt. x. Quoniam. it appeareth moreouer that there was alſo a third Cyprian in the time of Iulianus the Emperour Apoſtata, long after both theſe aforenamed. For ſo giueth the title prefixed before the ſaide Diſtinct. Cyprianus Iuliano Imperatori: the diſtinction beginning. Quoniam idem mediator Dei & hominum homo Chriſtus Ieſus, ſic actibus proprijs, & dignitatibus diſtinctis officia poteſtatis vtriuſque diſcernit, &c. Vpon the which diſtinctiõ the gloſe commeth in with theſe words ſaying: ẏ the popedome, and the ſeate Imperial, haue both one beginning of one that is, Chriſt: who was both Biſhoppe, and king of Kings. And that the ſaid dignities be diſtincted, albeit the Pope notwithſtanding hath both the ſwords in his hand and may exerciſe them both ſome time. And therefore although they be diſtincted, yet in exerciſe the one ſtandeth lineally vnder the other, ſo that the imperiall dignitie is ſubiect vnder the Papall dignitie, as the inferiour is ſubiect vnder the ſuperiour: that as there is one ruler ouer the whole which is God: ſo in the Church is one Monarche, that is, the Pope, to whom the Lord hath committed the power and lawfull right both of the heauenly and terrene dominion. Hæc Gloſa.

A diſtinction of Gracian diſproued.

Thus much I thought here to note by the waye becauſe this diſtinction is fathered vpon Cyprian, which is falſe, for this Cyprian was not in the time of Iulian, not by 200. yeares, and ſo likewiſe by the other Cyprian, which died Martyr vnder Diocletian. Of anye Cyprian beſides theſe two, we read not. Neither is it credible, that if there were any ſuch Cyprian, he would euer haue written of any ſuch matter, of the difference and mutuall nede of Chriſtiã Emperours and Chriſten Popes. When as that Emperour being an Apoſtata, neither regarded Chriſt, nor cared for any Pope.

Xiſtus the ſecond Byſhop of Rome Martyr. Sixe Deacons with Xiſtus Martyrs.

About this tyme, and vnder the ſame Emperour Valerianus ſuffered alſo Xiſtus, or Sixtus, the ſeconde of that name, Byſhop of Rome, who being accuſed of his aduerſaries, to be a Chriſtiã, was brought with his vj. deacons to the place of execution, where he with Nemeſius & other hys Deacons were beheaded and ſuffered Martyrdome. Laurence in the ſame time being alſo Deacon folowed after complayning to Xiſtus, as one being greued, that he might not alſo ſuffer with him, but to be ſecluded as the ſonne frõ the father. To whom the Biſhop aunſwering againe, declared that within thre daies he ſhould folow after. In the meane time, hee willed him to go home, and to diſtribute his treaſures, if he had any vnto ẏ poore. The iudge belike hearing mentiõ to be made of treaſures to be giuen to the poore, and thinking that Laurence had great ſtore of treaſure in his cuſtody, cõmaunded him to bring the ſame vnto him, according as the diſcourſe of his ſtorye here vnder written, more fully may appeare. Which hiſtory, becauſe it is ſet forth more at large in Prudentius, Ambroſe, and other writers, and containeth in it mo things in it worthy to be noted of the Reader, we haue therfore with the more diligence here inſerted the more ample deſcription of ẏ ſame, to the further admiration of his patience, and God his glory ſhewed in him.

The ſtory and Martyrdome of Laurente Ex Ambroſ. lib. 1 offic. cap. 41. Ex Prudentio. Lib. Periſteph.

The wordes of Laurence to Xiſtus.

Now then as order requireth, let vs enter the ſtory of that moſt conſtaunt and couragious Martir of Chriſt S. Laurence, whoſe words and works deſerue to be as freſhe and greene in Chriſtian harts, as is the floriſhing Laurel tree, This thirſty hart longing after the water of lyfe, deſirous to paſſe vnto it, through the ſtraight dore of bitter death, when on a time he ſaw his vigilaunt Shephearde, Xiſtus led as an harmles lambe, of harmefull tyrauntes to his death, cried out with open mouth and hart inuincible, ſaying, O deare father, whether goeſt thou, without the company of thy deare ſonne? Whether haſteneſt thou, O reuerend Prieſt, without thy Deacon? Neuer waſt thou wont to offer ſacrifice without thy miniſter. What cryme is there in me that offendeth thy fatherhod? Haſt thou proued me vnnaturall? Now try ſwete father, whether thou haſt choſen a faithfull miniſter or not. Denieſt thou vnto him the fellowſhip of thy bloud, to whom thou haſt committed the deſtribution of the Lordes bloud? See that thy iudgement be not miſliked, whileſt thy fortitude is liked & lauded. The abaſing of the ſcholer, is the diſgracing of the Maiſter. What? haue we not learned that worthy Maiſters, haue obtained moſt worthy fame, by ẏ worthy actes of their Diſciples and Scholers? Finally Abraham ſacryficed his onely begotten Iſaac. Stoned Stephen prepared the way to preaching Peter, euen ſo father declare thy manifold vertues by me thy ſonne. Offer thou him that proferreth him ſelfe. Graunt that the body of thy ſcholer may be ſacrificed, whoſe mind with good letters thou haſt beautified. Theſe wordes with teares S. Laurence vttered, not becauſe his maſter ſhould ſuffer, but for that he might not be ſuffered to taſt of deaths cup, which he thirſted after.

The anſwere of Xiſtus to Laurence.

Then Xiſtus to his ſonne ſhaped this aunſwere: I forſake thee not, O my ſonne, I giue thee to wit, that a ſharper conflict remaineth for thee. A feeble and weak old man am I, and therefore run the raſe of a lighter & eaſier death. But luſty and young thou art, and more luſtely, yea more gloriouſly ſhalt thou triumph ouer this tyraunt. Thy time approcheth, ceaſe to wepe & lament, three daies after thou ſhalt follow me. Decent is it, that this ſpace of time come betwene the Prieſt & the Leuite. It may not beſeeme thee O ſweete Pupill, to triumphe vnder thy maſter, leaſt it be ſaid he wanted an helper. Why craueſt thou to be pertaker with me in my paſſion? I bequeath vnto thee the whole inheritaunce. Why requireſt thou to enioy my preſence? let weake ſcholers go before, and the ſtrõger come after, that thoſe without maiſter may get the victory, which haue no neede by maiſter to be gouerned. So Helias left behynde him his beloued Heliſeus. I yeelde vp into thy handes the ſucceſſion of my vertues. Such was their contention, not vnmeete for ſo godly a prieſt, ſo zelous a miniſter, ſtriuing with themſelues, who ſhoulde firſt ſuffer for the name of Chriſt Ieſu.

In tragical hiſtories we haue it mentioned, ẏ through ioy & admiration people claped their handes, whẽ Pylades named himſelfe Oreſtes, Oreſtes, as truth it was, affirmed himſelfe to bee Oreſtes. Pylades wiſhing to die for Oreſtes, Oreſtes, not ſuffering Pylades to loſe his life for his ſake: But neither of them might eſcape death, for both theſe louers were gilty of bloud the one committing the facte the other conſenting. But this our Laurence the Martyr moſt conſtant, was by no meanes enforced to make this profer, ſauing onely by his ardent zeale, and feruent ſpirite, who thirſting after the cup of Maytirdome, had it ſhortly after filled to the hard brymme.

Some ſay that this tyraunt was Decius the Emperour, but that cannot be, except Galienus or ſome other iudge now was called by the name of Decius.

Now let vs draw neare to the fire of Martyred Laurence, that our colde hartes may be warmed thereby. The mercyleſſe tyraunt, vnderſtanding this vertuous Leuite, not onely to be a miniſter of the Sacramentes, but a diſtributer alſo of the Church riches (whereof mention is made before in the wordes of Xiſtus) promiſed to himſelfe a double pray, by the appreſion of one ſilly ſoule. Firſt with the rake of Auarice to ſcrape to himſelfe the treaſure of poore Chriſtians, then with the fiery forke of tyranny ſo to toſſe and turmoyle them, that they ſhould waxe weary of their Chriſtian profeſſion: With furious face, and cruell countenaunce, the greedy wolfe demaunded where this Deacon Laurence had beſtowed the ſubſtaunce of the Church. Who crauing three dayes reſpite, promiſed to declare where the treaſure might be had. In the meane time he cauſed a good number of poore Chriſtians to be congregated. So when ẏ day of his aunſwere was come, the perſecutor ſtraightly charged him to ſtãd to hys promiſe. Then valiant Laurẽce ſtretching out his armes ouer the poore, ſayde: Theſe are the precious treaſure of the church: Theſe are the treaſure in deede, in whom the faith of Chriſt raigneth, in whome Ieſus Chriſt hath his manſion place, what more precious

The true treaſure of Chriſt hys Church.

Iuels can Chriſt haue, thē thoſe in whō he hath promiſed to dwel? For ſo it is written, I was hungry, & ye gaue me to eate: I was thirſty, and ye gaue me to drinke: I was harborles, and ye lodged me. And againe: Looke what ye haue done to the leaſt of theſe, the ſame haue ye done to me. What greater riches can chriſt our maiſter poſſes, then the poore people, in whō he loueth to be ſene? Oh, what toung is able to expreſſe the fury and madnes of the tirants hart? Now he ſtāped, he ſtared, he rāped, he fared as one out of his wit: his eies like fier glowed, his mouth like a bore fomed, his teeth like an helhoūd grinded. Now not a reaſonable man, but a roaryng lion he might be called. Kindle the fire (he cried) of wood make no ſpare. Hath this vyllaine deluded the Emperour? away with him, away with him. Whip him with ſcourges, ierke him with rods: buffet him with fiſtes, braine him with clubs, ieſteth the traitour with the Emperour? Pinche him with fyrie tonges, gyrde him with burning plates, bring out the ſtrongeſt chaines, and the fireforkes, and the grated bedde of yron. On the fire with it, bind the rebell hande and foote, & when the bed is fire hot, on with him: roſt him, broyle him, toſſe him, turne him: On paine of our highe diſpleaſure do euery man his office, O ye tormentors.

Laurence tormented on the fiery gridiron.

The worde was no ſoner ſpoken, but all was done. After many cruell handlings, this meeke lambe was layd I will not ſay on his fyrye bed of yron, but on his ſoft bed of downe. So mightily God wrought with his Martyr Laurence, ſo miraculouſly God tempered his element the fire, not a bed of conſuming paine, but a pallet of nouriſhing reſt was it vnto Laurence. Not Laurence, but the Emperour might ſeeme to be tormented: the one broyling in the fleſhe, the other burning in the hart. When this tryumphant Martir had beene preſſed downe with firepikes for a great ſpace, in the mightie ſpirite of God he ſpake to the vanquiſhed tyraunt:

This ſide is now roſted inough, turne vp O tyraunt great,
Aſſay, whether roſted or raw, thou thinkeſt the better meate.

The ſingular patience of Laurence in his paynes.

O rare and vnaccuſtomed patience. O faith inuincible, that not onely not burneſt, but by meanes vnſpeakable doeſt recreate, refreſh, ſtabliſh, & ſtrengthen thoſe that are burned, afflicted and troubled. And why ſo mightilye comforteſt thou the perſecuted? Becauſe through thee they beleeue in gods promiſes infallible. By thee this glorious Martir ouercommeth his torments, vanquiſheth this tyraunt, confoundeth his enimies, confirmeth the Chriſtiās, ſlepeth in peace, raigneth in glory. The God of might and mercy graunt vs grace, by the life of Laurence to learne in Chriſt to liue, and by his death to learne for Chriſt to dye. Amen.

The Martyrdome and end of bleſſed Laurence.

Such is the wiſdome and prouidence of God, that the bloud of his deare Saints (like good ſeede) neuer falleth in vaine to the grounde, but it bringeth ſome increaſe: ſo it pleaſed the Lord to worke at the Martirdome of this holy Laurence, that by the conſtant confeſſion of this worthy & valiaunt Deacon, a certaine ſouldiour of Rome beyng therwith compuncted, and conuerted to ÿ ſame faith, deſired forthwith to be Baptiſed of him: for the which he being called for of the iudge, was ſcourged, and afterwarde beheaded. Dionyſius Byſhop of Alexandria with hys fellowes baniſhed.

Maximus, Fauſtus, Cheremon, a certayne Romayne baniſhed.

Under the ſame Valerianus ſuffered alſo Dionyſius byſhop of Alexandria much affliction and baniſhment, with certaine other brethren, Of the which he writeth himſelfe, & is alledged in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory of Euſeb. Lib. 7. cap. 11. the wordes whereof tend to this effect: Dionyſius wyth three of his Deacons, to wit, Maximus, Fauſtus, and Cheremon, alſo with a certaine brother of Rome, came to Emilianus then Preſident, who there declared vnto them in circumſtance of words how he had ſignified vnto them ÿ clemencie of his Lords and Emperours: who had graunted them pardon of life, ſo that they would returne to them, & worſhip the Gods and keepers (as he called them) of their Emperie, aſking them what aunſwere they would gyue him thereunto: truſting as he ſaide that they woulde not ſhew themſelues ingrateful to the clemency of them which ſo gently did exhort them. To this Dionyſius aunſweryng, ſaid: Al men worſhip not al Gods, but diuers men diuers gods, ſo as euery one hath in himſelfe a mind or phantaſie to worſhip. But we worſhip not many nor diuers Gods, but onely that one God, who is the creator of all things, & hath committed to our Lords Valerianus and Galienus the gouernmēt of their Empery, making to him our prayers inceſſauntly for their proſperous health and continuance. Then the Preſident ſayde: And what hurt is it, but that you may both worſhip your God, what God ſoeuer he be, and theſe our Gods alſo? For you are cōmaunded worſhip ſuch Gods, as al men know to be gods. Dionyſius anſwered we worſhip none other, but as we haue ſayd. Emilianus the Preſident ſaid: I ſee you are ingratfull men, and conſider not ÿ benignitie of the Emperours, wherfore you ſhal remaine no longer in this City, but ſhal be ſent out to the parts of Libya, vnto a towne called Cephro. For that place by the commaundement of the Emperour I haue choſen for you. Neither ſhal it be lawful for you, to cōuent your aſſemblies, or to reſort, as ye are wont to your burial places. And if any of you ſhal be found out of your places whereunto you are apointed, at your peril be it. And think not contrary, but ye ſhal be watched well inough. Depart therfore to the place as is cōmaunded you. and it foloweth more in the ſaid Dionyſius ſpeaking of himſelfe: And as for me (ſayth he) although I was ſicke, yet hee vrged mee ſo ſtraightly to depart, that he would not giue me one dayes reſpite. And how (ſaith he writing to Germanus) coulde I congregate or not congregate any aſſemblies? And after a few lines it followeth. And yet neyther am I altogether abſent from the corporall ſocietie of the Lordes flocke, but I haue collected them togither, which were in the Citye, being abſent, as though I had bene preſent, abſent in body yet preſent in ſpirit. And in the ſame Cephro, a great congregation remayned with mee, as well of thoſe brethren which followed me out of the City, as alſo of them which were remayning there out of Egypt. And there the Lorde opened to me the doore of his word, although at the firſt entraunce I was perſecuted and ſtoned among them, yet afterward a great number of them fel from their Idoles and were cōuerted vnto the Lord. And ſo by vs the word was preached to them which before were infidels: which miniſtery after that we had accompliſhed there, the lord remoued vs to an other place. For Æmilianus tranſlated vs frō thence to more ſharpe and ſtraighter places of Libya, commaunding vs to meete altogether at a city Mareota, thinking there to ſeparate vs ſeuerallye into ſundrye villages, or thinking rather to take and preuent vs by the way. After we were come thether, it was aſſigned to me (ſaith Dionyſius) to go to Colluthion, which place I neuer hearde of before: which was the more griefe to me, yet ſome ſolace it was to me, that the brethren told me, it was neare to a Citie named Parætonium. For as my being at Cephrō got me the acquaintaunce of manye brethren of Egypt, ſo my hope was that the vicinitie of that place where I ſhoulde be, to the Citie, might procure the familiaritie and concourſe of certaine louing brethren, which would reſort and aſſemble with vs, and ſo it came to paſſe, &c.

Ex Dionyſio contra Germanū. Euſ. lib. 7.

Moreouer the ſaid Dionyſius in his Epiſtle ad Domitium & Dydymū, making mention of them whiche were afflicted in this perſecution of Valerian, recordeth in theſe wordes ſaying: it were ſuperflous (ſaith he) here to recite the names peculiarly of all our brethren ſlaine in this perſecution, which both were manye and to me vnknowne. But this is certaine that there were men, wemen, younge men, maydens, olde wiues, ſouldiers, ſimple innocentes, and of all ſortes and ages of men. Of whome ſome with ſcourginges and fire, ſome with ſworde obtained victorye, and got the crowne. Some continued a great time, and yet haue bene reſerued. In the whiche number am I reſerued hetherto to ſome other oportune tyme knowen vnto the Lord, which ſayth: In the time accepted I haue hearde thee, and in the daye of ſaluation I haue helped thee, &c. Nowe as concerning my ſelfe in what ſtate I am, if thou deſire to know firſt howe I and Caius, and Fauſtus Petrus, and Paulus, being apprehended by the Centurion, were taken away by certayne of the towne of Mareote, I haue declared to you before. Now I and Caius, and Petrus alone are left here included, in a weſt place of Libya, diſtant the ſpace of three daies iourney from Parætonium. &c. And in proceſſe farther he addeth: In the Citie (ſaith he) were certaine priuily which viſite the brethren: of Prieſtes Maximus, Dioſcorus, Demetrius, and Lucius. For they which were more notable in the world, Fauſtinus and Aquilla, do wander abroade in Egipt. Of the Deacons beſides them whō ſicknes hath conſumed, Fauſtus, Euſebius, & Cheremon, are yet alyue. Euſebius hath God raiſed and ſtirred vp to miniſter to the confeſſours lying in bandes, and to burye the bodies of the bleſſed Martirs, not without great perill. Neither doth the Preſident ceaſe yet to this day, cruellye murderyng ſuch as be brought afore him, ſome tearynge with torments, ſome impriſoning and keeping in cuſtody commaunding that no man ſhould come to them, inquyring alſo who reſorted vnto them. Yet notwithſtanding God with chearefulnes and dailye reſorte of the brethren doth comfort the afflicted. Hæc Dionyſius.

The end & death of Dionyſius.

As touching Dionyſius him ſelfe, thus the ſtories report, that he ſuruiuing all theſe troubles and perſecutiõs, by the prouidence of God, continued after the death of Valerian, vnto the xij. yeare of the raigne of Galienus, whiche was about the yeare of our Lord. 268. and ſo departed in peace in great age, after that he had gouerned the Church of Alexandria the ſpace of xvij. yeares, & before that, had taught the ſchole of the ſayd Citie of Alexandria, the terme of xvj. yeares. After whom ſucceeded Maximus, as is aboue ſpecified. And thus much touching the full ſtorie of Dionyſius Alexandrinus, and of other alſo Martyrs and Confeſſours of Alexandria.

Priſcus, Malchus, Alexander, A woeman Martyrs.

In Cæſaria Paleſtine, ſuffered alſo the ſame time, Priſcus, Malchus, and Alexander, the which three dwelling in the countrey, and good men, ſeing the valiaunt courage of the Chriſtians, ſo boldly to venter, & conſtantly to ſtand, and patiently to ſuffer in this perſecutiõ, as men being greued with them ſelues, began to repent & accuſe their ſo great ſluggiſhnes, and cowardly negligence, to ſee other ſo zealous & valiant, & themſelues ſo colde & faint harted, in laboring for the crowne of Chriſtian martyrdome: firſt conſulting and agreing within themſelues, came to Ceſarea, & there ſtepping to the Iudge, declared thẽ ſelues what they were, & obtained the end they came for, being giuen to the wilde beaſts. After which like maner alſo and in the ſame Citye of Ceſarea, a certaine woman whoſe name Euſebius expreſſeth not, who had beene before of the ſecte of Marcion was brought before the Preſident, and likewiſe obtayned the ſame Martyrdome. Three hundreth Martyrs in Carthage. Ex ſpecul. Vincent. lib. 11. cap. 83.

Neither was the citie of Carthage all this while free from the ſtroke of this perſecution, if credit ſhould be giuẽ to the ſpeculatiue glaſſe of Vincentius, who cyting out of Hugo, recordeth of 300. Martyrs, of which 300. Martyrs the hiſtory ſaith thus, that the Preſident ſetting before the cooles and incenſe to doe ſacryfice, by a lyme kilne, which was there neere at hand, offred vnto them this condition, either to ſet incenſe to the coales, for ſacrifice to Iupiter, or els to go into the fornace of lyme: wherupon they altogether with a generall motion ſodenly ruſhed into the kilne, and ther with the duſty ſmoke of the lime were ſmothered Vincent. Maxima, Donatilla, Secunda, virgines martirs.

In Aphrica alſo in the City of Tuburba, the ſayd Vincẽtius out of the Martyrologe inſerteth mention of thre conſtaunt virgins Maxima, Donatilla, and Secunda, who in the perſecution of this Valerian and Galienus, firſt had giuen for their drinke vinager and gaule, then with ſcourges were tried, after that vpon the gibbet were tormented, & rubbed with lime: then were ſcorched vpon ẏ fiery gridird, at laſt were caſt to the wilde beaſtes, who being not touched of them, finally with the ſword were beheaded, Vincent. Pontius, Martyr.

In Symela a City in Italy, vnder the Alpes, one Pontius beyng there apprehended, by the commaundement of Claudius the Preſident, was hanged firſt vppon the racke, then was caſt to the wilde beaſtes, of whom he being nothing hurt, was after cõmitted to the fire. And finally neither touched therwith, (if the ſtorye of Vincentius be true) was headed by ẏ ryuers ſide, & his body throwne into the floude, where immediatlye the ſame houre, the foreſayde Claudius with his aſſiſtant Anabius, were taken with wicked ſpirits, by whom they were ſo miſerablye vexed, that they byt of their tongues, and died.

Zenon, Martyr.

Bergomenſis reproued.

Moreouer in the ſame Citie of Alexandria aforeſayde, Bergomenſis in his 8. booke, writing of the ſtory of Valerianus Emperour, maketh mention of Philippus, biſhoppe of the ſaid ſea of Alexandria, who (as he ſaith) was vnder the ſayd Valerian beheaded. But that is not to be founde in any approued ſtory, nor ſtadeth with the truth of time that any ſuch Philip then was biſhop of Alexandria, or any other except onely Dionyſius. After whom next ſucceeded Maximus, who remained xviij. yeares, and after him Theonas, &c. So that by the auncient recordes of olde writers it appeareth not that Philippus or any other of that name was Biſhop of Alexandria, during this time ſignified by Bergomenſis.

Ex Antoni. part. 1. ca. 6.

Although in ſome other later writers, as Equilinus Antoninus, and Bergomenſis, I finde a certaine hiſtorye of one Philippus, Preſident of Alexandria about the ſame tyme of Valerian and Galienus, elected by the Emperour and Senate of Rome, to gouerne thoſe quarters, where he was at length conuerted to the chriſtian faith, and after made Prieſt or Biſhop, as they ſaye, of Alexandria, but that not to be ſo, the teſtimony of auncient writers doth refell. The hiſtory of this Philippus, witneſſed in our later Chronicles is this: Philippus, being promoted to the Preſidentſhip of Alexandria came downe with his wife Claudia, and his two ſonnes, Auitus, and Sergius, and with his daughter named Eugenia, of the which Eugenia a long hiſtory full of ſtraunge and prodigious miracles is written of Antoninus & other, wherof many things I will cut of, and brieflye touche the effect of the ſtorye, leauing to the iudgement of the reader the credit of mine authors, as he ſhall ſee cauſe.

The ſtory of Philippus and Eugenia.

Eugenia, Prothus, Hiacynthus, conuerted.

Thys Eugenia daughter of Philippus, being of ſingular beautie, and diligently brought vp by her parentes in ẏ ſtudie of ſcience and learnyng, was by occaſion of hearyng Chriſtians, reduced and brought vp to Chriſtianitye, with two other Eunuches her Schoolefellowes called Prothus and Hiacynthus: wyth whome ſhee takyng counſaile, vppon occaſion, whether to auoyde the daunger of perſecution, or refuſing to marry wyth a Pagane, vnknowne to her parents and fryendes dyd flee awaye, and becauſe the more boldlye ſhee might reſort to heare the readynges of Helenus then an aged Byſhoppe and of others, chaunged her ſelfe into mans apparell, and named her ſelfe Eugenius, vnder the whiche name ſhe was at length admitted vnto a certayne Monaſtery, or a ſocietie of chriſtians in the ſuburbes of Alexandria although I hardly beleeue that any Monaſterye or Chriſtians was then in the ſuburbes of Alexandria permitted, where alſo at the laſt for the excellencye of learnyng and vertue, ſhee was made head of the place. Here by the waye I omit the myracles of the foreſayde Helenus) Byſhoppe as the ſtory ſaith of Hierapolis (howe he caried burning coales in his lap, & how he aduẽtured himſelf to goe in the burnyng fyre, to refell wicked Zereas a Pagane, remaining in the ſame vnburned. Here alſo I omit the careful ſearch of her parents for her, and of the anſwere of the Pythoniſſe againe vnto them, that ſhe was taken vp to the heauen among ẏ Goddeſſes. I omit moreouer the miracles done by ẏ ſayde Eugenia, in healyng the diſeaſes and ſickneſſes of ſuch as came to her, &c. The ſtory proceedeth thus: Among other which were by this Eugenius cured & reſtored, there was a certaine Matrone of Alexandria named Melancia, who after ſhe had vſed the helpe and acquaintaunce of Eugenius ſuppoſing her to be a man, fell into an inordiaate loue, ſekyng by al meanes how to accompliſh the luſt of her concupiſcence. In ſo much that in her daily viſiting of her, at length ſhe began ſecretly to breake her mind, and to entiſe her to her ludenes. Eugenius contrary exhorted her to vertue & honeſty, ſhewing her the miſeries of this life, and the peryll of that folly. Melancia ſeeing that by no meanes ſhee would be allured, nor by force drawen to her deſire, & fearyng moreouer that ſhe in detecting of her would bringe her to ſhame, beginneth firſt to make an outcry of Eugenius, declaring howe ẏ ſhe went about corruptly to deſhonre her, & ſo preſented her accuſation before Philippus ẏ Preſident, as well againſt Eugenius, as alſo againſt the reſt of that company. This matter being heard, and the woman well knowen, the crime began to ſeeme ſuſpitious, and ſo much the more, becauſe it was obiected againſt the Chryſtians. By reaſon wherof Eugenius with her felow Chryſtians was now not only in great hatred, but alſo in daunger of preſent death and deſtruction. Then Eugenius purging her ſelfe & her honeſty, although with ſufficient probation, yet notwithſtanding perceiuing that it coulde take no place, what ſo euer ſhe ſaid, and ſeeing no time now to diſſemble any longer, for the daunger as well of her owne ſelfe, as ſpecially of her brethren which troubled her more: deſired of the Iudge place and time to make manifeſt to him the truth, and ſo ſhewed her ſelfe what ſhe was, and how ſhe was his daughter, the other to be Prothus & Hiacinthus the two Eunuches, her ſchoolefelowes, vtteryng moreouer to him and to her brethrẽ the cauſe of her departyng from them. At the narration whereof Philippus her father, and her two brethren comming to the knowledge of her conceaued no litle ioy, in receauing their Eugenia againe whom they thought had bene loſt. No leſſe gladnes was among the people, to ſee ẏ euidence of the matter ſo plainely to try out the truth of the one, & the falſenes of the other. Wherat ẏ malignant accuſer was wt double ſhame cõfounded, firſt for her diſhoneſty falſly cloked, ſecondly for the vntruth of her accuſation openly detected. Bergomenſis addeth moreouer, ẏ the ſaid accuſer was ſtricken preſently with lightning. Thus Eugenia trying her honeſtly to her parents & friends, not onely was receaued of them againe, but alſo by the grace of the Lord working with her in the ſpace of time did win thẽ to Chriſt. Wherby Philippus the father of her by nature, now by grace was begottẽ of his own daughter to a more perfect life, & whõ once he thought to haue bene loſt, not only he found againe, but alſo wt her found his own ſoule, & his own life, which before he had loſt indede. This Phillippus (ſayth the ſtorye) was made afterwarde Biſhop of Alexandria, and there ſuffered Martyrdome. Concerning whoſe Martyrdome I denye not but it may be true, but that he was byſhop of Alexandria, that cannot be admitted, as is before ſufficiently proued, out of Euſebius and other auncient hiſtoricians.

Baſilla, Eugenia, Martyrs.

Lykewyſe it is ſayd, that Eugenia after the Martyrdome of her father, returning to Rome with Prothus, and Hiacinthus, by occaſion ofconuertyng Baſilla (who ſhoulde haue bene maried to a Pagane huſband, and was then beheaded) to the Chriſtian faith, was aſſayled wyth ſundrye kinds of death, firſt being tied to a great ſtone & caſt into Tyber, where ſhe was caried vp from drowning, thē put in the hoate bathes, which were extincted, and ſhe preſerued: afterward by famiſhment in priſon, where they ſaye ſhe was fed at the hande of our Sauior, all which Legendary miracles I leaue to the Reader to iudge of them, as ſhal ſeeme good vnto him. At laſt the ſtory ſayeth, ſhe was with the ſword beheaded, Antonin. Bergom. Ado.

Corrections in the ſtory aboue touched. Euſeb. lib. 7. Cap. 5. Helena Byſhop of Tarſus.

And becauſe in this prent hiſtory mention was made of Helenus whom Antoninus with his fellowes noteth to be the byſhop of Hierapolis, here is to be vnderſtode & obſerued by the way, ỹ as Philippus in the foreſaide hiſtory is falſly ſaide to be byſhop of Alexandria, ſo lykewiſe vntrue it is that Helenus was biſhop of Hierapolis. For by Euſebius it appeareth, Lib. 7. cap. 5. alleadging the wordes of Dionyſius that he was biſhop of Tarus in Cilicia, and had there ouerſight of that Church from the tyme of our Lorde, 254. to the yeare. 274.

Fructuoſus Byſhop of Tarracona in Spayne, with hys 2. Deacons Augurius, Eulogius, Martyrs. Ex Pruden. Periſteph.

Aurelius Prudentius in his booke intituled Periſtephanon, inferreth mention of Fructuoſus Byſhop of Tarracona in Spaine, who with his two Deacons Augurius and Eulogius, ſuffered alſo Martyrdome being burned after ſyxe daies impriſonment, vnder ỹ foreſaid Emperours in this perſecution. The cauſe of their puniſhment was for the profeſſion of Chriſts name. Their Iudge and condemner was Emilianus: Their impriſonment indured ſixe dayes. The kinde of death miniſtred vnto them was fire, wherin they being altogether caſt with their armes bound behind them, their bandes (as Prudentius writeth) were diſſolued, their hands vntouched with the fire, and their bodies remayning whole. The charge of this Iudge vnto the Byſhop was this, that he would worſhip the Gods, whome the Emperour Galienus worſhipped. To whom Fructuoſus the byſhop aunſwering: nay, (ſayde he) I worſhip no dombe God of ſtockes and blockes, whom Galienus doth worſhip, but I worſhip the Lord and maiſter of Galienus, the Father and creator of all times, and his onely Sonne, ſent downe to vs of whoſe flock I am here the Paſtor and ſhepeherd. At this worde Emilianus aunſwering agayne, Nay, (ſaith he) ſay not thou art, but ſay thou waſt. And forthwith commaunded them to be committed to the fyre, where (as is ſayd) their bandes and manicles being looſed, by the fire, they lifted vp their hands to heauen, prayſyng the liuing God, to the great admiration of them that ſtode by, praying alſo that the element which ſeemed to fle from them, might worke his full force vpon them, & ſpedely diſpatche them, which was after their requeſt obtained. In the meane ſpace as they were in the fire, there was a certayne Souldier in the houſe of Emilianus, who did ſee the heauens aboue to open, and theſe foreſayd Martyrs to enter in the ſame, which ſouldiour likewiſe ſhewed the ſight the ſame time vnto the daughter of Emilianus, the preſident who beholding the ſame ſight with the ſouldiour, was a preſent witneſſe of the bleſſedneſſe of them, whom her cruell father had condemned.

Fructuoſus and hys Deacons ſtrengthned in the fire.

The fauour of God toward hys martirs openly declared.

As thys godly Byſhop was preparyng to his death (ſayth Prudentius) the brethren approching to him, brought him drinke, deſiring him with much weeping to receaue & drinke with them, but that he refuſed to do, requiring the moreouer to refrayne their teares. with like readines the brethen alſo were diligent about him to pluck of his ſhoes & hoſe, as he was addreſſing himſelfe to the fire. But neyther would he ſuffer any ſeruaunts helpe in that, wherein he was no leſſe willing as able to helpe himſelf. And thus this bleſſed and fruitefull byſhop Fructuoſus with his two Deacons Augurius and Eulogius, beyng brought to the fire, witneſſed the conſtant confeſſion of the name of chriſt, with the ſhedding of their bloude. And thus farre continued wicked Valerian, in his tyranny againſt the Saintes of Chriſt. But as all the Tyrauntes before, and oppreſſors of the Chriſtians had theyr deſerued reward at the iuſt hand of God, which rendreth to euery man according to his workes: ſo this cruel Valerian, after he had reigned with his ſonne Galienus, ỹ terme of vj. or vij. yeares, and about two yeares had afflicted the Church of Chriſt, felt the iuſt ſtroke of his hande, whoſe indignation before he had prouoked, whereof we haue to witnes Eutropius, Pollio, Sabellicus, Volateranus: For making hys expedition agaynſt the Perſians, whether by the fraude and treaſon of ſome about him, or whether by his owne raſhnes, it is doubtfull: But this is certayne, that he fell into the handes of hys enemies, being about the age of lxx. yeares, where he led hys wretched age in a more wretched captiuitie. In ſo much that Sapores the king of the Perſians vſed him (and well worthy) not for his ryding ſoole, but for hys riding blocke. For whenſouer the king ſhould light vpon hys horſe openly in the ſight of the people, Valerian Emperour quondam, was brought forth in ſteede of a blocke, for the king to tread vpon hys backe, in goyng to hys horſebacke. And albeit Euſebius in a certaine Sermon to the Congregation, declareth a more cruell handling of him, affirming that he was ſlaine, writing in theſe wordes: Sed & tu Valeriane, quoniam eandem homicidiorum ſæuitiam erga ſubditos Dei exercuiſti, iuſtum Dei iudicium declaraſti, dum captiuus ac vinctus vna cum ipſa purpura ac reliquo imparatorio ornatu abductus, ac tandem a Sapore Perſarum Rege excoriari iuſſus, ſaleq; conditus, perpetuum infælicitatis tuæ trophæum erexiſti. &c. That is and thou Valerian, for ſo much as thou haſt exerciſed the ſame crudelitie in murdering the ſubiects of God, therfore haſt proued vnto vs the rightuous iudgement of God, in that thy ſelfe haſt bene bound in chaynes, and caryed away for a captiue ſlaue, with thy gorgeous purple, and thy imperiall attire, and at length alſo beyng commaunded of Sapores king of the Perſians to be ſlayne and poudred with ſault, haſt ſet vp vnto al men a perpetuall monument of thine owne wretchednes. &c. The puniſhment of Cod vpon Claudius preſident the Emperour.

The like ſeueritie of God his terrible iudgement is alſo to be noted in Claudius, his Preſidēt, and miniſter of his perſecutions. Galienus plagued in hys perſecution.

Neither did Galienus the ſonne of Valerian, after the captiuitie of hys father, vtterly eſcape the righteous hand of God. For beſide the miſerable captiuitie of hys father whom he could not reſcue, ſuch portentes ſtraunge, & out of the courſe of nature, ſuch Earthquakes did happen, alſo ſuch tumultes, commotions, and rebellions did followe, that Trebellio doth recken vp to the number of 30. together which in ſundry places all at one tyme tooke vpon them to be tyrantes and Emperours ouer ỹ Monarchie of Rome, by the meanes whereof he was not able to ſuccour hys father, though he would. Notwithſtanding the ſayd Galienus beyng (as is thought) terrified by the exāple of his father, did remoue: at leaſt did moderate the perſecutiō ſtirred vp by the Edictes of Valerian hys father, directing forth hys imperiall Proclamation, the tenor whereof proceedeth after this effect, as is to be ſene in Euſeb. Lib 7. ca. 13. Emperour and Cæſar, Publius Licinius, Galienus, Pius Fortunatus, Auguſtus, vnto Dionyſius, to Pinna, and to Demetrian and to all other the like Biſhops. For he accuſed him to be a Chriſtian, and therefore ſayd that he was not to be admytted vnto their offices, which was againſt their Religion. Wherupon Achaius then being iudge examined him of his faith, who finding him to be a chriſtian indede, & conſtantly to ſtand to his profeſſion, gaue him iij. houres to deliberate & aduiſe wyth himſelfe. There was the ſame time in Ceſarea a Byſhop named Theotechnus, otherwiſe called Theodiſtus, who perceiuing him to ſtand in doubtfull delyberation and perplexitie in himſelfe, toke him by the hand & brought him into the houſe or Church of the Chriſtians, laying before him a ſworde (which he had vnder his cloke for the ſame purpoſe) and a booke of the new Teſtament & ſo willed him to take his free choyſe which of them both he would preferre. The ſouldior immediatly without delay ran to the booke of the Goſpell, taking that before the ſword. A miracle noted in Euſeb. lib. 7. cap. 18.

A miraculous operation of an herbe touching the hemme of Chriſtes picture to heale diſeaſes.

And becauſe mention is made here of Ceſarea, there foloweth in yͤ next chapter of yͤ ſame author, a ſtrange miracle if it be true, which he there reporteth, howe yͭ out of the ſame City was the woman, which in yͤ goſpel came to our Sauiour, and was healed of her bloudy iſſue. Her houſe being in the Citye of Ceſarea, before the dore thereof was ſet vp a certayne pyller of ſtone, & vpon the piller, an Image was made of braſſe, of a woman mekely knelyng on her knes, and holding vp her hands, as one that had ſome ſute. Againſt the which there was an other Image alſo of a man proportioned of the ſame mettall, cũningly engrauen, in a ſhort ſemely veſture, & ſtretching forth his hand to the woman. At the foote of which piller grew vp a certaine herbe of a ſtraunge kind, but of a more ſtraunge operation, which growing vp to the hemme of his veſture, & once touching the ſame, is ſaide to haue ſuch vertue, that it was able to cure all maner of deſeaſes. This picture of the man, (they ſay) repreſented the image of Chriſt. The hiſtory is written in Euſebius, as is ſaid, the credite whereof I referre to the Reader, whether he will thinke it true or falſe. If he thinke it falſe, yet I haue ſhewed him myne author: if he thinke it true, then muſt hee thinke with all that this miraculous operation of the herbe, proceded neither by the vertue of the picture, nor by the praier of the other being both dombe pictures, and engrauen no doubt at that time by the hand of Infidels, but to be wrought by ſome ſecret permiſſion of God his wiſedome, either to reduce the Infidels at that time to the belief of the ſtorye, or to admoniſh the Chriſtians to conſider with them ſelues what ſtrength and health was to be looked for onelye of Chriſt, and no other aduocate, ſeing the dumbe picture engrauen in Braſſe, gaue his efficacie to a poore herbe to cure ſo many diſeaſes. This picture ſaith Euſebius remained alſo to his time which was vnder Conſtantinus the great.

Felix Byſhop of Rome and Martyr.

Eutichianus Byſhop of Rome and Martyr.

Gaius Byſhop of Rome and Martyr.

As touching the line and order of the Romaine Byſhops hetherto intermitted, after the martirdome of Xiſtus aboue ſpecified, the gouernement of that church was committed next, to one Dionyſius, about the yeare of our Lord, 266. who continued in the ſame the ſpace of ix. yeares, as Euſebius ſaith, as Damaſus recordeth but onely vj. yeares, and two moneths. Of his decretall Epiſtles becauſe ſufficient hath bene ſayd before concerning that matter, I omit to ſpeake. After whom ſucceded Felix, in the firſt yeare of Probus the Emperour, about yͤ yeare of our Lord, 280. who gouerned that church v. yeares, and died as Platina ſaith, a martyr. After him followed Eutychianus, and then Gaius, both martyrs, as the hiſtories of ſome do recorde.

About the time of theſe byſhops, lyued Theodorus byſhop of Neoceſarea, who is otherwiſe called Gregorius Mognus, whome alſo Nicephorus for his myracles, calleth θαυματυργὸν.

Thus Galienus the foreſayd Emperour raygned as is declared, with his father Valerian, vij. yeares, after whoſe captiuitie he ruled the Monarchie, alone about ix. yeares, with ſome peace and quietnes graunted to the Church.

Claudius Emperour.

Anno. 272.

Quintillianus Emperour.

The daies of this Galienus being expired, followed Claudius a quiet Emperour, as moſt ſtories do record. Although Vincentius affirmeth that he was a mouer of perſecution againſt the Chriſtiãs, & maketh mention of 262. Martyrs, which in his time did ſuffer, but becauſe no ſuch record remaineth to be found in Euſebius, who woulde not haue omitted ſome memoriall thereof if it had bene true, therefore I referre the ſame to the free iudgement of the Reader to finde ſuch credite as it maye. This Claudius raigned but two yeares, after whome came Quintilianus, his brother next Emperor, & a quiet Prince, who cõtinued but onely xvij. daies, and had to his ſucceſſor Aurelianus, vnder whome Oroſius in his ſeuenth booke, doth number the ix. perſecution againſt the Chriſtians.

Ex Euſeb. lib. 7. cap. 30.

No power agaynſt the people of God, except God geue leaue.

HEtherto from the captiuitie of Valerian the Church of Chriſt was in ſome quietnes till the death of Quintilianus, as hath beene declared: After whom Aurelianus the next ſucceſſor poſſeſſed the crowne, who in the firſt beginning of his raigne (after the common maner of al princes) ſhewed himſelfe a Prince moderate and diſcrete, much worthy of commendation, if his good beginning had continued in a conſtant courſe agreeing to the ſame. Of nature he was ſeuere & rigorous in correcting, diſſolute in manners, in ſo much that it was ſaid of him in a vulgare prouerbe, that he was a good phiſition, ſauing that he gaue to bitter medicines. This Emperour being ſicke, neuer ſent for phiſition, but cured himſelfe with abſtinence. And as his beginning was not vnfruitefull to the common wealth: ſo neither was he any great diſturber of the chriſtians: whom he did not onely tolerate in their religiõ but alſo in their counſell, beyng the ſame tyme aſſembled at Antioche, ſemed not to be againſt them. Notwithſtanding in continuance of time through ſiniſter motion and inſtigation of certaine about him (as commonly ſuch are neuer abſent in al places from the eares of princes) hys nature ſomewhat inclinable to ſeueritie, was altered to a playne tyranny, which tiranny firſt he ſhewed beginnyng with the death of his owne ſiſters ſonne, as wytneſſeth Eutropius. After that he proceeded either to moue, or at leaſt to purpoſe perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. Albeit that wicked purpoſe of the Emperour, the mercifull working of God his hand did ſone ouerthrow. For as the edict or proclamation ſhould haue beene denounced for the perſecuting of the chriſtians, and the emperour now ready to ſubſcribe the edict with his hande, the mighty ſtroke of the hand of the lord ſodainly from aboue did ſtop his purpoſe, binding, as a man might ſay, the Emperours hands behinde him: declaryng (as Euſebius ſaieth) to all men, how there is no power to worke any violence againſt the ſeruauntes of God, vnleſſe his permiſſion do ſuffer them, and gyue them leaue. Euſeb. Lib. 7. cap. 30. Eutropius and Vopiſcus affirme, that as the ſaid Aurelianus was purpoſing to rayſe perſecutiõ againſt vs, he was ſodainly terrified with lightening, and ſo ſtopped from his wicked tyranny. Not long after about the fifte or ſixt yeare of hys rayne, he was ſlaine betwene Bizance and Heraclea, an. 278. Thus Aurelianus rather intended the moued perſecution. Neither is there any more then this founde cõcerning this perſecution in auncient hiſtories and records of the Church. Wherfore I marueil the more, that Vincentius collecting out of the Martyrologes, hath comprehended ſuch a great Cataloge of ſo manye martirs, whiche in Fraunce and in Italye (ſayeth he) ſuffered death and torments vnder this Emperour Aurelianus. Wherunto Oroſius alſo ſeemeth to agree, in numbring this to be the ninth perſecution vnder the ſayd Aurelian.

Tacitus Emperour.

Florianus Emperour.

Next after Aurelianus the ſucceſſion of the impery fell to Publius Annius Tacitus, who raigned but vj. monethes. Him ſucceded his brother Florianus, who raigned but lx. dayes. And after him followed Marcus Aurelius, ſurnamed Probus. Of whome more hereafter (God willing) ſhal appeare.

In the meane time, within the compaſſe of theſe Emperours falleth in a ſtory recorded, of Euſebius, and not vnworthy here to be noted, whereby to vnderſtand the faithfull diligence of good Miniſters, what good it may doe in a common wealth.

Euſebius Deacon of Alexandria.

Anatholius rector of the Vniuerſitie of Alexandria.

Mention is made before of Euſebius the Deacon of Dyoniſius, whom God ſtirred vp to viſite and comfort the ſaintes that were in priſon and bandes, and to burye the bodies of the bleſſed Martyrs departed, not without great perill of his owne life, and after was made biſhop (as is ſayde) of Laodicea. But before he came to Laodicea to be biſhop there, it chaunced, the ſayde Euſebius remaining as yet at Alexandria, the citie to be beſieged of the Romaines, Pyruchius being there captaine. In the which ſiege halfe of the citie did hold with the Romaines, the other half withſtode them. In that part which went with the Romaine captaine was Euſebius, being alſo in great fauour with the captaine for his worthy fidelitie and ſeruice ſhewed. With the other halfe that reſiſted the Romains, was Anatholius, gouernour or moderator then of the ſchole of Alexandria, who alſo was biſhop after the ſayde Euſebius of Laodicea. This Anatholius perceiuing the citizens to be in miſerable diſtreſſe of famine and deſtruction by reaſon of penury and lacke of ſuſtenance, ſendeth to Euſebius beeing then with the Romaines, and certifieth him of the lamentable penurie and perill of the citie, inſtructing him moreouer, what to do in the matter. Euſebius vnderſtanding the caſe, repaireth to the captaine, deſiring of him ſo much fauoure, that ſo many as would flee out of the citie from their enemies, might be licenced to eſcape and freely to paſſe, which was to him eftſoones graunted. As Euſebius was thus labouring with the capitaine, on the other ſide Anatholius for his part laboured with the Citizens, mouing them to aſſemble togither, and perſwading them to geue themſelues ouer, in yeelding to the force and might of the Romaines. But when the Citizens could not abide the hearing thereof: yet (ſayde Anatholius) this I truſt you will be contented, if I ſhal coūſaile you, in this miſerable lacke of things to auoide out of your citie, all ſuch ſuperfluities and vnneceſſary impedimentes vnto you, as olde women, yong children, aged men, with ſuch other as be feeble and impotent, & not to ſuffer them here to periſh with famine, whoſe preſence can do no ſtead to you if they dy, & leſſe if they liue, for ſpending the victuals which otherwiſe might ſerue the that be more able to defend the Citie. The Senate hearing this ſentence, & vnderſtanding moreouer the graunt of the captaine, promiſing them their ſafetie, were well cōſenting therevnto. Then Anatholius, hauing a ſpeciall care to them that belonged to the Church of Chriſt, calleth them together, with the reſt of the multitude, and perſwading them what they ſhould do, and what had bene obteined for the, cauſed them to void the citie, and not onlie them, but alſo a great number of other mo, who perſwaded by him, vnder that pretence, changing themſelues in womens apparell, or faining ſome impotencie, ſo eſcaped out of the citie. At whoſe comming out Euſebius on the other ſide was readie to receiue them, and refreſhed their hungrye and pined bodies, whereby not onelye they, but the whole Citye of Alexandria was preſerued from deſtruction. The Prelates of Rome are cleane contrary to theſe good Prelates.

By this little hiſtorie of Euſebius and Anatholius, deſcribed in the vij. booke of Euſebius.cap.32. and briefly here ſet forth to thee (gentle Reader) thou mayeſt partly vnderſtande the practiſe of the Prelates what it was in thoſe daies in the church, which was then onlie imploied in ſauing of life, and ſuccouring the common weales wherein they liued, as by theſe two godly perſons Euſebius and Anatholius may wel appeare. Unto the which practiſe if we compare the practiſe of our latter prelates of the church of Rome, I ſuppoſe no little difference will appeare.

Marcus Aurelius Probus Emperour. Peace in the Church.

The next Emperour to Florianus (as is ſaid) was Marcus Aurelius Probus, a Prince both wiſe and vertuous, and no leſſe valiant in martial affaires, as fortunate in the ſucceſſe of the ſame. During his time we reade of no perſecution greatly ſtiring in the church, but much quietnes, as well in matters of religion, as alſo in the common wealth. In ſo much that after his great and manye victories, ſuch peace enſued, that his ſaying was, there needed no more ſouldiers, ſeing there were no moe enimies to the cōmon wealth to fight againſt. It was his ſaying alſo, that hys ſouldiers nede not to ſpend corne and victuale, except they laboured to ſerue the common wealth. And for the ſame cauſe he cauſed his ſouldiers to be ſet a worke about certayne mountaynes in Syrmia & in Meſſia to be planted with vines, and not ſo much as in winter ſuffered them to be at reſt, therfore by them at length he was ſlayne, after he had reigned the ſpace of vj. yeres, and 4. moneths, an. 284. Marcus Aurelius ſlayne.

Carus with his two ſonnes Carinus and Numerianus, ſucceeded next after Probus in the Empire, the raygne of which Emperors, continued in all, but iij. yeares. Of the which three firſt Carus, warring agaynſt the Perſians, was ſlayne with lightning. Of Numerianus his ſonne, beyng with his father in his warres againſt the Perſians, we finde much commendation in Eutropius, Vopiſcus, and other writers, which teſtified to him to be a valiaunt warriour, an eloquent orator, as appeared by his declamatiōs and writinges ſent to the Senate. Thirdly, to be an excellent Poet. This Numerianus ſorrowing & lamentyng for the death of hys father, through immoderate weeping fell into a great ſorenes of his eyes, by reaſon whereof he keping cloſe, was ſlaine not long after of his father in lawe, named Aper who trayterouſly aſpiring to the Empire, diſſimuled his death, with a falſe excuſe to the people, aſking for him, ſaying, for the payne of his eyes he kept in from the wind and weather, til at length by the ſtinch of his body being caried about, his death was vttered.

Carus with hys two ſonnes Carinus and Numerianus Emperour.

Carus Emperour ſlayn with lightning.

Correction of a certaine place of Eutropius, ex editione Frobeniana.

In the life of this Emperor Carus aforeſaide, written by Eutropius in the later edition ſet forth by Frobenius, I finde (whiche in other editions of Eutropius doth not appeare) that Numerianus the ſonne of this Carus was he that ſlewe Babylas the holye Martyr, whoſe hiſtory before wee haue comprehended. But that ſeemeth not to be like both by the narration of Chryſoſtome, and alſo for that Vrſpergenſis declaryng the ſame hyſtory and in the ſame wordes, as it is in Eutropius, ſaith that it was Cyrillus, whome Numerianus killed, the ſtory whereof is this: What time Carus the Emperour in his iourney going toward the Perſians, remayned at Antioche, Numerianus his ſonne would enter into the church of the chriſtians, to view and behold their miſteries. But Cyrillus their biſhop would in no wiſe ſuffer him to enter into the church, ſaying that it was not lawfull for him to ſee the miſteries of God, who was polluted with ſacrifices of Idoles. Numerianus full of indignation at the hearing of theſe wordes, not ſuffering that repulſe at the hands of Cyrillus, in his fury did ſlay the godlye Martyr. And therefore iuſtly (as it ſeemed) was he himſelfe ſlayne afterward by the hands of Aper.

Cirillus roſiſteth the Emperour,

Cyrillus Byſhop of Antioche, Martyr.

Ex Chroni. Vrſpergen.

Thus Carus with his ſonne Numerianus being ſlaine in the Eaſt partes, as is declared, Carinus the other ſonne raigned alone in Italye, where he ouercame Sabinus ſtriuyng for the Empire, and raigned there with much wyckednes, till they returning home of the army againe from the Perſians, who then ſet vp Diocleſian to be Emperor, by whome the foreſayde Carinus for the wickednes of hys life, being forſaken of his hoſt, was ouercome, & at length ſlayne with the hande of the Tribune, whoſe wyfe before he had defloured. Thus Carus with his two ſonnes, Numerianus and Carinus ended their liues, whoſe raigne continued not aboue three yeares.

Carinus Emperour ſleyne. Adultery puniſhed.

All this meane ſpace we reade of no great perſecution ſtirring in the Church of Chriſt, but was in meane quiete ſtate and tranquilitie, vnto the xix. yeare of the raigne of Diocleſian. So that in counting the time from the latter ende of Valerian, vnto this foreſaid yeare of Diocleſian, the peace of the church which God gaue to his people, ſemeth to continue aboue 44. yeares. During the which tyme of peace and tranquilitie, the church of the Lord did mightely increaſe and floriſh, ſo that the more bodies it loſt by perſecution, the more honor and reuerence it wan daily among the Gentiles in al quarters, both Greekes and barbarous, in ſo much that (as Euſebius in his vij. booke deſcribeth) amongſt the Emperours themſelues, diuers there were which not onely bare ſingular good will and fauor to them of our profeſſion, but alſo did commit vnto them offices & regiments ouer countries and nations, ſo well were they affected to our doctrine, that they priuileged the ſame with liberty and indemnitie. What needeth to ſpeake of them which not only liued vnder the Emperors in libertie but alſo were familiar in the court with the Princes themſelues, entertained with great honour and ſpeciall fauour beyond the other ſeruitures of the court, as was Dorotheus with his wife, children and whole family, highly accepted & aduaunced in the palace of the Emperour: Alſo Gorgonius in like maner with diuers other mo, who for their doctrine & learning which they profeſſed, were with their Princes in great eſtimation. In like reuerence alſo were the biſhops of cities and Dioceſſe, with the Preſidentes and rulers where they liued: who not onely ſuffered the to liue in peace, but alſo had them in great price and regarde, ſo long as they kept themſelues vpright, and continued in God his fauour. Who is able to number at that time the mighty and innumerable multitudes and congregations aſſembling together in euery citie, and the notable cōcurſes of ſuch as dayly flocked to the common Oratoures to pray? The peace of the Churche from Valerian to the tenth perſecution, laſted 44. yeares.

Euſeb. lib.8. cap.1.

Dorotheus, Gorgonius, Chriſtians of great reputation in the Emperours court,

The peaceable ſtate of the Church deſcribed.

ned in their old houſes, had large and great churches, new builded from the foundation, for them to frequent togither. In ſuch increaſement (ſaith Euſebius) by proceſſe of tyme did the church of chriſt grow and ſhout vp daily more and more, profiting and ſpreading through all quarters, which neithr enuie of men coulde infringe, nor any deuill could inchaunte, neither the craftie policie of mans wit coulde ſupplant, ſo long as the protection of God his Heauenlye arme went with his people, keeping them in good order, according to the rule of chriſtian life.

Corruption through much peace and proſperitie crept into the Church.

But as commonly the nature of al men being of it ſelfe vnruly and vntowarde, alwaies ſeeketh & deſireth proſperity, and yet can neuer wel vſe proſperitie, alwaies would haue peace, and yet hauing peace, alwaies abuſeth yͤ ſame: ſo here likewiſe it happened with theſe mẽ, which through this ſo great libertie & proſperitie of life began to degenerate & languiſhe vnto idlenes & delycacy, & one to worke ſpite and cõtumely againſt an other, ſtriuing and contending among thẽſelues for euery occaſiõ, with railing wordes after moſt deſpitefull maner: biſhops againſt biſhops, and people againſt people, mouing hatred and ſeditiõ one againſt an other, beſides alſo curſed hipocriſie and ſimulation with all extremity encreaſing more and more, by reaſon wherof the iudgemẽt of god after his wonted maner, (whiliſt yet the congregatiõ began to multiply) began by a litle and litle to viſite our men with perſecution, fallyng firſt vpon our brethrẽ which were abroad in warfare, but whẽ yͤ toucht yͤ other nothing or very litle, neither did they ſeeke to appeaſe gods wrath, & call for his mercy, but wickedly thinking with our ſelues, that god neither regarded nor would viſit our tranſgreſſions, we heaped our iniquities daily more and more one vpon an other, & they which ſemed to be our paſtors refuſing the rule of piety, were inflamed with mutual contentions on againſt an other. and thus whileſt they were giuen onely to the ſtudye of contentions, threatnings, emulations, mutual hatred, & dyſcord, euery man ſeeking his owne ambition, and perſecuting one another after the maner of tirany: Then, then, I ſay, the Lord according to the voice of Ieremy tooke awaye the beauty of the daughter of Sion. & the glory of Iſraell, fell downe from heauen, neither did he remember the footſtoole of his feete in the day of his wrath. And the Lorde ouerturned all yͤ comely ornaments of Iſraell, & deſtroyed all her gorgeous buildings, and according to the ſaying of the Pſalme, ſubuerted and extinguiſhed the Teſtament of his ſeruaunt, and prophaned his ſanctuary in deſtruction of his churches, and in laying waſt the buildinges thereof ſo that all paſſingers ſpoiling the multitude of the people, they were made an obloquie to al the dwellers about. For he hath exalted the ſtrength of his enimies, and turned away the helpe of his ſword from her, nor ayded her in the battayle, but ceaſed from the purging of her and her ſeate. He ſtroke downe to the ground and deminiſhed her daies and ouer all this poured vppon her confuſion. All theſe things were fulfilled vpon vs, when we ſaw the temples raſed from the top to the ground, and the ſacred ſcriptures to be burnt in the open market place, and the Paſtours of the church to hide themſelues, ſome here, ſome there, ſome other taken priſoners with great ſhame, were mocked of their enimies, whẽ alſo according to the ſaying of the prophet in an other place: Contempt was poured out vpon the Princes, and they cauſed to go eout of the waye, and not to keepe the ſtraite pathe.

Hatred and diſdayne among the Churche men.

The wrath of God toward hys people.

The x. Perſecution.

The tenth perſecution.

By reaſon whereof (the wrath of God being kindled againſt his church) enſued the tenth and laſt perſecucion againſt the chriſtians, ſo horrible and greeuous, that maketh the pen almoſt to tremble to writ vpon it, ſo tedious that neuer was any perſecution before or ſince comparable to it for the time it continued, laſting the ſpace of tenne yeares together. This perſecution although it paſſed thorow the handes of diuers tyrantes and workers moe then one or two, yet principally it beareth the name of Diocleſiã who was Emperour as is aboue noted, next after Carus & Numerianus. Thys Diocleſian euer hauyng an ambitious minde, aſpired greatly to be Emperour. To whom Druas his Concubine ſayd, that firſt he ſhould kill a wilde Bore before he ſhould be Emperour. Hee taking effect at theſe wordes, vſed much with handes to kill wylde Bores: but ſeeing no ſucceſſe to come thereof, vſed this prouerbe: Ego Apros occido, alius pulpamento fruitur, that is, I kill the Bores, but other doe eate the fleſhe. At length the ſayde Diocleſian beyng nominate to be Emperour, and ſeeyng Aper (who had killed Numerianus the Emperour) ſtanding thereby ſware, to the ſouldiers that Numerianus, was wrongfully killed, and forthwith runing vpon Aper with his ſworde, ſlew him. Vopiſc. After this he being ſtabliſhed in the Empire, and ſeeing on euery ſide diuers and ſundrie cõmotions riſing vp againſt him, which he was not well able himſelfe to ſuſtaine, in the firſt beginning of his raign he chuſeth for his Colleage Maximianus ſurnamed Herculius, Father of Maxentius. Which two Emperours, becauſe of diuers warres that roſe in manye prouinces, choſe to thẽ two other noble men, Galerius, & Conſtantinus, whome they called Cæſars. Of whome Galerius was ſent into the Eaſt partes againſt the Perſians. Conſtantinus was ſent ouer to Britannie to this our country of England, to recouer the tribute. Where he toke to wife Helena the daughter of king Coil, which was a maiden excelling in beautye, and no leſſe famouſly brought vp in the ſtudy of learning of whome was borne Conſtantinus the great.

All this while hitherto no perſecution was yet ſtirred of theſe 4. princes againſt the church of Chriſt, but quietlye and moderatly they gouerned the common wealth, wherfore accordingly God proſpered their doings and affaires, and gaue them great victories, Diocleſian in Egipt, Maximinian in Aphricke and in Fraunce, Galerius in Perſia, Conſtantinus in England and in Fraunce alſo. By reaſon of which victories Diocleſian and Maximian puſte vppe in pride, ordeyned a ſolemne triumph at Rome, after which triumph Diocleſian gaue commaundement that he woulde be worſhipped as God, ſaying, that he was brother to the Sunne and Moone, and adourning his ſhooes with golde and precious ſtones commaunded the people to kyſſe hys feete.

Pryde in Diocleſian.

And not long after by the iudgement of God, for certaine enormities vſed in the church, aboue touched, began the great and greuous perſecution of the Chriſtians, moued by the ragious cruelty of Diocleſian, which was about the nynteenth yeare of his rayne, who in the Moneth of Marche when the feaſt of Eaſter was nye at hande, commaunded all the churches of the Chriſtians to bee ſpoyled and caſt to the earth, and the bookes of holy ſcripture to be burned.

Perſecution agaynſt the chriſtians.

Thus moſt violent edictes and proclamations were ſet forth, for the ouerthrowing as is ſaide, of the Chriſtians temples throughout all the Romane Empire. Neyther did there want in the officers any cruell execution of the ſame proclamations. For their temples were defaced euen when they celebrated the feaſt of Eaſter. Euſeb. lib. 8. cap. 2. And this was the firſt edicte giuen out by Diocleſian, the next proclamation that came forth, was for the burning of the bookes of the holy ſcripture, which thyng was done in the open market place as before: then next vnto that were edictes giuen forth for the diſplacing of ſuch as were Magiſtrats, and that with a great ignominie, & al other whatſoeuer bare anye office. Impriſoning ſuche as were of the common ſorte, if they would not abiure Chriſtianitie, and ſubſcribe to the heathen religion. Euſeb. lib. 8. cap 3. & Nicephorus lib. 7. cap 4. It was not long after but that new edictes were ſent forth, nothing for their cruelty inferiour to the firſt: for the caſting of the elders and biſhops into priſõ, and then conſtraining them with ſundry kindes of puniſhments to offer vnto their Idoles. By reaſon whereof enſued a great perſecutiõ amongſt the gouernors of the church, amongſt whom many ſtood manfully, paſſing through many exceeding bitter torments, neyther were ouercome therwyth, being tormented and examined diuers of them diuerſlye, ſome ſcourged, all their bodies ouer with whips & ſcourges, ſome with racks, raſinges of yͤ fleſh intolerable were cruciated: ſome one way, ſome another way put to death. Some againe violently were drawen to the vnpure ſacrifice, and as though they had ſacrificed, when indeede they did not, were let go. Other ſome neither comming at al to their aultars, nor touching anye peece of their ſacrifices, yet were borne in hand of thẽ that ſtode by, that they had ſacrificed, & ſo ſuffering that falſe infamation of their enymies, quietly went away. Other as dead men were caried and caſt away, being but halfe dead. Some they caſt down vpon the pauement, and trailing them a great ſpace by the legs, made the people beleue that they had ſacrificed. Furthermore other there were which ſtoutly withſtood them, affirming with a loud voice that they had done no ſuch ſacrifice. Of whom ſome ſaide they were Chriſtians, & gloried in the profeſſion of that name: ſome cryed ſaying, that neither they had, nor would euer be pertakers of that idolatry. And thoſe being buffeted on the face & mouth wyth the handes of the ſoldiers, were made to hold their peace, and ſo thruſt out with violence. And if the Saintes did ſeeme neuer ſo little to doe, what the enimies would haue them, they were made much of. Albeit all this purpoſe of the aduerſary, did nothing preuayle againſt the holye and conſtaunt ſeruaunts of Chriſt. Notwithſtanding, of the weake ſort innumerable there were, which for feare & infirmity fell and gaue ouer, euen at the firſt brunt.

At the firſt comming downe of theſe edictes into Nicomedia, there chanced a dede to be done, much worthy of memory, of a Chriſtien, being a noble man borne, whiche moued by the zeale of God, after the proclamation made at Nicomedia was ſet vp, by and by ranne and toke downe the ſame, and openly tare and rent it in peeces, not fearing the preſence of the two Emperours, then being in the citie. For which acte he was put to a moſt bitter death, whiche death he with great faith & conſtancie endured euen to the laſt gaſpe, Euſeb.lib.8,lib.3.&5.

Euſeb Lib,8. Cap.3.4.

After this the furious rage of the malignaunt Emperours, being let looſe againſt the ſaintes of Chriſt procceded more & more, making hauock of gods people through out all quarters of the worlde. Firſt Diocleſian which had purpoſed with himſelfe to ſubuert the whole chriſtian religion, executed his tyranny in the eaſt) and Maximianus in the weſt, But wily Diocleſian began very ſubtilye, for hee put the matter firſt in practiſe in his owne campe, among whom the marſhall of the field, as Euſeb.lib.8.cap.4. affirmeth, put the Chriſtian Souldiers to this choiſe, whether they would obey the Emperors commaundement in that maner of ſacrifice he cōmaunded, and ſo both to keepe their offices, and leade their bands, or els to lay away from thē their armor and weapons. whereunto the Chriſten men couragiouſly aunſwered, that they were not only ready to lay away their armour & weapons, but alſo to ſuffer death if it ſhould with tiranny be enforced vnto them, rather thē they would obey the wicked decrees and commaundements of the Emperour.

Perſecution firſt beginning in the Emperours Campe.

Euſeb.Lib,8. cap.4.

A notable religion and fayth in ſouldiours.

There might a man haue ſeene very manye whiche were deſirous to liue a ſimple and poore life: and whiche regarded no eſtimation and honour in compariſon of true pietie & godlines. And this was no more but a ſubtile and wily flattery in the beginning, to offer them to be at theyr owne liberty, whether they would willingly abiure their profeſſion or not, as alſo this was an other, that in the beginning of the perſecution, there were but a few tormented with puniſhment, but afterwarde by little and little hee began more manifeſtlye to braſte out into perſecution: It can hardly be expreſſed with wordes what number of Martirs, and what bloud was ſhedde through all cities and regions for the name of Chriſt Euſebius, in his 8 booke & chap.7. ſaith that he himſelfe knew the worthy Martirs that were in Paleſtina. But in Tire of Phenicia he declareth in the ſame a marueilous martyrdome made, where certayne chriſtians being geuen to moſt cruell wild beaſts were preſerued without hurt of them, to the great admiration of the beholders and thoſe Lions, Beares, and Lybardes (kept hungry for that purpoſe) had no deſire to deuoure them, which notwithſtanding moſt vehementlye raged againſt thoſe by whome they were brought into the ſtage, and ſtoode as they thought without daunger of thē, ſuch were firſt deuoured. But the Chriſtian Martyrs becauſe they could not be hurt of the beaſts being ſlayne with the ſworde, were afterwarde throwen into the ſea. At that time was martyred the Biſhop of Sydon. But Syluanus the Byſhop of Gazenſis with 39. other were ſlayne in the mettall mynes of Phenitia. Pamphilus the elder of Ceſarea being the glory of that congregation, died a moſt worthy Martyr, whoſe both life and moſt commendable martyrdome, Euſebius oftentimes declareth in his 8. booke and 13. chapter, in ſo much that he hath written the ſame in a booke by it ſelfe. In Syria all the chiefe teachers of the congregation were firſt committed to priſon, as a moſt heauye & cruell ſpectacle to behold, as alſo the biſhops, Elders, and Deacons, which all were eſteemed as menquellers, and perpetratours of moſt wicked facts. Euſebius. Furthermore he maketh mention in the ſame place of others which were not tormented to death, but euery day terrified and feared without ceaſing: Of ſome others that were brought to the ſacrifices and commaunded to doe ſacrifice, which woulde rather thruſt their right hande into the fire, then to touch the prophane or wicked ſacrifice, alſo of ſome others that before they were apprehended, would caſt downe themſelues from ſteepe places, leſt that beyng taken they ſhould commit any thing againſt their profeſſiō, Alſo of two virgines very faire and proper, with their mother alſo which had ſtudiouſly brought them vp, euen from their infancy in all godlines, beyng long ſought for and at the laſt founde, and ſtraightly kept by their kepers, whileſt they made their excuſe to do that which nature required, threw thēſelues downe headlong into a riuer, alſo otother two yong maidēs being ſiſters, & of a worſhipfull ſtock, indued with many goodly vertues, which were caſt of the perſecutors into the ſea: and theſe things were done at Antioche as Euſebius in his 8. booke, and 13. chap. affirmeth. Henricus de Erfordia maketh mention of the Martyrs of Tharſus in Cilicia as Tharatus, Probus, and Andronicus: But yet the Martirs in the region of Pontus ſuffered far more paſſing and ſharper tormentes, wherof I wil hereafter make mention. Euſebius ibidem. So outragious was the beginning of the perſecution whiche the Emperour made in Nicomedia in Bithinia, as afore is ſaide, that he reſtrained not from the ſlaughter of the children of Emperours, neither yet from ſlaughter of the moſt chiefeſt princes of his court, who a litle before he made as much of, as if they had ben his owne childrē: Such an other was Peter, which among diuers and ſundry tormentes: (among whō he being naked was lefted vp, his whole body being beaten with whips and torne, that a man might ſee yͤ bare bones, and after they had mingled vineger & ſalt togither they poured it vpon the moſt tender parts of his body, & laſtly roſted at a ſoft fire, as a man would roſt fleſh to eate as a victorious Martir ended his life. Dorotheus and Gorgonius being in great authoritie and office vnder the Emperour, after diuers torments were ſtrangled with a halter, which both being of the priuie chamber, to him, when they ſaw & beheld the greuous puniſhment of Peter their houſhold cōpanion: wherfore (ſaid they O Emperour) do you puniſh in Peter that opinion which is in all vs? why is that accounted in him an offence, that all we confes? we are of that faith religion & iudgement yͭ he is of. Therfore he commaunded them to be brought forth, & almoſt with like paynes to be tormented as Peter was, & afterwardes hanged. Euſeb.Rufini Lib 8.cap.6. After whom Anthimus the Byſhop of Nicomedia after he had made a notable confeſſion, & bringing with him a great company of Martyrs, was beheaded. Theſe men being thus diſpatched yͤ Emperour vainly thought yͭ he might cauſe yͤ reſt to do what euer him liſted. Vincentius.Lib.12 cap.66. And alſo Euſeb.Lib.8.cap.6. mentioneth ſuch an other like matter full of horror and grief. There aſſembled together in their temple many Chriſtian men to celebrate the memory of the Natiuitie of Chriſt, of euery age and ſorte ſome: There Maximianus thinking to haue bene geuen a very fit occaſion to execute hys tyranny vpō the poore Chriſtians, ſent thether ſuch as ſhould burne the temple, the doores being ſhut and cloſed rounde about. Thether came they with fire, but firſt they commaunded the cryer with a loud voyce to cry, yͭ who ſoeuer would haue life, ſhould come out of the temple, & do ſacrifice vpō the next altar they came vnto of Iupiter, and vnles they would do this, they ſhoulde all be brent with the temple. Then one ſtepping vp in the temple, anſwered in the name of all yͤ reſt with great courage & boldnes of minde, that they were all Chriſtians, & beleued that Chriſt was their onely God & king, and that they woulde doe ſacrifice to him, with his father and holy Ghoſt, & that they were now all readye to offer vnto him. wyth theſe wordes the fire was kindled and compaſſed about the temple, and there were brent of men, women, and children certeine thouſands. There were alſo in Arabia, very manye martyrs ſlayne with axes, as Euſebius. Lib.8. cap. 12. In Melitina a region of Armenia, the biſhops and Elders were caſt in priſon. Euſebius eodem cap.6. In Arabzace a region neare adioyning to Armenia Euſtratius was Martyred, as Nicephorus declareth, Lib 7 cap.14. This Euſtratius was yͤ countrey man borne, and very ſkilfull in the Greeke tong, executyng by the Emperours commaundement, the ſhiriffes office at Licia in the Eaſt, which alſo did execution there vpon the Chriſtians, and was a Scribe of great eſtimatiō called Ordinis Ducalis. This man beholding the meruailous conſtancie of the Martyrs, thirſted with the deſire of Martyrdome, for that he had priuily learned the Chriſtian religion. Therfore he not abiding for other accuſers, detected himſelf, and worthely profeſſed that he was a chriſtian, openly execrating the madneſſe and vanitie of the wicked Ethnikes. He therefore being caried away, was tyed vp, beyng firſt moſt bitterly beaten. After that he was parched with fire, beyng put vnto his bowels, and thē baſted with ſalt and vinagre, and laſtly, ſo ſcotched & bemangled with the ſhardes of ſharpe and cutting ſhels, that his whole body ſemed to be all one continual wound, howbeit, by gods great goodnes afterward, it was reſtored to the firſt integritie. After this he was caried away to Sebaſtia, where, wͭ his companion Oreſt he was burned. At that tyme alſo ſuffred Eugenius, Auxentius, Mardarius, Nicepho.Lib.7.cap.14. And in no leſſe wiſe raged this perſecution throughout al Egypt: where Euſebius in his 8. booke, and 13. chapter maketh mention of Peleus and Nilus Martyrs and byſhops in Egypt. But at Alexandria eſpecially were declared moſt notable conflictes of Chriſtian and true conſtant Martyrs that ſuffred: which Phileas the Biſhop of Thumitane deſcribeth as after (God willing) ſhalbe declared. In this perſecution of Alexandria, the principall that then ſuffred was Peter the biſhop of Alexandria, with the Elders of yͤ ſame moſt worthy Martyrs, as Fauſtus, Didius, and Ammonius, alſo Phileas, Heſichius, Pachiminus, and Theodorus, which all were biſhops of the congregations within Egypt, and beſides them, many other both famous and ſingular mē. The whole legion of Chriſtian ſouldiours which lay at Thebes in Egypt, vnder the chriſtian captaine Mauritius, when they would not obey the Emperours commaundement touching the worſhippyng of Images, were tythed to death once, and then againe. And at laſt through the exhortation of Mauritius, dyed altogether like conſtant Martyrs. Vincentius in ſpeculo, Lib 13.cap.2. Likewiſe at Antino diuers Chriſtian ſouldiours, notwithſtanding they were ſeriouſly diſſuaded, ſuffred death together, amongſt whome were Aſcla, Philemon, and Apollonius, ibidem, cap.50. and alſo in yͤ other partes of Aphrica and Mauritania, was great perſecution, as Euſeb.Lib.8.cap.6. And at Aquileia the Emperour commaunded euery man to kill the Chriſtians. Vincentius, Lib.eodem cap.58. and amongeſt thoſe Martyrs he maketh mention of Felices, and Fortunatus. Reginus alſo writeth that in other places of Italy the perſecution became great, as at Florentia, Pergamus, Neaples Campania, Beneuentus, at Venuſa in Apulia, and in Thuſsia, and Henricus de Erfordia, ſaith, alſo at Verona. In France doubtleſſe Rectionarus appoynted to that office, played the cruell helhound, of whoſe great cruelty agaynſt yͤ Chriſtiās many hiſtories are full. At Mediolanus ſuffered Victor. And at Maſsilia, Maximianus ſet forth his decree, that either they ſhould all do ſacrifice to the Gods of the Gentils, or els be all ſlayne with diuers kindes of torments. Perſecution in Pontus.

Beda alſo ſayth, that this perſecution reached euen vnto the Britains in his booke De ratione temporum. And the Chronicle of Martinus, and the Noſegay of tyme do declare that all the Chriſtians in Britanny were vtterly deſtroyed. Furthermore, that the kindes of death & puniſhment were ſo great and horrible, as no mans tong is able to expreſſe. In the beginning, when the Emperour by his ſubtletie and wilines, rather dallied then ſhewed his rigor, he threatned them with bands and impriſonment: but within a while when he began to worke the matter in good earneſt, he deuiſed innumerable ſortes of torments & puniſhments, as whippings and ſcourgings, rackings, horrible ſcrapings, ſword, fire, and ſhip boates, wherin a great nūber beyng put, were ſunke & drowned in the bottom of the ſea. Euſeb.Lib 8.cap 6.& 7. Alſo hanging them vpon croſſes, binding them to the bodies of dead trees with their heads donneward, hanging them by the middles vpon gallowſes, til they dyed for hunger, throwyng them aliue to ſuch kind of wilde beaſtes as would deuour them, as Lyons, Beares, Libardes, and wild Buls. Euſeb.Lib.8.cap.8. Pricking and thruſting them in with bodkins and talants of beaſtes till they were almoſt dead, liftyng them vp a high with their heads donneward, euen as in Thebaide, they did vnto the women beyng naked and vnclothed, one of theyr feete tyed and lifted a high, & ſo hanging downe with theyr bodies, which thing to ſee was very pitifull, with other deuiſed ſortes of puniſhments moſt tragicall, or rather tirannicall, and pitiful to deſcribe: as firſt, the bindyng of thē to trees, and to the boughes therof. The pulling & tearing aſunder of their members and iointes, beyng tyed to the boughes and armes of trees. Euſeb.Lib 8.cap.9. The mangling of them with axes, the choking them with ſmoke by ſmall and ſoft fires, the diſmembring of their hands, eares, and feete, with other ioyntes, as the holy Martyrs of Alexandria, ſuffred, the ſcorching and broyling of them wͭ coales, not vnto death, but euery day renued. With ſuch kynde of torments the Martyrs at Antioche were afflicted. But in Pontus other horrible puniſhmentes and fearefull to bee heard, did the Martyrs of Chriſt ſuffer, of which, ſome had their fingers endes vnder the nayles thruſt in with ſharpe bodkins, ſome all to be ſprinckled with boylyng lead, hauing their moſt neceſſary members cut from them, ſome other ſuffryng moſt filthy, intollerable, and indurable tormentes and payne in theyr bowels and priuy members. Euſebius eodem, cap.12.

Perſecution in Alexandria.

The contentes of the Epiſtle of Phileas ſent to hys congregation.

Euſeb.lib.8. cap 10.

To conclude, how great the outrage of the perſecution which raigned in Alexandria, was, and with how many & ſundry kindes of new deuiſed puniſhments the Martyrs were afflicted: Phileas, the byſhop of the Thumitanes, a man ſingularly well learned, hath deſcribed in his epiſtle to the Thumitanes, the copy wherof Euſebius hath in his 8. booke & x. chapter, out of the which we meane here briefly to recite ſomewhat. Becauſe (ſayth he) euery man might torment the holy Martyrs as they liſted themſelues, ſome beat them with cudgels, ſome with rods, ſome with whippes, ſome with thongs, and ſome with cordes, and this example of beating was in ſundry wiſe executed, and with much crueltie. For ſome of them hauyng their handes bound behynde their backes, were lifted vp vpon tymber logs, and with certaine inſtruments their members & ioints were ſtretched forth, whereon their whole bodies hanging, were ſubiect to the will of the tormentors, who were commaunded to afflict them with all maner of torments, and not on their ſides onely (like as homicides were) but vpon their bellies, thighes, and legges, they ſcratched them with the talents and clawes of wylde beaſts. Some other were ſeene to hang by one hand vpon the engine, wherby they might feele the more grieuous pullyng out of the reſt of their ioyntes and members. Some other were ſuche ſort bound vnto pillers with their faces turned to the wall, hauing no ſtay vnder their feete, and were violently wayed downe with the payſe of their bodies, that by reaſon of their ſtraight binding, they beyng drawn out, might be more greuouſly tormēted. And this ſuffered they not onely during the tyme of their examination, and while the Shiriffe had to do with them, but alſo the whole day long. And whileſt the Iudge went thus from one to another, he by his authoritie appointed certaine officers to attende vpon thoſe he left,and not to be let downe vntill either through the intollerablenes of the payne,or by the extremitie of cold,they being neare the point of death,ſhould be let downe: and ſo were they haled vpon the ground. And further they were commaunded that they ſhould ſhew not ſo much as one ſparke of mercy or compaſſion vpon vs,but ſo extremely and furiouſly did deale with vs, as though our ſoules and bodies ſhould haue died together. And therfore yet an other torment our aduerſaries deuiſed to augmēt our former plagues. After that they had moſt lamentably beaten them,they deuiſed moreouer a new kinde of racke, wherein they lying vpright, were ſtretched by both the feete aboue the fourth ſtop or hole with ſharpe ſhels or ſhares ſtrowed vnder them, after a ſtrange kind of engine to vs here vnknowen. Other ſome were caſt downe vpon the pauement where they were oppreſſed ſo thicke, and ſo grieuouſly with tormentes, that it is not almoſt to be thought what afflictions they ſuffred.

Straunge kindes of tormentes.

Thus they lying in paines and torments, ſome died therwith, not a little ſhaming and confounding their enemies by their ſingular pacience. Some halfe dead and halfe aliue, were thruſt into priſon, where ſhortly after by paynes and woundes of their bodies they ended their bitter life. Some again beyng cured of their woundes by their indurance in priſon,were more confirmed,who beyng put to the choiſe whether they would come to their curſed ſacrifice, and enioy their wicked libertie, or els ſuſtaine the ſentence of death, did willingly and without delay abide the extremitie, remembring with themſelues what is written in the Scriptures: He that ſacrificeth (ſayth he) to ſtraunge Gods, ſhall be exterminate,&c. Item, thou ſhalt not haue any ſtrange Gods beſide me,&c. Thus much wrote Phileas to the Congregation where he was Biſhop, before he receyued the ſentence of death,beyng yet in bandes, and in the ſame exhorteth his brethren conſtantly to perſiſt after his death, in the truth of Chriſt profeſſed. Euſeb Lib 8.cap.10.

But Platina writeth that Dorotheus and Gorgonius exhorteth him to dye ſo conſtantly.

But as all their torments were for their horribleneſſe, meruailous and notable, and therewithall ſo ſtudiouſly, deuiſed, & no leſſe greuous and ſharpe: ſo notwithſtāding therwith were theſe Martyrs neither diſmayd, nor ouercome, but rather thereby confirmed and ſtrengthened, ſo merily and ioyfully ſuſtained they what ſo euer was put vnto them. Euſebius ſayth that he himſelfe beheld and ſawe the huge and great perſecution that was done in Thebaide, in ſo much that the very ſwordes of the hangmen and perſecutors beyng blunt with the great and often ſlaughter, they themſelues for wearines ſate downe to reſt them,and other were fayne to take their places. And yet all this notwithſtanding the murthered chriſtians,ſhewed their meruailous readines,willingnes,and diuine fortitude, which they were indued with,with ſtout courage, ioy, and ſmiling,receiuing the ſentence of death pronounced vpon thē, and ſong euen vnto the laſt gaſpe, Hymnes and Pſalmes to God. So did alſo the Martyrs of Alexandria,as witneſſeth Phileas aboue mentioned. The holy martyrs (ſaith he) keping Chriſt in their myndes, beyng led with the loue of better rewardes,ſuſtained not onely at one tyme, whatſoeuer labour and deuiſed puniſhments they had to lay vpon them: but now alſo the ſecond tyme haue done the ſame, and haue borne all the manaces of the cruell ſouldiors,not onely in wordes,wherwith they threatned them, but alſo whatſoeuer in deede and worke they could deuiſe to their deſtruction, and that with moſt manly ſtomackes, excluding all feare,with the perfection of their inſpeakable loue towards Chriſt, whoſe great ſtrength and fortitude cānot by wordes bee expreſſed. Wherwith the tyrant beyng wrathfull and all moued, commaunded euery tenth man of that whole band to be put to the ſworde, whereto ſtriuingly and with great reioyſing they committed their neckes. To which notable thing and great force of fayth, Mauritius himſelfe was a great incourager, who by & by with a moſt graue Oration exhorted & animated his ſouldiours both to fortitude & cōſtancie. Which beyng again called of ẏ Emperor,anſwered in this wiſe ſaying: We are O Emperour your ſouldiours,but yet alſo to ſpeake freely, the ſeruants of god. We owe to thee ſeruice of war, to him innocēcie: of thee we receaue for our trauell, wages: of hym the beginning of lyfe. But in this we may in no wayes obey thee O Emperour,to deny God our author and Lord,and not onely ours,but your Lord likewiſe, will ye,nill ye. If we be not ſo extreemely enforced that we offend him, doubtles as we haue hitherto before, we will yet obey you, but otherwiſe we will rather obey hym then you . We offer here our handes agaynſt any other enemies: but to defile our handes with the bloud of innocentes,that we may not doe. Theſe right hands of ours haue ſkill to fight agaynſt the wicked and true enemies: but to ſpoyle and murder the godly and Citizens, they haue no ſkill at all. We haue in remembraunce how we tooke armour in hand for the defence of the Citizens, and not agaynſt them. We fought alwayes for iuſtice ſake, pietie, and for the health of innocentes. Theſe haue bene alwayes the rewardes of our perils and trauell We haue fought in the quarreil of fayth, whiche in no wiſe we can keepe to you, if we doe not ſhewe the ſame to our God. We are here ready to confeſſe God the author of all thinges, and beleue in hys ſonne Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. We ſee before our eyes our fellowes and partakers of our labours and trauailes, to be put to the ſword, and we ſprinkled with their bloud, of which our moſt bleſſed companions and brethrē,their end and death we haue not bewayled nor mourned, but rather haue bene glad, and haue reioyced

The extreeme neceſsitie of death cannot moue vs agaynſt your maieſty, neyther yet any deſpiratiō, O Emperour, which is wont in ventrous affayres to do much, ſhal ſtyre vs agaynſt you. With which their aunſwer the kyng beyng altogether incenſed and moued, commaunded the ſecond tyme the tenth man of them that were left to be in like caſe murdered. That crueltie alſo beyng accompliſhed, at length whē the chriſtian ſouldiours would in no wiſe condeſcend vnto his mynde, he ſet vpon them with his whole hoſt, both footemen and alſo horſemen, and charged them to kil them all. Who with all force ſet vpon them, they making no reſiſtance, but throwyng downe their armour, yelded theyr lyues to the perſecutors, and offered to them theyr naked bodies.

Mauritius and hys company Martyred.

Victor at the ſame tyme was not of that bande, nor yet then any ſouldiour, but one beyng an old ſouldior, and diſmiſſed for his age. At which tyme he comming ſodainly vpon them as they were bancketting and making mery with the ſpoyles of the holy Martyrs, was bidden to ſit downe with them: and firſt aſking the cauſe of that their ſo great reioyſing, and vnderſtanding the truth therof, deteſted the gueſtes, and refuſed to eate with them. And then being demaunded of them whether happily he were a Chriſtian or no, openly confeſſed and denied not, but that he was a chriſtian, and euer would be. And therupon they ruſhing vpō him, killed him, and made him partner of the like Martyrdome and honour.

Victor Martyr.

Beda in his hiſtory writeth, that this perſecution beyng vnder Diocleſian, endured vnto the ſeuenth yere of Conſtantinus, and Euſeb Lib 8.cap.6 ſayth, that it laſted vntill the x. yeare of Conſtantinus. It was not yet one yeare from the day in which Diocleſian & Maximianus ioynyng themſelues together, began their perſecution, when that they ſawe the number of the Chriſtians rather to encreaſe then to diminiſh, notwithſtanding all the cruelty that euer they coulde ſhew, and now were out of all hope for the vtter rootyng out of them, which thing was the cauſe of their firſt enterpriſe, and had now euen their fill of bloud, and lothed as it were, the ſhedding thereof, they ceaſed at the laſt of theyr owne accord to put any mo chriſtians to death: But yet of a great multitude they did thruſt out their right eyes, and maymed their left legs at the hamme with a ſearing iron, condemning them to the mines of mettals, not ſo much for the vſe of their labour, as for the deſire of afflicting them. And this was the clemencie and releaſe of the crueltie of thoſe Princes, which ſayd that it was not meete that the cities ſhould be defiled with the bloud of citizens, and to make the Emperours highneſſe to bee defamed with the name of crueltie, but to ſhew his princely beneficence and liberalitie to all men. Euſebius, Lib.8.cap 10.

The number of the Chriſtians increaſed for all this perſecutiō.

Diocleſian and Maximinian were tyred with perſecution, and gaue vp their kingdome.

Euſe lib.8. cap.10.

When Diocleſianus and Maximianus had raigned together Emperours twenty yeares and one (Nicephorus ſaith xxij. yeares) at length Diocleſian put himſelfe from his imperiall dignitie at Nicomedia, and liued at Salona, Maximinianus at Mediolanum, and led both of thē a priuate life in the 309. yeare after Chriſt. This ſtrange and meruailous alteration gaue occaſion, and ſo came to paſſe, that within ſhort ſpace after, there were in the Romaine commō welth many Emperours at one tyme.

Anno 309.

In the beginning of this perſecution, you heard how Diocleſian beyng made Emperour, toke to him Maximinian. Alſo how theſe two gouerning as Emperours together, thoſe other two Cæſars vnder them, to wit, Galerius Maximinus & Conſtantius the father of Conſtantine the great. Thus then Diocleſian raigning with Maximinian, in the 19. yeare of his raigne, began his furious perſecution againſt the chriſtians, whoſe raigne after the ſame continued not long. For ſo it pleaſed God to put ſuch a ſnaffle in the tyrants mouth, that within two yeares after, he cauſed both him and Maximinian (for what cauſe he knoweth) to geue ouer his Imperial function, and ſo to remayne not as emperours any more, but as priuate perſones. So that they beyng now diſplaced and diſpoſſeſſed, the Imperial dominion remayned in Conſtantius & Galerius Maximinus, which two deuided the whole Monarchie betwene them: ſo that Maximinus ſhould gouerne the Eaſt countreys, & Conſtantius the weſt partes. But Conſtantius as a modeſt Prince, onely contented with the Imperial title, refuſed Italy and Aphrike, contenting himſelf only with Fraunce, Spaine, and Britaine. Wherefore Galerius Maximinus choſe to hym his two ſonnes Maximinus and Seuerus. Likewiſe Conſtantius toke Conſtantinus his ſonne, Cæſar vnder him. In the meane tyme, while Maximinus with his two Cæſars were in Aſia, the Romaine ſouldiours ſet vp for their emperour Maxentius the ſonne of Maximinian, who had before depoſed himſelfe. Againſt whom Maximinus the Emperour of the Eaſt, ſent his ſonne Seuerus, which Seuerus was ſlayne in the ſame voyage of Maxentius. In whoſe place then Maximinus toke Licinius. And theſe were the Emperours and Cæſars, which ſucceeding after Diocleſian, and Maximinian, proſecuted the reſt of that perſecution, which Diocleſian and Maximinian before begun, duryng neare the ſpace of ſeuen or viij. yeares, which was to the yeare of our Lorde, 318. Saue onely that Conſtantius with his ſonne Conſtantinus, was no great doer therin, but rather a maintainer and a ſupporter of the Chriſtians. Which Conſtantius ſurnamed Chlorus for his paleneſſe, was the ſonne of Eutropius, a mā of great nobilitie of the Romaine nation, as Lætus affirmeth. He came of the lyne of Æneas and Claudia the doughter of Claudius Auguſtus. This man had not the deſire of great and mightie dominion, and therfore parted he the Empire with Galerius, and would rule but in Fraunce, Britaine, and Spayne, refuſing the other kingdomes for the troubleſome and difficult gouernment of the ſame. Otherwiſe he was a Prince, as Eutropius maketh deſcription of him, very excellent, ciuill, meeke, gentle, liberall, and deſirous to do good vnto thoſe that had any priuate authoritie vnder him. And as Cyrus once ſayd, that he gaue treaſure inough, when he made his frendes rich: euen ſo it is ſayd that Conſtantius would often tymes ſay, that it were better that his ſubiects had treaſure, then he to haue it in his treaſure houſe. Alſo he was by nature ſuffiſed with a litle, In ſo much, that he vſed to eate and drinke in earthen veſſels (which thing was counted in Agathocles the Sicilian, a great commendation) and if at any tyme cauſe required to garniſh his table, he would ſend for plate and other furniture to his frendes. To theſe vertues he added yet a more worthy ornament, that is, deuotion, loue, and affection towardes the word of God, as Euſeb.Lib.8.cap.13. affirmeth, after which vertues enſued great peace and tranquillitie in all his Prouinces: By which worde he being guided, neither leuied any warres contrary to pietie and chriſtian religion, neither he aided anye other that did the ſame: neither deſtroyed he the churches, but commaunded that the chriſtians ſhould be preſerued and defended, and kept them ſafe from all contumelious iniuries. And when that in the other iuriſdictions of the Empire, the congregatiōs were moleſted with perſecution, as Sozomenus declareth, Lib.1.cap.6. he only gaue licence vnto the Chriſtians to liue after their accuſtomed maner. This wonderfull acte of his followyng, beſides other, doth ſhew that he was a ſincere worſhipper of the chriſtian religion.

Zozomenus.lib. cap.6.

Thoſe which bare the chiefe offices among the Ethnikes, draue out of the emperors court all the godly Chriſtians: wherupon this enſued, that the Emperors themſelues at the laſt, were deſtitute of helpe, when ſuche were driuen away, which dwelling in their courtes, and lyuyng a godly lyfe, poured out their prayers vnto God for ye proſperous eſtate and health both of the Empire & Emperor. Conſtantius therefore mindyng at a certayne tyme to try what ſincere and good Chriſtians he had yet in hys courte, called together all hys officers and ſeruauntes in the ſame, faynyng himſelfe to choſe out ſuch as would do ſacrifice to deuils, and that thoſe only ſhould dwell there & kepe their offices, and that thoſe which would refuſe to doe the ſame, ſhould be thruſt out & baniſhed the court. At this appointment, all the courtiers deuided themſelues into companies. The Emperour marked which were the conſtanteſt & godlieſt from the reſt. And when ſome ſayd that they would willingly do ſacrifice, other ſome openly and boldly denied to do the ſame: Then the Emperour ſharply rebuked thoſe which were ſo ready to doe ſacrifice, & iudged them as falſe traitors vnto God, accountyng them vnworthy to bee in his court, which were ſuch traitors to God, and forthwith commaunded that they only ſhould be baniſhed the ſame. But greatly he commended them, which refuſed to doe ſacrifice and confeſſed God, affirmyng that they onely were worthy to be about a prince, forthwith commaundyng that thenceforth they ſhould be the truſty counſellers and defēders both of his perſon & kingdom, ſaying thus much more, that they onely were worthy to be in office, whome he might make accompt of as his aſſured frendes, and that he meant to haue them in more eſtimation, then the ſubſtāce he had in his treaſurie. Euſebius maketh mention hereof in his firſt booke of the life of Conſtantinus, and alſo Sozomenus in his 1. booke and 6. chap.

Maximinus an enemy to the Chriſtians.

With this Conſtantius was ioyned (as hath bene aforeſayd) Galerius Maximinus, a man as Eutropius affirmeth, very ciuill and a paſſing good ſouldior: Furthermore, a fauourer of wiſe and learned men, of a quiet diſpoſition, not rigorous, but in his dronkenneſſe, wherof he would ſone after repent him, as Victor writeth. whether he meaneth Maximinus the father, or Maximinus his ſonne, it is vncertayne. But Euſebius farre otherwiſe deſcribeth the conditions of him in his viij. booke, and firſt chapter. For he ſayth he was of a tyrannicall diſpoſition: The fearefulleſt man that might be, and curious in all magicall ſuperſtition, in ſo much that without the diuinatiõs and aunſweres of diuels he durſt do nothing at al, & therefore he gaue great offices and dignityes to enchaunters. Furthermore that he was an exactor and extortioner of the Citizens, liberall to thoſe that were flatterers, geuen to ſurfeting and riote, a great drinker of wine, and in his furious dronkenneſſe moſt like a mad man, a Ribaud, an adulterer, which came to no City but he rauiſhed virgins & defiled mens wiues. To conclude he was ſo great an idolater, that he built vp Temples in euery City, and repayred thoſe that were fallen in great decay: and he choſe out the moſt worthieſt of his politicall Magiſtrates to be the idols prieſtes, and deuiſed that they ſhould execute that their office with great authority and dignity, and alſo with warlike pompe. But to Chriſtian piety and religion he was moſt incenſiue, and in the Eaſt Churches exerciſed cruel perſecution, and vſed as executioners of the ſame, Pencetius, Quintianus, and Theotechnus beſide others.

The wickednes of Maximinus deſcribed.

A terrible plague ſent by God to Maximinus.

Notwithſtanding he was at length reuoked from his cruelty by the iuſt iudgemẽt and puniſhment of God. For he was ſodenly vexed with a fatall diſeaſe moſt filthy and deſperate, which diſeaſe to deſcribe was very ſtraunge, taking the firſt beginning in his fleſh outwardly, frõ thence it proceeded more and more to the inward parts of his bodye. For in the priuy members of his body ther happened vnto him a ſuddayne putrifactiõ, and after in the bottome of the ſame a botchy corrupt bile, with a Fiſtula, cõſuming & eating vp his entrals, out of the which came ſwarming forth an innumerable multitude of lice, with ſuch a peſtiferous ſtinche that no man coulde abide him, and ſo muche more, for that all the groſeneſſe of his body by aboundance of meat before he fell ſick, was turned alſo into a fat: which fat now putrified, and ſtincking was ſo vgſome and horrible, that none that came to him coulde abide the ſight therof. By reaſon whereof, the Phiſitions which had him in cure, ſome of the not able to abide the intollerable ſtinch were commaunded to be ſlayne. Other ſome becauſe they could not heale him being ſo ſwollen and paſt hope of cure were alſo cruelly put to death. At length being put in remembraunce that his diſeaſe was ſent of God, he began to forethinke the wickedneſſe that he had done agaynſt the ſayntes of God, and ſo comming agayne to himſelfe, firſt confeſſeth vnto god all his offences, then calling them vnto him which were about him, forthwith commaunded all men, to ceaſe from the perſecutions of the Chriſtians. Requiring moreouer that they ſhould ſet vp his Imperiall proclamatiõs, for the reſtoring and reedyfying of their temples, and that they would obtayne this of the Chriſtians, in their aſſemblies (which without all feare and doubt they might be bolde to make) that they would deuoutly pray to theyr God for the Emperour. Then forthwith was the perſecution ſtayed, and the Imperiall proclamations in euery City were ſet vp, contayning the retraction or countermaund of thoſe thinges which agaynſt the Chriſtians were before decreed, the copy whereof enſueth.

Maximinus killeth hys phiſitions.

Maximinus countermaund in the behalfe of the Chriſtians.

Amongſt other thinges which for the benefite and cõmodity of the common weale we eſtabliſhed, we cõmaunded to reforme all thinges according to the auncient lawes and publicke diſcipline of the Romaines, and alſo to vſe this pollicy, that the Chriſtians which had forſaken the religion of their forefathers ſhould be brought agayne to the right way. For ſuch phãtaſticall ſingularity was amongſt them, that thoſe thinges which their elders had receiued and allowed, they relected and diſallowed; deuiſing euery man ſuch lawes as they thought good, and obſerued the ſame, aſſembling in diuers places great multitudes of people.

Therefore when our foreſaid decree was proclaymed, many there were that felt the penalty therof, and many being troubled therefore ſuffered many kindes of death. And becauſe we ſee yet that there be many which perſeuere in the ſame, which neither geue due worſhip vnto the Celeſtiall Gods neither receiue the God of the Chriſtians; we hauing reſpect to our accuſtomed benignitie, wherewith we are wont to ſhew fauour vnto all men, thinke good in this cauſe alſo to extend our clemencye, that the Chriſtians may be agayne tollerated, and appoynt them places where againe they may meet together, ſo that they doe nothing contrary to publick order and diſcipline. By an other Epiſtle we meane to preſcribe vnto the iudges, what ſhal be conuenient for them to do. Wherefore according as this our bountifull clemencie deſerueth, let them make interceſsion to God for our health, common weale, and for themſelus, that in all places the ſtate of of the common weale may be preſerued, and that they themſelues may be able ſafely to liue within their bondes. Euſeb. lib. 8. cap. vltimo.

Euſeb. lib. 8. cap. vlt.

But one of his inferior officers whoſe name was alſo Maximinus, was not well pleaſed when this countermaũd was publiſhed throughout all Aſia, and the Prouinces where he had to do. Yet he being qualified by this example that it was not conuenient for him to repugn the pleaſure of thoſe Princes which had the chiefe authority as Conſtantius and Maximinus, ſet forth of himſelfe no edict touching the ſame: but commaunded his officers in the preſence of others, that they ſhould ſomewhat ſtay from the perſecution of the Chriſtians: of which commaundement of the inferiour Maximinus, each of them gaue intelligence vnto their fellowes by their letters. But Sabinus which then amongſt them all, had the chiefeſt office and dignitie: to the ſubſtitutes of euery countrey, wrote by his letters the Emperours pleaſure in this wiſe.

Sabinus in the fauour of the chriſtians publiſheth the decree.

The maieſtie of our moſt gracious and Soueraigne Lordes the Emperours, hath lately decreed with ſpeciall diligence and deuotiõ, to induce all men to an vniforme life, ſo that they which ſeemed to diſſent from the Romaine cuſtome by a ſtraunge maner of liuing, ſhoulde exhibite to the immortall Gods their due and proper worſhipp, but the wilfull and obſtinate minde of diuers ſo much, and ſo cõtinually reſiſted the ſame, that by no lawfull meanes they might be reuoked from their purpoſe, neither made afraid by any terror or puniſhment. Becauſe therefore it ſo came to paſſe, that by this meanes many put themſelues in perill and ieoperdy: The maieſtie of our ſoueraigne Lordes the Emperours according to their noble pietie, conſidering that it was far from the meaning of their princely maieſties that ſuche thinges ſhould be, whereby ſo many men and muche people ſhould be, deſtroyd, gaue me in charge that with diligence I ſhoulde write vnto you, that if any of the Chriſtians from henceforth fortune to be taken in the exerciſe of their religion, that in no wiſe you moleſt the ſame, neither for that cauſe you doe iudge any man worthy of puniſhment: for that in all this time it hath euidentlye appeared that by no meanes they might be allured from ſuch wilfulneſſe. It is therefore requiſite that your wiſdome write vnto the Queſtors, Captaynes, and Conſtables of euery City and village, that they may know it not to be lawfull for them, or any of them, to do contrary to the preſcript of this commaundement, neither that they preſume to attempt the ſame. Euſeb. lib. 9. cap. 1.

Euſeb. lib. 9. Cap. 1.

Perſecution ceaſeth for a time.

The gouernours therefore of euery prouince, ſuppoſing this to be the determinate pleaſure (and not fayned) of the Emperour, did firſt aduertiſe thereof, the ruſticall & Pagan multitude: After that they releaſed and ſet at libertye all ſuche priſoners as were condempned to the mettall mines, & to perpetuall impriſonmẽt for their fayth, thinking therby (where in deed they were deceiued) that the doing thereof would well pleaſe the Emperor. This therfore ſeemed to them as vnlooked for, and as light to trauellers in a darcke night. They gather themſelues together in euery City, they call their Synodes and counſels, & much marueill at the ſodden chaunge and alteration. The Infidels themſelues extoll the onely and true God of the Chriſtians. The Chriſtians receiue agayne all their former libertie, and ſuch as fell away before in the tyme of perſecution, repent themſelues and after penaunce done, they returned agayne to the congregation. Nowe the Chriſtians reioyced in euery Citty, prayſing God with hymnes and Pſalmes. Euſebius ibidem. This was a marueilous ſodaine alteration of the Church, from a moſt vnhappy ſtate into a better, but ſcarce ſuffered Maximinus the Tyraunt the ſame vj. monethes vnuiolated to continue. For whatſoeuer ſeemed to make for the ſubuerſion of the ſame peace (yet ſcarcely hatched) that did he onely meditate. And firſt of all he toke from the Chriſtians all libertie and leaue for them to aſſemble and congregate in churchyardes vnder a certayne colour. After that he ſent certayne Miſcreants vnto the Athenians, to ſollicite them agaynſt the Chriſtians, and to prouoke them to aſke of him as a recompence and great reward, that he would not ſuffer any Chriſtian to inhabite in their countrey: and amongeſt them was one Theotechnus, a moſt wicked miſcreant, an inchaunter, and a moſt deadly enemy agaynſt the Chriſtians. He firſt made the way whereby the Chriſtians were put out of credite, and accuſed to the Emperour, to which end alſo he erected a certayne Idoll of Iupiter to be worſhipped of the inchaunters and coniurers, and mingled the ſame worſhip with ceremonies, full of deteſtable witchcraft. Laſtly, he cauſed the ſame Idoll to geue this ſound out of hys mouth.

And the ſame ſentence did the reſt of the gouernors of the prouinces publiſh againſt the Chriſtians, and thus at length perſecution began to kindle againſt them. Maximinus appoynted and inſtituted high prieſtes and biſhops in euery citie to offer ſacrifice vnto Idoles, & inueigled all thoſe that were in great offices vnder him, that they ſhould not onely ceaſe to pleaſure them & to do for them, but alſo that they ſhould with new deuiſed accuſatiōs agaynſt thē, at their pleaſure, put as many to death as by any meanes they might. They alſo did counterfet certayne practiſes of Pilate againſt our ſauiour Chriſt full of blaſphemie, and ſent the ſame into all the Empire of Maximinus by their letters, commaunding that the ſame ſhoulde be publiſhed and ſet vp in euery citie and ſuburbes of the ſame, and that they ſhould be deliuered to yͤ ſcholemaiſters, to cauſe their ſcholers to learne by roate the ſame.

After that one named Præfectus caſtrorum, whome the Romaines do call captaine, allured certaine light womē, partly by feare, and partly by puniſhment, dwelling at Damaſcus in Phenicia, and taken out of the court wherein they were accuſed, that they ſhoulde openly ſay in wryting that they were once Chriſtians, and that they knewe what wicked & laſciuious actes the Chriſtians were wont to execute amongſt themſelues vpon the ſondaies, & what other things they thought good to make more of their own head, to the ſlander of the Chriſtians. The capitaine ſheweth vnto the emperour theer wordes, as though it had bene ſo in deede, and the Emperour by and by commanded the ſame to be publiſhed throughout euery city. Furthermore, they did hange vp in the midſt of euery Citie (which was neuer done before) the Emperours edicts againſt yͤ Chriſtians, grauen in tables of braſſe. And the children in the ſcholes with great noiſe and clapping of handes did euery day reſound, the contumelious blaſphemies of Pilate vnto Ieſus, & what other things ſo euer were deuiſed of the magiſtrates, after moſt deſpitefull maner. The lyke argument of wether & corne, & plenty, made the vnfaithfull Iewes, and alſo make now our faythleſſe Papiſtes.

The weake and imbecil rebellion of mans minde (all obſcuritie and blindneſſe of ignorance ſet aparte, which hetherto hath wrapped the mindes of impious and miſerable men, in the pernitious darkeneſſe of ignoraunce) is now at the length able to diſcerne, that the ſame is gouerned, as alſo corroborated by the prouidence of the immortall gods the louers of vertue: which thing, how acceptable it is to vs, howe pleaſant and gratefull, and howe much proofe the ſame hath declared of your wel diſpoſed willing minds, is incredible to be tolde: Although this was not vnknown before with what diligence and deuotion yee ſerued the immortall Gods, whoſe wonderfull and conſtant faith is not knowen by bare and naked wordes, but by your worthy & notable deeds. Wherefore worthely is your Citie called the habitation and ſeate of the immortall Gods, and by many examples it appeareth that the ſame flouriſheth, and proſpereth by the preſence of the celeſtiall Gods. For beholde, your Citie not regarding your priuate buſineſſes, nor eſteeming that which ſhoulde haue bene for the ſpeciall commoditie thereof, when it perceaued that curſed vanitie to begin againe to creepe, and as a fire negligently quenched, when the dead brandes thereof began to kindle and make a great flame: by and by without delay ye hauing recourſe vnto our pietie, as vnto the Metropolitan of all diuine worſhip and Religion, craued remedie and helpe, which wholeſome minde for your pieties ſake, it is moſt manifeſt that the gods haue indued you with. Therefore hee, euen that moſt mightie Iupiter I ſay, which preſerueth your moſt famous Citie: to that intent he might deliuer and make free your countrey Gods, your wiues and children, your houſholde Gods and houſes, from all deteſtable corruption, hath inſpired you with this wholeſome and willing minde, ſhewing & declaring howe worthy, notable, and healthfull a thing it is to worſhip & to ſacrifice to the immortall Gods. For who is ſo void of reaſon & vnderſtanding, that knoweth not that this thing happeneth vnto vs by the carefull ſtudie of the goodnes of our gods, that the grounde denieth not to geue her timely increaſe, nor maketh fruſtrate the husband mans hope, nor that wicked warre dare ſhew her face vpon the earth, nor that the corruption of the aire is nowe cauſe of peſtilence, neither that the ſea ſwelleth with immoderate windes, neither that ſodaine ſtormes are cauſe of hurtfull tempeſtes. To conclude, that the ground which is as the nurce and mother of all things, is not ſwallowed vp of her deepe chappes and gapings, by terrible earthquake, neither that the hils made leuell with the earth, are not with gaping cliftes deuoured, all which euils and greater then theſe, before this time to haue happened euery mā knoweth. And all theſe miſchiefes came vpō vs for the pernitious errours ſake of the extreeme follie of thoſe wicked men the Chriſtanis, when filthineſſe it ſelfe (as I may call it) ſo occupied their mindes, and ouerranne the worlde. Let them beholde the fieldes nowe all about full of corne, and ouerflowen as it were with eares of corne. Let them vewe the pleaſant medowes clothed with flowers, and moiſtned with ſhowers from heauen, and alſo the pleaſant and temperate weather. Therefore let all men reioyce, that by your pietie, ſacrifices, & worſhipping, the maieſtie of the moſt ſtearne God of battell Mars is appeaſed, & that therfore we enioy pleaſant & firme peace. And how many ſo euer haue left that blind errour and ſtraying of the Chriſtians vnfainedly, and be of a better minde, let them ſpecially reioyce, as men deliuered out of a ſodaine great tempeſt, and from a greeuous diſeaſe, and haue afterward obtained a delectable and pleaſant life. For doubtleſſe, if they had remained in that execrable vanitie, farre of had they bene chaſed from your Citie & ſuburbs of the ſame (according to your deſire) that your Citie by that meanes, according to your commēdable diligence, clenſed from all impuritie and impietie, may offer ſacrifices according to the meaning of the ſame, with due reuerence of the immortall Gods. And that you may perceiue in how good part your ſupplication (yea vnasked and deſired) we are moſt willing and ready to further your honeſt endeuours, and graunt vnto you for your deuotion, whatſoeuer you aske of our magnificence. And that thys thing may be accompliſhed, forthwith aske and haue. And thys thing with all ſpeede, indeuour you to obtaine, which ſhall bee a perpetuall teſtimony of pietie exhibited of your Citie to the immortall Gods, and ſhalbe a preſident to your children and poſteritie, and withall you ſhall obtaine of vs for this your willing deſire of reformation, condygne and worthy rewardes. Thus came it to paſſe that at the length perſecutiō was as great as euer it was, and the magiſtrates of euery prouince were very diſdainefull againſt the Chriſtians which cōdemned ſome to death, and ſome to exile. Among whom they condemned three chriſtians at Emiſa, in Phenicia, to whom Siluanus the biſhop a very old man, being 40. yeres in the eccleſiaſticall function, was condemned to death. At Nicomedia, Lucianus the elder of Antioche, brought thether, after he had exhibited to the emperour his Apologie concerning the doctrin of the Chriſtians, was caſt in pryſon, and after put to death. In Amaſea a City of Capadocia, Bringes the lieftenaunt of Maximinus, had at that time, the executing of that perſecution. At Alexandria, Petrus a moſt worthy byſhop was beheaded with whome manye other Egiptian byſhops alſo died. Euſeb.Lib.9.cap.7. Nicepho.Lib.7.cap.44. Quirinus the Byſhop Sceſcanius hauing a hannyll tyed about hys necke, was throwne headlong from the bridge, into the flood, and there a long while fleeted aboue the water, and when hee opened his mouth to ſpeake to the lookers on that they ſhoulde not be diſmaied with that his puniſhmēt, was with much a do drowned. Simplicius, Fauſtinus, Beatrix, Panthaleon, Georgius, Iuſtus, Leocandia, Anthonia, and other mo to an infinite number, ſuffered martirdome in this perſecution, whoſe names God hath written in the booke of life. Alſo Felix Victor, with his parents Lucia the widow, Gemenianus, with 79 others, Sabinus, Anaſtaſia, Chriſogonus, Felix, and Audactus, Adrianus, Nathalia, Eugenia, Agnes, alſo when ſhe was but 13. yeare old was martyred. Euſeb. in his 8. booke and 15. chap. rehearſeth theſe kinds of tormentes and puniſhmēts, that is to ſay, Fire, wilde beaſtes, the ſword, crucifyinges, the bottome of the ſea, the cutting and burning of mēbers, the thruſting out of eyes, diſmembring of the whole body, hūger, impriſonment, & whatſoeuer other cruelty yͤ Magiſtrates could deuiſe. All which notwithſtanding the godly ones, rather then that they woulde doe ſacrifice as they were bid, manfully endured. Neither were the womē any thing at al behind thē. For they beyng intiſed to the filthy vſe of their bodies, rather ſuffered baniſhmēt, or willingly killed themſelues. Neither yet could the Chriſtians liue ſafely in the wildernes, but were fetched euē frō thēce to death and tormentes, in ſo much that this was a more greeuous perſecution vnder Maximianus, the tyraunt, then

The worke of God agaynſt the foreſayd edict.

The proud and blaſphemous proclamation of the Emperour proued falſe and contrary.

And foraſmuch as yee haue hearde the cruell Edict of Maximinus proclaymed againſt the Chriſtians, grauen in braſſe, which he thought perpetually ſhould endure to the aboliſhing of Chriſt & his Religion: Now marke againe the great handy worke of God, which immediatly fel vpon the ſame, checking the proud preſumption of the tyrant, prouing al to be falſe and contrary, that in the braſen Proclamation was contained. For where the foreſaide Edict boaſted ſo much of the proſperitie and plentie of all things in the time of this perſecution of the Chriſtians, ſodenly befell ſuch vnſeaſonable drought with famine and peſtilēce among the people, beſides alſo the warres with the Armenians, that all was founde vntrue that hee had bragged ſo much of before. By reaſon of which famine and peſtilence ẏ people were greatly conſumed, in ſo much that one meaſure of wheat was ſold for two thouſand and fiue hundred peeces of money of Athens coyne, by reaſon whereof innumerable died in the Cities, but many more in the countrey and villages, ſo that moſt part of the huſbād men and countreymen died vp with the famine and peſtilence. Diuers there were which bringing out their beſt treaſure, were glad to geue it for any kinde of ſuſtenāce, were it neuer ſo litle. Other ſelling away their poſſeſſions, fel by reaſon thereof to extreme pouertie and beggary. Certaine eating graſſe, and feeding on other vnholſome herbes, were faine to relieue them ſelues with ſuch foode as did hurt and poyſon their bodies. Alſo a number of women in the Cities, being brought to extreme miſerie and penurie, were conſtrained to depart the Citie, and fal to begging through the cou̅trey. Some other were weake and faint (as Images without breath) wandring vp and downe, & not able to ſtand for feebleneſſe, fel downe in the middle of ẏ ſtreetes, and holding vp their handes moſt pitifull, cried for ſome ſcrappes or fragments of bread to be geuen them, & being at the laſt gaſpe, ready to geue vp the Ghoſt, and not able to vtter any other words, yet cried out that they were hūgry. Of the richer ſort diuers there were, who being weary with the number of beggers and askers, after they had beſtowed largely vpon them, became hard harted, fearing leaſt they ſhould fall into the ſame miſerie them ſelues, as they which begged. By reaſon wherof the market place, ſtreetes, lanes, and alleis lay full of dead & naked bodies, being caſt out and vnburied, to the pitifull & grieuous beholding of them that ſaw them. Wherefore many were eaten of dogges, for which cauſe they that liued fell to the killing of dogges, leaſt they running mad, ſhoulde fall vpon them, and kill them.

Ex Euſeb.lib.9. cap.8.

A terrible hunger among the heathen perſecutors deſcribed.

Peſtilence among the perſecutors.

In like maner the peſtilence ſcattering through all houſes and ages of men, did no leſſe conſume them, eſpecially thoſe which through plēty of vitail eſcaped famine. Wherfore the rich Princes Preſidentes and other innumerable of the Magiſtrates, being the more apt to receiue the infection, by reaſon of their plēty, were quickly diſpatched, and turned vp their heeles. Thus the miſerable multitude being conſumed with famine and with peſtilence, all places was full of mourning, neither was there any thing elſe ſeene, but wailing and weeping in euery corner. So that death, what for famine and peſtilence in ſhort time brake vp and conſumed whole houſholdes, two or three dead bodies being borne out together from one houſe to one funerall,

These were the rewards of the vaine bragges of Maximinus and his Edicts, which he did publiſh in all townes and Cities againſt vs, whē it was euident to al men, how diligent and charitable the Chriſtians were to them all in this their miſerable extremitie. For they onely in all this time of diſtreſſe, ſhewing compaſſion vpō them, trauelled euery day, ſome in curing the ſicke, & ſome in burying the dead, which otherwiſe of their owne ſort were forſaken. Other ſome of the Chriſtians calling and gathering the multitude together, which were in ieopardie of famine, diſtributed bread to them, whereby they miniſtred occaſion to all men to glorifie the God of the Chriſtians, and to confeſſe them to be the true worſhippers of God, as appeard by their workes. By the meanes and reaſon hereof, the great God and defender of the Chriſtians, who before had ſhewed his anger and indignation againſt al men, for their wrongfull afflicting of vs, opened againe vnto vs the comfortable light of his prouidence, ſo that by meanes thereof peace fell vnto vs, as light to them that ſit in darkneſſe, to the great admiration of all men, which eaſely perceiue God himſelfe to be a perpetuall director of our doings, who many times chaſteneth his people with calamities for a time to exerciſe them, but after ſufficient correction, againe ſheweth himſelfe mercifull and fauourable to them which with truſt call vpon him.

The charity of the Chriſtians to the enemyes. Let your light ſo ſhine among men, that they may ſee your good works and glorifie your father which is in heauen.

By the narration of theſe things heeretofore premiſed, taken out of the ſtorie of Euſebius, like as it is manifeſt to ſee, ſo is it wonderfull to marke and note, how thoſe counſailes and rages of the Gentiles, atchieued againſt Chriſt and his Chriſtians, when they ſeemed moſt ſure againſt them, were moſt againſt them ſelues. And whereby they thought moſt to confoūd the Church & Religion of Chriſt, the ſame turned moſt to their owne confuſion, and to the profite and praiſe of the Chriſtians, (God of his marueilous wiſedome ſo ordering & diſpoſing the end of things.) For where the braſen Edict of the Emperour promiſed temperate weather, God ſent drought, where it promiſed plentie, God immediatly ſent vpon them famine and penurie: where it promiſed health, God ſtroke them euen vpon the ſame, with grieuous peſtilence, and with other moe calamities, in ſuch ſort, that the moſt reliefe they had, was chiefly by the Chriſtians, to the great praiſe both of them, and to the honour of our God.

The wiſedome and pollicy of man ouerthrowne in hys owne turne. Qui comprehendit ſapientes in aſtutia.

Thus moſt plainely and euidently was then verified the true promiſe of Chriſt to his Church, affirming and aſſuring vs, that the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile againſt his Church builded vpō his faith: as ſufficiently may appeare by theſe x. perſecutiōs aboue ſpecified and deſcribed. Wherein as no man can deny, but that Sathan & his malignaunt world haue aſſayed the vttermoſt of their power and might to ouerthrow the Church of Ieſus: ſo muſt all men needes graunt, that read theſe ſtories, that when Sathan and the gates of hell haue done their worſt, yet haue they not preuailed againſt this mount of Sion, nor euer ſhall. For els what was here to be thought, where ſo many Emperours and tyraunts together, Diocleſian, Maximinian, Galerius, Maximinus, Seuerus, Maxentius, Licinius with their Captaines and officers, were let looſe, like ſo many Lyons, vpon a ſcattered and vnarmed flocke of ſheepe, intending nothing els, but the vtter ſubuerſion of all Chriſtianitie, and eſpecially alſo when lawes were ſet vp in braſſe againſt the Chriſtians, as a thing perpetually to ſtand: what was here to be looked for, but a finall deſolation of the name and Religion of Chriſtians? But what folowed, partly ye haue heard, partly more is to be marked, as in the ſtorie foloweth.

The promiſe of Chriſt verified. Mat.6. the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile agaynſt the Churche builded vpon the fayth of Chriſt,

I ſhewed before how Maxentius the ſonne of Maximinian, was ſet vp at Rome by the Pretorian ſouldiours to be Emperour. Whereunto the Senate, although they were not conſenting, yet for feare they were not reſiſting. Maximinian his father, who had before depriued him ſelfe with Diocleſian, hearing of this, tooke heart againe to him, to reſume his dignitie, and ſo laboured to perſwade Diocleſian alſo to do the ſame: but when he could not moue him therunto, he repaireth to Rome, thinking to wraſt the Empire out of his ſonnes hand: but when the ſouldiours woulde not ſuffer that, of a craftie purpoſe he flieth to Conſtantinus in Fraunce, vnder pretenſe to complaine of Maxentius his ſonne, but in very deede to kill Conſtantinus. Notwithſtāding that conſpiracie being detected by Fauſta the daughter of Maximinian, whom Conſtantinus had maryed, ſo was Conſtantinus through the grace of God preſerued, & Maximinian retired backe. In ẏ which his flight by the way hee was apprehended, and ſo put to death. And this is the end of Maximinian.

The death and end of Maximinian.

Now let vs returne to Maxentius againe, who all this while raigned at Rome, with tiranny and wickednes intollerable, much like to an other Pharao or Nero. For hee ſlewe the moſt part of his noble men, and tooke from them their goodes. And ſometime in his rage he would deſtroy great multitudes of the people of Rome by his ſouldiors, as Euſebius declareth, lib.8.cap.14. Alſo hee left no miſchienous nor laſciuious acte vnattempted, but was the vtter enemie of all womanly chaſtity, which vſed to ſend the honeſt wiues whome he had adulterated with ſhame and diſhoneſtie vnto their huſbandes (being worthy Senators) after that he had rauiſhed them. He abſhamed from no adulterous acte, but was inflamed with the inquencheable luſt of deflouring of women. Letus declareth that he being at a time farre in loue with a noble & chaſte gentlewoman of Rome, ſent vnto her ſuch courtiers of his, as were mete for that purpoſe, whome alſo he had in greater eſtimation then any others, and with ſuch was wont to cōſult about matters for the common weale. Theſe firſt fell vpon her huſbande and murdred him within his owne houſe, then when they coulde by no meanes neither with feare of the tyrant, nor with threatning of death pull her away from him: At length ſhe being a Chriſtian deſired leaue of them to go into her chamber, and after her prayers ſhee woulde accompliſh that which they requeſted. And when ſhe had gotten into her chamber, vnder this pretence, ſhe killed her ſelfe.

Then returned they and declared this matter to the Emperor, who was ſo far paſt ſhame, that in ſteade of repentance, hee was the more ſet on fire in attempting the like.

Euſeb. Lib. 8. cap. 15.

He was alſo much addict to the arte Magicall, which to execute, hee was more fitte then the Imperiall dignitie. Alſo ſometime he would rippe women when they were in laboure, and would ſearch the place where the infant lay, being borne a little before. Often he woulde inuocate Diuels in a ſecrete maner, and by the anſweres of them hee ſought to breake the warres, which he knew Conſtantinus and Licinius prepared againſt him. And to the ende hee might the rather perpetrate hys miſchieuous and wicked attemptes, which in his vngracious minde he had conceiued, according to his purpoſe, in the beginning of his raigne he fained himſelf to be a fauourer of the Chriſtians. In which thing doing, thinking to make the people of Rome hys friendes, hee commaunded that they ſhoulde ceaſe from perſecuting of the Chriſtians, and hee himſelfe in the meane ſeaſon abſtained from no contumelious vexation of them, till that he began at laſt to ſhewe hymſelfe an open perſecutour of them: at which time as Zonaras wryteth hee moſt cruelly raged againſt all the Chriſtians thereabouts, vexing them wͭ all maner of iniuries. Which thing he in no leſſe wiſe did, then Maximinus, as Euſe. in his 8. booke and 15. chap. ſeemeth to affirme. And Platina declareth in the life of Marcellus the Biſhop, that hee baniſhed a certaine noble woman of Rome, becauſe ſhee gaue her goodes to the Church.

This viſion reported and teſtified by conſtantine himſelfe to be true.

Thus by the grieuous tyranny and vnſpeakable wickedneſſe of thys Maxentius, the Citizens and Senatours of Rome, being much grieued and oppreſſed, ſent theyr complaintes wyth letters vnto Conſtantinus, wyth much ſute and moſt hearty petitions, deſiring hym to helpe and releaſe their Countrey and Citie of Rome: who hearyng and vnderſtanding theyr miſerable and pitifull ſtate, and grieued therewyth not a little, firſt ſendeth by letters to Maxentius, deſiring and exhorting him to refrayne his corrupt doinges, and great crueltie. But when no letters nor exhortations woulde preuaile, at length pitying the wofull caſe of the Romaines, gathered together hys power and armie in Britayne and Fraunce, wherewyth to repreſſe the violent rage of that tyraunt. Thus Conſtantinus ſufficiently appoynted with ſtrength of men, but eſpecially wyth ſtrength of God, entred hys iourny comming towarde Italie, whyche was about the laſt yeare of the perſecution. Anno 318. Maxentius vnderſtanding of the comming of Conſtantine, and truſting more to his diueliſh Arte of Magike, then to the good will of hys ſubiectes, whych hee little deſerued, durſt not ſhewe himſelfe out of the Citie, nor encounter wyth him in the open fielde, but wyth priuie garriſons laide in waite for him by the waye, in ſundry ſtraightes as he ſhould come. With whom Conſtantine had diuers ſkirmiſhes, and by the power of the Lorde did euer vanquiſhe them and put them to flight. Notwythſtanding Conſtantinus yet was in no great comfort, but in great care and dread in hys minde (approching nowe neare vnto Rome) for the Magicall charmes and ſorceries of Maxentius, wherewith hee had vanquiſhed before Seuerus ſent by Galerius againſt hym, as hath bene declared, which made alſo Conſtantinus the more afrayde. Wherefore being in great doubt and perplexity in himſelf, and reuoluing many thinges in his minde, what helpe he might haue againſt the operatiōs of hys charming, which vſed to cut women great with childe, to take hys diueliſhe charmes by the entrals of the infants, with ſuch other like feates of deuiliſhnes which he practiſed: Theſe thinges (I ſay) Conſtantinus doubting and reuoluing in his minde, in his iourney drawing toward the Citie, and caſting vp his eyes many times to heauen, in the South part, about the going downe of the ſunne, ſawe a great brightneſſe in heauen, appearing in the ſimilitude of a croſſe, wyth certaine ſtarres of equall bigneſſe, geuing this inſcription like Latine letters, IN HOC VINCE, that is: In thys ouercome. Euſeb. De vita Conſtant lib. 2. Nicep. lib. 7. cap. 29. Eutrop. lib. 11. Sozom. lib 1. cap 3. Socrat lib. 1. cap. 2. Vrſpurgenſ. Chronic. Paul. Diacon. lib. 11. Thys miraculous viſion to be true, for the more credite, Euſebius Pamphilus in hys firſt booke De vita Conſtantini doeth witneſſe moreouer, that hee had hearde the ſayde Conſtantinus himſelfe oftentimes reporte, and alſo to ſweare this to be true and certaine, which hee did ſee with his owne eyes in heauen, and alſo his ſouldiours about him. At the ſight wherof, when he was greatly aſtonied, and conſulting with his men vpon the meaning thereof, beholde in the night ſeaſon in his ſlepe Chriſt appeared to him with the ſigne of the ſame croſſe, which he had ſeene before, bidding him to make the figuration therof, and to carie it in hys warres before him, and ſo ſhoulde he haue the victorie.

An admonition concerning the material croſſe not to be worſhipped, but to be a meanes to bring Conſtantine to the faith of him whiche was crucified.

¶ Wherin is to be noted (good Reader) that this ſigne of the Croſſe, and theſe letters added withall: In hoc vince, was geuen to him of God, not to induce any ſuperſtitious worſhip or opynion of the Croſſe, as though the croſſe it ſelf, had any ſuch power or ſtrength in it, to obtaine victorie: but onely to beare the meaning of an other thing, that is, to be an admonition to him, to ſeeke and aſpire to the knowledge and faith of him, which was crucified vppon the croſſe for the ſaluation of him, and of all the world, and ſo to ſet forth the glory of his name, as afterwarde it came to paſſe. Pharao and Maxentius compared.

The next day following after this nights viſion, Conſtantinus cauſed a croſſe after the ſame figuratiō to be made of golde and precious ſtone, and to be borne before him in ſteade of his ſtandard: and ſo with much hope of victory & great confidence, as one armed from heauen ſpedeth himſelfe towarde his enemie. Againſt whom Maxentius being conſtrained perforce to iſſue out of the Citie, ſendeth al his power to ioyne with him in the fielde beyonde the riuer of Tybur, where Maxentius craftely breaking down ẏ bridge called Pons Miluius, cauſed an other deceitfull bridge to be made of boates and whirries, being ioyned together, and couered ouer with bordes and planckes in maner of a bridge, thinking therwith to take Conſtantine as in a trap. But here it came to paſſe which in the 7. Pſalme is writtē. He digged a pit, and fell therein himſelfe. Let his working returne vpon his owne head, and his vnrighteouſneſſe vppon hys owne pate, which heere in this Maxentius was rightly verified. For after the two hoſtes did meete, hee being not able to ſuſtaine the force of Conſtantine fighting vnder the croſſe of Chriſt againſt hym, was put to ſuch a flight, and driuen to ſuche an exigent, that in retyring backe, for haſt thinking to get the Citie, vppon the ſame bridge which he did lay for Conſtantine, was ouerturned by the fall of hys horſe into the bottome of the floude, and there with the waight of his armour, he with a great part of his beatē men were drowned. Repreſenting vnto vs the like example of Pharao & his hoſt drowned in the red ſea. Who not vnaptly ſeemeth to beare a Propheticall figuration of this Maxentius. For as the children of Iſrael were in long thraldome and perſecution in Egypt vnder tyrantes there, til the drowning of this Pharao theyr laſt perſecutour: ſo was this Maxentius and Maximinus and Licinius the laſt perſecutours in the Romane Monarchie of the Chriſtians, whome thys Conſtantinus fighting vnder the croſſe of Chriſt, did vanquiſhe and ſet the Chriſtians at liberty, who before had bene perſecuted nowe 300. yeares in Rome, as hath bene hetherto in this hiſtorie declared.

The glorious and victorious hoſt of Chriſt.

Perſecution in the Weſt ceaſeth for a M. yeares till the time of Wyckliffe.

In hiſtories we read of many victories and great conqueſts gotten: yet we neuer read, nor euer ſhal of any victory ſo wholſom, ſo commodious, ſo opportune to mākind as this was, which made an ende of ſo much bloudſhed, & obtained ſo much libertye & life to the poſterity of ſo many generations. For albeit that ſome perſecutiō was yet ſtirring in the Eaſt countreys by Maximinus and Licinius, as ſhall be declared: Yet in Rome and in all the weſt partes, no martyr died after this heauēly victory gotten. And alſo in the Eaſt partes the ſaid Conſtantinus with the ſaid croſſe borne before him, conſequently vpon the ſame ſo vanquiſhed the tyrants, and ſo eſtabliſhed the peace of the church, that for the ſpace of a iuſt M. yeares after that, we reade of no ſet perſecution againſt the Chriſtians, vnto the time of Iohn Wickliffe, when the biſhops of Rome began with fire to perſecute the true members of Chriſt, as in further proceſſe of thys hiſtorie (Chriſt graunting) ſhall appeare. So happie, ſo glorious (as I ſayde) was this victorie of Conſtantine, ſurnamed the great. For the ioy & gladnes wherof, the Citizens who had ſent for him before, with exceding triumph brought him into the citie of Rome, where he wͭ the croſſe was moſt honourably receiued and celebrated the ſpace of vij. dayes together, hauing moreouer in the market place, his image ſet vp, holding in his right hande the ſigne of the croſſe, wͭ this inſcription: Hoc ſalutari ſigno, veraci fortitudinis indicio, ciuitatem noſtram iugo tyranni ereptam liberaui. Although notwithſtādíng in the Eaſt churches the ſtorme of this tenth perſecutiō was not yet altogether quieted, but that ſome taile thereof in thoſe partes remained for the ſpace of ij. or iij. yeare. But of this we minde to ſpeake (Chriſt willing) hereafter. In the meane ſeaſon, to returne againe to the weſt partes here in Europe, where Conſtantinus then had moſt to doe, great tranquillitie followed, and long cōtinued in the church without any open ſlaughter, for a thouſande yeares together (to the time of Iohn Wickliffe and Waldenſes, as is before touched) by the meanes of the godly beginning of good Conſtantinus, who with his fellow Licinius, being now ſtabliſhed in their dominion, eftſones ſet forth their generall proclamation or edict, not cōſtraining therein any man to any religion, but geuing liberty to all men, both for the Chriſtians to perſiſt in their profeſſion without any danger, and for other men freely to adioyne wyth them, whoſoeuer pleaſed. Which thing was very wel taken, and highly allowed of the Romaines, and al wiſe men. The copie of the Edict or conſtitution here enſueth.

The copie of the Imperial conſtitution of Conſtantinus and Licinius, for the eſtabliſhing of the free worſhipping of God, after the Chriſtian religion.

The copy of the imperiall conſtitution of Conſtantinus and Licinius. Euſeb. Lib. 10. cap. 5.

NOt long agone we weying with our ſelues, that the libertie and freedome of religion ought not in any caſe to be prohibited, but that free leaue ought to be geuen to euery man to doe therein according to his wil and minde, we haue giuen commandement to all men to qualifie matters of religion as they themſelues thought good, and that alſo the Chriſtians ſhoulde keepe the opinions and faith of their religion. But becauſe that many & ſundry opinions by the ſame our firſt licence ſpring and increaſe through ſuch libertie graunted, we thought good manifeſtly to adde thereunto, and make plaine ſuch things, wherby perchance ſome of them in time to come, may from ſuch their obſeruaunce be let or hindered. When therfore by proſperous ſucceſſe, I Conſtantinus Auguſtus, and I Licinius Auguſtus came to Mediolanum, and there ſate in councell vpon ſuch thinges as ſerued for the vtilitie and profit of the common weale, theſe things amongſt others, we thought woulde be beneficiall to all men, yea and before all other things we purpoſed to eſtabliſh thoſe things, wherin the true reuerence and worſhip of God is comprehended, that is, to geue vnto the Chriſtians free choiſe to followe what religion they thinke good, and whereby the ſame ſinceritie and celeſtiall grace which is in euery place receaued, may alſo be embraced and accepted of all our louing ſubiects. According therefore vnto this our pleaſure vpon good aduiſement and ſounde iudgement, we haue decreed, that no man ſo hardy, be denied to chuſe and ſollowe the Chriſtian obſeruance or religion: But that this libertie be geuen to euery man, that he may apply his minde to what religion he thinketh meete himſelfe, whereby God may performe vpon vs all his accuſtomed care and goodneſſe. To the intent therefore you might knowe that this is our pleaſure, wee thought it neceſſary this to wryte vnto you, whereby all ſuch errours and opinions being remooued, which in our former letters (being ſent vnto you in the behalfe of the Chriſtians) are conteyned, and which ſeeme very vndiſcreete and contrary to our clemēcy, may be made fruſtrate & adnihilate. Now therfore firmly and freely we will and commaunde, that euery man haue a free libertie to obſerue the Chriſtian religion, and that without any griefe or moleſtation hee may be ſuffered to doe the ſame. Theſe things haue we thought good to ſignifie vnto you by as plaine wordes as we may, that we haue geuen to the Chriſtians free and abſolute power to keepe and vſe their religion. And for as much as this libertie is abſolutely geuen of vs vnto them, to vſe and exerciſe their former obſeruance, if any be ſo diſpoſed, it is manifeſt that the ſame helpeth much to eſtabliſhe the publike tranquillitie of our time, euery man to haue licence and libertie to vſe and chuſe what kinde of worſhipping he liſt himſelf. And this is done of vs onely for the intent, that we woulde haue no man to be enforced to one religion more then an other. And this thing alſo amongſt others we haue prouided for the Chriſtians, that they may haue againe the poſſeſsiō of ſuch places, in which heretofore they haue bene accuſtomed to make their aſſemblies, ſo that if any haue bought or purchaſed the ſame either of vs, or of any other: the ſame places without either mony or other recompence, forthwith and without delay we will to be reſtored againe vnto the ſayd Chriſtians. And if any man haue obtained the ſame by gift from vs, and ſhall require any recompence to be made to them in that behalf: Then let the Chriſtians repaire vnto the Preſident (being the iudge appoynted for that place) that conſideration may be had of thoſe mē by our benignitie: al which things we will and commaunde, that you ſee to be geuen and reſtored freely, and with diligence vnto the ſocietie of the Chriſtians, all delay ſet apart. And becauſe the Chriſtians themſelues are vnderſtoode to haue had not onely thoſe places wherein they were accuſtomed to reſort together, but certaine other peculiar places alſo, not being priuate to any one man, but belonging to the right of their congregation and ſocietie: you ſhall ſee alſo al thoſe to be reſtored vnto the Chriſtians, that is to ſay, to euery fellowſhip and company of them, according to the decree, whereof we haue made mention, all delay ſet apart. Prouided that the order we haue taken in the meane time be obſerued, that if any (taking no recompence) ſhall reſtore the ſame lands and poſſeſsions, they ſhall not miſtruſt but be ſure to be ſaued harmeleſſe by vs. In all theſe things it ſhall be your part to employ your diligence in the behalfe of the foreſayde companie of the Chriſtians, whereby this our commaundement may ſpeedely be accompliſhed, and alſo in this caſe by our clemencie the common and publike peace may be preſerued. For vndoubtedly by this meanes, as before we haue ſayde, the good will and fauour of God towardes vs (whereof in many caſes we haue had good experience) ſhall alwayes continue with vs. And to the intent that this our conſtitution may be notified to all men, it ſhall be requiſite that the copie of theſe our letters be ſet vp in all places, that men may reade and knowe the ſame, leaſt any ſhould be ignorant thereof.

The effect of the decree which Maximinus made againſt hys wil or ſurecountermaund for feare of C. and L. in the behalfe of the Chriſtians.

The ſurrecountermaunde of Maximi. diſſembled.

By theſe hyſtories I doubt not (good reader) but thou doeſt right well cōſider and behold with thy ſelfe the marueilous working of God his mighty power: to ſee ſo many Emperours at one time conſpired and confederate together againſt the Lord and his Chriſt annoynted, whoſe names before we haue recited, as Diocleſian, Maximinian, Galerius, Maxentius, Maximinus, Seuerus, Licinius, who hauing the ſubiection of the whole world vnder their dominion, did bende and extende their whole might and deuiſes, to extirpate the name of Chriſt, and of all Chriſtians. Wherein if the power of man could haue preuailed, what coulde they not doe? or what coulde they doe more then they did? If policie or deuiſes could haue ſerued, what policie was there lacking? If torments or paines of death could haue helped, what cruelty of torment by man could be inuented, which was not attempted? If lawes, edictes, proclamations, wrytten not onely in tables, but ingrauen in braſſe, could haue ſtande, all this was practiſed againſt the weake Chriſtians. And yet notwithſtanding, to ſee howe no counſaile can ſtand againſt the Lorde, note heere how all theſe be gone, and yet Chriſt and his Church doth ſtande. Fyrſt, of the taking away of Maximinian you haue heard, alſo of the death of Seuerus, of the drowning moreouer of Maxentius, inough hath bene ſayde. What a terrible plague was vpon Galerius, conſuming his priuie members with Lice, hath bene alſo deſcribed. Howe Diocleſian the quondam being at Salona, hearing of the proceedings of Conſtantinus, and this his Edict, either for ſorrow died, or as ſome ſay did poyſon himſelfe. Onely Maximinus now in the Eaſt partes remained aliue, who bare a deadly hatred againſt the Chriſtians, and no leſſe expreſſed the ſame wyth mortall perſecution, to whome Conſtantine and Licinius cauſed this conſtitution of theirs to be deliuered: at the ſight whereof, although hee was ſomewhat appaled, and defeated of his purpoſe: yet foraſmuch as he ſaw himſelfe too weake to reſiſt the authoritie of Conſtantinus and Licinius the ſuperiour Princes: Hee diſſembled his counterfeit pietie, as though hee himſelfe had tendered the quiet of the Chriſtians: directing downe a certaine decree in the behalfe of the Chriſtians, wherein hee pretendeth to wryte to Sabinus afore mentioned, firſt repeating vnto him the former decree of Diocleſian and Maximinian in few wordes, with the commandement therein contained touching the perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. After that hee reciteth the Decree which he himſelfe made againſt them, when he came firſt to the imperiall dignitie in the Eaſt part ioyned wyth Conſtantius. Then the Countermaund of an other Decree of his agayne, for the reſcuing of the Chriſtians, wyth ſuch fayned and pretenſed cauſes, as is in the ſame to be ſeene. After that declareth howe he comming to Nicomedia, at the ſute and ſupplication of the Citizens (which he alſo fained, as may appeare before) he applying to their ſute, reuoked that his former Edict, and graunted them that no Chriſtian ſhould dwell within their Citie or territories. Vpon which Sabinus alſo had geuen forth his letters, rehearſing withall the generall recountermaunde ſent forth by him, for the perſecution againe of the Chriſtians. Laſt of all nowe hee ſendeth downe againe an other Surrecountermaund, with the cauſes therein conteyned, touching the ſafetie of the Chriſtians, and tranquillitie of them: Commaunding Sabinus to publiſh the ſame. Which edict of his is at large ſet forth of Euſebius, lib. 9. cap. 9. But this Surrecountermaunde hee then diſſimuled, as he had done in the other before. Howbeit ſhortly after, he making warres, and fighting a battaile with Licinius, wherein hee loſt the victory, comming home againe, toke great indignation againſt the Prieſtes and Prophetes of his Gods, whom before that time he had great regard vnto, and honored: vpon whoſe anſwers he truſting, & depending vpon their enchantments, began hys warre againſt Licinius. But after that he perceaued himſelfe to be deceaued by thē, as by wicked enchaunters and deceauers, and ſuch as had betrayed hys ſafety and perſon, he kylled and put them to death. And hee ſhortly after, oppreſſed with a certaine diſeaſe, glorified the God of the Chriſtians, and made a moſt abſolute law for the ſafety and preſeruation of them, wyth fraunchiſe and liberty: the copy wherof enſueth.

The vnfayned repentaunce and finall decree of Maximinus for the chriſtians.

Imperator Cæſar, Gaius, Valerius, Maximinus, Germanicus, Pius, Fortunatus, Auguſtus. It is neceſſary that we alwaies carefully prouide and ſee vnto, the benefite and commoditie of ſuch as be our ſubiectes, & to exhibit ſuch things vnto them, wherby they may beſt obtaine the ſame. But we ſuppoſe that there are none of you ſo ignorant, but knowe and vnderſtand what things make beſt for the profite & commoditie of the common weale, & beſt pleaſe euery mans diſpoſition. But it is meete and conuenient that euery man haue recourſe to that which they haue ſene done before their eyes, and that all ſortes of men conſider the ſame, & beare it in their mindes. When therfore, and that before this time it came vnto our knowledge: vpon the occaſion that Diocleſianus, and Maximinianus, our progenitours of famous memorie, commaunded the aſſemblies and meetings of the Chriſtians to be cut of, there were many of them ſpoyled and robbed of our Officials: which thing we alſo perceiue is now put in practiſe againſt our ſubiectes, that they in like caſe may be ſpoyled of their goods and ſubſtance, which thing chiefly to preuent, is our onely indeuour. By our letters ſent to the gouernours of euery prouince the yere paſt, we ordeined that if any man were diſpoſed to leane vnto the Chriſtian religion, that he might without any iniury done vnto him, accompliſh his deſire, neither to be of any man either let or moleſted: and that he might without any feare or ſuſpition, do whatſoeuer he therein thought good. But now alſo we vnderſtand that there be certaine iudges which haue neglected our commandemēt, and haue put our ſubiectes in doubt, whether that hath ben our pleaſure or not, which thing they did, that ſuch men might be the better aduiſed, how they entred into ſuch religion: wherein they followed their owne phantaſie. To the entent therfore that after this, all ſuſpition, doubt, and feare may be taken away: we haue thought good to publiſh this our edict, whereby it may be made manifeſt to euery man, that it ſhalbe lawfull for all ſuch as will follow that religion, by the benefit of this our graunt and letters patents, to vſe what religion they like beſt. And alſo hereby we graunt vnto them licence to build them Oratories or Temples. And furthermore, that this our graunt may more amply extende vnto them, we vouchſafe to appoynt and ordaine, that whatſoeuer landes and ſubſtance, before belonging and appertaining to the Chriſtians, and by the commandement of our predeceſſors were tranſpoſed to our reuenew and exchequer, or els be in the poſſeſſion of any Citie, by meanes of the franchiſes of the ſame, or els otherwiſe ſold or geuen to any man: all and euery parcell thereof we commaund ſhall be reſtored vnto the proper vſe of the Chriſtians againe, whereby they may all haue in this matter more experience, of our godly deuotion and prouidence. God maketh his enemies to cōfeſſe him.

Maximinus thus being conquered of Licinius, and alſo plagued wyth an incurable diſeaſe in the guts, ſent by the hande of God, was compelled by tormentes and aduerſitie to cōfeſſe the true God, whom before he regarded not, and to write thys Edicte in the fauour of thoſe Chriſtians, whom before he did perſecute. Thus the Lord doth make many times hys enemyes, be they neuer ſo ſterne & ſtout, at length to ſtoupe, & mauger their harts, to confeſſe him, as this Maximinus here did, who not long after, by the vehemencie of his diſeaſe ended his life. Whereby, no mo tyrauntes nowe were left aliue, to trouble the Church, but onely Licinius. Of which Licinius, and of hys perſecutions ſtirred vp in the Eaſt partes, againſt the Saints of God, now remaineth in order of ſtory to proſecute.

The end and death of Maximinus.

The perſecution of the church vnder Licinius.

This Licinius being a Dane borne, and made firſt Cæſar by Galerius, as is aboue ſpecified, was afterward ioyned with Conſtantinus in gouernement of the Empyre, and in ſetting forth the Edicts, which before we haue deſcribed: although it ſeemeth, all this to be done of him wt a diſſembling minde. For ſo is he in all hyſtories deſcribed, to be a man paſſing all other in deſire of vnſatiable riches, geuen to lechery, haſty, ſtubburne, and furious. To learning hee was ſuch an enemie, that he named the ſame a poyſon and a common peſtilence, and eſpecially the knowledge of the lawes. Hee thought no vice worſe became a Prince, then learning, becauſe hee him ſelfe was vnlearned. Eutropius, Letus, Ignatius. Euſeb. Lib. 8. cap. 13.

An enemy to learning. Euſeb. Lib. 8. cap. 13.

There was betweene him and Conſtantinus in the beginning great familiaritie: and ſuch agreement, that Conſtantinus gaue vnto him his ſiſter Conſtantia in Matrimonie, as Aurelius Victor wryteth. Neither woulde any man haue thought him to haue bene of any other Religion then Conſtantinus was of, hee ſeemed in all thinges ſo well to agree with him. Wherupon he made a decree with Conſtantinus in the behalfe of the Chriſtians, as we haue ſhewed. Euſebius, Lib. 9. cap. 9. And ſuch was Licinius in the beginning. But after arming him ſelfe with tyrannie, began to cōſpire againſt the perſon of Conſtantinus, of whom he had receaued ſo great benefites, neither fauorable to the law of nature, nor mindful of his othes, his bloud, nor promiſes. But when hee conſidered that in his conſpiracies he nothing preuailed, for that he ſaw Cōſtantinus was preſerued and ſafely defended of God: And partly being puffed vp wt the victory againſt Maximinus, he began vehemētly to hate him, and not onely to reiect the Chriſtian religion, but alſo deadly to hate the ſame. Hee ſaide he would become an enemy vnto the Chriſtiās, for that in their aſſemblies and meetinges they prayed not for him, but for Conſtantinus. Therefore, firſt by litle and litle and that ſecretely, he went about to wrong and hurt the chriſtians, & baniſhed them his Court, which neuer were by any meanes preiudiciall to his kingdom. Then he cōmaūded that all thoſe ſhould be depriued which were knights of the honourable order, vnleſſe they would do ſacrifice to deuils. Euſeb. lib. 10. cap. 8. The ſame perſecution afterwardes ſtretched he from his court, into all his prouinces, which with moſt wicked and deuiſed lawes hee ſet forth. Firſt, that for no cauſe the Byſhops ſhoulde in any matter communicate together: neither that any man ſhould come at the Churches next vnto them, or to call any aſſemblies, and conſult for the neceſſary matters and vtilitie of the Church.

The thirde moſt cruell and wickedſt of all was, that none ſhould helpe and ſuccour thoſe that were caſt in priſon, nor ſhoulde beſtowe any almes or charitie vpon them, though they ſhoulde die for hunger: and they which ſhewed any compaſſion vpon thoſe that were condemned to death, ſhould be as greatly puniſhed, as they to whome they ſhewed the ſame ſhoulde be. After this he vſed violence againſt the Byſhops, but yet not openly, for feare of Conſtantinus, but priuely and by conſpiracie: by which meanes hee ſlewe thoſe that were the worthieſt men amongeſt the Doctours and Prelates. And about Amaſea and other Cities of Pontus, he razed the Churches euen to the ground. Other ſome he ſhut vp, that no man ſhould come after their accuſtomed maner to pray and worſhip God: and therefore as we ſayde before, his conſcience accuſing him, all this hee did, for that he ſuſpected they prayed for Conſtantinus, and not at all for him. And from this place in the Eaſt parties vnto the Libians, which bordered vpon the Egyptians, the chriſtians durſt not aſſemble and come together for the diſpleaſure of Licinius, which hee had conceaued againſt them. Furthermore, the flattering officers that were vnder him, thinking by this meanes to pleaſe him, ſlewe & made out of the way many byſhops, and without any cauſe put them to death, as though they had bene homicides & hainous offenders: and ſuch rigorouſnes vſed they towards ſome of them, that they cut their bodyes into gobbets and ſmall peeces in maner of a Boucher, and after that threwe them into the Sea to feede the fiſhes. For he toke by violence euery mans ſubſtaunce, and cared not by what meanes he came by the ſame: But threatned them with death, vnleſſe they would forgoe the ſame. Hee baniſhed thoſe which had committed none euill at all. He commanded that both gentlemen and men of honour, ſhould be made out of the way, neither yet herewith content, but gaue their daughters that were vnmaried, to varlets and wicked ones to be deflowred. And Licinius himſelfe (although that by reaſon of his yeres, his body was ſpent) yet ſhamefully did hee vitiate many women, mens wiues & maids. Euſeb Lib. 1. de vita Conſtantini. Alſo of another Theodorus being the Byſhop of Tyre, the thirde was a man of Perga. Baſilius alſo the Byſhop of Amaſenus, Nicolaus, the Byſhop of Mirorus, Gregorius, of Armenia the great: After that, Paule of Neocæſaria, which by the impious commandemẽt of Licinius had both his hands cut of with a ſearing yron. Beſides theſe were in the Citie of Sebaſtia, xl. worthy men, & Chriſtian ſouldiours in the vehemẽt cold time of winter, ſouſed and drowned in a horſe pond, whẽ Locias as yet, of whom we ſpake before, and Agricolaus executing the Shrieues office vnder Licinius in the Eaſt parts, were aliue: and were in great eſtimation, for inuenting of new and ſtrange torments againſt the Chriſtians. The wiues of thoſe 40. good men, were caried to Heraclea a Citie in Thracia, and there with a certaine Deacon whoſe name was Amones, were (after innumerable torments by them moſt conſtauntly indured) ſlaine with the ſworde. Theſe thinges wryteth Nicephorus. Alſo Zozomenus in his ninth booke & 2. Chapter maketh mention of the ſame Martyrs. And Baſilius in a certaine Oration ſeemeth to intreate of their hiſtory, ſauing that in the circumſtances he ſomwhat varieth. And ſurely Licinius was determined, for that the firſt face of this perſecution fel out according to his deſire, to haue ouerrunne all the Chriſtians: to which thing neither counſell, nor good will, nor yet oportunitie, perchance wanted: vnleſſe God had brought Conſtantinus into thoſe parties, where he gouerned: where, in the warres which hee himſelfe began (knowing right well that Conſtantinus had intelligence of his conſpiracy & treaſon) ioyning battaile with him, was moſt cowardly ouercome.

Diuers battailes betweene them were fought, the firſt fought in Hungarie, where Licinius was ouerthrowen: Then he fled into Macedonia, & repairing his army, was againe diſcomfited. Finally, being vãquiſhed, both by ſea and lande: he laſtly, at Nicomedia, yelded himſelfe to Conſtantine: and was cõmaunded to liue a priuate life in Theſſalia, where at length he was ſlaine by the ſouldiours.

The end and death of the tyrauntes whiche were the authors of this x. perſecution.

Thus haue ye heard, the ende and concluſion of all the vij. tyrants, which were the authors and workers of this x. and laſt perſecutiõ, againſt the true people of God. The chiefe Captaine, and inuentour of which perſecution was firſt Diocleſian, who died at Salena, as ſome ſay, by his owne poyſon. An.319. The next was Maximinian, who as is ſayde, was hanged of Conſtantine at Maſilia, about the yeare of our Lorde.310. Then died Galerius, plagued with an horrible diſeaſe ſent of God. Seuerus was ſlaine by Maximinian, father of Maxentius the wicked tyraunt was ouercome and vanquiſhed of Conſtantine. An.318. Maximinus the vj. tyraunt taried not long after, who being ouercome by Licinius, died, about the yere of our Lord.320. Laſtly, how this Licinius was ouercome by Conſtantine and ſlaine. An. 324. is before declared. Only Conſtantius, the father of Conſtantine being a good and a godly Emperour, died in the third yeare of the perſecution. An.310. and was buried at Yorke. After whom ſucceded after his godly father, Conſtantinus, as a ſeconde Moſes ſent and ſet vp of God to deliuer his people out of this ſo miſerable captiuitie, into libertie moſt ioyfull.

A briefe ſtory of the moſt notable Martirs, that ſuffered in this x. perſecution.

Now remaineth after the end of theſe perſecutors thus deſcribed, to gather vp the names & ſtories of certain particular Martyrs, which nowe are to be ſet forth worthy of ſpeciall memory: for their ſingular conſtancie & fortitude, ſhewed in their ſufferings & cruell torments. The names of all which that ſuffered in this foreſaid tenth perſecution, being in number infinite, in vertue moſt excellẽt, it is impoſſible heere to comprehend: but the moſt notable, and in moſt approued authors expreſſed, we thought heere to inſert, for the more edification of other Chriſtiãs, which may and ought to looke vpon their examples, firſt beginning with Albanus, the firſt Martyr that euer in England ſuffered death for the name of Chriſt.

Albanus, Martyr.

Fruite of hoſpitalitie to be noted.

At what time Diocleſian & Maximinian the Pagan Emperours had directed out their letters with all ſeueritye, for the perſecuting of the Chriſtians: Alban being then an infidell, receiued into his houſe a certaine Clerke, fleeing from the perſecutours hands, whom when Alban beheld, continually both day & night to perſeuer in watching and in prayer: ſodenly by the great mercy of God, he began to imitate the example of his faith & vertuous life: whereupon by litle and litle he being inſtructed by his holeſom exhortation, and leauing the blindneſſe of his Idolatrie, became at length a perfect Chriſtian. And when the forenamed Clerke had lodged with him a certaine time, it was enformed the wicked Prince, that this good man & Confeſſour of Chriſt (not yet condemned to death) was harbored in Albans houſe, or very neare vnto him. Whereupon immediately he gaue in charge to the ſouldiours, to make more diligent inquiſition of the matter. Who as ſoone as they came to the houſe of Alban the Martyr, hee by and by putting on the apparell wherewith his gueſt and maiſter was appareled (that is, a garment at that time vſed, named Caracalla) offered him ſelfe in the ſteade of the other to the ſouldiours: who binding him, brought him forthwith to the iudge. It fortuned that at that inſtant when bleſſed Alban was brought vnto the Iudge, they founde the ſame Iudge at the aulters offering ſacrifice vnto Deuils, who as ſoone as hee ſawe Alban, was ſtraight waies in a great rage, for that hee woulde preſume of his owne voluntary will, to offer him ſelfe to perill, and geue him ſelfe a priſoner to the ſouldiours, for ſafegarde of his gueſt whome he harbored: and commaunded him to be brought before the Images of the deuils whome he worſhipped, ſaying: For that thou haddeſt rather hide & conuey away a rebell, then to deliuer him to the officers, and that (as a contemner of our Gods) he ſhould not ſuffer puniſhment and merite of his blaſphemye: looke what puniſhment he ſhoulde haue had, thou for him ſhalt ſuffer the ſame: if I perceiue thee any whit to reuolt from our maner of worſhipping. But bleſſed Alban, who of his owne accorde had bewrayed to the perſecutors that hee was a Chriſtian, feared not at all the manaces of the Prince, but being armed with ſpirituall armour, openly pronounced that hee woulde not obey his commandement. Then ſayd the Iudge: of what ſtocke or kindred art thou come? Alban anſwered, what is that to you, of what ſtocke ſoeuer I am come of, if you deſire to heare the veritie of my Religion, I do ye to wit that I am a Chriſtian, and apply my ſelfe altogether to that calling. Then ſayd the Iudge, I would knowe thy name, and ſee thou tell me the ſame without delay. Then ſayde hee, my parentes named me Alban, and I worſhip and honour the true and liuing God, which hath created all the worlde. Then ſayd the Iudge fraught with fury, if thou wilt enioy the felicitie of this preſent life, doe ſacrifice (and that out of hande) to theſe mighty Gods. Alban replieth: theſe ſacrifices which ye offer vnto deuils, cã neither helpe them that offer the ſame, neither yet can they accompliſh the deſires and prayers of their ſuppliãts: But rather ſhal they, what ſoeuer they be, that offer ſacrifice to theſe Idoles, receaue for their meede euerlaſting paines of hell fire. The Iudge, when he heard theſe words, was paſſing angry, and commaunded the tormentors to whip this holy Confeſſour of God, indeuoring to ouercome the conſtancy of his hart wͭ ſtripes, which had preuailed nothing with wordes. And when he was cruelly beaten, yet ſuffered he the ſame paciently, nay rather ioyfully, for the Lordes ſake. Then when the Iudge ſaw that he would not with torments be ouercomen, nor be reduced from the worſhip of Chriſtian Religion, he commaunded him to be beheaded.

Superfluous miracles in this ſtory written by Bede omitted.

The reſt that foloweth of this ſtory in the narration of Bede, as of drying vp the Riuer, as Alban went to the place of his execution: then of making a welſpring in the top of the hill, and of the falling out of the eyes of him that did behead him (with ſuch other prodigious miracles mẽtioned in his ſtory) becauſe they ſeeme more legẽdlike, then truthlike: againe, becauſe I ſee no great profit, nor neceſſitie in the relation thereof, I leaue them to the free iudgement of the Reader, to thinke of them, as cauſe ſhall moue him.

The legend of S Alban diſproued.

The like eſtimation I haue of the long ſtory, wherein is written at large a fabulous diſcourſe of all the doings & miracles of S.Alban, taken out of the Librarie of S.Albans, compiled (as there is ſaide) by a certaine Pagan, who (as he ſayth) afterwarde went to Rome, there to be Baptiſed. But becauſe in the beginning or Prologue of the Booke, the ſayde writer maketh mention of the ruinous walles of the towne of Verolamium, containing the ſtorye of Albanus, and of his bitter puniſhments: which walles were then falling downe for age, at the wryting of the ſayde booke, as he ſaith: Therby it ſeemeth this ſtory to be written a great while after the martyrdome of Alban, either by a Britaine, or by an Engliſh mã. If he were a Britaine, how then did the Latin tranſlation take it out of the Engliſh tounge, as in the Prologue hee him ſelfe doeth teſtifie. If hee were an Engliſhmã, how then did he go vp to Rome for baptiſme, being a Pagan, when he myght haue bene baptiſed amõg the Chriſtian Britaines more neare at home.

But among al other euidences and declarations ſufficient to diſproue this Legendary ſtory of S.Alban, nothing maketh more againſt it, then the very ſtorie it ſelfe: as where he bringeth in the head of the holy martyr, to ſpeake vnto the people after it was ſmitten of from the body. Alſo where he bringeth in the Angels going vp, & comming downe in a piller of fire, & ſinging al the night long. Item in the riuer which he ſayth, S Alban made drie, ſuch as were drowned in the ſame before in the bottome, were founde aliue. with other ſuch like Monkiſh miracles and groſſe fables, wherewith theſe Abbey Monkes were wont in time paſt to deceaue the Church of God, and to beguile the whole world for their owne aduãtage. Notwithſtanding this I write not to any derogatiõ of the bleſſed and faithful martyr of God, who was the firſt that I did euer finde in this Realme, to ſuffer Martyrdome for the teſtimonie of Chriſt. And worthy no doubt of condigne commendation, eſpecially of vs here in this land: whoſe Chriſtian faith in the Lorde, and charitie toward his neighbour: I pray God all we may followe. As alſo I wiſhe moreouer that the ſtories both of him, and of al other Chriſtian Martyrs might haue bene deliuered to vs ſimply as they were, wᵗout the admixture of all theſe Abbeylike additiõs of Monkiſh miracles, wherwith they were wont to paint out the glory of ſuch ſaintes to the moſte, by whoſe offerings they were accuſtomed to receaue moſt aduauntage.

The ſtories of the Saintes corrupted with lyes.

As touching the name of the Clearke mẽtioned in this ſtory, whome Alban receaued into his houſe, I finde in the Engliſhe ſtories to be Amphibalus, although the latine authors name him not, who ẏ ſame time flying into Wales was alſo fet from thence againe to the ſame towne of Verolamium, otherwiſe called Verlancaſter, where hee was martyred, hauing his bellie opened, and made to runne about a ſtake, while all his bowels were drawen out, then thruſt in with ſwordes and daggers: and at laſt was ſtoned to death, as the foreſaid legend declareth.

Moreouer the ſame time with Alban, ſuffered alſo ij. citizens of the foreſaide Citie of Verlancaſter, whoſe names were Aaron and Iulius: beſide other, whereof a great number the ſame time no doubt, did ſuffer, although our Chronicles of their names doe make no rehearſall.

Aaron, Iulius, Martyrs.

The time of the Martyrdom of this bleſſed Alban and the other, ſeemeth to be about the ſecond or thirde yeare of this tenth perſecution, vnder the tyrãny of Diocleſian, and Maximinianus Herculius, bearing then the rule in England, about the yeare of our Lorde 301. before the comming of Conſtantius to his gouernement. where, by the way is to be noted, that this realme of Britaine being ſo chriſtened before, yet neuer was touched with any other of the nine perſecutions, before this tenth perſecution of Diocleſian & Maximinian. In which perſecution our ſtories and Polichronicon doe recorde, that all Chriſtianitie almoſt in the whole Ilelande was deſtroyed, the Churches ſubuerted, all bookes of the Scripture burned, many of the faithfull both men & women were ſlaine. Among whome the firſt and chiefe ringleader (as hath bene ſayde) was Albanus. And thus much touching the martyrs of Britaine. Nowe from Englande to returne againe vnto other countries, where this perſecution did more vehemẽtly rage: we will adde hereunto (the Lorde willing) the ſtories of other, although not of all that ſuffered in this perſecution (which were impoſſible) but of certaine moſt principal, whoſe ſingular conſtancie in their ſtrong torments are chiefly renowned in latter hiſtories: beginning firſt with Romanus the notable and admirable ſouldiour and true ſeruaunt of Chriſt, whoſe hiſtorie ſet forth in Prudentius, doth thus procede: ſo lamentably by him deſcribed, that it will be harde for any man almoſt with dry cheekes to heare it.

Perſecution in thys realme of Britaine.

Pitiles Galerius with his graunde captaine Aſclepiades violently inuaded the citie of Antioche, entending by force of armes to driue all Chriſtians to renounce vtterly their pure religion. The Chriſtians as god would, were at that time cõgregated together, to whom Romanus haſtely ran, declaring that the wolues were at hande, which woulde deuour the chriſtian flocke, but feare not (ſayde he) neither let this imminẽt perill diſturbe you, my brethren: brought was it to paſſe, by the great grace of God working in Romanus, that olde men and matrones, fathers and mothers, young men and maidens were all of one will and minde, moſt ready to ſhed their bloud in defence of their Chriſtian profeſſion. word was brought to ẏ captaine that the band of armed ſouldiors was not able to wreſt the ſtaffe of faith, out of the hand of the armed congregation: and all by reaſon that one Romanus ſo mightely did encourage them, that they ſticke not to offer their naked throtes, wiſhing gloriouſly to die for the name of their Chriſt. Seeke out that rebell (quod the captaine) and bring him to me that he may aunſwer for the whole ſect. Apprehended he was, & bound as a ſheepe appoynted to the ſlaughter houſe, was preſented to the Emperor: who wᵗ wrathfull countenance beholding him, ſayde: What? Art thou the author of this ſedition? art thou the cauſe why ſo many ſhall looſe their liues? By the gods I ſweare thou ſhalt ſmart for it, and firſt in thy fleſh ſhalt thou ſuffer the paines, whereunto thou haſt encouraged the hearts of thy felowes. Romanus anſwered: Thy ſentence O Emperour I ioyfully embrace, I refuſe not to be ſacrificed for my brethren, and that by as cruell meanes as thou mayeſt inuent: and whereas thy ſoldiors were repelled from the chriſtian cõgregation, that ſo happened, becauſe it lay not in Idolaters and worſhippers of Deuils to enter into the holy houſe of God, and to pollute the place of true prayer. Then Aſclepiades wholy enflamed with this ſtoute anſwere, commaunded him to be truſſed vp, and his bowels drawne out. The executioners themſelues more pitiful in hart then the captaine, ſaid: not ſo ſir, this man is of noble parentage: vnlawful is it to put a noble man to ſo vnnoble a death: ſcourge him then with whips (quod the captaine) with knaps of lead at the ends. In ſtede of teares, ſighs & grones, Romanus ſong pſalmes al the time of his whipping, requiring them not to fauour him for nobilities ſake, not the bloud of my progenitours (ſaid he) but Chriſtian profeſſion maketh me noble. Then with great power of ſpirit he inueied againſt the capitain, laughing to ſcorne the falſe gods of the heathen, with the idolatrous worſhipping of them, affirming the God of the Chriſtians to be the true God that created heauen and earth, before whoſe iudiciall ſeat all nations ſhall appeare. but the wholſome wordes of the Martyr were as oyle to the fire of the captaines fury. The more the Martyr ſpake, the madder was hee, in ſo much that he commaunded the Martyrs ſides to be launced with kniues, vntil the bones appeared white againe. Sorie am I, O captain (quod the Martyr) not for that my fleſh ſhall be thus cut and mangled, but for thy cauſe am I ſorowfull, who being corrupted with damnable errours, ſeduceſt others. The ſeconde time hee preached at large, the liuing God, and the Lorde Ieſus Chriſt his welbeloued ſonne, eternall life through faith in his bloud, expreſſing therewith the abhomination of idolatry, wᵗ a vehement exhortation to worſhip & adore the liuing God. At theſe words Aſclepiades commaunded the tormentors to ſtrike Romanus on the mouth, that his teeth being ſtriken out, his pronunciation at leaſt wiſe might be impeired: The commandement was obeied, his face buffeted, his eye liddes torne with their nailes, his cheekes ſcorched with kniues, the ſkin of his bearde was plucked by little and little from the fleſh, finally his ſeemely face was wholy defaced. The meeke Martyr ſayde: I thanke thee, O Capitaine, that thou haſt opened vnto me many mouthes, whereby I may preach my Lord & Sauiour Chriſt. Looke howe many woundes I haue, ſo many mouths I haue lauding and praiſing God. The captaine aſtoniſhed wᵗ this ſingular conſtancie, commanded them to ceaſe from the tortures. Hee threatneth cruell fire, he reuileth the noble martyr, he blaſphemeth god, ſaying: Thy crucified Chriſt, is but an yeſterdaies God, the gods of the Gentiles are of moſt antiquitie.

Heere againe Romanus taking good occaſion, made a long Oration of the eternitie of Chriſt, of his humane nature, of the death & ſatiſfaction of Chriſt for all mankinde. Which done, he ſayde: geue me a childe (O Capitaine) but ſeuen yeres of age, which age is free from malice and other vices, wherwith riper age is cõmõly infected, and thou ſhalt heare what he will ſay, his requeſt was graunted. A pretie boy was called out of the multitude, and ſet before him. Tell me my babe (quoth the Martyr) whether thou thinke it reaſon that we worſhip one Chriſt, and in Chriſt one father, or els that we worſhip infinite gods? Vnto whom the babe aunſwered: That certainly, whatſoeuer it be, that men affirme to be God, muſt nedes be one: which with one, is one and the ſame: and in as much as this one is Chriſt, of neceſſitie Chriſt muſt be the true God, for, that there be many gods, we children cannot beleue. The capitaine hereat cleane amaſed, ſaid: thou yong villaine & traitor, where and of whom learnedſt thou this leſſon? Of my mother (quod the childe) with whoſe milke I ſucked in this leſſon, that I muſt beleue in Chriſt. The mother was called, and ſhee gladly appeared, the captaine commanded the childe to be horſed vp, and ſcourged. The pitiful beholders of this pitileſſe acte, could not temper thẽſelues from teares: the ioyful and glad mother alone, ſtood by with dry cheekes: yea, ſhee rebuked her ſweete babe for crauing a draught of colde water, ſhe charged him to thirſt after the cup, that the infantes of Bethleem once dranke of, forgetting their mothers milke and pappes, ſhee willed him to remember little Iſaac, who beholding the ſworde wherewith, & the altar wheron he ſhould be ſacrificed, willingly profered his tender necke to the dent of his fathers ſword.

Whileſt this counſel was in geuing, the boucherly torture pluckt the ſkin from the crowne of his head, heare and all. The mother cried, ſuffer my childe, anone thou ſhalt paſſe to him that will adorne thy naked head, with a crowne of eternall glory. The mother counſelleth, the childe is counſelled: the mother encourageth, the babe is encouraged: & receiued the ſtripes with ſmiling countenaunce. The captaine perceiuing the childe inuincible, and himſelfe vāquiſhed, committeth the ſillie ſoule, the bleſſed babe, the childe vncheriſhed, to the ſtinking priſon, commaunding the tormentes of Romanus to be renued and encreaſed, as chiefe author of this euill.

Thus was Romanus brought forth againe to newe ſtripes and puniſhments, to be renued and receiued vpon his old ſores, in ſo much the bare bones appeared, the fleſh all torne away: wherein no pitie was ſhewed, but the raging tyrant puffing out of his blaſphemous mouth, like a madde man theſe wordes, cried out to the tormentors, ſaying:

The cruell wordes of the tyrant.

Where is quod the Captaine, where is your might?
What? are ye not able one body to ſpill?
Scant may it, ſo weake is it, ſtand vpright:
And yet in ſpite of vs, ſhall it liue ſtill?

The Gripe with talent, the dog with his tooth,
Could ſoone ye daſtardes, this corpes rent and teare,
He ſcorneth our gods in all that he doth,
Cut, pricke, and pounce him, no longer forbeare.

Yea, no longer could the tyrant forbeare, but nedes he muſt draw nearer to the ſentence of death: is it painefull to thee (ſayde he) to tary ſo long aliue? a flaming fire doubte thou not ſhalbe prepared for thee, by and by, wherein thou and that boy, thy fellow of rebellion ſhall be conſumed into aſhes. Romanus and the babe were led to the place of execution. As they laide handes on Romanus, hee looked backe ſaying: I appeale from this thy tyrannie, O iudge vniuſt, to the righteous throne of Chriſt that vpright iudge: not becauſe I feare thy cruell torments and mercileſſe handlings, but that thy iudgements may be knowne to be cruell and bloudy. Nowe when they were come to the place, the tormentor required the child of the mother, for ſhe had taken it vp in her armes: And ſhee onely kiſſing it, deliuered the babe. Farewel ſhe ſaid my ſweete childe, and as the hangman applied his ſword to the babes necke, ſhee ſang on this maner.

The innocentes head being cut off, the mother wrapped it vp in her garment, and laide it to her breſt. On the other ſide a mighty fire was made, wherinto Romanus was caſt: who ſayde, ẏ he ſhould not burne: wherewith a great ſtorme aroſe (if it be true) and quenched the fire. The Capitaine gaue in commandement that his toung ſhould be cut out, out was it plucked by the harde rootes and cut of: Neuertheleſſe, hee ſpake, ſaying: hee that ſpeaketh Chriſt ſhall neuer want a tongue, thinke not that the voyce that vttereth Chriſt, hath neede of the tong to be the miniſter. The Capitaine at this, halfe out of his wit, bare in hande that the hangman deceiued the ſight of the people by ſome ſubtile ſleight and craftie conueiance. Not ſo (quoth the hangman) if ye ſuſpect my dede, open his mouth and diligently ſearch the rootes of his tongue. The Captaine at length being confounded with the fortitude and courage of the Martyr, ſtraightly commaundeth him to be brought backe into the priſon, and there to be ſtrangled. Where his ſorowfull life and paines being ended, hee nowe enioyeth quiet reſt in the Lord, with perpetuall hope of his miſerable body to be reſtored againe with his ſoule into a better life: where no tyrant ſhall haue any power: Prudentius in hymnis de coronis Martyrum.

The ſtory of Gordius a Centurian Martyr.

Gordius was a citizen of Cæſaria, a worthy ſouldiour, and Captaine of an hundreth men. Hee in the time of extreme perſecution, refuſing any lōger to execute his charge did chuſe of his owne accord willing exile, and liued in the deſert many yeares a religious and ſolitary life. But vpon a certaine day when a ſolemne feaſt of Mars was celebrated, in the citie of Cæſarea, and much people were aſſembled in the Theatre to beholde the games: he left the deſert, and got him vp into the chiefe place of the Theatre, and with a loude voyce vttered this ſaying of the Apoſtle: Beholde I am foūd of them which ſought me not, and to thoſe which aſked not for mee, haue I openly appeared. By which wordes he let it to be vnderſtood, that of his owne accorde he came vnto thoſe games. At this noiſe, the multitude litle regarding the ſights, looked about to ſee who it was ẏ made ſuch exclamation. As ſoone as it was knowne to be Gordius, and that the crier had commanded ſilence, he was brought vnto the ſhirife, which at that inſtant was preſent, and ordeined the games. Whē he was aſked the queſtion who he was, from whence, and for what occaſion he came thether, he telleth the truth of euery thing as it was. I am come, ſaith he, to publiſh, that I ſet nothing by your decrees againſt the Chriſtian religion: but that I profeſſe Ieſu Chriſt to be my hope and ſafety. And when I vnderſtood with what crueltie ye handle other men: I tooke this as a fitte time to accompliſh my deſire. The Shirife with theſe wordes was greatly mooued, and reuengeth all his diſpleaſure vpon poore Gordius, commaunding the executioners to be brought out with ſcourges, while gibbet, & whatſoeuer torments els might be deuiſed. Whereunto Gordius anſwered, ſaying, that it ſhoulde be to him an hinderance and damage if hee coulde not ſuffer and endure diuers torments and puniſhments for Chriſt his cauſe. The ſhirife being more offended with this his boldneſſe, commaunded him to feele as many kinde of torments as there were, with all which Gordius notwithſtanding, coulde not be maſtered or ouercome: but lifting vp his eies vnto heauen ſingeth this ſaying out of the Pſalmes. The Lorde is my helper, I will not feare the thing that man can doe to me: and alſo this ſaying, I will feare none euill, becauſe thou Lord art with me.

Gordius of hys accord vttereth hymſelfe to be a Chriſtian.

The confeſſion of Gordius.

After this, he againſt him ſelfe prouoketh the extremitie of the tormentours, & blameth them if they fauour him any thing at al. When the Shrife ſaw, that hereby he could winne but little, he goeth about by gentlenes and intiſing wordes, to turne the ſtoute and valiant minde of Gordius. He promiſeth to him great and large offers if he wil denie Chriſt: as to make him a Captaine of as many men as any other is, to geue him richeſſe, treaſure, & what other thing ſo euer hee deſireth. But in vaine as the Prouerbe is, pipeth the minſtrell to him that hath no eares to heare, for he deriding the fooliſh madneſſe of the Magiſtrate ſayth, that it lieth not in him to place any in authority, which be worthy to haue a place in heauen. The Magiſtrate with theſe wordes throughly angred and vexed, prepareth him ſelfe to his condemnation. Whom after that he had cōdemned, he cauſed to be had out of the Citie to be brent. There runneth out of the Citie great multitudes by heaps to ſee him put to execution, ſome take him in their armes, & louingly kiſſe him, perſuading him to take a better way and ſaue himſelf, and that with weeping teares. To whom Gordius anſwered, weepe not I pray you for me, but rather for the enemies of God which alwaies make warre againſt the Chriſtians: weepe I ſay for them which prepare for vs a fire, purchaſing hell fire for themſelues in the day of vengeance: And ceaſe of further, I pray you, to moleſt and diſquiet my ſetled minde. Truly (ſaith he) I am ready for the name of Ieſus Chriſt, to ſuffer and indure a thouſande deathes if neede were. Some other came vnto him which perſuaded him to deny Chriſt with his mouth, & to keepe his conſcience to himſelfe. My toung (ſayeth hee) which by the goodnes of God I haue, cannot be brought to denie the author and geuer of the ſame: for with the heart we beleeue vnto righteouſneſſe, and with the toung we confeſſe vnto ſaluation. Many moe ſuch like wordes he ſpake: but eſpecially vttering to them ſuch matter, wherby he might perſwade the beholders to death, and to the deſire of Martyrdome. After all which, with a mery and glad countenance, neuer changing ſo much as his colour, hee willingly gaue himſelfe to be brent. Baſilius in Sermone in Gordium militem Cæſarienſem.

Not much vnlike to the ſtory of Gordius is the ſtory alſo of Menas an Egiptian, who being likewiſe a ſouldiour by his profeſſion, in this perſecution of Diocleſian forſooke al, & went into the deſert, where a long time he gaue hym ſelfe to abſtinence, watching, and meditation of the Scriptures. At length returning againe to ẏ Citie Cotys, there in the open theatre, as ẏ people were occupied vpon their ſpectacles or paſtimes, he with a loude voice openly proclaimed himſelfe to be a chriſtian, and vpon the ſame was brought to Pyrrhus the Preſident: of whome, he being demaunded of his faith, made thys aunſwere: Conuenyent it is that I ſhoulde (ſayth he) confeſſe God in whome is light and no darkenes, for ſo much as Paule doth teache that with hart we beleue to righteouſnes, with mouth cōfeſſion is giuen to ſaluation. After this the innocent Martyr was moſt painfully pinched and cruciate with ſundrie puniſhments. In all which, notwithſtanding he declared a conſtant heart, and faith inuincible, hauing theſe wordes

Ex Baſil. in Serm. de 40. Martiribus.

Baſilius in a certayne Sermon of 40. Martyrs rehearſeth this ſtory not vnworthye to bee noted. There came (ſaith he) into a certaine place (which place he maketh no mention of) the Emperours Marſhall or officer, with the edict which the Emperour had ſet out againſt the Chriſtians, that whoſoeuer confeſſed Chriſt, ſhoulde after manye tormentes ſuffer death. And firſt they did priuily ſuborne certaine which ſhould detect & acuſe the Chriſtians whom they had found out, or had layde wayte for: vpon this the ſword, the gibbet, the wheele, & the whips were brought forth: At the terrible ſight whereof, the harts of all the beholders did ſhake & tremble. Some for feare did flee, ſome did ſtand in doubt what to do: Certaine were ſo terrified at the beholding of theſe engines & tormenting inſtruments that they denied their faith. Some other began the game, and for a time did abide the conflict and agony of Martyrdome, but vanquiſhed at length, by the intollerable paine of their torments, made ſhipwracke of their conſciences, & loſt the glory of their confeſſion. Amōg other xl. there were at that time younge gentlemen all ſouldiers, which after the Marſhall had ſhewed the Emperours Edict, and required of all men the obedience of the ſame, freely & boldly of their owne accord confeſſed themſelues to be Chriſtians & declared to him their names. The Marſhall ſomewhat amaſed at this their boldnes of ſpeach, ſtādeth in doubte, what was beſt to do. Yet forthwith he goeth about to win them with faire words, aduertiſing them to conſider their youth, neither that they ſhoulde chaunge a cruell and vntimely death, for a ſweete and pleaſant life: After that hee promiſeth them money, and honorable offices in the Emperours name. But they little eſteming all theſe thinges breake forth into a long and bolde Oration, affirming that they did neither deſire life, dignitie, nor money, but onelye the celeſtiall kingdome of Chriſt, ſaying further that they are ready for the loue and faith they haue in god, to indure the afflictiō of the wheele, the croſſe, and the fire. The rude Marſhall being herewith offended, deuiſeth a newe kinde of puniſhment. He ſpied out in the middle of the citie a certaine great pond, which lay full, vpon the cold Northren winde, for it was in the winter time, wherein he cauſed them to be put all that night, but they being merry & comforting one another, receiued this their appointed puniſhment, and ſayd, as they were putting of their clothes: we put off (ſaid they) now not our clothes, but we put of yͤ old mā, corrupt with the deceipt of cōcupiſcence. we giue thee thanks (O Lord) that with this our apparell we may alſo put of by thy grace, the ſinfull man: for by meanes of the Serpent we once put him on, and by the meanes of Jeſus Chriſt we now put him of. when they had thus ſaid: they were brought naked into yͤ place where they felt moſte vehement colde: in ſo much that all the partes of their bodies were ſtarke & ſtiffe therewith. Aſſone as it was daye, they yet hauing breath, were brought into the fire, wherin they were conſumed, and their aſhes throwne into the flud. By chaunce there was on of the company more liuely, and not ſo neere dead as the reſt, of whome yͤ executioners takyng pitie, ſaide vnto his mother ſtanding by, that they would ſaue his life. But ſhee with her owne handes taking her ſonne brought him to the pile of wood where yͤ reſidue of his fellowes (crooked for cold) did lie ready to be brent, admoniſhed him to accompliſh the bleſſed iourney he had taken in hand with his companions. Martyred in a colde ponde at Sebaſtia.

A lyke hyſtory of 40. Martyres, which were maryed men, we read of in Niceph. & Zozomenus. Lib. 9. cap. 2. which were killed likewiſe in a lake or pond at Sebaſtia, a towne of Armenia, vnder Licinius, if the ſtory be not the ſame with this, Niceph. Zozom.

Cyrus. Ioannes. Athanaſia, with her three daughters. Theoctiſte, Theodota, Eudoxia, Martyrs.

The louing care of one Chriſtian toward an other.

Cyrus to doe others good, loſt hys life.

In this felowſhip and company of martyrs can not be left out and forgotte the ſtory of Cyrus: This Cyrus was a Phiſition borne in Alexandria, which fleing into Egipt, in the perſecution of Diocleſianus, and Maximianus, led a ſolitary life in Arabia, being much ſpoken of for his learning and myracles, vnto whoſe company after a certaine tyme did Ioannes, borne in the Citie of Edeſſa, beyond the ryuer Euphrates, ioyne himſelf, leauing the ſouldiers life which before that time he had exerciſed. But whileſt as yet the ſame perſecution raged in a city in Egipt called Canope, there was caſt into priſon for the confeſſion of their fayth, a certayne godly Chriſtian woman, called Athanaſia, and her three daughters, Theoctiſte, Theodota, and Eudoxia: wyth whom Cyrus was well acquainted. At whoſe infirmities he much tearing accompanied with his brother Iohn, came and viſited them for their better confirmation: at which time Lyrianns was chieſe captaine and Lieutenaunt of Egypt, of whoſe wickednes and crueltie, eſpecially agaynſt women and maydens: Athanaſus maketh mention in hys Apologies, and in his Epiſtle to thoſe that lead a ſolitarye life. Thys Cyrus therefore and Ioannes, being accuſed and apprehended of the Heathen men, as by whoſe perſwaſions, the maydens and daughters of Athanaſia contumelyouſly, deſpiſed the Gods and the Emperours religion, & could by no meanes be brought to doe ſacrifice, were after the publication of their conſtaunt confeſſion put to death by the ſworde. Athanaſia alſo and her three daughters being condemned to death. This hiſtory writeth Symeon Metaphraſtes Sebaſtian being borne in the part of Fraunce called Gallia Narbonenſis was a Chriſtian, and was Lieutenaunte generall of the vawward of Diocleſian the Emperor, who alſo encouraged many martyrs of Chriſt by his exhortations, vnto conſtancy, and kept them in the faith. He being therfore accuſed to the Emperor, was commaunded to be apprehended, and that he ſhould be brought into the open fielde, where of his owne ſouldiers he was thruſt through the body with innumerable arrowes, and after that hys body was throwne into a iaques or ſinke. Ambroſius maketh mention of this Sebaſtian the martir in his Cōmentary vpon the 118. Barlaam.

What deſire the Heathen had by ſome meanes to allure the Chriſtians to offer ſacrifice.

Baſilius in an other Sermon alſo maketh mention of one Barlaam being a noble and famous Martyr, which abode al the torments of the executioners euen to the point of death, which thing when the tormentors ſawe, they brought him and laid him vpon the altar, where they dyd vſe to offer ſacrifices to their idoles, and put fire & frankenſence into his right hād wherin he had yet ſome ſtrēgth, thinking that the ſame his right hand, by the heate & force of the fire, would haue ſcattered the burning incenſe vpon the aultar and ſo haue ſacrificed. But of that their hope, the peſtiferous tormentors were diſapointed: for the flame eate round about his hand, and the ſame indured euen as though it had bene couered with hote embers, when Barlaam, recited out of the Pſalmes this ſaying: Bleſſed is the Lord my God which teacheth my handes to fight.

Agricola, with hys ſeruaunt Vitalis, martyrs.

Ex Ambro. in Serm. ad Virgines.

Vitalis firſt martyred.

To this narration of Baſilius touching the Martyrdome of Barlaam, we will anexe cōſequently an other ſtory of Ambroſe: Hee making a certaine exhortation to certaine virgins, in the ſame Oration cōmendeth the martirdomes of Agricola & Vitalis, who ſuffered alſo in the ſame perſecution vnder Diocleſian and Maximinian (as they ſo affirme) at Bononie. This Vitalis was ſeruaunt to Agricola, who both togyther betweene themſelues had made a compact to giue their liues wyth other Martyrs for the name of Chriſt. wherupon Vitalis, being ſent before of his maiſter to offer himſelfe to Martirdome, fell firſt into the hands of perſecutors, who laboured about him by all maner of meanes to cauſe him to deny Chriſt. which when he would in no caſe do, but ſtoutly perſiſted in the confeſſiō of his faith, they began to exerciſe him with all kinds of tormenes: So vnmercifully that there was no whole ſkinne left in all his body. So Vitalis in the middeſt of the agonie, & painefull torments, after he had in a ſhort praier, cōmended him ſelfe to God, gaue vp his life. After him the tormentours ſet vpon Agricola his Maſter, whoſe vertuous manners & gentle conditions, bicauſe they were ſingularly wel liked and knowen to the enimies, his ſuffering therfore was the longer deferred. But Agricola not abyding the long delay and driuing of, and prouoking moreouer yͤ aduerſaries to quicker ſpeede, at length was faſtned vnto the croſſe and ſo finiſhed his martirdome, which he ſo long deſired, Ambroſ in Exhortatione ad Virgines.

Agricola, deſirous of martyrdome.
Agricola dyed martyr vpon the Croſſe.

No leſſe worthy of commemoration is the lamentable Martyrdome of Vincentius, whoſe hiſtorie here followeth. This Vincentius was a Spaniard, and a Leuite moſt godly and vertuous, who at this time ſuffered Martyrdom at Valence, vnder Dacianus the Preſident, as we may gather by Prudentius in his hymne. Bergomenſis in his ſupplement reciteth theſe wordes concerning his martyrdome, out of a certaine ſermon of S. Auguſtine: Our heart conceiued not a vaine and fruitles ſight (as it were in beholding of lamentable tragedies) but a great ſight & marueilous, certainly, and there with ſingulare pleaſure receiued it, when the paineful paſſion of Victorius Vincentius was read vnto vs. Is there any ſo heauye harted, that will not be moued in the contemplation of this immoueable Martyr ſo manly, or rather ſo godly fighting againſt the craft and ſubtilty of that Serpent, againſt the tiranny of Dacianus, againſt the horrors of death, & by the mightie ſpirite of his God conquering all: But let vs in few wordes rehearſe the degrees of his tormentes though the paynes thereof in many wordes can not be expreſſed. Firſt Dacianus cauſed the Martir to be layde vpon the torture, and all the ioyntes of his body to be diſtended and racked out, vntill they crackt againe. This being done in moſt extreme and cruel maner al the members of his painful and pittiful body were greuouſly indented with deadly woundes. Thirdly (that his dolors & griefes might be augmẽted) they miſerably vexed his fleſh with yron combes ſharpely filed. And to yͤ end the tormentors might vomit out al their vengeãce on the meeke & milde martyrs fleſhe, the tormentors themſelues alſo were vily ſcourged at the Preſidentes commaundement. And leſt his paſſion through want of paines might ſeeme imperfect or elſe to eaſie, they laid his body being all out of ioint, on a grate of iron, which body when they had opened with iron hookes, they ſeared it with fierie plates, with hote burning ſalt ſprinkling the ſame. Laſt of all into a vyle dongeon was this mighty Martir drawen, the floure whereof firſt was thicke ſpredde wyth the ſharpeſt ſhels that might be gotten, his fete then being faſt locked in the ſtockes, there was he left alone without all worldly comfort: but the Lorde his God was with him, the holye ſpirit of God (whoſe office is to comfort the godly afflicted) fulfilled his hart with ioy & gladnes. Haſt thou prepared a terrible racke (O cruell tyraunt, O deuouring Lion) for the Martirs bed: the Lorde ſhall make that bed ſofte and ſweete vnto him. Rackeſt thou his bones and ioyntes al a ſunder, His bones, his ioints, his heares are al numbred. Tormenteſt then his fleſh with mortal woũds: the Lord ſhal poure abũdantly into al his ſores of his oyle of gladnes. Thy ſcraping combes, thy ſharpe fleſhookes, thine whote ſcaring yrons, thy parched ſalte, thy ſtincking priſon, thy cutting ſhelles, thy pinching ſtockes ſhal turne to this patient Martyr to the beſt. Altogether ſhall worke contrary to thine expectation, great plenty of ioy ſhall hee reap into the barne of his ſoule, out of this mighty harueſt of paines that thou haſt brought him into. Yea thou ſhalte proue him Vincentius indede: that is, a vanquiſher, a tryumpher, a conqueror ſubduing thy madnes, by his mekenes, thy tiranny by his patience, thy manifold meanes of tortures, by the manifold graces of God, wherewith he is plentifully enriched.

The Lamentable ſtory of Caſsianus Martyr.
Ex Aurel. Prudentius. lib. periſtephanon.

1 THrough Forum, as in Italy,
I paſſed once to Roome:
Into a Church by chaunce came I,
And ſtoode faſt by a toome.
2 Which church ſometime a place had bene,
Where cauſes greate in lawe:
Were ſcand and tryed, and iudgement giuen,
To keepe brute men in awe.
3 Thys place Sylla Cornelius,
Firſt built: he rayſed the frame:
And called the ſame Forum, and thus,
That City tooke the name.
4 In prayer feruent as I ſtoode,
caſting mine eie aſide:
A picture in full piteous moode,
(Imbrude) by chaunce I ſpied.
5 A thouſand wounded markes full bad,
All mangled, rent, and torne:
The ſkinne appeared as though it had,
Bene iagde and prickt with thorne.
6 A ſcull of pictured boyes did bande,
About that lothſome ſight:
That with their ſharpned gads in hand,
His members thus had dight.
7 Theſe gads were but their pens wherewith,
Their Tables written were:
And ſuch as ſcholers often ſith,
Vnto the ſcholes doe beare.
8 Whom thou ſeeſt heere thus picturde ſitte,
And firmely doſt behold:
No fable is, I do thee witte,
Vnaſkte a Prelate tolde
9 That walkt thereby: but doth declare,
The hiſtory of one,
Which written, would good recorde beare,
What faith was long agone.
10 A ſkilfull ſcolemaiſter this was,
That here ſometime did teach:
The Biſhop once of Brixia as,
And Chriſt full plaine did preach.
11 He knew well how to comprehende,
Long talke in few lynes:

And it at length how to amende,
By order and by times.
12 His ſharpe precepts, and ſterne lookes,
His beardles boyes did feare :
When hate in hart (yet for their bookes)
Full deadly they did beare.
13 The childe that learnes, I doe yee weete,
Termes aye his tutor crule.
No diſcipline in youth ſeemes ſweete,
Count this a common rule.
14 Behold the raging time now here,
Oppreſſing ſore the faith :
Doth perſecute gods children dere,
And all that Chriſt bewraith.
15 This truſty teacher of the ſwarme,
Profeſt the liuing God :
The chiefe good thing, they compt their harme,
Perhaps he ſhakes his rod.
16 What rebels aſke the preſident,
Is he, I heare ſo loude?
Vnto our youth an inſtrument,
They ſay, and low they bowde.
17 Go bring the caytiffe foorth he bids,
And make no long delay :
Let him be ſet the boyes amids,
They doe as he doth ſay.
18 Let him be giuen vnto them all,
And let them haue their will :
To doe to him what ſpite they ſhall,
So that they will him kill.
19 Euen as they liſt let them him fray
And him deride ſo long :
Till wearines prouokes their play,
No lenger to prolong.
20 Let them I ſay then vncontrold,
Both pricke and ſcotch his ſkinne :
To bath their hands let them be bold,
In the hote bloud of him.
21 The ſcholers hereat make great game,
It pleaſeth them full well :
That they may kill and quench the flame,
They thought to them a hell.
22 They binde his hands behind his backe,
And naked they him ſtripe :
In bodkinne wiſe at him they nacke,
They laugh to ſee him ſkippe.
23 The priuy hate that ech one hath,
In hart it now appeares :
They poure it foorth in gally wrath,
They wreake them of their teares.
24 Some caſt great ſtones, ſome other breake,
Their tables on his face :
Lo here thy Latine and thy Greeke,
(Oh barren boyes of grace.)
25 The bloud runnes downe his cheekes and doth,
Imbrue the boxen leames :
Where notes by them were made (though loth)
And well proponed theames.
26 Some whet, ſome ſharpe, their penſeles pointes,
That ſerude to write with all :
Some other gage his fleſh and ioyntes,
As with a pointed nall.
27 Sometimes they pricke, ſometime they rent,
This worthy martirs fleſh :
And thus by turnes they do torment,
This confeſſour a freſh.
28 Now all with on conſent on him,
Their bloudy handes they lay :
To ſee the bloud from limme to limme,
Drop downe they make a play.
29 More painefull was the pricking pange,
Of children oft and thicke :
Then of the bigger boyes that ſtange,
And neere the hart did ſticke.
30 For by the feeble ſtrokes of the one,
Death was denied his will :
Of ſmart that made him wo begon,
He had the better ſkill.
31 The deeper ſtrokes the great ones gaue, and neerer toucht the quicke :
The welcomer he thought the ſame,
Whom longing death made ſicke.
32 God make you ſtrong he ſaith I pray,
God giue you might at will :
And what you want in yeares I ſay,
Let crueltie fulfill.
33 But whileſt the hangman breatheth ſtill,
and me with you do match :
That weakely worke, yet want no will,
my life for to diſpatch.
34 My griefes waxe great, what groneſt thou now?
Sayd ſome of them againe?
In ſchoole, aduiſed well art thou?
Whom there thou putſt to payne?
35 Behold we pay, and now make good,
as many thouſande ſtripes :
As when with weeping eyes we ſtoode,
In daunger of thy gripes.
36 Art thou now angry at thy bande, that alwayes cried write, write,
And neuer wouldſt that our right hand,
Should reſt in quiet plyte?
37 We had forgot our playing times,
Thou churle deniedſt vs of :
We now but pricke and point our lines,
And thus they grinne and ſcof.
38 Correct good ſir your viewed verſe,
If ought amiſſe there be :
Now vſe thy power and then rehearſe,
that haue not marked thee.
39 Chriſt pittying this groaning man,
With tormments torne and tyred :
Commaundes his hart to breake euen then,
And life that was then hyered.
41 He yeeldes againe to him that gaue,
And thus he makes exchaunge :
Immortall, for mortall to haue,
That in ſuch payne did raunge.
41 This is ſaith he, that this picture,
Thou ſo beholdſt, Oh geſt :
Of Caſsianus Martir pure,
Doth preach I doe proteſt.
42 If thou Prudence haue ought in ſtore,
In pietie to deale:
In hope of iuſt reward therefore,
Now ſhew thy louing zeale.
43 I could not but conſent, I weepe,
Hys tombe I doe embrace :
Home I returne, and after ſleepe,
This pittifull preface,
44 I write as a memoriall,
For euer to endure :
Of Caſsianus ſcolemaſter,
All others to allure.
45 To conſtancy vnder the croſſe,
Of their profeſſion :
Accompting gaine what euer loſſe,
For Chriſt they take vpon.

Caſsianus Martyr.

No leſſe admirable then wonderfull was the conſtancy alſo of women and maidens, who in the ſame perſecution gaue their bodyes to the tormentes & their liues for the teſtimony of Chriſt, with no leſſe boldnes of ſpirite, the did the men themſelues aboue ſpecified, to whome howe much more inferiour they were in bodely ſtregth, ſo much more worthy of prayſe they be, for their conſtant ſtanding. Of whom ſome examples here we minde (Chriſt willing) to inſerte, ſuch as in our ſtories and Chronicles ſeem moſt notable, firſt beginning with Eulalia, whoſe ſtory we haue taken out of the foreſayd Prudentius as followeth.

In the weſt part of Spaine called Portingall, is a Citty great and populous, named Emerita, wherein dwelt and was brought vp a virgine borne of noble parentage, whoſe name was Eulalia, which Emerita although for the apte ſituation thereof, was both rich & famous, yet more adourned and famous was the renowne therof, by yͤ martyrdome, bloud, and ſepulture of this bleſſed virgine Eulalia. Twelue yeares of age was ſhee and not much aboue, when ſhe refuſed great and honourable offers in mariage, as one not ſkilfull, nor yet delighting in courtly dalliaunce, neyther yet taking pleaſure in purple and gorgeous apparell, or els in precious balmes, or coſtly ornamentes and iuels: But forſaking and deſpiſing all theſe and ſuch lyke pompeous allurements, then ſhewed ſhe her ſelfe moſt buſie in preparing her iourney to her hoped inheritaunce, and heauenly patrimonie. Which Eulalia as ſhe was modeſt and diſcrete in behauiour, ſage and ſober in conditions, ſo was ſhe alſo witty and ſharp in aunſwering her enemies. But when the furious rage of perſecution inforced her to ioyne her ſelf amongeſt Gods Children in the houſhold of faith, and when the Chriſtians were commaunded to offer incenſe and ſacrifice to deuils or dead Gods: Then began the bleſſed ſpirite of Eulalia to kindle, and being of a prompt and ready wit thought forthwith (as a couragious captayne) to geue a charge vpon this ſo great, and diſordered a battayle: and ſo ſhe, ſilly woeman, pouring out the bowels of her innocent hart before God, more prouoketh therby the force and rage of her enemies agaynſt her. But the godly care of her parentes, fearing leaſt the willing minde of the Damſel, ſo ready to dye for Chriſtes cauſe, might make her gilty of her owne death, hid her and kept her cloſe at their houſe in the countrey, being a great way out of the Citty. She yet miſliking that quiet life, as alſo deteſting, to make ſuch delay, ſoftly ſtealeth out of the dores (no man knowing therof) in the night and in great haſt leauing the common waye, openeth the hedge gappes, and with werye feete (god knoweth) paſſed through yͤ thorny & bryery places, accompanied yet wͭ ſpirituall garde: & although darke & dreadfull was the ſilent night, yet had ſhee with her the Lord & guider of light. And as the children of Iſrael comming out of Egipt, had by the mightye power of God, a cloudy piller for their guide in yͤ day, & a flame of fire in the night, ſo had this godly virgine, traueling in this darke night, when ſhe fleing & forſaking the place where al filthy idolatry abounded, & haſtened her heauenly iourney, was not oppreſſed with the dreadfull darknes of the night. But yet ſhe before the day appeared in this her ſpeedy iourney, with her ſelfe conſidered & muſed on a thouſand matters, & more. In the morning betime with a bould courage ſhe goeth vnto the tribunall or iudgement ſeat, & in the midſt of them all with a loud voice, crying out ſayde: I praye you what a ſhame is it for you thus raſhely, and without aduiſement to deſtroy and kill mens ſoules, and to throwe their bodies aliue againſt the rocks, and cauſe them to deny the omnipotent god? would you know (O you vnfortunate) who I am? behold, I am one of the Chriſtians: an enimie to your deuiliſh ſacrifices, I ſpurne your idols vnder my feete: I confeſſe God omnipotent with my hart and mouth. Iſis, Apollo, and Venus, what are they? Maximinus himſelfe, what is he? The one a thing of naught, for that they be yͤ workes of mens hands, yͤ other but a caſt away bicauſe he worſhippeth the ſame worke. Therfore friuolous are they both, and both not worthy to be ſet by. Maximinus is a Lorde of ſubſtaunce, and yet he himſelfe falleth downe before a ſtone, and voweth the honor of hys dignitie vnto thoſe that are much inferior to his vaſſals. Why then doth he oppreſſe ſo tirannically, more worthye ſtomacks and courages then himſelfe? He muſt neds be a good guid, and an vpright iudge, which fedeth vpon innocent bloud: and breathing in the bodies of godly men doth rent and teare their bowels, and that more is, hath his delight in deſtroying and ſubuerting the faith.

Go to therfore thou hangman, burne, cut, and mangle thou theſe earthly mēbers. It is an eaſie matter to breake a britle ſubſtance, but the inward mind ſhalt not thou hurt for any thing thou canſt do. The pretor thē or iudge wyth theſe words of hers, ſet in a great rage, ſaith, hangmā take her and pull her out by the heare of her head & torment her to the vttermoſt. Let her feele the power of our countrey gods, and let her know what the Imperiall gouernement of a Prince is. But yet, O thou ſturdy girle, faine woulde I haue thee (if it were poſſible) before thou dye, to reuoke this thy wickednes. Behold what pleaſures thou maieſt enioy by the honorable houſe thou cameſt of. Thy fallen houſe and progenie followeth thee to death with lamentable teares, & the heauy nobility of thy kindred maketh dolfull lamētation for thee. What meaneſt thou, wilt thou kill thy ſelf ſo younge a flower, & ſo neare theſe honorable mariages and great dowries that thou mayeſt enioy? Doth not the gliſtering and golden pompe of the bried bed moue thee? Doth not the reuerende pietie of thyne Auncitours pricke thee? whom is it not, but that this thy raſhnes and weakenes ſorroweth? behold here the furniture ready prepared for thy terrible death. Either ſhalt thou be beheaded with this ſword, or els with theſe wild beaſtes ſhalt thou be pulled in peeces, or els yͭ being caſt into the fiery flames ſhalbe (although lamentably bewailed of thy friends and kinſfolks) conſumed to aſhes. What great matter is it for thee I pray thee, to eſcape al this? If thou wilt but take & put with thy fingers a little ſalt & incenſe into the cenſers, thou ſhalt be deliuered from al theſe puniſhmēts. To this Eulalia made no aunſwere, but being in a great furye ſhee ſpitteth in the tirauntes face, ſhe throweth downe the Idoles, and ſpurneth abroad with her feete the heape of incenſe prepared to the cenſers: then without further delay, the hangmen with both their ſtrengthes toke her, & puld one ioynte from an other, and with the talantes of wilde beaſtes, ſcotched her ſides to the hard bones: ſhe all this while ſinging and prayſing God in this wiſe. Beholde, O Lord I will not forget thee: what a pleaſure is it for them O Chriſt that remember thy triumphant victoryes, to attayne vnto theſe high dignities, and ſtill calleth vpon that holy name, al ſtained and embrued with her owne bloude. This ſang ſhe with a bold ſtomacke, neither lamentyngly nor yet wepingly, but being glad and mery, abandonyng from her mind all heauines and griefe, when as out of a warme fountain her mangled members with freſh bloud bathed her white and fayre ſkinne. Then procede they to the laſt and final torment, which was not only the goring and wounding of her mangled body with the yron grat, & hurdle, and terrible harrowing of her fleſh, but burned, on euery ſide with flaming torches her tormented breſts, and ſides: her heare hanging about her ſhoulders in two parts deuided (wherewith her ſhamefaſt chaſtitie and virginitie was couered) reached downe to the ground: but when the cracking flame fleeth about her face, kindled by her heare, and reacheth the crowne of her head: thē ſhe deſiring ſwift death, opened her mouth and ſwalowed the flame, and ſo reſted ſhee in peace.

Agnes conſtant in the confeſſion of her fayth

Agnes threatned to the brothelhouſe.

Agnes bolde vpon the helpe of Chriſt.

The incontinent eyes of a yonng man beholding Agnes ſtrunken out.

As ye haue heard now the Chriſtian life and conſtant death of Eulalia, much worthy of praiſe & commendation: So no leſſe commendation is worthely to be giuen to bleſſed Agnes, that conſtant Damſell and martir of God, who as ſhe was in Rome of honorable parentes begotten, ſo lyeth ſhe there as honorably intombed & buried. Whiche Agnes for her vnſpotted & vndefiled virginitie, deſerueth no greater praiſe and commendation, then for her willing death and martirdome. Some writers make of her a long diſcourſe, more in my iudgement then neceſſary, reciting diuers & ſundry ſtraunge miracles by her done in the proceſſe of her hiſtory, which partly for tediouſnes, partly for the doubtfulnes of the author, (whome ſome father vpon Ambroſe) and partly for the ſtraungenes and incredibilitie therof I omit, being ſatiſfied with that which Prudentius, briefly writeth of her, as foloweth: Shee was (ſayth hee) yong & not mariageable, when firſt ſhe being dedicated to Chriſt, boldly reſiſted the wicked Edictes of the Emperor: leaſt that through idolatry ſhe might haue denied and forſaken the holy faith: but yet firſt proued by diuers and ſundry pollicies to induce her to the ſame, (as now with yͤ flattering and intiſing words of the Iudge, now with the threatnings of the ſtorming executioner) ſtode notwythſtanding, ſtedfaſt in al couragious ſtrength: and willingly offered her body to hard & painful torments, not refuſing as ſhe ſayd, to ſuffer whatſoeuer it ſhould be, yea though it were death it ſelfe. Then ſaid the cruell tyraunt: if to ſuffer paine & torment, be ſo eaſie a matter and lightly regarded of thee & that thou accompteſt thy life nothing worth: yet yͤ ſhame of thy dedicated or vowed virginity is a thing more regarded I know, and eſteemed of thee. Wherfore this is determined, that vnles thou wilt make obeiſaunce to the aultar of Minerua, and aſke forgiuenes of her for thy arrogancy, thou ſhalt be ſent or abandoned to the cōmon ſtewes or brothel houſe. Agnes yͤ virgine, with more ſpirit and vehemency inueieth againſt both Minerua & her verginitie: the youth in ſculs flocke and runne togither, and craue that they may haue Agnes their ludibrious pray: thē ſaith Agnes, Chriſt is not ſo forgetfull of thoſe that be hys, that he wil ſuffer violently to be taken frō them their golden and pure chaſtitie, neither wil he leaue them ſo deſtitute of helpe: he is alwaies at hande and ready to fight for ſuch as are ſhamfaſt and chaſt virgines, neither ſuffereth he his giftes of holy integritie or chaſtitie to be polluted. Thou ſhalt ſayth ſhee, willingly bathe thy ſworde in my bloud if thou wilt, but thou ſhalt not defile my body with filthy luſt for any thing thou canſt doe. She had no ſooner ſpoken theſe wordes, but he commaunded that ſhe ſhould be ſet naked at the corner of ſome ſtreete, (whiche place at that time, ſuch as were ſtrumpets cōmonly vſed, the greater part of the multitude both ſorrowing and ſhaming to ſee ſo ſhameles a ſight, went their wayes, ſome turninge their heades, ſome hiding their faces. But one amongſt yͤ reſt, with vncircumciſed eies, beholding the Damſell, and that in ſuch opprobrious wiſe: behold a flame of fire lyke vnto a flaſh of lightning, falleth vpō him, ſtriketh his eies out of his head, wherupon he for dead falling to the groūd, ſpraulech in the chanel durt, whoſe cōpanions taking him vp, & carrying him away, bewayled him as a dead man. But the virgin for this her miraculous deliuery from the danger and ſhame of that place, ſingeth prayſes vnto God and Chriſt.

beyng deſired to pray vnto Chriſt for the partie, that a litle before with fire frō heauen for hys incōtinency was ſtricken was reſtored by their prayer, both vnto hys perfect health & ſight. But bleſſed Agnes after that ſhe had climed this her firſt grieſe and ſtep vnto the heauēly pallace, forthwith began to clime an other: for fury ingendring now, yͤ mortall wrath of her bloudy enemy, wringing his handes crieth out ſaying, I am vndone: O yͧ the executioner draw out thy ſword, and doe thyne office that yͤ Emperour hath appoynted thee. And when Agnes ſaw a ſturdy and cruell fellow (to behold) ſtand behinde her, or approaching neere vnto her with a naked ſword in his hand: I am now glad der ſayth ſhe, & reioyce, yͭ ſuch a one as thou, being a ſtout, fierce, ſtrong and ſturdy ſouldiour art come, then one more feable, weake, & faynt ſhould come, or els any other yong man ſweetly enbalmed, and wearing gaye apparell that might deſtroy me with funerall ſhame. I wil make haſt to meet him and will no longer protract my longing deſire: I wil willingly receaue into my papes the length of hys ſword, and into my breſt will draw the force therof euē vnto the hilts: That thus I being maryed vnto Chriſt my ſpouſe, may ſurmount and eſcape all the darckenes of this world, that reacheth euen vnto yͤ ſkyes. O eternal gouernour, vouchſafe to opē the gates of heauen once ſhut vp agaynſt al the inhabitantes of the earth, and receaue (oh Chriſt) my ſoule that ſeeketh thee. Thus ſpeaking and kneeling vpon her knees, ſhe prayeth vnto Chriſt aboue in heauen, that her necke might be the redyer for the ſword, now hāging ouer the ſame. The executioner then with his bloudy hand, finiſhed her hope, & at one ſtroke cutteth off her head, & by ſuch ſhort & ſwift death doth he preuente her of yͤ payne therof.

Petrus de Natalibus. lib.10.

Katherine reſiſteth the Emperour openly to hys face.

The tormentes and end of Katherine.

I haue oftentimes before complayned that the ſtories of Sayntes haue bene poudered and ſawſed with diuers vntrue additions and fabulous inuentiōs of men, who either of a ſuperſtitious deuotion, or of a ſubtill practiſe, haue ſo mingle mangled their ſtories and liues, that almoſt nothing remayneth in them ſimple and vncorrupt, as in the vſuall Portues wont to be read for dayly ſeruice, is manifeſt and euident to be ſeene, wherein, few Legendes there be, able to abide yͤ touch of hiſtory, if they were truely tried. This I write vpon the occaſiō ſpecially of good Katherine, whome now I haue in hand. In whom although I nothing doubt, but in her life was great holines, in her knowledge excellency, in her death conſtancy: yet that all thinges be true that be ſtoryed of her, neyther dare I affirme, neyther am I bound ſo to thinke: So many ſtrange fictions of her be fained diuerſly of diuers writers, wherof ſome ſeeme incredible, ſome alſo impudent. As where Petrus de Natalibus, writing of her conuerſion declareth, how that Katherine ſleeping before a certaine picture or table of the Crucifixe, Chriſt with his mother Mary appeared vnto her: And when Mary had offered her to Chriſt to be his wife, he firſt refuſed her for her blackenes. The next tyme, ſhe beyng baptiſed, Mary appearing againe, offered her to mary with Chriſt, who then being liked, was eſpouſed to hym and maryed, hauing a golden ring the ſame tyme put on her finger in her ſleep. &c. Bergomenſis writeth thus, that becauſe ſhe in yͤ ſight of the people openly reſiſted the Emperour Maxentius to hys face and rebuked hym for hys crueltie, therfore ſhe was commaunded and committed vpon the ſame to priſon, which ſeemeth hetherto not much to digreſſe from trueth. It followeth moreouer, that the ſame night an angell came to her, comforting and exhorting her to be ſtrong and conſtant vnto the Martyrdome, for that ſhe was a mayd accepted in the ſight of God, and that the Lord would be with her, for whoſe honor ſhe did fight, and that he would geue her a mouth and wiſedome, which her enemies ſhould not withſtand: with many other thinges mo, which I here omit. As this alſo I omit concerning yͤ 50. Philoſophers, whom ſhe in diſputation conuicted, and conuerted vnto our religion, and dyed martyrs for yͤ ſame. Item, of the conuerting of Porphyrius kinſmā to Maxentius and Fauſtina the Emperours wife. At length (ſaith the ſtory) after ſhe proued the racke, and the foure ſharpe cutting wheeles, hauing at laſt her head cut off with the ſword, ſo ſhe finiſhed her martyrdome, about the yeare of our Lord (as Antoninus affirmeth) 310 Symeon Metaphraſtes, writing of her, diſcourſeth the ſame more at large, to whome they may reſort, which couet more therein to be ſatiſfied.

A Chriſtian voyce of a true martyr.

The anſwere of Iulitta.

Iulitta condemned to the fire.

The words and exhortations of Iulitta to woemen about her

Among the workes of Baſill a certayne Oration is extant concerning Iulitta the martyr, who came to her martyrdome (as he witneſſeth) by this occaſion. A certayne auaricious and greedy perſon, of great authoritie, and as it may appeare, the Emperour his deputy, or other like officer, (who abuſed the decrees and lawes of the Emperour agaynſt the Chriſtians, to hys own lucre and gayne) violently tooke from this Iulitta all her goodes, landes, cattell, and ſeruaunts, contrary to all equity and right. She made her pittifull cōplaint to the Iudges, a day was appointed, when the cauſe ſhould be heard. The ſpoyled woman, and the ſpoiling extorcioner ſtode forth together, yͤ woman lamentably declareth her caſe, yͤ man frowningly beholdeth her face. When ſhe had proued that of good right the goods were her owne & that wrongfully he had dealed with her: the wicked & bloudthirſty wretch, preferring vile worldly ſubſtaunce, before the precious ſubſtaunce of a Chriſten body, affirmed her action to be of no force, for that ſhe was as an outlaw in not ſeruing the Emperors Gods, ſince her chriſtian faith hath bene firſt abiured. His allegation was allowed as good and reaſonable. Whereupon incenſe & fire were prepared for her to worſhip the Gods, which vnles ſhe would do, neither the Emperors protectiō, nor lawes, nor iudgment, nor life, ſhould ſhe enioy in that cōmon weale. When this handmaid of the Lorde heard theſe wordes, ſhe ſaide, farwell life, welcome death: farwell ryches welcome pouerty. All that I haue if it were a thouſand times more, would I rather loſe, then to ſpeake one wicked & blaſphemous word againſt God my creator. I yeeld thee thanks moſt harty, O my God, for this gift of grace, that I can contemne & deſpiſe this frayle and tranſitory world, eſteming Chriſtian profeſſion aboue all treaſures. Hence forth whē any queſtion was demaunded, her aunſwere was: I am the ſeruaunt of Ieſus Chriſt. Her kindred & acquaintaunce flocking to her, aduertiſed her to chaunge her minde. But that vehemently ſhe refuſed, with deteſtation of their Idolatry. Forthwith the Iudge, with the ſharpe ſworde of ſentēce not only cutteth of al her goodes & poſſeſſions, but iudgeth her alſo to the fire moſt cruellye. The ioyfull Martyr imbraceth the ſentence as a thing moſt ſweete and delectable. She addreſſeth her ſelfe to the flames, in countenaunce, ieſture, and wordes, declaring the ioy of her hart, coupled with ſingular conſtancy. To the women beholding her, ſententiouſlye ſhee ſpake: Sticke not, O ſiſters, to labour and trauell after true piety and godlines. Ceaſe to accuſe the fragilitie of feminine nature. What? are not we created of the ſame matter, that mē are? Yea, after Gods Image and ſimilitude are we made, as liuely as they. Not fleſh only God vſed in the creation of the woman, in ſigne and tokē of her infirmitie, & weaknes, but bone of bones is ſhe, in token that ſhee muſt be ſtrong in the true and liuing God, all falſe Gods forſaken. Conſtant in faith al infidelity renounced patient in aduerſity, all worldly eaſe refuſed. Waxe wery, (my dere ſiſters) of your liues lead in darkenes, & be in loue with my chriſt, my God, my redeemer, my comforter which is the true light of the worlde. Perſwade your ſelues, or rather the ſpirite of the liuing God perſwade you, that there is a world to come, wherin the worſhippers of idoles and deuils ſhal be tormented, perpetually, the ſeruauntes of the high god ſhalbe crowned eternally. With theſe words ſhe embraced the fire, and ſweetly ſlept in the Lord.

Barbara, Fauſta, Euelatius, Maximinus, Iuliana, Anyſia, Iuſtina, Tecla, Martirs.

There haue bene moreouer beſide theſe aboue recited diuers godly women and faithfull Martirs, as Barbara a noble woman in Thuſcia, who after miſerable priſonmēt ſharpe cordes, & burning flames put to her ſides, was at laſt beheaded. Alſo Fauſta the virgin, which ſuffered vnder Maximinus by whome Euelaſius a ruler of the Emperours palace, and Maximinus the Preſident were both conuerted and alſo ſuffered martirdome, as witneſſeth Metaphraſtes. Item Iuliana a virgine of ſingular beautie in Nicomedia, who after diuers agonies ſuffered likewiſe vnder, Maximinus. Item, Anyſia a mayd of Theſſalonica, who vnder the ſaid Maximinus ſuffred. Metaphr. ibid. Iuſtina which ſuffered with Cyprianus biſhop of Antioche, not to omit alſo Tecla although moſt writers doe accorde that ſhe ſuffered vnder Nero. Platina in vita Caij, maketh alſo mentiō of Lucia, & Agatha. All which holy maides and virgins glorified the Lord Chriſt with their conſtant martirdome in this tenth & laſt perſecution of Diocleſian.

Caius, Marcellinus, Marcellus, Euſebius, Miltiades Byſhops of Rome and martyrs.

Marcellinus denyeth and repenteth.

Ex Lib Concilior & Platina.

During the time of which perſecution theſe biſhops of Rome ſucceded on after another. Caius who ſucceded next after Xiſtᵒ mētioned. pag. 71. Marcellinus Marcellus (of whō, Euſebius in his ſtory maketh no mention) Euſebius, & then Miltiades: al which, died martirs in the tempeſt of this perſecution. Firſt Marcellinus after the Martirdome of Caius was ordeined Biſhoppe, he being brought by Diocleſian, to the Idoles, firſt yeelded to their Idolatry & was ſeene to ſacrifice, wherfore being excommunicated by the Chriſtians, fell in ſuch repentaunce, that he returned agayne to Diocleſian, where he ſtanding to his former confeſſion, and publikely condemning the idolatry of the heathen, recouered the crowne of martirdome: ſuffering with Claudius, Cyrinus, and Antoninus.

Euſeb. in Chro.

Marcellus likewiſe was vrged of Maxentius to renounce his biſhoprick & religion, & to ſacrifice with them to idols. which when he conſtantly refuſed, was beaten with cudgels, and ſo expelled the city. Then he entring into ẏ houſe of Lucina a widow, aſſembled there the cógregation, which when it came to the eares of Maxentius the tiraunt, he turned the houſe of Lucina into a ſtable, and made Marcellus the keeper of the beaſts, and ſo with the ſtinch thereof and miſerable handling was put to death. Euſebius late byſhop of Rome, as Euſeb. in Chron. ſaith .7. monethes: Marianus Scotus ſaith 8. months. Damaſus affirmeth 6. yeares, Sabellicus alledgeth certaine authors that ſay, that he was ſlayne by Maximinianus: but correcteth that himſelfe, affirming that Maximinianus died before him.

Authors diſſent.

Ex Sabel. Enead. 7. Lib. 8.

Miltiades by the teſtimony of Platina, and other that follow him ſat 3. yeares, & 7. moneths, & ſuffred vnder Maximinianus. But that ſemeth not to be true, as both Sabellicus doth rightly note, affirming that the ſame cannot ſtand by the ſupputation of time: Forasmuch as the ſaide Galerius Maximinus raigned but 2. yeares, and died before Miltiades. Alſo Euſebius manifeſtly expreſſeth the example of a letter of Conſtantine written to this Miltiades Byſhop of Rome, playnely conuicting that to bee falſe, which Platina affirmeth.

Sabel. ibid.

A place of Platina confuted.

The order and proceeding deſcribed in iudgement agaynſt the Biſhop of Rome.

In the booke collected of general councels among the decretal epiſtles, there is a long tractation about ẏ iudgement and condemnation of Marcellinus: wherof the Mayſters & Patrones of popery, in theſe our daies, take great hold to proue the ſupremacy of the pope to be aboue al generall councels, and that he ought not to be ſubiect to the condemnation of any perſon or perſons, for that there is written: Nemo vnquam iudicauit Pontificem, nec Præſul ſacerdotem ſuum, quoniam prima ſedes non iudicabitur a quoquá. &c. Although this ſentence of Miltiades ſeemeth apparantly to be patched in, rather by ſome Heldibrandus, then by Miltiades: both for that it hangeth with little order of ſenſe, vpon that which goeth before: & againe bicauſe that prima ſedes here mentioned, was not yet ordained nor attributed to the ſea of Rome before the councell of Nice, where the order and placing of byſhops was firſt eſtabliſhed. But to let this ſentence paſſe, yet notwithſtanding the circuſtance & proceding of this iudgement, if it be rightly weyed, maketh very little to the purpoſe of theſe men. Neither is it true that the biſhops of this councell of Sinueſſe, did not condemne Marcellinus: for the wordes of the councell bee plaine. Subſcripſerunt igitur in eius damnationem & damnauerunt eum extra ciuitatem. That is: They ſubſcribed therfore to his condemnation, and condemned him to be expelled out of the citie. Moreouer by ẏ ſaid councell were brought in, the 42. witneſſes againſt Marcellinus. In the ſaide councell the verdit of the ſame witneſſes was demaunded and alſo receiued. Furthermore, Quirinus there, one of the Byſhops openly proteſted, that he would not depart ẏ councell, before the malice of the biſhops were reuealed: what doth al this declare, but that the biſhop of Rome was called there, and did appeare before the iudgement ſeat of the Councell, and there ſtode ſubiecte to their ſentence & authoritie, by the which he was expelled out of the City? As for the wordes of the councell, whereupon our Papiſtes ſtand ſo much. Non enim noſtro, ſed tuo ipſius iudicio cődemnaberis, &c. Item: Tuo ore iudica cauſam tuã. &c. Theſe words import not here the authority of the Romane biſhop to be aboue the councel, neither do they declare what the councell could not do, but what they would and wiſhed rather to be done, that is, that he ſhould rather acknowledge his crime before God & them, with a voluntary yelding of his hart, then that the confeſſion of ſuch an hainous fact ſhould be extorted from him through their condemnatiõ: for that they ſaw to be expedient for hys ſoules health. Otherwiſe their cõdemnation ſhould ſerue him to ſmal purpoſe. And ſo it came to paſſe. For he being vrged of thẽ to condemne himſelfe, ſo did: proſtrating himſelfe and weeping before them, wherupon immediatly they proceded to the ſentẽce againſt him, condemning & pronouncing him to be expelled the city. Now whether by this may be gathered, that ẏ Byſhop of Rome ought not to be cited, accuſed, and condemned by any perſon or perſons, let the indifferent Reader iudge ſimply.

An obiection of the Papiſtes anſwered vnto.

The Byſhop of Rome cyted vp and appeareth before the councell.

The Byſhop of Rome condemned by the Councell.

The decretall Epiſtles and conſtitutions of theſe Byſhops of Rome examined.

The chief ſcope of the conſtitutions decretall, to magnifie the Church of Rome.

As touching ẏ decretal epiſtles, which be intituled vnder the name of theſe foreſaide biſhops: who ſo well aduiſeth them, and with iudgement will examine the ſtile, the time, the argument the hanging togither of the matter, & the conſtitutions in them contained (little ſeruing to anye purpoſe, and nothing ſeruing for thoſe troublous dayes then preſent) may eaſely diſcerne them: either in no part to be theirs, or much of the ſame to be clouted and patched by the doings of other, which liued in other times: ſpecially ſeing al the conſtitutions in them for the moſt part tend to the ſetting vp and to exalt the ſea of Rome aboue al other, Biſhops and churches, and to reduce all cauſes & appeals to the ſaid ſea of Rome. So the epiſtle of Caius beginnyng with the commendation of the authoritie of his ſea, endeth after the ſame tenor, willing and cõmaunding all difficult queſtions in al prouinces whatſoeuer emerging, to be referred to the ſea Apoſtolicall. Moreouer, the greateſt part of the ſaid epiſtle from this place. Quicunque illi ſunt ita obcæcati. &c. to the ende of this periode: Quoniam ſicut ait. B. Apoſtolus Magnum eſt pietatis. &c. is conteyned in the epiſtle of Leo, vnto Leo the Emperour: & ſo rightly agreeth in al poynts with the ſtile of Leo, that euidẽt it is the ſame to be borrowed out of Leo, out of the epiſtle of Caius, or to bee patched into the epiſtle of Caius taken out of Leo.

The Epiſtle of Caius.

A great part of the Epiſtle of Caius, taken out of the Epiſtle of Leo, to Leo the Emperour.

Likewiſe the epiſtle of Marcellinus to get more authoritie with ẏ reader, is admixed with a great part of S. Paules epiſtle to the epheſians, worde, for worde. And howe is it like that Marcellinus which died in the 20. yeare of Diocleſian coulde write of conſubſtantialitie of the diuine perſons, when that controuerſie and terme of Conſubſtantialitie, was not heard of in the Church, before Nicene councell, which was 23. yeares after him? But eſpecially the two epiſtles of Marcellus bewray themſelues, ſo that for the confuting therof needeth no other probation, more then onely the reading of the ſame. Such a glorious ſtile of ambition therein doth appeere, as it is eaſie to be vnderſtode, not to proceede either frõ ſuch an humble Martir, or to ſauour any thing of the miſery of ſuch a time. His wordes of hys firſt epiſtle written to the brethren of Antioche, and alleaged in the popes decrees by Gratianus are theſe:

The Epiſtle of Marcellinus.

The epiſtles decretall of Marcellus.

24. q. 1. Rogamus vos fratres.

We deſire you brethren that ye doe not teach nor conceiue any other thing, but as yee haue receiued of the bleſſed Apoſtle S. Peter, and of other Apoſtles & fathers. For of him ye were firſt of all inſtructed. wherefore you muſt not forſake your owne father and followe others. For hee is the head of the whole Church to whom the Lord ſayd: Thou art Peter and vpon this rocke I will build my church. &c. whoſe ſeate was firſt with you in Antioche: which afterward by the commaundement of the Lord was tráſlated frő thence to Rome, of the which church of Rome I am this day placed (by the grace of god) to be the gouernour. Frő the which church of Rome, neither ought you to ſeparate your ſelues, ſeeing to the ſame church all maner cauſes eccleſiaſticall, being of any importance (Gods grace ſo diſpoſing) are commonded to be referred: by the ſame to be ordered regularly, from whence they tooke their firſt beginning. &c. And followeth conſequently vpon the ſame. And if your Church of Antioche, which was once the 1. wil now yeld her ſelf vnto the ſea of Rome, ther is no other Church els, which will not ſubiect it ſelfe to our dominion: to whom all other Byſhops, who ſo euer liſteth, and as they muſt needes do (according to the decrees of the the Apoſtles and of their ſucceſſors) ought to flee vnto, as to their head, and muſt appeale to the ſame, there to haue their redreſſe, and their protection from whence they tooke their firſt inſtruction and conſecration. &c.

In what chapter or leafe in all the Byble doth the Lord commaund the ſea of Peter to be tranſlated from Antioche to Rome.

The church of Rome biddeth the Church of Antioche to yeld vnto her.

whether this be like matter to proceed from the ſpirit of Marcellus that bleſſed martyr, in thoſe ſo dreadfull dayes, I ſay no more, but onely deſire thee (gẽtle reader) to iudge.

The ſecond Epiſtle of Marcellus written to Maxentius.

In hys ſecond Epiſtle moreouer, the ſayd Marcellus, writing to Maxentius, the bloudy tyraunt, firſt reprehendeth him for his crueltie, ſharpely admoniſhing him howe & what to do: to learne and ſeeke the true religion of God, to mayntayne hys Churche, to honor and reuerence the Prieſtes of God, and ſpecially exhorteth him to charitie, and that he would ceaſe from perſecution. &c. All this is poſſible, and like to be true: but now marke (good reader) what blanched ſtuffe here followed withall: as where hee alledging the ſtatutes and ſanctions of hys predeceſſors, declareth and diſcuſſeth that no byſhop nor miniſter ought to be perſecuted, or depriued of hys goodes. And if they be, then ought the to haue their poſſeſſions and places againe reſtored (by the law) before they were bound (by the law) to aunſwere to their accuſations layd in agaynſt thẽ. And ſo after that, in conuenient tyme, to be called to a councell. The which councell notwithſtanding, without the authoritie of the holy ſea, cannot proceede regularly (albeit it remayne in hys power to aſſemble certayne Byſhops together.) Neyther can he regularly condemne any Byſhop, appealing to this hys Apoſtolicall ſea, before the ſentence diffinite do proceede from the foreſayd ſea. &c. And it followeth after: and therefore (ſayth he) let no Byſhop of what crime ſoeuer he be attached, come to hys accuſation or be heard, but in hys owne ordinary Synode at hys conuenient time: the regular and Apoſtolicalll authoritie beyng ioyned withall. Moreouer in the ſayd Epiſtle writing to Maxentius, hee decreeth that no lay men, or any ſuſpected Byſhop, ought to accuſe Prelates of the Church: ſo that if they be either laye men, or men of euill conuerſation, or proued manyfeſt enmies, or incenſed with anye hatred, their accuſations againſt any Byſhops ought not to ſtande. Wyth other ſuch matters moe, concerning the diſpoſition of iudiciall court. Which matter, if Pope Gregory the ſeuenth, had written to Henrye the third Emperour, or if Pope Alexander the third, had written to the Emperour Fredericus the firſt: it might haue ſtand with ſome reaſon and opportunity of time. But nowe for Marcellus to write theſe decrees in ſuch perſecution of the Churche, to Maxentius the Heathen and moſt cruell Emperour: howe vnlyke it is to bee true, and howe it ſerued then to purpoſe, the Reader may ſone diſcerne. And yet theſe be the epiſtles and conſtitutions decretal, whereby (vnder the pretenſed title of the fathers) al churches of late time, & al eccleſiaſtical cauſes haue beene, & yet are in this realme of england to this day gouerned, directed, and diſpoſed.

The Epiſtle of Marcellus to Maxentius blanched.

The church of England gouerned by the popes Canõ law without ſufficient ground of antiquitie.

The like diſcuſſion & examination I might alſo make of the other epiſtles that followe of Euſebius and Miltiades, which al tende to the ſame ſcope, that no Prelate or biſhop ought to come to his anſwere (or ad litem cõteſtatam, as the words of their writing do terme it) before they be orderly & fully reſtored again to their poſſeſſiõs. Who moreouer in yͤ ſaid their epiſtles ſtil harpe vpon this key of yͤ ſcripture: Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc petram ædificabo eccleſiam meam, Declaring moreouer that this priuiledge of iudging al mẽ and to be iudge of no man, but onely to be left to yͤ iudgement of the Lord: was gyuen to this foreſayd holy ſea of Rome, from tyme of the Apoſtles, & chiefly lefte wͭ Peter the holye key keeper: ſo that although the election of the Apoſtles was equall, yet this was chieflye graunted to Saint Peter, to haue preheminence aboue the reſt. Theſe be the wordes of Miltiades and Euſebius, whereby it may partly be ſmelled of him that hath any noſe, what was the meaning of thẽ which forged theſe writings and letters, vpon theſe auntient holy martirs.

The Epiſtles decretall of Euſebius and Miltiades.

Ex Epiſt. Decretal. Miltiades.

This I cannot but maruell at, in the thirde Epiſtle of Euſebius the biſhop of Rome, that where as Marcellius his late predeceſſor before, in his owne time and remembraunce did fall ſo horribly, and was condemned for the ſame iuſtly to be expulſed the Citie by the counſell of 300. Byſhops: yet notwithſtanding the foreſaid Euſebius in his third epiſtle alledging yͤ place of Tu es Petrus, bringeth in for a profe of the ſame and ſaith: Quia in ſede Apoſtolica extra maculam ſemper eſt Catholica ſeruata religio, &c. That is, for in the Apoſtolicall ſea, alwaies the Catholike Religion hath bene preſerued without any ſpot or blemiſh.

A place of the third Epiſtle decretall of Euſebius found vntrue.

But howſoeuer the forgers of theſe decretal Epiſtles haue forgottẽ themſelues, moſt certeine it is that theſe holy biſhops, vpon whom they were and are aſcribed: liued perfect good men, and died bleſſed martirs. Of whom this Miltiades was the laſt among all the Biſhoppes of Rome here in the weſt Church of Europe, that euer was in daunger of perſecution to be Martired, yet to this preſent day.

Miltiades the laſt Byſhop of Rome being in danger of perſecution.

And thus haue ye heard the ſtories and names of ſuch bleſſed Saintes, which ſuffered in the time of perſecution, from the xix. yeare of Diocleſian, to the vij. and laſt yeare of Maxentius with the deathes alſo & plagues deſcribed vpon theſe tormentors, and cruel tiraunts, which were the captaines of the ſame perſecutiõ. And here commeth in (bleſſed be Chriſt) the ende of theſe perſecutions here in theſe weſt Churches of Europe, ſo far as the dominion of bleſſed Conſtantinus did chiefly extend.

Yet notwithſtanding in Aſia al perſecution as yet ceaſed not for the ſpace of foure yeres, as aboue is mentioned by the meanes of wicked Licinius. Vnder whome diuers there were holy and conſtant martirs, that ſuffered greeuous torments: as Hermylus a Deacon, and Stratonicus a keeper of the priſon, which both, after their puniſhments ſuſtained, were ſtrangled in the flond Iſter. Alſo Theodorus yͤ Captaine, who being ſent for of Licinius, becauſe he would not come, and becauſe he brake his Gods in peeces, and gaue them to the pore, therfore was faſtned to the croſſe, and after being pearſed with ſharpe pricks or bodkins, in the ſecret parts of his body, was at laſt beheaded. Adde to this alſo Milles, who firſt being a Souldiour, afterward was made biſhop of a certaine Citie in Perſia, where he ſeing himſelfe could do no good to conuert them, after many tribulations and great afflictions among thẽ, curſed the Citie and departed. Which citie ſhortly after by Sapores king of Perſia was deſtroied.

The kinges of Perſia were commonly called by the name of Sapores.

In the ſame countrey of Perſia, about this time ſuffered vnder Sapores the king (as recordeth Symeon Metaſthenes) diuers valiant & conſtant martirs, as Acindymus, Pegaſius, Anempodiſtus, Epidephorus, alſo Symeon Archbiſhop of Seleucia, with Cteſiphon an other biſhop in Perſia, with other miniſters & religious men of that region, to yͤ number of 128. Of this Symeon and Cteſiphon thus writeth Zozomenus lib. 2. That the idolatrous Magitians in Perſia, taking counſaile togither againſt yͤ Chriſtians, accuſed Symeon & Cteſiphõ, to Sapores yͤ king, for yͤ they were gratefull & accepted vnto yͤ Romane Emperor & bewraied to him, ſuch things as were done in yͤ land of Perſia. Wherupon Sapores being moued, toke great diſpleaſure againſt yͤ chriſtians, oppreſſing them with taxes & tributes vnto their vtter impoueriſhing, killing alſo their Prieſtes with the ſword: After that calleth for Symeon the Archbyſhop, who there before the king declared himſelfe a worthy & a valiant captaine, of Chriſts church. For when Sapores had cõmaũded him to be led to ſuffer torments, he neither ſhronk for any feare, nor ſhewed any great humble ſute of ſubmiſſion for any pardon: wherat the king partly marueiling, partly offended, aſked why he did not knele downe, as he was wont before to do. Symeon to this aũſwered, for that ſaith he, before this time I was not brought vnto you in bondes to betray the true God, as I am nowe, ſo long I refuſed not to accompliſhe that which the order & cuſtome of the Realme of me required: but now it is not lawful for me ſo to do, for now I come to ſtand in defence of our Religion and true doctrine. When Symeon thus had aunſwered, the king perſiſting in his purpoſe, offereth vnto him yͤ choiſe, either to worſhip with him after his maner (promiſing to him many great gifts, if he would ſo doe) or if he would not, threatneth to him and to al the other chriſtians within his land, deſtruction. But Symeon neither allured with his promiſes, nor terrified with his threatnings, cõtinued conſtaunt in his doctrine profeſſed, ſo that neyther he could be induced to Idolatrous worſhip, nor yet to betray the truth of his religion. For the which cauſe he was committed into bands, and there commaunded to be kept to the kings pleaſure further knowne.

The worthy anſwere of Symeon vnto the king.

The conſtancie of Symeon.

It befel in the way as he was going to yͤ priſon, there was ſitting at the kings gate a certaine Eunuche, an olde Tutor or ſcholemaiſter of yͤ kings, named Vſthazares, who had bene once a chriſtian, and afterward falling from hys profeſſion, fell with the Heathen multitude to their Idolatrie. This Vſthazares ſitting at the dore of the kinges pallace, and ſeing Symeon paſſing by led to the priſon, roſe vp and reuerenced the Biſhop. Symeon againe with ſharpe wordes (as the time would ſuffer) rebuked him & in great anger cried out againſt him: which being once a chriſtian, woulde ſo cowardly reuolt from his profeſſion, & returne againe to the Heatheniſh Idolatry. At the hearing of theſe words the Eunuch forthwith braſting out in teares, laying away his courtly apparell, which was ſumptuous & coſtly & putting vpon him a blacke and mourning weede, ſitteth before the court gates weping and bewailing, thus ſaying with himſelfe: wo is me, wyth what hope, wyth what face, ſhall I looke hereafter for my God, which haue denied my god: whẽ as this Symeon my familiar acquantance, thus paſſing by me, ſo much diſdaineth me, that he refuſeth with one gentle word to ſalute me?

Theſe things being brought to the eares of the King (as ſuch tale cariers neuer lacke in Princes courtes) procured againſt him no litle indignation. Wherupon Sapores the king ſending for him, firſt with gentle words & courtly promiſes began to ſpeake him faire, aſking him what cauſe he had ſo to mourne, & whether there was any thing in his houſe, which was denied him, or which he had not at his owne will and aſking. Whereunto Vſthazares aunſwering againe ſaide: That there was nothing in that earthly houſe, which was to him lacking, or wherũto his deſire ſtod. Yea would god (ſaid he) O king any other grief or calamitie in al the world, whatſoeuer it were, had happened vnto me, rather thẽ this for yͤ which I do moſt iuſtly mourne and ſorrow. For this ſorroweth me that I am this day aliue, who ſhould rather haue died long ſince, & that I ſee this ſonne, which againſt my hart and mynde, for your pleaſure diſſẽblingly I appeared to worſhip, for which cauſe doublewiſe I am worthy of death. Firſt, for yͤ I haue denied Chriſt. Secondly, becauſe I did diſſemble with you. And incontinent vpon theſe wordes, ſwearing by him that made both heauen & earth, affirmed moſt certainly, that although he had plaied yͤ foole before, he would neuer be ſo mad againe, as in ſteede of the creator and maker of all thinges, to worſhip the creatures which he had made and created. him, whether to intreat him wyth gentlenes, or wyth rygour, at length in this moode commaunded the ſayde Vſthazares his old auncient ſeruaunt, and firſt Tutor & bringer vp of his youth, to be had away, and to be beheaded: as he was going to the place of execution, he deſired of the executioners, a lyttle to ſtaye, whyle he myght ſende a meſſage vnto the king, which was this (ſent in by certayne of the kings moſt truſty Eunuches) deſiring him that for all the old and faythfull ſeruyce he had done to his Father, & to him, he would now requite him wͭ thys one office agayne, to cauſe to bee cryed openlye by a publike cryer in theſe wordes followyng: that Vſthazares was beheaded not for any trechery or cryme committed againſt the king or the Realme, but onelye for that hee was a Chriſtyan, and woulde not at the Kinges pleaſure denye hys God. And ſo accordyng to hys requeſte it was performed and graunted. For thys cauſe dyd Vſthazares ſo much deſire the cauſe of hys death to be publyſhed: becauſe that as his ſhrynking backe from Chriſt, was a great occaſion to manye Chriſtians to doe the lyke: ſo nowe the ſame hearing ẏ Vſthazares dyed for no other cauſe but only for ẏ religion of Chriſt, ſhoulde learne lykewyſe by hys example to bee feruente and conſtaunt in that which they profeſſe. And thus thys bleſſed Eunuch dyd conſummate hys Martyrdome. Of the which hys Martyrdome, Symeon hearing being in pryſon was very ioyfull, and gaue god thanks. Who in the nexte daye followyng, being brought forth before the Kyng, and conſtantly refuſyng to condeſcende to the Kynges requeſt, to worſhyp viſible creatures, was lykewyſe by the commaundement of the Kyng beheaded, wyth a great number mo, whithe the ſame daye alſo did ſuffer, to the number as is ſayd of an hundreth and more. All whiche were put to death before Symeon, he ſtanding by, and exhortyng them, wyth comfortable wordes: admoniſhing them to ſtande fyrme and ſtedfaſt in the Lord, Preachyng and teachyng them concernyng death, reſurrection, and true pietye, and proued by the Scryptures ẏ to be true which he had ſayde. Declaryng moreouer that to be true lyfe in deede, ſo to dye: and that to be death in deede, to deny or to betray God for feare of puniſhment. And added further, that there was no man alyue, but needes once muſt dye. For ſo much as to all men is appoynted neceſſarelye, here to haue an ende. But thoſe thyngs which after this lyfe followe hereafter, to bee eternall, which neyther ſhall come to all men after one ſorte. But as the condition and trade of lyfe in dyuers men doth dyffer, and is not in all men like: ſo the tyme ſhall come, when all men in a moment ſhall render and receaue accordyng to theyr dooynges in thys preſent lyfe immortall rewardes: ſuch as haue here done well, of lyfe and glory, ſuch as haue done contrary, of perpetual puniſhment: As touching therefore our well doyng, here is no doubte but of all other our holy actions and vertuous deedes, there is no hyer or greater deede, then if a man here looſe his lyfe, for hys Lord God. Wyth theſe wordes of comfortable exhortation, the holye Martyrs beyng prepared, willyngly yeelded vp their liues to death. After whom at laſt followed Symeon, with two other Prieſtes or Myniſters of his Church, Abedecalaas, and Ananias, which alſo wyth him were pertakers of the ſame Martyrdome.

For in the vpper part of hys necke they made a hole to thruſt in theyr hande, and pluckt out hys tongue out of hys mouth, and ſo he was put to death. Sapores the king directed out a cruell and ſharpe Edict throughout al his land, condemning to death all them, whoſoeuer confeſſed themſelues to be Chriſtians. By reaſon whereof an innumerable multitude of Chriſtians, through the wicked procuring of the malignant Magitians ſuffered the ſame tyme by the ſworde, both in Citie and in Towne: ſome beyng ſought for, ſome offeryng themſelues willyngly, leaſt they ſhoulde ſeeme by their ſylence to deny Chriſt. Thus al the Chriſtians that could be founde, without pitie were ſlaine and diuers alſo of the kinges owne court and houſholde. The end and martirdome of Acepſimas Byſhop. Athalas loſt the vſe of both hys armes beyng pluckt from the ioyntes of his body.

Now forſomuch as the king had cõmaunded that no Chriſtians ſhould be put to death, but onely ſuch as were the teachers and leaders of the flocke: the Magicians and Archmagitians, left no diligence vntried, to ſet forward the matter. Whereby great affliction and perſecutions was among the Byſhops and teachers of the Church, which in all places, went to ſlaughter, eſpecially in the country of Diabenor, for that part of Perſia aboue al other was moſt Chriſtian. Where Acepſimas ẏ Byſhop with a great number of his flocke and clergy, were apprehended and taken: vpon the apprehenſion of whõ the Magicians to ſatiſfie ẏ kings commaundement, diſmiſſed al the reſt, onely depriuing them of their liuing and goods. Onely Acepſimas the biſhop they retayned, with whom one Iacobus a Miniſter or prieſt of his church was alſo ioined: not of any compulſion, but onely as himſelfe ſo deſired and obtained of thoſe Magicians, ẏ he might folow him, & be coupled in ẏ ſame bonds to ſerue the aged byſhop, and to relieue (ſo much as he might) his calamities, and heale his woundes. For he had bene ſore ſcourged before of the Magians, after they had apprehended him, and brought him to worſhippe the ſunne, which thing becauſe he would not do, they caſt him into priſon againe, where this Iacobus was waiting vpõ him. At the ſame time likewiſe Athalis a Prieſt or Miniſter, alſo Azadanes and Abdieſus Deacons were impryſoned, and miſerably ſcourged for the teſtimony of the Lorde Ieſus. After this the Archimagus eſpying his time, complaineth to the king of them, hauing authoritie and commiſſion giuen him (vnles they would worſhip the ſunne) to puniſh them as he pleaſed. This commaundement receyued of the king, the maſter Magus doth declare to thẽ in priſon. But they aunſwered againe plainely, that they would neuer be either betraiers of Chriſt, or worſhippers of the ſunne. Wherupon without mercy they were put to bitter torments. Where Acepſimas ſtrongly perſiſting in the confeſſion of chriſt, endureth to death. The other being no leſſe rent & wounded with ſcourges, yet cõtinued merueilouſly aliue. And becauſe they woulde in no caſe turne from their conſtant ſentence, were turned againe into priſon. Of whome Athalas in the time of his whipping was ſo drawne & rackt with pulling, that both his armes being looſed out of the ioynts, hanged downe from his body: which he ſo caried about without vſe of any hande to feede himſelfe, but as he was fed of other.

Conſtantinus the Emperour writeth to the king of Perſia in the behalfe of the afflicted Chriſtians.

The rumor and noyſe of this ſo miſerable affliction of the Christians in the kingdome of Perſia, comming to the eares of Conſtantinus the Emperour, put him in great heauines, ſtuding and reuoluing with himſelfe, howe to helpe the matter, which in deede was very hard for him to do. It ſo befell the ſame time, that certaine Embaſſadours were then at Rome from Sapores king of Perſia, to whom Conſtantinus did eaſely graunt, and conſent, ſatiſfying all their requeſtes, and demaundes, thinking thereby to obtaine the more friendſhip at the kings handes, that at hys requeſt, he would be good to the Chriſtians to whome he writeth his Epiſtle in their behalfe, and ſendeth the ſame by his meſſengers beginning thus:

The copy and effect of the Epiſtle of Conſtantine to Sapores.

Diuinam fidem ſeruans veritatis lucem ſortior. Veritatis luce ductus diuinam fidem cognoſco. Per ea igitur, quibus illa res agẽdas confirmat, ſanctiſſimam religionem cognitam reddo, & hunc me cultum doctorem cognitionis ſancti dei habere confiteor. &c. Euſebius. de vita. Conſtantinus. lib. 4. The contentes whereof, briefly do tende to this effect. Declaring vnto him how he ſhould ſtand much beholden to him, if at his requeſt he would ſhew ſome quiet and reſt to the Chriſtians. In whoſe religion there was nothing which he could iuſtly blame. For ſo much as in their ſacrifices they vſe to kil nothing, nor to ſhed no bloud, but only to offer vp vnbloudy ſacrifices, to make their praiers vnto God, who delighteth not in bloud ſhedding, but onely in the ſoule that loueth vertue, and followeth ſuch doctrine and knowledge, which is agreeing to true pietie. And therefore ſuch men as doe leade him and learne ſo to beleue, and to worſhip God, are more to bee commended. Moreouer he aſſureth him to finde God more mercifull to him, if hee woulde embrace the godlye pietye and truth of the Chriſtians. And for example thereof, bringeth in the ſtories of Galienus and Valerianus, who ſo long as they were fauorers of the Chriſtiãs did proſper and floriſh. But as ſoone as they moued any perſecution agaynſt them, it happened to them, as it did to all other Emperors before them, that all went backward with them, as eſpecially might appere by Valerianus, who after he had raged ſo cruelly againſt the Chriſtians, was eftſoones ouercome of the Perſians, the reuenging hand of God falling vpon him, where hee led euer after a miſerable life, in wretched captiuitie. Farther alſo for the more euidẽce of the ſame, inferreth the examples of thoſe Emperors and tyrants in his time, whom he vanquiſhed & ſubdued only by his faith in Chriſt, for the which faith, God was hys helper, and gaue him the victory in many battailes, and tryumph ouer great tyraunts, whereby he hath alſo enlarged the dominiõ of the Romane monarchie from the weſt Ocean, to the vttermoſt parts wel neere of al the Eaſt. To the doing and working wherof, he neither called to him the helpe of any charmer, or diuination of ſouthſayer, nor vſed the killing of any ſacrifice: but onely the following of the croſſe, and prayer made to almightie God, without any other bloudy ſacrifice, was the armour wherewith hee ouercame, &c. And in the end of the Epiſtle addeth theſe words What ioy (ſaith he) what gladnes would it be to my hart, to heare the ſtate alſo of the Perſians to floriſh, as I wiſh it to do, by embracing this ſort of men, the Chriſtians I meane? ſo that both you with them, and they with you in long proſperite may enioy much felicity together as your harts would deſire, & in ſo doing no doubt ye ſhall. For ſo ſhall you haue God, which is the author and creator of all this vniuerſall worlde, to be mercifull and gratious to you. Theſe men therefore I commend vnto you vpon your kingly honour, And vpon your clemency and piety, wherewith you are indued, I commit them vnto you, deſiring you to embrace & receaue them according to your humanitie and benignity, agreing and conuenient to your eſtate: who in ſo doing ſhal now both procure to your ſelfe grace through your faith, and alſo ſhall declare to me a great pleaſure and benefit worthy of thanks.

This Epiſtle wrot Conſtantinus to king Sapores. Such care had this godly Prince for them that beleued in Chriſt not onely in his owne Monarchie, but alſo in all places of the world: neither is it to be doubted but this interceſſiõ of the Emperour did ſomething mittigate the heate of the Perſians perſecution. Although thereof we reade no certaine thing in our hiſtoryes.

Of other troubles and perſecutions we read of, which happened afterward in the ſaid country of Perſia, vnder Iſdigerdes the king, but theſe followed long after about the time of the Emperour Theodoſius. At which time ſuffered Andas their biſhop, and Hormiſda a great noble mans ſõne, and of great reputation among the Perſians: whom whẽ the king vnderſtod to be a Chriſtian, and to deny to turne from his religion, condemned him to kepe his Elephants naked. In proceſſe of time the king looking out, and ſeeing him all ſwarted and tanned in the ſunne, commanded him to haue a ſhirt put on, & to be brought before him. Whome then the king aſked, if he woulde denye Chriſt. Hormiſda hearing this, tare of his ſhirt from his body, and caſt it frõ him ſaying: If yee thinke that I will denye my faith to Chriſt for a ſhirt, haue heere your gift againe &c. And ſo was vpon that expelled the country. Theodor. lib. 5.

Suenes Martir.

An other there was that ſame time, named Suenes, which had vnder him an hundreth ſeruaunts. The king takyng diſpleaſure with him, for that he would not alter from hys religion and godly truth, aſked who was the worſt of all his ſeruaunts. And him the king made ruler of all ye reſt, and coupling him with his maiſters wife, brought alſo Suenes vnder his ſubiection, thinking therby to ſubdue alſo the faith of Suenes, but it was builded vpon a ſure foundation.

Of Beniamin the Deacon thus writeth the ſaide Theoret, in his fift booke, that after two yeares of his impriſonment, at the requeſt of the Romaine Legate hee was deliuered, who afterward contrary to the kings commaundement hee preached and taught the Goſpell of Chriſt, was moſt miſerable excarnificate, hauing xx. ſharpe prickes of reeds thruſt vnder his nayles, but when he did laugh at ye, then in his priuye yarde had a ſharpe reede thruſt in with horrible paine. After that a certaine long ſtalk ragged and thorny being thruſt into his body by the nether part, was forced into him with the horriblenes of the paine, whereof the valiant and inuincible ſouldiour of the Lord gaue out his life. Theodor. ibid. And thus much concerning the martirs and perſecutions among the Perſians, although theſe perſecutions belong not of this time, which came (as it is ſayd) long after the daies of Conſtantinus, about the yeare of our Lorde. 425.

Theodorus alſo for ſinging of a Pſalme at the remouing of the body of Babylas (whereof mention is made of before pag 60.) being apprehended, was ſo examined with exquiſite torments, and ſo cruelly excruciate from morning almoſt to noone, that hardly he ſcaped with life. Who being aſked afterward of his friendes, howe he coulde abide ſo ſharpe torments, ſaid that at the firſt beginning he felt ſome paine but afterward there ſtode by him a yong man, who as he was ſweating, wiped of his ſweate, and refreſhed him wt cold water, oft times: wherewith he was ſo delited, that when he was let downe from the engine, it greeued hym, more then before. But eſpecially the crueltie of the Arethuſians, a people of Syria, exceeded againſt the Chriſtian virgines, whome they ſet out naked before the multitude to be ſcorned, after that being ſhauen, they couered them with ſwill and draffe woont to be giuen to their hogs, & ſo cauſed theyr bowels and fleſh to be deuoured of the hungry ſwine. This rage & furye of the wicked Arethuſians, Zozomenus ſuppoſeth to come of this, becauſe that Conſtantinns before had broken them from their country maner, of ſetting forth and expoſing their virgins, filthely to whom ſoeuer luſted, and deſtroyed the temple of Venus in Heliopolis, reſtrayning the people there from their filthines and vile whoredome. Of the lamentable ſtory or rather Tragedy of Marcus Arethuſius, their Byſhop, thus writeth the ſaid Sozomenus, and alſo Theodoretus in his third booke, in theſe wordes as followe.

The ſtory of Marcus Arethuſius.

This Tragedye (ſaith hee) of Marcus Arethuſius, doth require the eloquence and worthines of Æſchilus, and Sophocles, which may, as the matter deſerueth, ſet forth, and beautify his great afflictions. This man at the commaundement of Conſtantinus, pulled downe a certayn temple dedicated to Idols, and in the ſtead thereof built vp a church where the Chriſtians might congregate. The Arthuſians remembring the little good wil that Iulianus bare vnto him accuſed him as a traitour and enimie to him. At the firſt, according as the ſcripture teacheth he prepared him ſelfe to flee. But when he perceiued that there were certaine of his kinſmen or frynds apprehẽded in his ſteed, returning agayne of his owne accord he offred himſelfe to thoſe that thirſted for his bloude. whome when they had gotten as men neither pytiyng his old age & worne yeares, nor abaſhed at his vertuous conuerſation, being a man ſo adourned both with doctrine & maners, firſt ſtrypt him naked, & pittifully beate him, then within a while after, they caſt him into a foule filthy ſinke, & from thence being brought, they cauſed boyes to thruſt him in with ſharpned ſtickes, made for the nonce to prouoke his paine the more. Laſtly, they put him into a baſket, and being annointed with hony, & broth, they hung him abroad in the heate of the ſunne as meate for waſpes and flies to feede vpon. And all this extremity they ſhewed vnto him, for that they woulde enforce him to do one of theſe things (yͭ is either to build vp againe yͤ temple, which he had deſtroied, or elſe to giue ſo much money as ſhould pay for the building of yͤ ſame: but euen as hee purpoſed with him ſelfe to ſuffer & abide theyr greuous torments, ſo refuſed he to doe that they demaunded of him. At the length they taking him to be but a poore man, and not able to pay ſuch a ſumme of mony, promiſed to forgiue him the one halfe, ſo that he would be contented to pay the other halfe. But he hanging in the baſket woũded pitifully with the ſharpned ſticks of boies & children, and all to be bitten with waſpes & flyes, did not only conceale his paine & griefe, but alſo derided thoſe wicked ones and called them, baſe, low, and terrene people, and he himſelfe to be exalted and ſet on high. At length they demaunding of him but a ſmall ſome of money, he anſwered thus, it is a great wickednes to confer one halfe penye in caſe of impietie, as if a man ſhould beſtow the whole. Thus they beyng not able to preuayle againſt him, let hym downe. And leauyng him went their waye, ſo that euery man might learne at his mouth the example of true pietie and faithfulnes.

The true conſcience of Marcus Arthuſius.

Great cruelty ſhewed.

Couetouſnes the cauſe of cruelty.

A notable ſaying.

Although the tractation of theſe foreſayd ſtories & perſecutions of Perſia, aboue premiſed, do ſtray ſomwhat out of the order & courſe of time and place, as which came neither in the time of Conſtantine, nor be pertinent to the monarchy of Rome: yet becauſe in this preſent hiſtory we are in hand with the holy martirs and Saintes of Chriſt, for as much as theſe alſo gaue ſuch a faithfull teſtimony of the Lord Ieſus with their bloud, I thought therefore not to paſſe them ouer with ſome teſtimony in this our Catalogue of holy Martirs. And here an end of theſe perſecutions of the primitiue church.

¶ It may peraduenture be marueiled of ſome, reading the hiſtory of theſe ſo terrible perſecutions aboue ſpecified, why God the almighty director of al things, would ſuffer his owne people and faithfull ſeruaunts, beleeuing in his owne and onely begotien ſonne Ieſus, ſo cruellye to bee handled, ſo wrongfully to be vexed, ſo extreemly to be tormented and put to death, & that the ſpace of ſo many yeres together, as in theſe foreſaid perſecutiõs may appeare. To the which admiration I haue nothing to aunſwere, but to ſay with the words of Hierome: Non debemus ſuper hac rerum iniquitate, perturbare videntes, &c. we ought not to be mooued with this iniquitie of things, to ſee the wicked to preuaile againſt the godly: for ſo much as in the beginning of the worlde we ſee Abell the iuſte to bee killed of wicked Cain. And afterward Iacob being thruſt out, Eſau to reigne in his fathers houſe. In like caſe the Egyptians with bricke and tyle, afflicted the ſonnes of Iſrael. Yea and the Lorde himſelfe, was hee not crucified of the Iewes, Barrabas the thief being let go? Time would not ſuffiſe me, to recite, & recken vp how the godly in this world go to wracke, the wicked flouriſhing and preuailing. Hiero. Briefly, howſoeuer the cauſe hereof proceedeth, whether for our ſins here in this life, or how elſe, ſoeuer, yet this is to vs, & may be to all men a ſufficient ſtay, that we are ſure theſe afflictions and perſecutions of God his people in this worlde, not to come by any chaunce, or blinde fortune, but by the prouydent appointment, and forewarning of God. For ſo in the old law by the affliction of the children of Iſraell, he hath prefigured theſe perſecutions of his Chriſtians. So by the words of Chriſtes owne mouth in the Goſpell, he did forwarne his church of theſe troubles to come. Again neither did he ſuffer theſe ſo great afflictions to fall vpon hys ſeruaunts, before that he had premoniſhed them ſufficientlye by ſpeciall Reuelation in the Apocalips of Iohn his ſeruaũt, in the which Apocalips he declared vnto his church before, not onely what troubles were comming at hande toward them, where, and by whome, they ſhoulde come, but alſo in playne number, if the wordes of the prophecye be well vnderſtoode aſſygneth the true tyme, howe longe the ſayde perſecutions ſhoulde continue, and when they ſhoulde ceaſe. For as there is no doubte, but by the beaſt with ſeauen heades, bearing the whoore of Babylon, dronken wyth the bloude of Saintes, is ſignified the Citie of Rome: So in my iudgement, the power of making fortie two moneths (in the thirteene of the Apocalips) is to bee expounded, taking euery Moneth for a Sabboth of yeares, that is, reckonyng for ſeauen yeares a moneth: ſo that forty and two ſuch Sabbots of yeares, being gathered togither make vppe the yeres iuſt, betweene the time of Chriſtes death, to the laſt yeare of the perſecution of Maxentius, when Conſtantinus fyghting vnder the banner of Chriſt, ouercame him, and made an ende of all perſecution, wythin the Monarchye of Rome. The number of which yeares, by playne computation come to 294. to the which 294. yeares, if yee adde the other ſixe yeares, vnder the perſecution of Licinius in Aſia, then it fylleth vp full the three hundreth yeares. And ſo long continued the perſecution of Chriſtes people, vnder the heathen tirants and Emperours of the Monarchie of Rome, accordyng to the number of the fortye two monethes which the beaſt had power to make, ſpecified in the thirteenth of the Apocalips. For the better explication wherof, becauſe the matter, being of no ſmall importance greatly apperteineth to the publike vtilitie of the Church, & leaſt any ſhoulde miſdoubt me herein to follow any priuate interpretation of mine own, I thought good to cõmunicate to the Reader, that, as hath bene imparted to me, in opening theſe miſtycall numbers in the foreſayd booke of Reuelation conteyned, by occaſion as followeth.

The perſecuting tym of the primitiue Church v der the bea laſted 300. yeares. The Iſraelites 300. yeares.

As I was in hand with theſe hiſtories, and therin cõſidered the exceeding rage of theſe perſecutions, the intolerable tormentes of the bleſſed Saintes., ſo cruelly rackt, rent, torne, and pluckt in peeces, with all kinde of tortures paynes and puniſhmentes that could be deuiſed, more bitter then any death it ſelfe, I coulde not without great ſorrow & paſſiõ of minde, behold their ſorrowfull afflictions, or write of their bloudy paſſiõs. wherin much like it happened to me, as did to T. Liuius, who writing of the warres of Carthage, was ſo moued in the writing thereof: Ac ſi in parte aliqua laboris ac periculi ipſe pariter fuiſſet. Further I proceeded in the ſtory, & the hoater the perſecutions grew, the more my griefe with them, & for thẽ encreaſed, not onely pitiyng their wofull caſe, but alſo almoſt reaſoning with God, thus thinking like a foole with my ſelfe, why God of hys goodneſſe would ſuffer hys children and ſeruaunts, ſo vehemently to be cruciated and afflicted. If mortal things were gouerned by heauenly prouidence (as muſt needs be graũted) why did yͤ wicked ſo rage & floriſh, & the godly ſo to go to wrack? If ſinnes deſerued puniſhmẽt, yet neyther were they ſinners alone, & why was their death aboue all other ſo ſharpe and bitter? At leaſt why woulde the Lord ſuffer the vehemency of theſe ſo horrible perſecutiõs to endure ſo long tyme agaynſt hys poore Church, ſhewing to thẽ no certayne determined end of their tribulatiõs, wherby they knowing the appoynted determinatiõ of almighty God, with more conſolatiõ might endure out the ſame. As the Iſraelites in the captiuitie of Babilon had 70. yeares limitted vnto them. And vnder Pharao they were promiſed a deliueraunce out. Alſo vnder the Syrian tyraunte. 62. weekes were abriged vnto them. Onely in theſe perſecutions, I could finde no end determined, nor limitation ſet for their deliuerance. whereupõ much marueiling wͭ my ſelfe, I ſearched the booke of Reuelatiõ, to ſee whether any thing there might be found. where although I well perceaued, the beaſt there deſcribed to ſignifie the Empire of Rome, which had power to ouercome the Saintes: yet cõcerning the tyme & continuance of theſe perſecutions vnder the beaſt, I found nothing to ſatiſfie my doubt. For albeit I read there of. 42. monethes, of a tyme, tymes and halfe a tyme, of 1260. dayes, yet all this by computation cõming but to 3. yeares & a halfe, came nothing neare the lõg continuance of theſe perſecutiõs, which laſted. 300. yeares. Thus being vexed and turmoyled in ſpirite, about the reckening, of theſe numbers and yeares, it ſo happened vpon a Sonday in the morning lying in my bed, & muſing about theſe nũbers, ſodẽly it was anſwered to my minde, as with a maieſtie, thus inwardly ſaying within me: thou foole count theſe monethes by Sabbots, as the weekes of Daniell are counted by Sabbots. The Lorde I take to witnes thus it was. wherupon thus being admoniſhed, I began to recken the 42. monethes by Sabbats, firſt of monethes, that would not ſerue, thẽ by Sabbots of yeres wherin I began to feele ſome probable vnderſtãding. Yet not ſatiſfied herewith, to haue the matter more ſure, eftſones repaired to certaine Merchaũts, of myne acquaintance, rance. Of whom one is departed a true faythfull ſeruaunt of the Lord, the other two be yet aliue, and witnes hereof. To whom the number of theſe foreſayd 42. monethes, being propounded and examined by Sabbots of yeares, the whole ſumme was found to ſurmount to 294. yeres, conteining the full and iuſt tyme of theſe foreſayd perſecutions neither more nor leſſe.

Now this one claſpe beyng opened, the other numbers that follow, are plaine and manifeſt to the intelligent reader to be vnderſtood. For where mention is made of three yeares and a half: of one tyme, two times, & halfe a tyme, alſo of 1260. dayes, all theſe come to one reckoning, & ſignifie 42. monthes, by which monthes, as is ſayd, is ſignified the whole tyme of theſe primitiue perſecutiõs, as here in order may appeare.

The myſticall numbers in the Apocalyps opened.

1. MCCLX. Reuelation. 11.12.

First, where mention is made, Apocal. chap. 11. that the two Prophetes ſhall propheſie 1260. dayes. And alſo that the woman fleing into the deſert ſhall there be fed 1260. dayes: who knoweth not, that. 1260. dayes make three yeares & a halfe: that is, monethes ———— 42

2. Three dayes and a halfe. Reuela. cap. 11.

Secondly, where we read, chap. 11. the bodyes of the two foreſaid Prophets ſhal lye in the ſtreetes of the great citie vnburied, the ſpace of iij. days & a half, and after the ſaid iij. dayes & a half they ſhall reuiue againe, &c. let the houres of theſe iij. dayes and a half (which be 42.) bee reckoned euery day for a Sabboth of yeares, or els euery day for a moneth, and they come to moneths ———— 42

3. A time, tymes and halfe a time. Reuela. cap. 12.

Thirdly, where as in the ſame booke is expreſſed that the woman had ij. wings geuen her to flye vnto the deſert for a tyme, tymes, and halfe a tyme, geue for one time, one yere, or one day: for ij. times ij. yeares, or ij. dayes: for halfe a tyme, halfe a yere, or half a day. And ſo it is manifeſt, that thoſe three yeares & a halfe, mounteth to monthes ———— 42

4. Xlii. monethes or 3. yeares and a halfe. Reuel. cap. 11.

Fourthly, account theſe 42. moneths aforeſaid (which the beaſt had power to make. Apoc. 11.) by Sabbots of yeares, that is, vij yeares for a moneth: or euery moneth for ſeuen yeares, & it amounteth to the ſumme of yeares ———— 294

And ſo haue ye the iuſt yeares, dayes, times, & months of theſe foreſaid perſecutions vnder the beaſt, neither ſhorter nor longer, reckoning from the death of Iohn Baptiſt vnder Herode the Romain king to the ende of Maxentius, and of Licinius, ij. laſt great perſecutors, the one in the weſt the other in the Eaſt, who were both vanquiſhed by godly Conſtantinus. And ſo peace was geuen to the Church, albeit not in ſuch ample wiſe, but that diuers tumultes and troubles afterward enſued, but they laſted not long: & the chief brunt, to ſpeake of theſe Romain perſecutions, which the holy ghoſt eſpecially conſidered aboue all other, in this his Reuelatiõ thus ended, in the time of this Conſtantinus. Then was the great Dragon the deuill, to witte, the fierce rage & power of his malicious perſecuting, tied ſhort for a thouſand yeres after this, ſo that he could not preuaile in any ſuch ſort, but that the power and glory of the goſpel by little and litle encreaſing and ſpreading with great ioy and libertie, ſo preuailed that at length it got the vpperhand, & repleniſhed the whole earth, rightly verifiyng therein, the water of Ezechiel, which iſſuing out of the right ſide of the aulter, the farther it ran, the deeper it grew, till at length it repleniſhed the whole Ocean Sea, & healed all the fiſhes therin. No otherwiſe the courſe of the Goſpell proceeding of ſmall & hard beginnings kept ſtill his ſtreame, the more it was ſtopped, the ſwifter it ranne: by bloud it ſeeded, by death it quickned: by cutting it multiplied, through violence it ſprong, till at laſt out of thraldome and oppreſſiõ it braſt forth into perfect libertie, & floriſhed in al proſperitie, had it ſo bene, that the chriſtians wiſely & moderatly could haue vſed this reſt & libertie, & not abuſed the ſame, forgetting their former eſtate to their own pride, pomp & worldly eaſe, as it came afterward to paſſe, wherof more is to be ſeene & ſaid (the Lord willing) in place & time conuenient.

Ezech. cap. 47.

And thus much touching the propheticall numbers in the Apocalips. Wherein is to be noted and magnified the eternall wiſdome, and hie prouidence of almighty God, ſo diſpoſing and gouerning his church, that no aduerſitie or perturbation hapneth at any time vnto it, which his prouident wiſedome doth not foreſee before & preordaine, neither doth he preordaine or determine any thing, which he doth not moſt truly perform, both foreſeing the beginning of ſuch perſecutions, and limiting the end therof how long to continue and when to ceaſe. In much like ſort we reade in the bookes of Geneſis, how the ſtocke of Iſraell, was. 400. yeares in the lande of Egipte. During the ſpace of which 400. yeares, after the death of Ioſeph, (who beareth a playne figure of Chriſt) they were hardly intreated and cruelly afflicted of the Egiptians, about the ſpace of. 300. yeares, reckning from after the death of Ioſeph, to their deliuerance out of the bõdage of Egipt, ſemblably as theſe Chriſtians, after Chriſtes time ſuffered the like bondage vnder the Romane tyrauntes.

The perſecuted Iſraelites bearing a figure of the perſecuted Church of Chriſt.

Thus much by the way I thought to inſinuate, leaſt any ſhould muſe, or take any offẽce in himſelf, to ſee or read of the Church, ſo long & ſo many yeares to be vnder ſo miſerable & extreme afflictions. Wherin neither chaunce nor fortune, nor diſpoſitiõ of man, hath had any place: but onely the forecounſaile & determination of the Lord ſo gouerned and diſpoſed the ſame. Who not only did ſuffer thẽ to fall, and foreſee thoſe perſecutions before they fell: but alſo appointed the times and yeares how long they ſhould laſt & when to haue an ende. As by the foreſaide. 42. monethes in the 13. and 11. chap. of S. Iohns Apocalips haue beene declared, which monethes conteyning. 294. yeares, if they be rightly gathered, make the full time betweene the firſt yeare of the perſecution of Chriſt vnder the Iewes & Herode, till the laſt yeare of perſecution vnder Licinius, which was from the natiuitie of Chriſt, an. 324. from the fyrſt perſecution of Chriſt, an. 294. as is aforeſaide. After the which yeare, according to the preordinate counſel of God, when his ſeueritie had bene ſufficiently declared vpon his own houſe, it pleaſed him to ſhew mercy againe, & to bind vp Sathan the old ſerpent, according to the xx. chap. of the Reuelation for the ſpace of a thouſand yeares, that is, frõ this time of Licinius, to the time of Iohn Wickleffe, and Iohn Huſſe. During all which time, albeit certaine conflicts and tumults haue bene among Chriſtian byſhops themſelues in the church, yet no vniuerſal murdering perſecutiõ was ſtirring, before the preaching of Iohn Wickleffe, of Huſſe, and ſuch other, as in the further proceſſe of this hiſtory (Chriſt willing and aiding vs) ſhall more appeare hereafter.

From the firſt perſecution of the primitiue Church to the laſt perſecution; 294. yeares.

Vniuerſall perſecution ceaſeth for a 1000. yeares in the Church. Apoc. 10.

From the tyme of Licinius. to Wickliffe 1000. yeares, Sathan bound vp for a thouſand yeares.

The time of Sathans binding opened.

Thus hauing at large diſcourſed theſe horrible perſecutions paſt, and heauy afflictions of Chriſtian Martyrs, now by the grace of God, cõming out of this redde ſea of bloudy perſecution, leauing Pharao and his hoſt behynde: let vs ſing gloriouſly to the worthy name of our god, who through the bloud of the lambe, after long & tedious afflictiõs at length, hath viſited his people with comfort, hath tyde vp Sathan ſhorte, hath ſent his meeke Moſes (gentle Conſtantine I meane) by whom it hath ſo pleaſed the Lord to worke deliueraunce to his captiue people, to ſet his ſeruants at liberty, to turne their morning into ioy, to magnifie the church of his ſonne, to deſtroy the Idoles of al the world, to graunt life and liberty (and would God alſo not ſo much riches) vnto them which before were the abiectes of all the world: and all by the meanes of godly Conſtantinus, the meeke and moſt chriſtian Emperour of whoſe diuine victories againſt ſo many tyraunts and Emperours perſecutors of Chriſtes people, and laſtly againſt Licinius, an. 324. of whoſe other noble actes & proweſſes of whoſe bleſſed vertues and his happy birth and progeny, part we haue comprehended before, part now remaineth (Chriſt willing) to be declared.

Doxologia.

This Conſtantine was the ſonne of Conſtantius the Emperour, a good and vertuous childe, of a good and vertuous father, borne in Britaine, as ſaith Eutropius whoſe Mother was named Helena, daughter, in deede of King Coilus, although Ambroſius in his funerall Oration of the death of Theodoſius, ſayth was an Inhoulders daughter. He was a moſt bountifull and gracious Prince, hauyng a deſire to nouriſhe learning and good artes, and did oftentimes vſe to read, write, and ſtudy himſelfe. He had marueilous good ſucceſſe & proſperous atchieuing of al things he toke in hand, which then was (and truely) ſuppoſed to procede of this, for that he was ſo great a fauourer of the Chriſtian fayth. Which faith when he had once embraced, he did euer after moſt deuoutly and religiouſly reuerence: and commaunded by eſpeciall commiſſion and proclamations, that euery man ſhoulde profeſſe the ſame Religion throughout al yͤ Romaine Monarchy. The worſhipping of Idoles, whereunto he was addict, by the allurement of Fauſta his wife: in ſo much that he did ſacrifice vnto them: after the diſcomfite of Maxentius in battaile, he vtterly abiured. His raigne cõtinued, as Eutropius affirmeth, 30. yeares, Letus ſaith 32. yeares lacking, 2. monethes. Great peace and tranquilitie enioied the Churche vnder the raigne of this good Emperour, which tooke great paine and trauell for the preſeruation thereof. Firſt, yea and that before he had ſubdued Licinius, he ſet forth many edictes for the reſtitution of the goods of the church, for the reuoking of the Chriſtians out of exile, for taking away the diſſenſion of the Doctours out of the Church, for the ſetting of them free from publike charges, and ſuch like, euen as the copies of his conſtitutions here vnder declare, which Euſebius in his 10. booke, and 5. chapter, repeateth in this wiſe.

Euſeb. Lib. 10. cap. 5.

The law of nature made perfect, compared with the knowledge of God.

Lithernes the nurſe of ignoraunce, and ignoraunce the enemy to wiſedome.

Tyranny depriueth Emperours.

Bloudy tyrantes make ciuile warres.

Apollo gaue anſwere out of a caue in the ground, that he was diſquyeted by the Chriſtians.

The ſword geuen for to be auenged vpon malefactours.

A great commendation of the chriſtians.

Victor Conſtantinus Maximus, Auguſtus, to our louing ſubiectes inhabiting throughout the eaſt parts, ſendeth greting. The thing it ſelfe, which in the ſure and moſt firme law of nature is conteyned, doth giue vnto all men (euen as God hath ordeyned the ſame) ſufficient perſeueraunce and vnderſtanding, both of ſuch things as man ought to foreſee, as alſo what things preſently he ought to meditate. Neither is there any thing therein to be doubted, of ſuch as haue their mindes directed to the ſcope or marke of perfect vnderſtanding: ſo that the perfect comprehending of ſound reaſon, and the perſeuerance thereof, be compared with the knowledge of God, being the true and perfect vertue. Wherefore let no wiſe man be troubled, although he ſee diuers men of diuers diſpoſitions. For wiſdome which ſpringeth of vertue cannot abide, or acquaint her ſelfe with fonde ideotes, vnles, that (on the other ſide) the malice of peruerſe lithernes prolong her daies, and cauſe the ſame Ideocie to ſuruiue. Wherfore aſſuredly the crowne and price of vertue lieth open vnto all men, & the moſte mightie God ordereth the iudgement of the ſame. I vndoubted as manyfeſtly as poſſible is, will endeuour my ſelfe to teſtifie and confeſſe vnto you al, the hope which is in me. I think verily that the Emperours which before this time haue latelye bene, euen for their tiranny had the Empire taken from them: & my father onelye exerciſing and vſing al meekenes and lenity in his affaires, calling vpon God the father, with great deuotion & humility, hath beene exalted to the ſame. And all the reſt, as men wanting their wits, and in compariſon as ſauage beaſtes, rather did giue themſelues to like cruelty, then vnto any lenitie & gentlenes towards their ſubiects: in which tyranny euery one for his time being nooſeled, vtterly ſubuerted the true and vnfallible doctrine. And ſo great malice was their kindled in their breſtes, that when all things were in peaceable tranquilitie, they made and rayſed moſt cruell and bloudy inteſtine or ciuill warres. It is credibly informed vs, that in thoſe daies, Apollo gaue aunſweres but not by any mans mouth, but out of a cettaine caue & darke place (ſaying) that he was much diſquieted by thoſe that were the iuſt men and liuers vpon the earth, ſo that he could or would not for them, declare a truth of ſuch things as others demaunded: & hereby it came to paſſe that ſuch falſe deuinations were geuen from the golden tables in Apollos temple. And this thing did his propheticall prieſt complayne of, when he tooke vp againe the heare of his head, that other had cõtemptuouſly caſt down, & that the neglecting of his diuination was the cauſe of ſo many euils, amongſt men. But let vs ſee what was the ende hereof: we now boldly & without all feare inuocate & worſhip the omnipotent God. When I was a childe I heard, that he which then was chiefe Emperour of Rome, vnhappy, yea, moſt vnhappy man being ſeduced, and brought into errour, by his ſouldiers, curiouſly inquired who were thoſe iuſt men vpõ the earth that Apollo ment: and one of his prieſts which was nere about him, made anſwere that they were the chriſtiãs. This anſwere hereupon vnto him beyng as delectable, as hony vnto the mouth, drew the ſword giuen vnto him to be a reuenger vpon euill doers and malefactours againſt the profeſſors of the irreprehenſible ſanctimony and relygion. And ſtraight way he gaue forth a commiſſion (to bloudy homicides as I may well cal them) & gaue commaundement to all the Iudges, that they ſhould endeuour themſelues with all the cunning they had to the deuiſing of more greeuouſer, & ſharper puniſhments againſt the poore Chriſtians. Then, then I ſay, a man myght haue ſeene, how greatly the honeſt profeſſors of that religion, were moleſted with cruelty, and daily ſuffered no ſmal iniuries and contumelies, and that alſo they ſuffered and ſuſtained the ſame with ſuch tẽperancy as though they had had no iniuries done vnto them at all. Which temperancie and patience of theirs was the cauſe why the furious citizens were the more madder & raging againſt them. What fires, what tortures, what kinde of torments were there, but they without reſpecte either of age, or ſexe were enforced to feele?

The earth bewayled the martyrs deathes.

The authors of all miſchiefe puniſhed.

Apollos lying oracles the cauſe of ſo many martirs deathes.

Conſtant. prayer.

Conſtant. Fayth confirmed by the myracles of the croſſe.

The clemency of a good Emperour.

A good iudgement.

One religion from the beginning of the world.

The prayer of Conſtantine was fulfilled.

Ech thing in their creation preach the very and true God

Then did the earth without doubt, herſelfe bewayle her children and the round worlde which conteineth all things, beyng ſprinkled and imbrued with their bloud made dolefull lamentation for them, and the daye it ſelfe prouoked for to mourne, was made amaſed for them. But what is this to purpoſe. Now the very barbarous nations reioyce for their ſakes which receaued and harboured them, when they were afraid and fled from vs: keping them as it were in moſt louing & amiable captiuity. And they ſaued not onely their liues, but alſo were a defence for their religion. And now alſo the Romaine nation remembreth and hath before there eies this blame and ſpotte, which the Chriſtians that were of that time, worthely gaue vnto them when they by them were baniſhed (as vnfitte members of their common wealth) amongſt the barbarous people. What needeth to make further rehearſall of the mourning lamentation, which the heathen people themſelues throughout all the world, made for the pittifull murther and ſlaughter of them? After this it came to paſſe that they which were authors of all theſe miſchiefes died alſo, and were cõmitted for there reward to the moſt filthy & horrible dungeon of hel. They being ſo intangled with inteſtine and ciuile warres, left aliue neyther name nor kinſmen of their owne: which thing vndoubtedly had not chaũſed vnles the wicked deuinatiõs of Apollos oracles had deceiued & bewitched thẽ. To thee therfore now I pray, oh moſt mightie God, that thou wilt vouchſafe to be mercifull, and pardon all the eaſt parts and inhabitaunts of the ſame, being oppreſſed with preſent calamitie: and that by mee thy ſeruaunt thou wilt of thy goodnes helpe and relieue the ſame. And theſe things raſhly craue I not at thy hands: oh Lord, moſt mighty and holieſt God of all. For I being perſwaded by the onely oracles haue both begone and alſo finiſhed wholeſome and profitable things, and further by the bearing and ſhewing of thine enſigne, haue ouercome a mighty and ſtrong hoſt, and when any neceſſitie of the common weale (to my charge committed) requireth thereunto, (following thoſe ſignes & tokens of thy vertues) I bouldly go forth and fight againſt mine enimies: and for this cauſe haue I ſacrificed my ſoule vnto thee, purified and clenſed both with thy loue and feare. Yea truely, thy name doe I ſincerely loue, and thy power doe I reuerence, which by many tokens and wonders haſt ſhewed and confirmed thereby my beleefe & faith. Therefore will I doe my endeuour, and bende my ſelfe thereunto, that I may redifie thy moſt holy houſe, which thoſe wicked & vngodly Emperours haue with ſo great ruine laid waſt, thy people do I deſire to bring & ſtabliſh, in firme peace & trãquilitie, & that for the publike vtilitie of all the inhabitants of the earth. Thoſe which yet erre & are out of the way, enioy the benefite of peace and quietnes, with, and amongſt the number of the faithful ſort: for I truſt the reſtitution of the like ſocietie, and participation may be a meanes to bring them alſo that erre into the perfecte way of verity. Let no man therfore be greeuous one vnto another but what euery man thinketh beſt that let him doe. For ſuch as are wiſe ought throughly to be perſwaded, that the onely meane to liue holily and as they ſhould doe, whome the ſpirite of God moueth, to take their delight and recreation in reading his holye will. And if others wilfully will go out of the way, cleauing to the Synagogues of falſe doctrine, they maye at their owne perill: as for vs we haue the moſt worthy houſe or congregation of Gods veritie, which he according to his owne goodnes & nature hath giuen vs. And this alſo we wiſh vnto thẽ, that with like participation & common conſente, they may fele wyth vs the ſame delectation of mind. For this our religiõ is neither new nor newly inuented, but is as old as wee beleeue the creation of the worlde to be: and which God hath commaunded to be celebrated with ſuch worſhip as both ſeemed and pleaſed him. But all liuing men are lyers, and are deceiued with diuers and ſundrye illuſions. Thou O God for Chriſt thy ſonnes ſake, ſuffer not this wickednes againe to take roote: thou haſt ſet vp a cleare burning light, that thereby as manye as thou haſt choſen maye come vnto thee. Theſe thy myracles approoue the ſame. It is thy power that kepeth vs in innocencye and fydelitye. The Sunne and the Moone runne their appointed courſe; neyther yet in ranging wiſe, wander the ſtarres to what place of the worlde they liſt themſelues.

The dayes, yeares, monethes, and times, keepe their appoynted turnes The earth abideth firme and vnremoueable at thy worde, and the winde at the time (by thee directed) ſtormeth & bloweth. The ſtreaming waterie floudes, ebbe in time according as they flow. The raging ſea abideth within her bounded limites And for that the Ocean Sea ſtretcheth out her ſelfe in equall length and breadth with the whole earth: this muſt needes be wrought with ſome marueilous workmanſhip of thine owne hand: which thing vnleſſe it were at thy will made and diſpoſed, without all doubt, ſo great difference and partition betweene, woulde or this time haue brought vtter ruine & deſtructiõ, both to the life of man, as to all that belõgeth to man beſide. Which for that they haue ſuch great and huge conflictes amongeſt themſelues, as alſo the inuiſible ſpirites haue: we geue thee thankes, O Lorde moſt mighty God of all Gods, that al mankinde hath not bene deſtroyed thereby. Surely, euen as greatly as thy benignitie and gentlenes, is maniſeſted by diuers & ſundry benefites beſtowed vpon vs: ſo much alſo is the ſame ſet foorth and declared in the diſcipline of thy eternall word, to thoſe that be heauenly wiſe, & apply themſelues to the attainement of ſincere & true vertue. But if any ſuch there be, that litle regard or haue but ſmall reſpect vnto the conſideration thereof: let them not blame or lay a fault in others that do the ſame. For that Phiſicke whereby health is obtained, is maniſeſtly offered vnto all men: now therefore let no man go about to ſubuert that, which experience it ſelfe doth ſhew (of neceſsitie) to be pure and good. Let vs therefore altogether vſe the participation of this benefite beſtowed vpon vs, that is to ſay, the benefite of peace and tranquillitie, ſetting a part all controuerſie. And let no man hurt or be preiudiciall to his fellowe for that thing, wherein he thinketh him ſelfe to haue done wel. If by that, which any man knoweth and hath experience of, hee thinketh he may profite hys neighbour, let him doe the ſame, if not, let him geue ouer, and remit it til on other time. For there is a great diuerſitie betwixt the willing and voluntary embracing of religion, and that whẽ a man is thereunto inforced and coacted. Of theſe things haue I made a more larger diſcourſe, then in deede, the ſcope of mediocritie requireth: eſpecially becauſe I woulde not haue my faith (touching the veritie) to be hid. For that I heare there be ſome, which complaine the olde accuſtomed haunting of their temples, & that the power of ſuch darkeneſſe is cut of and taken away: which thing ſurely I would take in better part, were it not that the violent rebellion of flagitious errour, were ſo fixed in many mens heartes, whereby they thirſt after the vtter ſubuerſion of the common weale and Empire.

The earth ſtayd vp by the power of God.

Who they be that Conſtant. accompteth wiſe in deede.

Experience a tryall of the truth.

Conſtantinus neyther for feare diſſembleth hys fayth, neyther through pollicye defaceth Gods glory.

Such was the goodneſſe of this Emperour Conſtantinus, or rather ſuch was the prouidẽce of almighty God toward his Church, in ſtirring him vp: that all his care and ſtudy of minde was ſet vpon nothing els, but onely howe to benefit & enlarge the commodities of the ſame. Neither was it to him inough to deliuer the Church and people of God, from outward vexation of forraine tyrants and perſecutors. No les beneficial was his godly care alſo in quieting the inward diſſentions and diſturbaunce within the Church among the Chriſtian biſhops themſelues, according as we read of Moſes the deliuerer of yͤ Iſraelits, in agreing the brethren together, when he ſaw them at variance. Exod. 2. No leſſe alſo did his vigilant ſtudy extend in erecting, reſtoring, & enriching the Churches of God in al Cities, and in prouiding for the miniſters of the ſame. And therefore wryting to Anilinus his chiefe captaine, declareth his will & minde to him in letters, concerning the goodes whych did appertaine to the Churches of the Chriſtians: that hee ſhoulde procure vigilantly for the ſame: that all ſuche goodes, houſes, and gardens, belonging before to the right of Churches, ſhoulde agayne be reſtored in all ſpeedie wiſe: and that hee therein might be certified with ſpeede. &c.

Conſtantinus compared to Moſes, in deliuiring the people, and agreeing them together.

The letter of Conſtantinus to Anilinus hys captayne.

Moreouer, he writing to the ſaide Anilinus in an other letter, ſignifieth vnto him in this effect: that for ſo much as the contempt of God his reuerent religion, is & hath bene euer the greateſt decay to the name & people of Rome, as contrary the maintaining and reuerencing the ſame, hath euer brought proſperitie to all common weales: Therfore he in conſideration therof, hath taken that order, & geueth to him in charge, that through yͤ prouince, where he hath to doe, which was in Aphrica where Cecilianus was Byſhop, he ſhould there ſee & prouide, that all ſuch miniſters and Clerkes, whoſe vocation was to ſerue in the Church, ſhould be freed and exempted from all publike duties and burdens: whereby they being ſo priuileged, and all impedimentes remoued, which ſhoulde hinder their diuine miniſtration: thereby the cõmon vtilitie of the people might the better flouriſh. &c.

An other letter of Conſtantine to Anilinus.

The contempt of gods religion, chiefeſt decay of common weales.

Furthermore, the ſayde Conſtantinus in an other letter wryting to Miltiades, Byſhop of Rome, and to Marcus, declareth in his letters to them, howe Cecilianus Byſhop of Carthage, hath ben accuſed vnto him by diuers of his colleages and fellow byſhops. Wherfore his will is, that the ſayd Cecilianus, with x. byſhops his accuſers, with x. other his defendants ſhould repaire vp to him at Rome, where in the preſent aſſiſtance of the foreſayde Miltiades, Rheticus, Maternus, Marinus, and of other their fellowe Colleages, the cauſe of Cecilianus myght be harde, and rightly examined, ſo that all ſchiſme and deuiſion might be cut of from among them: wherein the feruent deſire of Conſtantinus to peace and vnitie, may well appeare.

The feruent deſire of Conſtantinus to peace and vnitie.

Upon the lyke cauſe and argument alſo, he wryteth to Chreſtus Byſhop of Syracuſa, ſo deſirous to nouriſh peace and concord in the church, that he offereth to him with his vnder Miniſters and three ſeruaunts, hys free caryage to come vp to him vnto the Councel of other biſhops, for the agreeing of certaine matters belonging to the Church.

The letter of Conſtantine to Creſtus Byſhop of Syracuſa.

Hee writeth alſo an other letter to the forenamed Cecilianus Byſhop of Carthage.

To the prouinces likewiſe of Paleſtina & thoſe partes about, hee directeth his Edict in the behalfe of the Chriſtians: for the releaſing of ſuch as were in captiuitie: and for the reſtoring againe of them, which had ſuſtained any loſſe in the former perſecution before, & for the refreſhing of ſuch as heeretofore had bene oppreſſed with any ignominie, or moleſtation, for their confeſſion ſake: declaring in the ſayd Edict, howe that his whole body, life and ſoule, and what ſoeuer is in hym, hee oweth to God, and to the ſeruice of him. &c.

The edicte of Conſtantinus to the rulers of the prouince of Paleſtina.

Moreouer an other leter he wryteth to Euſebius, for the edifying of newe Chriſtian Churches, & reſtoring of them whych had bene waſted before by forreine enemies. And after hee had collected the Synode of Nice, for the ſtudie of peace and vnitie of the Church, he wryteth vpon the ſame to Alexander and Arrius. In which hys letters hee moſt lamentably vttered the great griefe of his heart, to ſee and heare of theyr contention and diuiſion: whereby the peace and common harmonie of the Churche was broken, the Synode prouoked & reſiſted, the holy people of the Lorde deuided into partes and tumultes, contrary to the office of good and circumſpect men, whoſe duetie were rather to nouriſh concorde and to ſeeke tranquillity. And though in ſome ſmall poynts and light trifles they did diſagree from other: yet as the example of Philoſophers might teache them, who although in ſome part of a ſentence or peece of a queſtion, ſome might diſſent from other: yet in the vnitie of their profeſſion, they did all ioyne as fellowes together. In like caſe were it theyr duetie in ſuch fruitles queſtions (or rather peeces of queſtiõs) to keepe them in the conceptions of their mindes, in ſilence vnto themſelues, and not to bring them forth into publicke Synodes, to breake therefore from the communion of the reuerent Councell. Declaring moreouer in the ſayde Epiſtle, the firſt origine and occaſion of thys theyr contentious diſſention to ryſe vpon vaine & trifling termes, vile cauſes, and light queſtions, and peeces rather of queſtions: about ſuch matters as neither are to be moued, nor to be anſwered vnto, being moued, more curious to be ſearched, and perillous to be expreſſed, then neceſſary to be inquired, magiſque puerilibus ineptijs, quam ſacerdotum ac cordatorum virorum prudentiæ conuenientia, as he there doth terme them. Wherefore by al maner meanes he doth labour them, doth entreate them, and perſwade them, not onely with reaſons, but alſo with teares and ſighing ſobbes, that they would reſtore againe peace vnto the Church, and quietneſſe to the reſt of his life (which otherwiſe would not be ſweet vnto him) and that they would returne againe to the communion of the reuerent Councell. Who in ſo doing ſhould open his way and purpoſed iourney into the Eaſt partes, which otherwyſe hearing of their diſcorde and diſſention, would be ſorye to ſee with his eyes, that which greeueth him nowe to heare with hys eares: with much more in the ſame Epiſtle contained, but this is the effect of the whole. Euſeb. de vita Conſtant. Lib. 2. Thus much I thought ſummarely to comprehende, whereby the diuine diſpoſition and ſingular gentle nature of this meeke & religious Conſtantine might more notoriouſly appeare to all Princes: for them to learne by hys example, what zeale and care they ought to beare toward the Church of Chriſt, & how gently to gouerne, and how to be beneficiall to the ſame.

Many other Edicts & Epiſtles wrytten to other places and parties, be expreſſed at large in the ſeconde booke of Euſeb. Whereof in a briefe recapitulation ſuch ſpecialities we haue collected as here followeth, and is to be ſeene in Zozo Lib. 1. Cap. 8. 9.

niſhment, or to the mines of metall, or to any publike or priuate labour to them inflicted. Such as were put to any infamie or open ſhame among the multitude, hee willed them to be diſcharged from all ſuch blemiſh of ignominie. Souldiours whych before were depriued eyther of theyr place, or put out of theyr wages: were put to their liberty, eyther to ſerue agaime in theyr place, or quietly to lyue at home. Whatſoeuer honour, place, or dignitie had bene taken away frō any man, ſhould be reſtored to them againe. The goods and poſſeſſions of them that had ſuffered death for Chriſt, howſoeuer they were alienated, ſhould returne to theyr heires, or next of kinne: or for lacke of them ſhould be geuen to the Church. Hee commaunded moreouer that onely Chriſtians ſhoulde beare office. The other he charged and reſtrayned, that neither they ſhould ſacrifice, nor exerciſe any more diuinations and ceremonies of the Gentiles, nor ſet vp any Images, nor to keepe any feaſtes of the heathen Idolaters. He corrected moreouer and aboliſhed all ſuch vnlawfull manners and vnhoneſt vſages in Cities, as might be hurtfull any waies to the Church, as the cuſtome that the Egyptians had in the flowing of Nilus, at what time the people vſed to runne together lyke brute beaſts, both men & women, and with all kinde of filthines and Sodomitrie to pollute their Cities, in celebrating the increaſe of that riuer. This abhomination Conſtantine extinguiſhed, cauſing that wicked order called Androgynæ, to be killed. By reaſon whereof the Riuer afterward (through the benefite of God) yelded more increaſe in his flowing, to the greater fertilitie of the ground, then it did before.

Where wickedneſſe is puniſhed there goodnes followeth.

Among the Romanes was an olde lawe, that ſuch as were barren hauing no fruite of children, ſhould be amerced of halfe their goodes. Alſo, that ſuch as being aboue the yeares of xxv. vnmaried, ſhould not be nibred in the ſame priuileges with them that were maried, neither ſhould be heires to them, to whom notwithſtanding they were next in kinde. Theſe lawes becauſe they ſeemed vnreaſonable, to puniſh the defect of nature, or gift of virginitie, by mās lawe, hee abrogated and tooke away. An other order was among the Romanes, that they which made their willes being ſicke, had certaine preſcribed and conceiued wordes appoynted to thē to vſe, which vnleſſe they followed, their willes ſtoode in none effect. This law alſo Conſtantine repealed, permitting to euery man in making his teſtament to vſe what wordes, or what witneſſes he woulde. Likewiſe among the Romaines hee reſtrained and tooke away the cruel and bloudy ſpectacles & ſights, where men were wont with ſwordes one to kill an other. Of the barbarous and filthy faſhion of the Arethuſians in Phœnicia, I haue mentioned before, pag. 104. where they vſed to expoſe and ſet forth their virgines to open fornication, before they ſhould be maried, which cuſtome alſo Conſtantine remoued away. Where no Churches were, there he commaunded new to be made: where any were decayed, he commāded them to be repaired: where any were to litle, he cauſed them to be enlarged, geuing to the ſame great giftes and reuenewes: not onely of ſuch tributes and taxes comming to him from certaine ſundry Cities, which hee transferred vnto the Churches, but alſo out of his owne treaſures. When any Byſhops required any Councell to be had, hee ſatisfied their petitions: And what in their Councels and Synodes they eſtabliſhed, being godly & honeſt, hee was ready to confirme the ſame.

The liberalitie of Conſtantine in geuing to Churches.

The armour of his ſoldiours, which were newly come from Gentilitie, he garniſhed with the armes of the croſſe, whereby they might learne the ſooner to forget their olde ſuperſtitious idolatry. Moreouer like a worthy Emperor he preſcribed a certaine forme of prayer in ſteade of a Catechiſme for euery man to haue, & to learne how to pray and to inuocate God. The which forme of prayer is recited in the fourth booke of Euſebius De vita Conſtantini, in wordes as foloweth.

Te ſolum nouimus Deum, te regem cognoſcimus, te adiutorem inuocamus, abs te victorias referimus, per te victorias inimicorum conſtituimus, tibi præſentium bonorum gratiam acceptam ferimus, & per te futura quoque ſperamus, tibi ſupplices ſumus omnes: Imperatorem noſtrum Conſtantinum, ac pientiſſimos eius filios, in longiſsima vita incolumes nobis ac victores cuſtodire ſupplices oramus, per Chriſtum dominum noſtrum. Amen. In Engliſh.

We knowledge thee onely to be our God, we confeſſe thee onely to be our king, we inuocate and call vpon thee our onely helper, by thee we obtaine our victories, by thee we vāquiſh and ſubdue our enemies, to thee we attribute whatſoeuer preſent commodities we enioy, & by thee we hope for good thinges to come, vnto thee we direct all our ſute & petitions: moſt humbly beſeeching thee to conſerue Conſtantine our Emperour, and his noble childrē in long life to cōtinue, and to geue them victory ouer all their enemies, through Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

In hys owne palace, hee ſet vp an houſe peculiar for prayer and doctrine, vſing alſo to pray and ſing with his people. Alſo in hys warres hee went not without hys tabernacle appoynted for the ſame. The Sonday he cōmanded to be kept holy of all men, and free from all iudiciarie cauſes, from markets, martes, faires, & all other manuall labors, onely huſbandry excepted: eſpecially charging that no Images or Monuments of Idolatry ſhould be ſet vp.

The ſonday appoynted to be kept holy.

Men of the Clergy and of the miniſtery in al places he endued with ſpeciall priuileges and immunities, ſo that if any were brought before the ciuill Magiſtrate, and liſted to appeale to the ſentence of his Biſhop, it ſhould be lawfull for him ſo to doe: and that the ſentence of the Byſhop ſhould ſtande in as great force as if the Magiſtrate or the Emperour himſelfe had pronounced it.

Liberties and priuiledges graunted to the clergy.

In Engliſh: Phiſitions, Gramarians, and all other profeſſors of liberal artes, and Doctors of the law, with their wiues and childrē, and all other their poſſeſſions, which they haue in Cities: we commaund to be freed from all ciuill charges and functions, neyther to receaue forren ſtraungers in prouinces, nor to be burdened with any publique adminiſtration, nor to be cited vp to ciuill iudgement, nor to be drawne out, or oppreſſed with any iniury. And if any man ſhall vexe them, he ſhall incurre ſuch puniſhment, as the Iudge at his diſcretion ſhall awarde him. The prouiſion and liberalitie of Conſtantine in mayntayning ſcholes.

The priuiledge graunted by Conſtant. to vniuerſities and ſcholes.

Ouer and beſides this, ſo farre did hys godly zeale and princely care and prouiſion extend to the Church of Chriſt, that he commaunded and prouided bookes and volumes of the Scripture, diligently and playnly to be written and copied out, to remayne in bublique Churches to the vſe of poſteritie, whereupon writing to Euſebius byſhop of Nicomedia in a ſpeciall letter (recorded in the 4. booke of Euſebius, De vita Conſtant.) he willeth him with all diligence to procure 50. volumes of parchment well bound and cōpacted: wherein he ſhoulde cauſe to be written out of the ſcripture in a fayre legeable hād, ſuch things as he thought neceſſary and profitable for the inſtruction of the Church. And alloweth him for that buſines two bublique Miniſters. Alſo writeth concerning the ſame, to the generall of hys army, to ſupport and further hym with ſuch neceſſaries, as thereunto ſhould appertayne. &c.

The prouident care of Conſtant. to haue the ſcripture in Churches. Ex Euſeb. lib. 4. de vita Conſtant.

¶ In vewing, peruſing, and writing this ſtory, and in conſidering the Chriſtian zeale of this Emperour, I wiſh that eyther this our Printing and plety of books had bene in his dayes: or that this ſo heroycal hart toward Chriſtes Religion, as was in this ſo excellent Monarche, might ſomething appeare in inferiour Princes raigning in theſe our Printing dayes. &c.

A wiſh of the author admonitory to Princes.

The liberal hand of this Emperor, borne to do al men good, was no leſſe alſo open and ready towarde the needie pouertie of ſuch, which either by loſſe of parents, or other occaſions were not able to helpe them ſelues: to whom he commaunded and prouided dew ſubuention both of corne and raiment to be miniſtred out of his owne coffers, to the neceſſary reliefe of the poore men, women, children, orphanes, and widowes. Euſeb. de vita Conſtant. Lib 4.

The liberalitie of Conſtant. towardes the poore and needy.

Finally, among al the other monuments of his ſingular clemencie and munificence, this is not to be pretermitted: that through all the Empire of Rome and prouinces belonging to the ſame, not only he diminiſhed ſuch taxes, reuenewes, and impoſtes, as publickly were comming to him, but alſo clearely remitted and releaſed to the contributers, the fourth part of the ſame.

Conſtant. remitteth the fourth part of hys rentes and reuenewes.

This preſent place would require ſomthing to be ſayd of the donation of Conſtantine: whereuppon as vpon their chiefeſt anchor holde, the Byſhops of Rome doe grounde theyr ſupreame dominion and right, ouer all the politicall gouernement of the weſt partes, & the ſpiritual gouernement of all the other Seas and partes of the world. Which donation to be falſly fained and forged, and not to procede from Conſtantine, many arguments might heere be inferred, if laiſure from other matters would ſuffer me.

Reaſons and argumentes prouing the donation of Conſtantine to be falſefied.

1. Firſt, for that no ancient hiſtory, nor yet Doctour maketh any mention thereof.

2. Naucleurs reporteth it to be affirmed in the hyſtorie of Iſidorus: but in the olde copies of Iſidorus no ſuch thyng is to be founde.

3. 3. Gracianus the compiler of the decrees, reciteth that decree, not vpon any auncient authoritie, but only vnder the title of Palea.

4. 4. Gelaſius is ſayd to geue ſome teſtimony therof, in Diſt. 15. Sancta Romana, but that clauſe of the ſaid diſtinction touching that matter, in the olde ancient bookes is not extant.

5. 5 Otho Phriſingenſis, who was about the time of Gracian, after hee hath declared the opinion of the fauourers of the Papacie: affirming this donation to be geuen of Conſtantine, to Silueſter the Pope: induceth conſequently, the opinion of them that fauour the Empire, affirming the contrary.

6. 6. How doth thys agree, that Conſtantine did yeelde vp to Silueſter all the politicall dominion ouer the weſt, when as the ſayd Conſtantine at hys death, deuiding the Empire to his three ſonnes, gaue the weſt part of the Empire to one, the Eaſt part to the ſecõd, the middle part to the third?

7. 7. How is it like that Theodoſius after them, being a iuſt and a religious Prince, would or could haue occupyed the Citie of Rome, if it had not bene his right, but had belonged to the pope, & ſo did many other Emperors after him?

8. 8. The phraſe of this decree being conferred to the phraſe and ſtile of Conſtantine, in his other Edictes and letters aboue ſpecified doth nothing agree.

9. 9. Seeing the papiſts themſelues confeſſe that the decree of this donation was writtẽ in Greeke, how agreeth that with truth: when as both it was written not to the Gretians, but to the Romanes, and alſo Conſtantine himſelfe for lacke of the Greeke toung, was faine to vſe the Latine toung in the Councell of Nice?

10. 10. The contents of this donation (who ſoeuer was the forger thereof) doeth bewray it ſelfe. For if it be true which there is confeſſed, that he was Baptiſed at Rome of Silueſter, & the iiij. day after his baptiſme this patrimonie was giuen (which was before his battaile againſt Maximinus or Licinius, An. 317. as Niceph. recordeth) howe then accordeth this wyth that which followeth in the donation, for him to haue iuriſdiction geuen ouer the other iiij. principall ſeas of Antioch, Alexandria, Conſtantinople and Hieruſalem? when as the Citie of Conſtantinople was not yet begun, before the death of Maximinus or Licinius, and was not finiſhed, before the xxviij. yere of the raigne of Conſtantine, an. 339. or if it be true, as Hierome counteth, it was finiſhed the xxiij. yere of his raigne, which was the yere of our Lorde 334. long after this donation by their owne accõpt.

11. 11. Furthermore, where in the ſayde conſtitution is ſayd that Conſtantine was baptiſed at Rome of Silueſter, & therby was purged of Leproſie: the fable thereof agreeth not with the trueth of hiſtorie: for ſo much as Euſebius, lib. 4. De vita Conſtantini, Hieronymus in Chron. Ruffin. lib. 1. cap. 11. Socrates, lib. 1. cap. 39 Theodor. lib. 1. cap. 31. Sozomenus, lib 2. cap. 34. doe altogether conſent that hee was Baptiſed not at Rome, but at Nicomedia: and that moreouer, as by theyr teſtimonie doth appeare, not of Silueſter but of Euſebius biſhop of Nicomedia, not before his battaile againſt Maximinus, or Licinius, but in the xxxj. yeare of his raigne, a litle before his death.

12. 12. Againe, where as Conſtantine in this donation appoynted him to haue the principalitie ouer the other iiij. Patriarchall Seas: that maketh Conſtantine contrary to himſelfe. who in the Councell of Nice afterwarde agreed with other biſhops, that al the iiij. patriarchal ſeas ſhould haue equall iuriſdiction, euery one ouer his owne territorie and precinct.

13. 13 In ſumme, briefly to conclude: who ſo deſireth more aboundantly to be ſatiſfied touching this matter, let hym read the bookes of Marſilius Patauinus, intitled: defenſor pacis, An 1324. of Laurẽtius Valla, An. 1440. of Antoninus archbiſhop of Florence, who in hys hyſtorie, plainely denieth the tenour of thys donation to be founde in the old bookes of the decrees. Of Cuſanus Cardinalis. Lib. 3. Cap. 2. wryting to the Councell of Baſil, Anno 1460. Of Æneas Syluius in Dialogo, of Hier. Paulus Cattalanus, An. 1496. of Raphael Volateranus, An. 1500. of Lutherus, An. 1537. &c. all which by many and euident probations, diſpute and proue this donation taken out of a booke De geſtis Syluestri, and tranſlated (as they faine) by one Bartholomeus Picernus, out of Greke into Latine: not to procede from Conſtantinus, but to be a thing vntruely pretenſed, or rather a fable imagined, or els to be the deede of Pipinus or Charles, or ſome ſuch other, if it were euer the deede of any.

Commendation of Conſtantine, the Emperour.

And thus haſt thou (beloued Reader) briefly collected the narration of the noble actes and heauenly vertues of thys moſt famous Emperour Conſtantine the great: a ſingulare ſpectacle for all Chriſtian Princes to beholde and imitate, and worthy of perpetuall memorie in all congregations of Chriſtian Saintes. whoſe feruent zeale & pietie in generall, to all cõgregations, and to all the ſeruants of Chriſt was notable: but eſpecially the affection and reuerence of hys heart toward them was admirable, whych had ſuffered any thyng for the confeſſion of Chriſt, in the perſecutions before, them had hee principally in price and veneration, in ſo much that hee embraced and kiſſed theyr woundes and ſtripes, and their eyes, being put out. And if any ſuche Byſhops or any other Miniſters brought to hym any cõplaints one againſt an other, (as many times they did) he would take theyr bils of complaint, and burne them before theyr faces: ſo ſtudious and zealous was hys mind to haue them agree, whoſe diſcord was to hym more griefe, then it was to themſelues. All the vertuous actes and memorable doings of this diuine & renowmed Emperour to comprehende or commit to hyſtorie: it were the matter alone of a great volume: wherfore contented with theſe aboue premiſed, becauſe nothing of him can be ſayde inough, I ceaſe to diſcourſe of him any further.

Conſtantine kiſſed the woundes of them that ſuffered for Chriſt.

Conſtantine burneth the bils of complayntes, and breaketh ſtrife among the Byſhops.

One thyng yet remaineth not to be omitted, wherein (as by the way of a note) I thought good to admoniſh the learned Reader, ſuche as loue to be conuerſant in reading of auncient authors: that in the Eccleſiaſticall hyſtorie of Euſebius, where in the latter ende of the booke, is added a certaine Oration, Ad cõuentum Sanctorum, vnder the name of Euſebius Pamphilus, here is to be vnderſtãd, that the ſayd Oration is wrongly intituled vpon the name of Euſebius, whych in very truth is the Oration of Conſtantinus hymſelfe. For the probation whereof, beſide the ſtile and matter therein contained, and tractation heroycall) liuely declaring the religious vaine of Conſtantine) I alledge the very teſtimonie of Euſebius himſelfe in his fourth booke De vita Conſtantini, where he in expreſſe wordes not onely declareth that Cõſtantine wrote ſuch an Oration intituled Ad Conuentum Sanctorum, but alſo promiſeth in the end of hys booke, to annexe the ſame: declaring moreouer what difficultie the interpretors had, to tranſlate the ſame from the Romaine ſpeeche, to theyr Grecian toung. Euſebius de vita Conſtantini. Lib. 4 pag. 211.

Note, that the oration ad conuentum ſanctorum is wrongly aſcribed to Euſebius, which in deede is the oration of Conſtantine.

And here an end of theſe lamentable & doleful perſecutions of the primitiue Church, during the ſpace of the 300. yeres frõ the paſſion of our Sauiour Chriſt, til the cõming of this Conſtantinus, by whom, as by the elect inſtrumẽt of God, it hath ſo pleaſed his almighty maieſty, by his determinat purpoſe to giue reſt after lõg trouble to his church, according to that S. Cyprian declareth before, pag. 68. to be reueled of God vnto his Church: that after darkenes and ſtormy tempeſt ſhould come peaceable calme, & ſtable quietnes to his church, meaning this time of Conſtantine now preſent. At which time it ſo pleaſed the almightie, that the murdering malice of Sathan ſhould at length be reſtrained, and he him ſelfe to be tied vp for a thouſande yeares, through his great mercie in Chriſt, to whome therfore be thankes and praiſe now and for euer. AMEN.

The ende of the firſt Booke.

THE SECOND BOOKE, CONTAINING the next 300. yeares following, with ſuch things ſpecially touched, as haue happened in England, from the time of king Lucius, to Gregorius, and ſo after to the time of king Egebert.

By theſe perſecutions hytherto in the Booke before precedent, thou maieſt vnderſtand (Chriſtian reader) how the furie of Sathan and rage of men, haue done what they could to extinguiſh the name and religion of Chriſt. For what thing did lacke, that eyther death coulde doe, or torments coulde worke, or the gates of hell coulde deuiſe: all was to the vttermoſt attempted. And yet all the furie and malice of Sathan, al the wiſedom of the world, & ſtrength of men, doing, deuiſing, practiſing what they could: notwithſtanding the religion of Chriſt (as thou ſeeſt) hath had the vpper hand. which thing I wiſh thee greatly (gentle reader) wiſely to note, and diligently to ponder, in cōſidering theſe former hiſtories. And becauſe thou canſt not conſider them, nor profit by them, vnles thou do firſt read & peruſe them: let me craue therfore thus much at thine handes, to turne & read ouer the ſaid hyſtories of thoſe perſecutiōs aboue deſcribed: eſpecially aboue all the other hyſtories of this preſent volume: for thy eſpeciall edification, whych I truſt thou ſhalt finde not vnworthy the reading.

A petition to the reader, diligently to read ouer the former booke of the x. perſecutions.

Nowe becauſe the tying vp of Sathan geueth to the Church ſome reſt, & to me ſome leiſure to addreſſe my ſelfe, to the handling of other ſtories: I minde therefore (Chriſt willing) in thys preſent booke, leauing a while the tractation of theſe generall affaires, pertaining to the vniuerſal Church: to proſecute ſuch domeſticall hyſtories, as more neare concerne this our country of England & Scotland, done here at home: beginning firſt with king Lucius, with whome the faith firſt begā here in this Realme, as the ſentence of ſome writers doth hold. And for ſomuch as here may riſe, yea and doth riſe, a great cōtrouerſie in theſe our Popiſh daies, cōcerning the firſt origine & planting of the faith in this our Realme: it ſhall not be greatly out of our purpoſe, ſomewhat to ſtay & ſay of this queſtion, whether the Church of England firſt receiued the faith from Rome or not. The which, although I graunt ſo to be, yet being ſo graunted, it little auaileth the purpoſe of them whiche woulde ſo haue it: for be it ſo, that England firſt receaued the Chriſtian faith and Religion from Rome, both in the time of Eleutherius theyr Byſhop. 180. yeares after Chriſt: and alſo in the time of Auſten, whome Gregory ſent hether 600. yeares after Chriſt: yet their purpoſe followeth not thereby, that we muſt therefore fetche our Religion from thence ſtill, as from the chiefe welhead and fountaine of all godlines. And yet as they are not able to proue the ſecond, ſo neither haue I any cauſe to graunt the firſt: that is, that our Chriſtian faith was firſt deriued from Rome, which I may proue by vj. or vij. good cōiectural reaſons. wherof the firſt I take of the teſtimony of Gildas, our coūtreyman, who in his hiſtory affirmeth plainly, that Britaine receaued the Goſpell in the time of Tiberius the Emperour, vnder whome Chriſt ſuffered. Lib. De victoria Aurelij Ambroſij. And ſayth moreouer, that Ioſeph of Arimathie after diſperſion of the Iewes, was ſent of Philip the Apoſtle frō France to Britayne, about the yeare of our Lord. 63. and heere remained in this land al his time: and ſo with his fellowes, laide the firſt foundation of Chriſtian faith amōg the Britayne people. whereupon other preachers and teachers comming afterward confirmed the ſame, and increaſed it.

The firſt planting of Chriſtē fayth in England.

Whether Chriſtian Religion in this Realme came firſt from Rome.

2. The ſecōd reaſon is out of Tertullian, who liuing neare about, or rather ſomewhat before the time of this Eleutherius, in hys booke Contra Iudæos, manifeſtly importeth the ſame: where the ſayde Tertullian teſtifying how the Goſpel was diſperſed abroad by the ſound of the Apoſtles, & there reckening vp the Medes, Perſians, Parthiās, and dwellers in Meſopotamia, Iewry, Cappadocia, Pōtus, Aſia, Phrigia, Egypt, Pamphilia, with many mo, at length cōmeth to the coaſts of the Moorians, and al the borders of Spayne: with diuers natiōs of Fraunce, & there amongſt all other reciteth alſo the partes of Britayne, whyche the Romaines could neuer attaine to, and reporteth the ſame now to be ſubiect to Chriſt, as alſo reckeneth vp the places of Sarmatia, of the Danes, the Germanes, the Scithiās, with many other prouinces and Iles to him vnknowen: in all which places, ſayth he, raigneth the name of Chriſt, which now beginneth to be commō. This hath Tertullian. Note here, how amōg other diuers beleuing nations, he mentioneth alſo the wildeſt places of Britaine to be of the ſame number. And theſe in his time were Chriſtened, who was in the ſame Eleutherius time, as is aboue ſayd. Then, was not Pope Eleutherius, the firſt whych ſent the Chriſtian fayth into this Realme, but the Goſpell was heere receiued before hys time, eyther by Ioſeph of Arimathia, as ſome Chronicles recorde, or by ſome of the Apoſtles or of their ſcholers, which had bene heere preaching Chriſt, before Eleutherius wrote to Lucius.

Ex Tertul. contra Iudæos.

3. My thirde probation I deduct out of Origen, Home. 4. in Ezechielem, whoſe wordes be theſe: Britāniam in Chriſtianam conſentire religionem. whereby it appeareth that the faith of Chriſt was ſparſed here in England before the daies of Eleutherius.

3.
Ex Origen hom. 4. in Ezechi.

4. For my fourth probation I take the teſtimony of Bede, where he affirmeth that in his time, and almoſt a thouſand yeare after Chriſt, here in Britayne: Eaſter was kept after the maner of the Eaſt Church, in the full moone: what day in the weeke ſoeuer it fell on, and not on the Sonday, as we do now. wherby it is to be collected, that the firſt preachers in this land, haue come out from the Eaſt part of the world, where it was ſo vſed, rather then from Rome.

4.
Ex Beda.

5. Fiftly, I may alledge the wordes of Nicephorus, Lib. 2. cap 40. where hee ſayeth, that Symon Zelotes did ſpreade the goſpel of Chriſt to the weſt Oceane, and brought the ſame vnto the Iles of Britayne.

5.
Ex Niceph. Lib. 2, cap. 40.

6. Sixtly may be added here alſo the words of Petrus Cluniacenſis, who wryting to Bernard, affirmeth that ẏ Scots in his time did celebrate their Eaſter, not after ẏ Romane maner, but after the Greekes. &c. And as the ſaid Britains were not vnder the Romane order in the time of this Abbot of Cluniake: ſo neither were they nor woulde be, vnder the Romane legate, in the time of Gregory: nor would admit any primacy of the biſhop of Rome, to be aboue thē.

6.
Ex Pet. Cluniacenſi. ad Bernardum.

7. For the ſeuenth argument, moreouer I may make my probation by the plaine wordes of Eleutherius, by whoſe Epiſtle wrytten to king Lucius, we may vnderſtande, that Lucius had receaued the faith of Chriſt in his lande, before the king ſent to Eleutherius for the Romane lawes: for ſo the expreſſe wordes of the letter do manifeſtly purport, as hereafter followeth to be ſeene. By all which coniectures, it may ſtand probably to be thought, that the Britaynes, were taught firſt by the Grecians of the Eaſt Church, rather then by the Romaines.

7.
Ex Epiſt. Eleutherij. ad Lucium.

Peraduenture Eleutherius might helpe ſomething, eyther to conuert the king, or elſe to encreaſe the Faith then newly ſprong among the people: but that he preciſely was the firſt, that cannot be proued. But graunt he were, as in deede the moſt part of our Engliſh ſtories confeſſe, neither will I greatly ſticke with them therin: yet what haue they got thereby, when they haue caſt all their gaine? In fewe wordes to conclude this matter, if ſo be that the Chriſtian faith and religiō was firſt deriued from Rome to this our nation by Eleutherius, then let them but graunt to vs the ſame faith and religion, which then was taught at Rome: and from thence deriued hether by the ſayd Eleutherius, and we wil deſire no more. For then neither was any vniuerſal Pope aboue all Churches and Councels, whych came not in before Bonifacius time, whych was 400. yeres after: neither any name or vſe of the Maſſe, the partes whereof how and by whom they were compiled, here after in this booke following appeareth to be ſeene. Neither any ſacrifice propiciatorie for the ſcouring of Purgatory was then offered vpon halowed altars, but onely the Communion frequented at Chriſtian tables: where oblations and gifts were offered, as well of the people, as of the Prieſtes to God: becauſe they ſhould appeare neither emptie nor vnkinde before the Lord, as we may vnderſtand by the time of What difference betweene the late church of Rome, from the old Church of Rome, and in what matters.

of Cyprian. Neither was then any tranſubſtãtiation heard of, which was not brought in before a thouſand yere after. Neither were then any images of Saints departed, ſet vp in Churches, yea a great number of the Saints worſhypped in this our time, were not as yet borne, nor the Churches wherein they were worſhipped, were yet ſet vp: but came in long after; eſpecially in the time of Irene & Conſtans the Emperour. Likewiſe neyther Reliques nor peregrinations were then in vſe. Prieſtes Mariage was then as lawfull, and no leſſe receiued as now: neither was it condemned before the dayes of Hildebrand, almoſt a thouſande yeares after that. Their ſeruice was then in the vulgare toung, as witneſſeth Hierome. The Sacrament miniſtred in both kindes, as wel to lay men, as to Prieſtes; the witnes wherof is Cyprian. Yea, and that temporal men which would not then communicate at Eaſter, whitſontide, and Chriſtenmaſſe: were not coũted for Catholiks, the Popes owne diſtinction can teſtifie. In funeralles, Prieſtes then flocked not together, ſelling trentals and diriges for ſweping of Purgatorie: but onely a funeral cõcion was vſed, with Pſalmes of praiſes, & ſongs of theyr worthy deedes: and Alleluya ſounding on high, which did ſhake the gilded ſeelings of the temple, as witneſſeth Nazianzene, Ambroſe, and Hierome, &c.

De conſecrat. Diſt. 2.

In the Supper of the Lord, & at Baptiſme, no ſuch ceremonies were vſed, as now of late hath bene intruded, in ſo much that as in this ſtory is ſhewed hereafter, both Auſten and Paulinus Baptiſed then in Riuers not in halowed fountes, as wytneſſeth Fabianus. The Portuis of Sarum, of Yorke, of Bangor, with Mattens and Euenſong of the day: againe neither the orders and religions of Monks & Friers, were not yet dreamed of, to the ſpace almoſt of a thouſand yeares after, &c. So that, as I ſayde, if the Papiſtes woulde needes deriue the faith & religion of this Realme, from Rome: then let them ſet vs & leaue vs there, where they had vs: that is, let them ſuffer vs to ſtand content wᵗ that faith and religion, which then was taught & brought from Rome by Eleutherius (as nowe we differ nothing frõ the ſame) and we wil deſire no better. And if they wil not, then let the wiſe Reader iudge, where the fault is, in vs or them which neither themſelues will perſiſt in the antiquitie of the Romiſh religion, whych they ſo much bragge of, neither will they permit vs ſo to do.

Fabianus. cap. 119. & 120.

And thus much by the way, to ſatiſfie the foreſayd obiection: whereby we may haue now a more ready paſſage into the order and courſe of the Hyſtorie. Beyng therefore graunted vnto them, whych they ſo earneſtly ſticke vpon, that the Chriſtian faith and Religion of this Realme was brought from Rome, firſt by Eleutherius, then afterwarde by Auſten: thus wryteth the Chronicles of that matter.

Eleutherius Byſhop of Rome.

About the time and yeare of the Lord. 180. king Lucius ſonne of Coilus, which builded Colcheſter, king of the Britaines, who then were the inhabiters & poſſeſſors of thys land (which now we Engliſhmen call England) hearing of the myracles & wonders done by the Chriſtians at that time in diuers places (as Monumetenſis wryteth) directed hys letters to Eleutherius Byſhop of Rome, to receaue of him the Chriſtian faith. Although about the computation of the yere and time: great difference there is in authours, when this ſhoulde be. Nauclerus ſayth it was An. 156. but that cannot be, forſomuch as Eleutherius was not yet Byſhop by the ſpace of 20. yeres after that. Henricus de Erfordia ſayth, it was An. 169. in the 19. yere of Verus Emperor, but that agreeth not with approued hyſtories: which all conſent, that Verus raigned not 19. yeres, and if he had, yet that yeare commeth not to the yere of our Lord. 169. but to the yere. 181. Some other ſay, that Eleutherius was made Byſhop, in the 6. yeare of Commodus, which was the yeare of our Lorde. 186. but that ſeemeth to goe to farre, but let the authours agree as they can. Let vs returne to Eleutherius the good Byſhop, who hearing the requeſt of thys king, & glad to ſee the godly towardnes of his wel diſpoſed mind: ſendeth him certaine teachers & preachers, called Fugatius, or by ſome Faganus, and Damianus, or Dimianus: which conuerted firſt the king and people of Britaine, and Baptiſed them wᵗ the Baptiſme and Sacrament of Chriſtes faith. The Temples of Idolatry and all other Monuments of Gentilitie they ſubuerted, conuerting the people frõ theyr diuers & many gods to ſerue one liuing God. Thus true religion with ſincere faith increaſing, ſuperſtition decaied, wᵗ al other rites of Idolatrie. There were thẽ in Britaine 28. head Prieſtes, which they called Flamines, & 3. Archprieſts among them, which were called Archflamines: hauing the ouerſight of their maners, & as Iudges ouer the reſt. These 28. Flamines they turned to 28. Biſhops. And the 3. Archflamines, to 3. Archbyſhoppes, hauyng then theyr ſeates in three principall Cityes of the Realme: that is, in London, in Yorke, and in Glamorgantia, videlicet, in Vrbe legionum, by wales. Thus the Countreys of the whole Realme, being deuided euery one vnder his owne Biſhop, and all things ſetled in a good order: the foreſaide king Lucius ſent againe to the ſayd Eleutherius, for the Romane lawes: thereby likewiſe to be gouerned as in Religion nowe they were framed accordingly. Unto whome Eleutherius againe wryteth, after the tenour of theſe wordes enſuing.

The Epiſtle of Eleutherius Biſhop of Rome, ſent to king Lucius.

Ex Vetuſto codice regum antiquorum. The Epiſtle of Eleutherius to king Lucius.

Anno. 169. a Paſsione Chriſti ſcripſit Dominus Eleutherius Papa Lucio Regi Britanniæ, ad correctionem Regis & procerum regni Britanniæ, and ſo forth, as foloweth in Engliſh.

Yee require of vs the Romane lawes and the Emperours, to be ſent ouer to you: which you may practiſe & put in vre wythin your Realme. The Romane lawes, & the Emperours, we may euer reproue, but the lawe of God we may not. Yee haue receaued of late through Gods mercie in the realme of Britaine, the lawe and faith of Chriſt: ye haue with you within the Realme both the parties of the Scriptures. Out of them by gods grace, with the Coũcel of your realme, take ye a law, and by that lawe (through gods ſufferance) rule your kingdome of Britayne. For you be Gods Vicare in your kingdome, according to the ſaying of the Pſalme. Deus iudicium tuum Regi da, &c. That is. O God geue thy iudgement to the King, and thy righteouſnes to the kings ſonne. &c. He ſayd not the iudgement & righteouſnes of the Emperor, but thy iudgement and iuſtice: that is to ſay, of God. The kinges ſonnes be the Chriſtian people & folke of the Realme, which be vnder your gouernement, and liue and continue in peace within your kingdome, as the Goſpel ſayeth: like as the henne gathereth her chickẽs vnder her wings, ſo doth the king his people. The people and folke of the Realme of Britayne be yours, whome if they be deuided ye ought to gather in concord and peace: to call them to the faith and lawe of Chriſt, and to the holy church, to cheriſh and maintaine them, to rule and gouerne them, and to defende them alwaies from ſuch as would do them wrõg, from malicious men and enemies. A king hath his name of ruling, and not of hauing a Realme. You ſhalbe a king while ye rule wel, but if you do otherwiſe, the name of a king ſhall not remaine with you, & you ſhall loſe it, which God forbid. The almightie God graunt you ſo to rule the Realme of Britayne, that you may raigne wyth him for euer, whoſe Vicar ye be in the Realme.

The king, Gods vicare within hys owne kingdome.

After this maner, as you haue heard, was the Chriſtiã faith either firſt brought in, or els confirmed in this realme of Britayne, by the ſending of Eleutherius, not wᵗ any croſſe or proceſſion, but onely at the ſimple preaching of Fagane and Damian, through whoſe miniſterie this realme & Iland of Britaine was eftſoones reduced to the faith & lawe of the Lord, according as was prophecied by Eſay, as wel of that, as other Ilands mo, where he ſayth, chap. 42. he ſhall not faint, nor geue ouer till hee hath ſet iudgement in earth, and Ilands ſhal waite for hys lawe. &c. The faith thus receiued of the Britaynes cõtinued among them and floriſhed the ſpace of 216. yeres, till the cõming of the Saxones: who then were Paganes: whereof more followeth hereafter to be ſayde, the Lorde Chriſt aſſiſting thereunto. In the meane time ſomthing to ſpeake of this ſpace before, which was betwixt the time of Lucius, and the firſt cõming in of the Saxones: firſt is to be vnderſtanded, that all this while as yet the Emperors of Rome had not receiued the faith, what time the kings of Britaine, & the ſubiects thereof, were cõuerted now, as is ſayd, to Chriſt: for the which cauſe much trouble and perturbation, was ſought againſt them, not onely here in Britayne, but through all parts of Chriſtendome by the Heathen infidels. In ſo much that in the perſecution onely of Diocleſian & Maximinian raigning both together within one moneth xvij. thouſand martyrs are nũbred to haue ſuffered for the name of Chriſt, as hath bene hetherto in the booke before ſufficiently diſcourſed.

Eſay. 42.

Thus therefore although the foreſayd Lucius, the Britaine king, through the mercifull prouidence of God, was then Chriſtened and the goſpel receaued generally almoſt in all the land: yet the ſtate thereof as wel of the Religion, as of the common wealth, coulde not be quiet, for that the emperors & nobles of Rome were yet infidels, & enemies to the ſame: but eſpecially for this cauſe, the cauſe ſo happening, that Lucius the Chriſten king died without iſſue: for therby ſuch trouble & variance fel amõg the Britaines (as it happeneth in al other Realmes, namely in this our Realme of England when ſoeuer ſucceſſion lacketh) that not onely they brought vpon them the Idolatrous Romaines, & at length the Saxons: but alſo inwrapped them ſelues in ſuche miſerie and deſolation, as yet to thys day amongeſt them remayneth. Such a thyng it is (where a Prince or a King is in a kingdome) there to lacke ſucceſſion, as eſpecially in this caſe may appere. For after yͤ death of Lucius, when the Barons and Nobles of the land could not accord wtin themſelues vpon ſucceſſion of the crowne: ſtept in the Romaines, & got the crowne into their owne hands, wherupon followed great miſery and ruine to the realme: for ſometimes the Idolatrous Romaines, ſometimes the Britaynes raigned and ruled, as violence and victorie would ſerue, one king murderyng an other, till at length the Saxones came and depriued them bothe, as in proceſſe hereafter followeth to be ſeene.

In the meane ſeaſon touching the ſtory of king Lucius, here is to be reproued the fable of ſome wryters falſely faining of him, that he ſhoulde after hys Baptiſme receaued, put of all his kingly honor, and forſake the land & be made a preacher: who after long trauaile in preaching and teaching, in Fraunce, in Germany, in Auguſta, & in Sueuia, at length was made Doctor and Rector of the Churche of Curcak: where (as this fable ſayeth) he ſuffered Martyrdome. But this phãtaſie of whomſoeuer it firſt did ſpring, diſagreeeth from all our Engliſh ſtories: who with a full conſent do for the moſt part cõcord in this, that the ſaid Lucius, after he had foũded many Churches, and geuen great riches and liberties to the ſame: deceaſed with great tranquillitie in his owne lande, and was buried at Gloceſter, the 14. yeare after his Baptiſme, as the booke of Flores Hiſtoriarum, doeth counte, which was the yeare of our Lorde (as he ſayeth) 201. and reckeneth his conuerſion to be. An. 87. In ſome I finde hys deceaſe to be the fourth, & in ſome the tenth yeere after his Baptiſme, and holde that he raigned all the ſpace of lxxvij. yeares, and thus much concerning king Lucius.

The deceaſe of King Lucius. Ex Floriſlego.

Now to proceede in order of the ſtorie, briefly to touch the ſtate of the foreſaid land of Britayne, betwene the time of king Lucius, and the entring of the Saxones, who were the kings thereof: and in what order they ſucceeded, or rather inuaded one after an other, this Catalogue heere vnder written will ſpecifie.

By this table may appere a lamentable face of a common wealth ſo miſerably rent and diuided into two ſortes of people, differing not ſo much in cõtrey, as in religion. For when the Romaines raigned: ſo were they gouerned by the Infidels. when the Britaynes ruled, ſo they were gouerned by Chriſtians. Thus what quietneſſe was or could be in the Church, in ſo vnquiet and doubtful dayes, it may eaſely be conſidered.

Albeit, notwithſtanding al theſe foreſayd Heathen rulers of the Romaines, which here gouerned, yet (God be praiſed) we read of no perſecution, during all theſe x. perſecutiõs aboue mentioned, that touched the chriſtian Britaynes, before the laſt perſecution onely of Diocleſian, and Maximianus Herculius, whych here then exerciſed much crueltie. Thys perſecution, as it was the laſt among the Romane Chriſtians, ſo it was the firſt of many & diuers that followed after in thys Churche and Realme of England: wherof we will here after intreate (Chriſt willing) as order of the matter ſhall leade vs. In the meane tyme this rage of Diocleſian as it was vniuerſally through all the churches in the world fierce & vehement: ſo in this realme of Britayne alſo it was ſo ſore, that as all our Engliſh Chronicles do teſtifie, and recorde, all Chriſtianitie almoſt in the whole land was deſtroied: Churches were ſubuerted, all bookes of the Scripture burned, many of the faythfull both men and women were ſlaine. Among whom the firſt and chiefe was Albanus, then Iulius, Aaron, and Amphibalus. Of whome ſufficiently hath bene ſayde before. what were the other, or howe many they were that ſuffered beſide, ſtories make no rehearſall. And thus much therof.

The Brittaynes neuer touched with any perſecution before the time of Diocleſian.

Nowe as concerning the gouernement of theſe aboue named kinges of Britayne, although I haue little or nothing to note, which greatly appertaineth to the matter of this Eccleſiaſticall hyſtorie: yet this is not to be paſt ouer: firſt how in the order of theſe kings commeth Conſtantinus the great & worthy Emperor, not onely a Britayne borne by hys mother Helina being kyng Coilus daughter, but alſo by the helpe of the Britaynes army (vnder the power of God) whych the ſayde Conſtantine tooke wyth hym out of Britain to Rome: obtained with great victory, peace and tranquilitie to the whole vniuerſall Church of Chriſt: hauing iij. legions wt him out of this realme, of choſen & able ſoldiors. wherby the ſtrẽgth of the lãd was not a litle impaired & indangered, as afterward in this ſtory foloweth.

Conſtant. the great, borne and bred in Brittayne.

The cauſe how this Realme of Brittaine was firſt weakened.

After him likewiſe Maximian following his ſteppes, tooke wyth him alſo (as ſtories recorde) all the power and ſtrength whych was left: and whatſoeuer he could make, of able and fighting men, to ſubdue Fraunce: beſides the garriſons whych he had out wyth him before, ſending for mo to the number of C. M. ſouldiors at once, to be ſent to hym out of Britayne into Fraunce. At whych time alſo Conanus his partener being then in Fraunce, ſent ouer for virgins from Britaine to the number of xi. M. who with Vrſula, the Prince Dionets daughter being ſhypped ouer, many periſhed in the ſea: ſome were taken of the infidels, marching vppon the borders, wyth whome becauſe they wold not be polluted, all were deſtroyed, being miſerably diſperſed (ſome one way, ſome an other) ſo ẏ none eſcaped.

Brittayne ſpoyled of ſouldiours.

Vrſula, with a xi. thouſand virgins.

Thus poore Britayne being left naked and deſtitute on euery ſide, as a maimed body wtout myght or ſtrength: was left open to hys enemyes, not able to ſuccour it ſelfe, without helpe of forreine friendes. To whome they were then conſtrained to flie, eſpecially to the Romains to whõ the Britaynes ſent this worde or meſſage. Ætio ter Conſuli gemitus Britannorum. Repellunt nos Barbari ad mare. Repellit nos mare ad Barbaros. Hinc oriuntur duo funerum genera, quia aut iugulamur, aut ſubmergimur. But the Romains then began to forſake them, whereby they were in nearer danger to be oppreſſed by Gwanus and Melga, had not Gwetelinus the Archbyſhop of London made ouer to leſſer Britayne, and obtayning theyr helpe, had brought Conſtantinus the kings brother, to reſcue his countrey againſt the infidels. Thys Conſtantinus was brother to Aldroenus king of litle Britayn, and father to Conſtans, Aurelius Ambroſius, & Vter, who after raigned kings in Britayne.

Ex Chro co. Mon metenſi. Conſtantinus. Conſtans, Aurelius, Ambroſius, Vter Pendragon.

Thus by the meanes of the good Archbyſhop and Conſtantinus, the ſtate of the Religion and Realme of Britayne was in ſome meane quiet & ſafetye, during the time of the ſayd Conſtantine and of the good Archbiſhop. But as the Realme of Britayne almoſt from the beginning was neuer without ciuill warre, at length came wicked Vortigerne, who cruelly cauſing Conſtans his Prince to be murdred, ambitiouſly inuaded the crowne: who then fearing the other two brethren of Conſtans, whych were Aurelius & Vter, being then in litle Britayne: did ſend ouer for the aide of the Saxons being then infidels, and not onely that: but alſo maried with an infidell, the daughter of Hengiſt called Rowen. whereupon the ſayde Vortigerne not long after, by the ſayd Hengiſt and the Saxones was with like trayterie diſpoſſeſſed of his kingdome, & the people of Britayne driuen out of their countrey, after that the Saxons had ſlaine of their chiefe Nobles & Barons at one meeting, ioyning together ſubtiltie with crueltie, to the number of CC.lxxi. ſome ſtories ſay CCCC.lx. This wicked acte of the Saxones, was done at Almiſbury, or at a place called Stonehenge, by the monument of which ſtones there hanging, it ſeemeth that the noble Britaynes there were buried.

As this great plague could not come to the Britaynes without Gods permiſſiõ, ſo Gildas ſheweth in hys Chronicle, the cauſe thereof, wryting thus: Quòd Britones propter auaritiam & rapinã Principum, propter iniquitatem & iniuſtitiam Iudicum, propter deſidiam prædicationis Epiſcoporum, propter luxuriam & malos mores populi, patriam perdidiſſe. &c.

The entring and raigning of the Saxons.

THis was the comming in firſt of the Angles or Saxones into this realme, being yet vnchriſtened and infidels: which was about the yeare of our Lord, as William Malmeſbury teſtifieth. CCCC. lxix. the Captaines of whō were Hengiſtus and Horſus. Although the ſayd Hengiſt and Saxones at their firſt comming, for all their ſubtile working and cruell attempt, had no quiet ſetling in Britayne, but were driuen out diuers times by the valiantneſſe of Aurelius Ambroſius, and his brother Vter aboue mētioned, who raigned after that among the Britaynes: yet notwithſtanding they were not ſo driuen out, but that they returned againe, and at length poſſeſſed all, driuing the Britaynes (ſuch as remained) into Cambria, whych we call nowe Wales. Hengiſtus, as ſome Chronicles recorde, reigned. 43. yeares, and died in Kent. Galfridus in ſuo Britannico ſayeth: that he was taken in warre by Aurelius Ambroſius, and beheaded at Coningeſburgh, after he had raigned xxxix. yeare.

After the death of Hengiſt, hys ſonne Oſca, raigned xxiiij. yeres leauing his ſonne Octa, to whoſe reignē with hys ſonne Ymenricus, hyſtories doe attribute liij. yeares, who alſo were ſlaine at length by Vter Pendragon, Polichroni. Lib. 5. cap. 4.

Ex Policron. lib. 5. cap. 4.

The Saxones after they were ſetled in the poſſeſſion of England, diſtributed the Realme among themſelues, firſt in ſeuen partes: euery part to haue his king, that is: The firſt to be the king of Kent. The ſecond to be king of Suſſex and Southerye, holding hys Palace at Chiceſter. The thirde king was of weſtſexe. The fourth king of Eſſex. The fift king was of the Eaſtangles, that is, of Cambridgeſhire, Northfolke, and Southfolke. The vj. king of Merceland, or Mercia, and in his kingdome were cōteined the Counteſſes of Lincolne, Leyceſter, Huntyngdon, Northampton, Oxford, Darby, Warwike. &c. The vij. king had all the countries beyond Humber, and was called king of Northumberland.

Seuen kings ruling in England.

Of theſe ſeuen kingdomes, although they continued not long, but at length ioyned all in one, comming all into the poſſeſſion & ſubiection of the weſtſaxons: yet for the ſpace they cōtinued (which was in continuall trouble & warres among themſelues) thys is the race and order of them, as in this Table particularly followeth to be ſeene.

A Table deſcribing the ſeuen kingdoms of the Saxons, raigning here in England.

IN the tyme of Vortiger aboue mentioned, began the raigne of the Saxons in this land, the which comming out of 3. ſoꝛtes of the Germaine people (to witte) the Saxons, the Iutes and Angles, repleniſhed the land, of them called now Anglia. Of whom firſt Hengiſtus raigned in Kent, which countrey of Kent he had obtayned by Rowen his daughter, of king Vortiger, which was about the yeare of our Loꝛd as ſome doe count, 476. oꝛ as I finde in the computation of our Engliſh Tables, 456. in ſome, 463. After Hengiſt, came in Octha, with Eoſa, oꝛ Yſſe his kinſman: who afterward ſucceded the ſayd Hengiſt in Kent. Not long after came in an other company of the Saxons, with Elle their Captaine, which planted themſelues in Southſexe. And after them agayne an other garriſon of the Saxons with Cerdice their Captain, which did occupy the weſt part of the land, called by them weſtſaxon. And ſo likewiſe the other multitude of the Saxōs after them, which as yet beyng vnchꝛiſtened and Infidels, deuided the whole land among themſelues into vij. kingdoms, as in this Table followeth.

And thus ſtandeth the order and race of the Saxon kinges, raigning together wyth the Britaines in thys Realme. Nowe foloweth the deſcription of the Britayne kings, raigning with the Saxons in like mauer.

Although the miſerable Britaines thus were depriued of their land, by the cruel ſubtilty of the Saxons, yet were they not ſo driuẽ out or expulſed, but that a certaine kingdom remained amõg them, in ſome part of the lãd, namely about Cornewall, and the partes of Cambria, which is deuided in two partes, Southwales, called Demetia, and Northwales called Venedocia. The ſayd Britaines moreouer through the valiant actes of their kings, ſometimes raigned alſo in other countreis, diſplacing the Saxons, & recouering againe their owne: ſomtimes more, ſomtimes leſſe, till the time of Carecius, when as the Britaines being depoſed by Godmundus, (whoſe help they themſelues ſent for out of Irelande, agaynſt Carecius theyr wicked King) vtterly loſt their land and kingdome: being thence driuen vtterly into wales and Cornewale, the yere of our Lorde 570. What the order of theſe kings was, what were theyr actes, their names, and times when they raigned: in this briefe table vnder wrytten is expreſſed. Wherein firſt is to be premoniſhed that Conſtantinus ſecundus had three childrẽ, to wit, Conſtans, whych was made a Monke in winchester, and after made a king: the ſeconde was Aurelius Ambroſius: the thirde was Vter Pendragon. This being premiſed, we wil now enter the deſcription of our Table, beginning with Vortigernus.

hold or win from the Saxons: which cõming in daily and growing vpon thẽ, did ſo repleniſh the land wͭ multitudes of them, that ẏ Britains at lẽgth were neither able to hold ẏ which they had, nor to recouer that which they loſt: Leauing exaple to al ages & countreis, what it is, firſt to let in forreine nations into their dominion, but eſpecially what it is for Princes to ioyne in mariage with infidels: as this Vortiger did wͭ Hengiſtus daughter, which was the mother of al this miſchief: geuing to the Saxons not only ſtrẽgth, but alſo occaſion and courage to attempt that whych they did. Neyther was this vncõſidered before of the Britaine Lords and Nobilitie: who worthely being therewͭ offended, iuſtly depoſed their king, & inthroned Vortimerus hys ſonne in his roume. By the which Vortimer being a puiſſant prince, the Saxons were then repulſed and driuen againe into Germany, where they ſtayed a while till the death of Vortimer whome Rowen daughter of Hengiſtus cauſed traiterouſly to be poyſoned. Then Vortiger being again reſtored to his kingdome, through the entreatie of Rowen hys wife, ſent into Germanie againe for Engiſt, who eftſoones making his returne, came in wyth a nauie of 300. ſhippes wel appointed. The Nobles of Britain hearing this, prepared them ſelues to the contrary ſide in all forceable wiſe to put them of. But Engiſt through Rowen hys daughter ſo laboured the king: excuſing himſelfe, and ſaying that he brought not the multitude, to worke any violence eyther againſt him or againſt his cõtrey, but only thinking that Vortimer had yet bene aliue, whom he minded to impugne for the kings ſake, and to take hys part. And nowe for ſo much as he heareth of ẏ death of Vortimer hys enemie, hee therefore committeth both himſelfe & his people to his diſpoſition, to appoint how few or how many of thẽ he wold to remaine within his land: the reſt ſhould returne. And if it ſo pleaſed the King, to appoynt day & place, where they might meete and talke together of the matter, both he and his would ſtande to ſuch order as the king with his counſaile ſhould appoynt. With theſe faire words the king and his nobles (wel contented) did aſſigne to them both day & place, which was in the towne of Ambry: where he ment to talke with them, adding thys condition wͭ all, that eche part ſhoulde come without any maner of weapon. Engiſt ſhewing him ſelfe well agreed thereto, gaue priuy intelligence to his ſide, that eche man ſhould cary wͭ him ſecretely in his hoſe a long knife, wͭ their watch worde alſo geuen vnto them whẽ they ſhould draw their kniues: wherwith euery Saxon ſhoulde (and ſo did) kill the Britayne, wyth whõ he talked, as is aboue declared. The Britaine Lords being ſlayne, the Saxons toke Vortigerne the King, and bound him: for whoſe raunſome they required to be deliuered to them the Citie of London, Yorke, Lincolne, Winchester, wͭ other the moſt ſtrongeſt holdes within the land. Which being to them graunted, they begin to make ſpoile & hauocke of the Britaine nation, deſtroying the Citizens, plucking downe Churches, killing vp the Prieſtes, burning the Bookes of the holy Scripture, leauing nothyng vndone that tyrannie could worke, whych was about the yeare of our Lorde. 462. The King ſeeing thys miſerable ſlaughter of the people fled into wales.

To whome the Britaynes ſent worde, deſiring theyr ayde in helping their countrey. Aurelius vnderſtanding the wofull ſtate of the Realme, ſpeedeth hym ouer to ſatiſfie their deſire, and to reſcue (what in him was) their neceſſitie. Who at his firſt commyng eftſones being crowned for theyr king, ſeeketh out wicked Vortigerne, the cauſe of all thys trouble and murder of king Conſtãs hys brother. And finding him in wales in a ſtrong tower, wherein he had immured him ſelfe, ſetteth hym and his caſtell on fire. That done he moued his power againſt the Saxons, wͭ whom, and wyth Elle Captaine of the Southſaxons (who then was newly come ouer) he had diuers conflicts.

And ſo was Engiſt taken out of the Citie by Eldo Conſull or Maior of Glouceſter, and there was beheaded: if truth or credit be to be geuen to theſe our old Britaine ſtories: wherof I haue nothing certainly to pronoũce, but that I may ſuſpect the truth therof, which was about the yeare of our Lord. 490. A certaine auncient written hiſtory I haue in Latine, compiled in the. xiiij. yeare of king Richard the ſeconde, and by him cauſed to be writtẽ as the title declareth: whych becauſe it beareth no name of the author: I cal it by the name of him of whom I borowed thys booke, wyth many other likewiſe without name, Hiſtoria Cariana. This hyſtorie recordeth that Hengiſtus dyed in Kent the xxxii. yeare of hys raigne: which if it be true, then is it falſe that he was taken at Cunynburgh, and ſlaine in the North. Thys Aurelius Ambroſius before mentioned, is thought of Polidorus Vergilius citing the authoritye of Bede, to deſcende of the ſtocke of the Romaines: whych as it is not vnpoſſible to be true: ſo this is certaine by the full accord of al our old wrytten ſtories, that both the ſayde Aurelius, and his brother Vter Pendragon being the ſonnes of Conſtantinus, brother to Andoenus king of litle Britaine, were nurſed and brought vp in England, in their tender age, and inſtructed by Guitelinus Archbyſhop of London, and after the murder of Conſtans their elder brother, were conueied from hence to litle Britaine: whereby it is manifeſt that they were borne in thys land, and though their father were a Romaine as Polydorus pretendeth, yet lyke it is that they were Britains borne, and had a Britaine to their mother.

But they breaking out of pryſon returned into Germanie for more aid. In this meane time daily recourſe was of Saxons, with great companies cõming out of Saxonie: with whom the Britains had diuers & ſundry conflictes, ſometimes winning, ſometimes loſing. Not long after Octa & Coſa, renuing their power in Germany, in all moſt ſpeedy haſt did returne againe, and ioyne with the other Saxons againſt the Britaines. Heere began the ſtate of miſerable Britaine daily more and more to decay, while the idolatrous Saxons preuailed in number and ſtrength againſt the Chriſtian Britaines: oppreſſing the people, throwing downe Churches and Monaſteries, murdering the Prelates, ſparing neither age nor perſon, but waſting chriſtianity almoſt through the whole realme. To theſe miſeries it fell moreouer that Vter their king was ſicke & could not come out. Conſtantinus. 3. Aurelius. Conanus. Vortiporius. Malgo. Carecius. Kings of Brittayne.

About which time and yeare, came in Stuph and Wigarius two nephewes of Certhice king of weſtſaxons, wyth their companies ſo violently vpon the Britains, that they of the weſt part of the realme, were not able to reſiſt them. Then the merciful prouidence of almighty God, raiſed vp for them King Arthure, the ſonne of Vter: who was then crowned after him and victoriouſly raigned. To thys Arthure the old Britaine hiſtoryes do aſcribe xii. great victories againſt the Heathen Saxons: whoſe notorious & famous conqueſts, mẽtioned in the Britain ſtories, I leaue them as I finde them: referring them to the credite of their authors in whom they are found. Notwithſtanding as I do not thinke contrary, but God by the foreſayde Arthure, gaue to the Britaines ſome ſtay and quietnes during his life, and certaine of his ſucceſſours: ſo touching certaine of great victories & conqueſts, not onely ouer thys land, but alſo ouer all Europe, I iudge them more fabulous, then ẏ any credite ſhould be geuen vnto them, more worthy to be ioyned with the Iliades of Homere, then to haue place in any Eccleſiaſticall hyſtorie. After Arthure next King of the Britaines, was Conſtantinus the third. After him Aurelius Conanus. Then Vortiporius, after whome followed Malgo, noted in ſtoryes to be a Sodomite. And after hym the laſt King of the Britaines, was Carecius, all geuen to Ciuill warre, execrable to God & man. Who being chaſed out by the Britains thẽſelues, the land fell to the poſſeſſion of the Saxons: about the yere of our Lord. 568. by whom all the Clergy and the Chriſtiã miniſters of the Britaines, were then vtterly driuen out: In ſo much that Theonus Archbi

Touching which matter, and touching alſo the cauſe of this deſolation & ruine of the Britaines kingdom, the firſt fountaine & origin therof partly before is declared, where was ſhewed in the time of Cõſtantinus Magnus and Maximinian, pag. 108. howe theſe noble Princes with other moe, achieuing their venturous affaires in other countreis, toke in them great multitudes & armies out of Britaine: through the occaſion whereof, the land was greatly empaired and depriued of his moſt chiefe and principall nobles, being caried away to ſerue in forreine warres. Whyche was no ſmall cauſe, why the realme of Britaine (being ſo waſted) was the leſſe able to helpe it ſelfe againſt theyr enemyes. Although this was not the chief occaſion, but other cauſes there were greater, wherfore God by his iuſt iudgement, ſuffered this plague and ouerthrow to fall vpon that people, as here out of an olde author, and partly out of Gildas, as I haue found it, ſo I thought to annexe it in hys owne wordes, firſt in Latine, then afterwarde Engliſhing the ſame, for the more credite of that which ſhalbe alleaged, in tenour as foloweth.

The cauſes of the deſtruction of the Brit. declared.

Nobiliores totius regni prædictos duces ſequuti fuerunt & ignobiles remanebãt, qui cum vicem nobilium obtinere cœpiſſent, extulerunt ſe vltra quod dignitas expetebat. Et ob affluenciã diuitiarum ſuperbi cœperunt, tali & tantæ fornicationi indulgere, qualis nec inter gentes audita eſt. Et, vt Gildas hiſtoricus teſtatur, non ſolùm hoc vitium ſed omnia quæ humanæ naturæ accidere ſolent, & præcipue quod totius boni euertit ſtatũ, odium veritatis, amor mendacij, ſuſceptio mali pro bono, veneratio nequitiæ pro benignitate: exceptatio Sathanæ pro angelo lucis: vngebantur reges, non propter dominium, ſed qui cæteris crudeliores eſſent. Non igitur admirandum eſt degeneres tales patriam illam amittere quam prædicto modo maculabant.

In Engliſh thus.

In Engliſh thus: The nobles of this realme folowing the Princes and Captaines aboue named: by the reaſon therof the vulgare and raſcall ſorte remained behinde at home. Who when they had gotten the roumes and places of the nobles, they aduanced them ſelues aboue that their dignitie required. And through their aboundãce of riches, they ſurpriſed wyth pride, began to fal into ſuch & ſo great fornication, as was neuer heard of euen among the Gentiles. And as Gildas the Hyſtoriographer witneſſeth, not into vice only, but alſo into al maner of wickednes, wherto mans nature is inclined: and eſpecially into that which is the ouerthrow of al good eſtates, the hatred of the truth, loue of lies, imbracing of euil in ſtead of goodneſſe, regarding of miſchiefe in ſtead of vertue, receauing of the deuill in ſtead of an Angell of light. They annoynted kings not ſuch as could wel rule a common wealth, but thoſe which exceded all other in cruelty. And if any might be perceaued to be ſomewhat more humble or meeke, or to be more inclined to fauour the trueth then the reſidue, him did euery one hate and backbite as the ouerthrower and deſtroyer of Brittayne. All thinges whether they pleaſed or diſpleaſed God, they regarded alyke. And not ſecular men onely did this, but alſo the congregation of the Lorde and their Biſhops and teachers without any difference at all. Therefore it is not to be marueiled, that ſuch people ſo degenerating and going out of kinde ſhould loſe that countrey, which they had after this maner defiled.

And thus much hetherto concerning the hiſtory of the Britaines, till, by the grace of Chriſt, the order of time ſhal bring vs heereafter to the treatiſe of Cedwalla and Calwalladrus. Nowe remaineth, in returning againe to the matter of the Saxons, to diſcourſe particularly, that which before in the table aboue we haue ſommarely comprehended.

This Be beyng a Chriſtian was mar vnto E-thelbert vpon the condition that ſhe ſhould be ſuffered enioy he religion.

Ethelbert kyng of Kent.

Oſwald king of Northumberland.

Edwin king of Northumberland.

Sigebert of Eaſtangles.

Sebert or Sexbricth of Eſſex.

The firſt building the Church of Paules London.

Ethelbert king of the Eaſtangles.

In this order and raſe of the Saxon kings, aboue ſpecified which had thus thruſt out the Britones, & now deuided their land in ſeuen kingdomes: as there were many noughty and wicked kings (whoſe pernicious examples, being all ſet on warre and bloudſhed, are greatly to be deteſted and eſchued of all true godly Princes) ſo ſome there were againe (although but fewe) very ſincere & good. But none almoſt from the firſt to the laſt, which was not either ſlaine in warre, or murdered in peace, or els conſtrained to make him ſelfe a monke. Such was the rage then and tyranny of that time. Whether we ſhuld impute it to the corruption of mans nature, or to the iuſt iudgement of Gods hand, ſo diſpoſing the matter, that as they had violently & falſely diſpoſſeſſed the Britons of their right: ſo they moſt miſerably were not onely vexed of the Danes, and cõquered at laſt by the Normãs: but alſo more cruelly deuoured them ſelues, one warring ſtill agaynſt an other, till they were neyther able to helpe them ſelues, nor yet to reſiſt others. Of thẽ which are noted for good among theſe Saxon kings, the firſt and principal is Ethelbertus, or Ethelbrict the firſt king of Kent aboue ſpecified, who by the meanes of Auſten, and partly through hys wife, named Berda, firſte receiued and preferred the Chriſtian faith, in al this land of the Engliſh Saxons, wherof more foloweth hereafter to be ſaid (the Lorde ſo permitting) as place and oportunitie ſhall require. The next place I geue to Oſwaldus of Northumberland, who not onely did hys endeuour in furthering the faith of Chriſt amongſt his people: but alſo being king, diſdained not himſelfe to ſtande vp and interprete to his nobles & ſubiectes the preaching of Aidanus, preaching Chriſt to them in his Scottiſh language. In the ſame cõmendation alſo, like as in the ſame line, commeth hys vncle Edwin, king of Northumberlãd, a good Prince, and the firſt receauer of Chriſtes faith in that land, by the meanes of his wife, and Paulinus Byſhop. Adde to theſe alſo Sigebert, firſt Chriſtened king of the Eaſtangles, & Sebert, firſt Chriſtened king of Eſſex: of whome the one was a great furtherer of Religion, & ſetter vp of ſcholes: ẏ other which is Sebert or Sexbricth, was newew to Ethelbert of Kent, vnder whom he ruled in Eſſex. By the which Ethelbert, in the time of the ſayd Sebert the Church of Paules was builded at London, and Chriſtian faith much enlarged. &c. Of the ſame name there was alſo an other Ethelbert King of the Eaſtangles, a good Prince: who by the aduiſe of his counſaile perſwaded to mariage (though againſt his wil) went peaceably to King Offa for deſpouſage of Athilride hys daughter, wher the good king meaning innocẽtly through the ſiniſter and deuiliſhe counſaile of king Offa hys wife, was ſecretely beheaded and made away. Whereupon Offa through repentance thereof, made the firſt Peter pence to be geuen to S. Peters church in Rome.

Peter pence ho they firſt came vp be payd Rome.

Kenel king of the Mercians.

S. Edmu king of Eaſtangl.

In the Cathologue of theſe good kinges is alſo to be numbered Kenelmus king of the Mercians, and Edmundus king of the Eaſtangles: of the which ij. the firſt was falſely & abhominably circumuented & beheaded, by the meanes of his cruell ſiſter and hys tutor, as he was in his hunting at Corfcaſtle. The other whych is called king Edmund the Martyr, was ſlaine at Bury, or as ſome wryte at the Caſtle of Haleſdon by the Danes: vpon what occaſion, hiſtories do vary. The author of Flores Hiſtoriarũ ſayeth, it was by reaſon of one Lothebrocus a Dane: who being of the kings bloud, & being with his Hawke on the ſea ſide in a litle boat, was driuen by force of weather into the coaſt of Northfolke, wher he being preſented to king Edmũd, was retained in his Court with great fauour: til at length one Bericke the kings Fawkner, enuying and deſpiting hym, for his great dexteritie in that facultie, priuily did murder him in a wood. This being at laſt ſpied (as murder lightly will come out) Bericke was ſet in Lothbrockes boate alone without all tackling, to be cõmitted vnto the Sea: and as it chãced ſo, was driuen into Denmarke, who there being ſeene in Lothbrockes boate, was ſtraitly examined of the partie. He then to excuſe himſelfe, falſly ſayd he was ſlaine by the cõmandement of the king. Vpõ the occaſion wherof Inguar and Hubba ſonnes to the ſayde Lothebroke gathering an army of Danes, inuaded firſt Northũberland: after that burſting into Northfolke on euery ſide, ſent thys meſſage to king Edmund after this tenor: Signifying that king Inguar the victorious Prince (dreade both by ſea and lande) as he had ſubiect diuers other landes vnder him, ſo arriuing now to the coaſts of Northfolke, where he intẽdeth to winter: chargeth and commaundeth him to deuide with him his olde treaſures, and his fathers riches, and ſo to rule vnder him: which if he would not do, but wold cõtemne his power ſo ſtrõgly furniſhed wyth ſuch an army, he ſhould be iudged as vnworthy both of kingdom & life. &c. The king hearing this meſſage, not a little aſtonyſhed therat, calling his cõſaile about hym, conſulted wͭ them, eſpecially with one of his Biſhops, being then his Secretarie, what was beſt to be done: who fearing the kinges life, exhorteth him by wordes & diuers examples to agree to the meſſage. At this a while the king holding his peace, at length thereto made aunſwere againe in theſe wordes, ſaying: Go (ſaith he) tel your Lord, and let him know that Edmundus the Chriſtened King, for the loue of this temporal life, wil not ſubiect him ſelfe to a Pagane Duke, vnles before he become a Chriſtiã, &c. The meſſenger taking his anſwere was not ſo ſoone out of the gates, as Inguar meeting him and bidding him to be ſhort in declaring hys anſwere, cauſed all the kings garriſon to be ſet round about.

The martirdome of K. Edmund in Northfolke.

Some ſay that the king flying to Thetforde, there pitcht a field with the Danes, but the Danes preuailing, the good king from thence did flie to the Caſtle of Halesdon aboue mentioned: where he beyng purſued of the Danes was there taken, and at length being bounde to a ſtake, there, of the raging Danes was ſhot to death. And thus much for the good kings.

A Queſtiō, Whether kings which made themſelues Monkes did well in ſo doing or not.

Now as concerning thoſe kinges which made them ſelues Monks (which in number be vij. or viij.) although the example be rare & ſtraung, and much commēded of the chroniclers of that time: yet I cannot raſhly aſſent to their cōmendation, albeit the caſe therof is no matter of our hiſtory. Firſt in altering their eſtate from kings to monkes, if they did it to finde more eaſe, and leſſe trouble thereby: I ſee not howe that excuſe ſtandeth with the office of a good man, to chaunge his publike vocation, for reſpect of priuat commodity. If feare of ieoperdy & daunger did driue them therunto: what praiſe and commendation they deſerue, in ſo doing let the monkiſh hiſtories iudge what they lyſte: me ſeemeth ſo much prayſe as they deſerue in prouiding their owne ſafetie, ſo much they deſerue againe to be diſcōmended in forſaking the common welth. If they did it (as moſt like it is) for holineſſe ſake, thinking in that kinde of life to ſerue and pleaſe God better: or to merite more toward their ſaluaciō then in the eſtate of a king, therin they were far deceaued: not knowing that the ſaluation which cōmeth of God, is to be meaſured & eſteemed, not by mans merits, or by any perfectiō of life or by differēce of any vocation more of one then another, but only by the free grace of the goſpell, which freely iuſtifieth all them, that faythfully beleeue in Chriſt Ieſu. But here will be ſaide againe peraduenture, in the ſolitary life of Monkery, be fewer occaſions of euils, then in kings courtes, wherefore that lyfe ſerueth more to holines, & more is to be preferred then the other. To this I aunſwere, to auoid the occaſions of euill is good where ſtrength lacketh to reſiſt. But otherwyſe, where ducty & charge bindeth to tary, there to auoyde the occaſiōs of euil, where rather they are to be reſiſted: rather declareth a weakenes of the man, thē deſerueth any praiſe. As it is truely ſaide of Tullie: Out of Aſia, ſaith he, to liue, a good life, is no godamercy: but in Aſia where ſo great occaſiōs of euils abound, there to liue a good mā that is praiſe worthy. With the like reaſon I may infer, if a man be called to be a king, there not to chaunge the vocation for voiding of occaſions, but rather to reſiſt occaſions, & to keepe his vocation, declareth a good & perfect man. But of theſe bymatters hetherto ſufficient.

Aunſwere. Where vocation byndeth to tary there not to flye but to reſiſt the occaſions of euill, it is a good mans part.

These things now thus premiſed, concerning the order & raigne of kinges, as is aboue prefixed: conſequently it remaineth to enter the tractation of ſuch thinges, as in the time and raigne of the foreſaide kings happened in the Church: firſt putting the Reader againe in minde of the former perſecutions within the realme, partly before touched in the time of the Britaine kinges, which ſpeciallye were three or foure before the comming of Auſten into Englande.

Foure perſecutions in Brittany before the comming of Auſten into England.

The perſecution of Diocleſian about the yeare of our Lord. 210.

1. The firſt was vnder Diocleſian, and that not onely in England but generally throughout al the Romaine Monarchie, as is aboue ſpecified. In this perſecution Albanus Iulius, Aaron, with a great number moe of other good Chriſtian Britanes, were martyred for Chriſtes name.

The perſecution of Gnauius and Melga,

2. The ſeconde perſecution or deſtruction of Chriſtian faith, was by the inuading of Gnauius and Melga, whereof, the firſt was captaine of the Hunnes, the other of ẏ Pictes. Theſe two tyraunts, after the cruell ſlaughter of Vrſula, and other. 11000. noble virgines, made their rode into Brytaine hearyng the ſame to be deſtitute of ẏ ſtrength of men. At what time they made miſerable murder of Chriſtes Saints, ſpoiling & waſting Churches, without mercy either of women or children, ſparing none.

The perſecution of Hengiſt in Brittayne.

3. The third perſecution came by Hengiſt, and the Saxones: who likewiſe deſtroied and waſted the chriſten congregations within the lande, like raging wolues fleeyng vpon the ſheepe, & ſpilling the bloud of Chriſtians, til Aurelius Ambroſius came, and reſtored againe the Churches deſtroyed.

The fourth deſtruction of Chriſten fayth in Brittayne by Gurmūdus. an 595. This Gurmundus, as ſome ſtories record, leauing hys kingdome at home to hys brother ſayd he would poſſeſſe no kingdome, but which he ſhould win with his ſword

4. The fourth deſtruction of Chriſten faith & Religion was by Gurmundus a Pagan king of the Africanes: who ioyning in league with the Saxons, wrought much greuaunce to the chriſtians of the land. In ſo much that Theonus Byſhop of London, and Thadioceus Biſhop of Yorke, with the reſt of the people ſo many as were left, hauing no place wherin to remaine with ſafety, did flee ſome to Cornwall, and ſome to the mountaines of wales about the yere of our Lord 550. and this perſecution remained to the time of Ethelberd king of Kent, an. 589.

In the raigne of this Ethelbert, which was then the 5. king of Kent, the faith of Chriſt was firſt receaued of the Saxons or Engliſhmen, by the meanes of Gregory biſhop of Rome, in maner and order as here foloweth, out of old hiſtories collected and recorded.

King Lucius dyed 428. before the comming of Auſten.

The computatiō of times concerning the continuaunce and decay of Chriſtes Goſpell betweene the Brittaynes and the Saxons.

Firſt then to ioyne the order of our hiſtory together: The Chriſtē faith firſt receiued of king Lucius, endured in Britaine till this time, neare vpon the ſeaſon of CCCC. yeares and odde: when by Gurmundus Africanus, (as is ſaide) fyghting wyth the Saxons againſt the Brytaynes, it was neare extinct in all the land, duryng the ſpace about fortie foure yeares. So that the firſt ſpringing of Chriſtes Goſpell in thys lande, was an. 180. The comming of the Saxons was. an. 449. or an. 469. The comming of Auſten, was an. 596. From the firſt entring in of the Saxons to their complet conqueſt, and the driuing out of the Brytanes (which was aboute the latter time of Gadwalader) were 240. yeares. In ſumme from Chriſt to Lucius were, 180. yeares. The continuaunce of the goſpel frō Lucius to the entring of the Saxons was 302. yeares. The decay of the ſame to the entring of Auſten, was. 143. yeares which being added together make from Lucius to Auſten. 445. from Chriſt to Auſten they make 598. yeares. In this yeare then. 598. Auſten being ſent from Gregory came into England: the occaſion wherupon Gregory ſent him hether was this.

Beda Polychronicon. li. 5. ca. 8. 6. Maleſburienſis de regib. Henr. Huntington lib 3. Fabianus, part. 5. cap. 119. Liber bibliotheca tornalenſis.

In the daies of Pelagius Byſhop of Rome, Gregory chauncyng to ſee certayne chyldren in the market place of Rome (brought thether to be ſould out of England) being faire and beautifull of viſage, demaunded out of what coūtrey they were: and vnderſtanding they were Heatheniſh out of England, lamented the caſe of ẏ land being ſo beautifull and Angelicall, ſo to be ſubiecte vnder the Prince of darknes. And aſking moreouer out of what prouince they were it was aunſwered, out of Deyra, a part of Northſaxons: wherof as it is to be thought, that which we now cal Deyrham taketh his name. Then he alluding to the name of Deyra, theſe people (ſaith he) are to be deliuered de Deira, which is from Gods wrath. Moreouer vnderſtanding the kings name of that prouince to be Alle (aboue mentioned) alluding likewiſe to his name: there (ſaith he) ought Alleluia to be ſong to the liuing God. Whereupon beyng moued and deſirous to go and helpe the cōuerſion of that country, was not permitted of Pelagius and the Romanes for that time to accompliſh his deſire. But afterwarde being Biſhop himſelfe next after Pelagius, he ſent thether the foreſaide Auſten with other preachers neere about to the nūber of xl. But by the waye, howe it happened I cannot ſaye: As Auſten with his company were paſſing in theyr iourney, ſuch a ſodaine feare entred in their harts (that as Antonius ſaith) they returned all. Other write that Auſten was ſent backe to Gregory againe, to releaſe them of that viage ſo daungerous and vncertaine, amongſt ſuch a barberous people: whoſe language neither they knewe, nor whoſe rudenes they were able to reſiſt. Thē Gregory with pithy perſwaſions confirming and comforting him, ſent him againe with letters both to the Biſhop of Arelalenſis, willing him to helpe and aide the ſaid Auſten, and his company in all whatſoeuer his neede required. Alſo other letters he directed by the foreſaid Auſtine, vnto his fellowes, exhorting them to go forward boldly in the Lords work, as by the tenour of the ſaid Epiſtle here followyng maye appeare.

Deyrham in Northumberland.

Epiſcopus Arelalenſis.

Ex Henr. Huntingtonenſi. li. 3.

The Epiſtle of Gregory to them whiche went to preach in England.

Gregorius ſeruus ſeruorum Dei, ſeruis Domini noſtri. Quia melius fuerat bona non incipere, quam ab ijs quæ cœpta ſunt cogitatione retrorſum redire, &c. In Engliſhe. Gregory the ſeruaunt of Gods ſeruaunts, to the ſeruaunts of the Lord. Foraſmuch as it is better not to take good things in hande, then after they be begon, to thinke to reuolt backe from the ſame againe therefore now you may not nor cannot (deare children) but with all feruent ſtudy and labor, muſt needes go forward in that good buſines, which through the helpe of God you haue wel begunne. Neither let the labor of your iourney, nor the ſlanderous tongues of men appalle you, but that with all inſtaunce and feruency yee proceede, and accompliſh the thing which the Lorde hath ordeyned you to take in hande: knowing that your great trauell ſhalbe recompenſed with rewarde of greater glorye hereafter to come. Therefore as we ſende here Auſten to you againe, whom alſo we haue ordeined to be your gouernour, ſo doe you humblye obey him in all thinges, knowing that it ſhall be profitable ſo for your ſoules, whatſoeuer at his admonition yee ſhall doe. Almighty God with his grace defend you and graunt me to ſee in the eternall country the fruite of your labour, that although I can not labour as I woulde wyth you, yet I may be found pertaker of your retribution, for that my will is good to labour in the ſame felowſhip with you together. The Lord God keepe you ſafe, moſt deare and welbeloued children. Dated the x before the Calendes of Auguſt, in the raigne of our ſoueraigne Lord Mauritius moſt vertuous Emperour, the. xiiij. of his Empire.

Auſten and hys company commeth to England.

Thus they emboldened & comforted through the good wordes of Gregory, ſped forth their iourney till they came at length to the Iſle of Thenet: lying vpon the Eaſt ſide of Kent. Neare to the which landing place, was then the Manor or palace of the king, not farre from Sandwiche (Eaſtward from Caunterbury) which the inhabitauntes of the Iſle, then called Richbourgh: whereof ſome part of the ruinous walles is yet to be ſene. The king then raigning in Kent, was Ethelbert, as aboue appeareth, the fifte King of that prouince: who at that time had Maried to wyfe a French woman beyng Chryſtened, named Berda: whom he had receiued of her parents vpon this conditiō, that he ſhoulde permitte her with her Biſhop committed vnto her, called Lebardus, to enioye the freedome of her fayth and Religion: by the meanes whereof he was more flexible, and ſooner induced to embrace the preachyng and doctrine of Chriſt. Thus Auſten beyng arryued ſent forth certayne meſſengers and interpreters to the Kyng, ſygnifying that ſuch a one was come from Rome, bryngyng with hym glad tydinges to him and all his people, of lyfe and ſaluation eternally to reygne in heauen, with the onely true and lyuing God, for euer: if he would ſo willingly harken to the ſame, as he was gladly come to preache and teach it vnto him.

Ethelbert King of Kent.

What goodnes commeth, to haue a good and godly wife.

The King, who had heard of this Religion before by meanes of his wife, within a few daies after commeth to the place where Auſten was to ſpeake with him: but that ſhoulde be without the houſe, after the maner of his lawe. Auſten againſt his coming, as ſtories affirme, erected vp a banner of the crucifixe (ſuch was then the groſenes of that tyme) and preached to him the word of God. The Kyng aunſwering againe ſaith in effect as followeth: the words be very faire that you preach and promiſe. Neuertheleſſe, becauſe it is to me vncoth and new, I can not ſoone ſtarte away from my country law wherwith I haue bene ſo lōg inured and aſſent to you. Albeit yet notwithſtanding for y^t^ ye are come, as ye ſaye, ſo farre for my ſake: ye ſhall not be moleſted by me, but ſhall be rightwell intreated, hauing al thinges to you miniſtred neceſſarye for your ſupportatiō. Beſydes this, neither doe we debarre you, but to haue free leaue to preach to our people and ſubiects to conuert, whō ye may to the faith of your Religion.

The kinges anſwere to Auſten.

The king ſtaieth vpon olde cuſtome.

When they had receaued this comfort of the king, they went with proceſſion to the Citie of Dorobernia, or Caunterbury, ſingyng Alleluya with the Letanie, which then by Gregory, had beene vſed at Rome in the time of the great plague reigning thē at Rome, mentioned in old hiſtories. The wordes of the Letany were theſe: Deprecamur te Domine in omni miſericordia tua, vt auferatur furor tuus & ira tua a ciuitate iſta, & de domo ſancta tua: quoniam peccauimus. Alleluya. That is, we beſeech thee O Lorde in all thy mercyes, that thy fury and anger maye ceaſe from this Citie, & from thy holy houſe for we haue ſinned. Alleluya. Thus they entryng in the Citie of Dorobernia, the head Citie of all that dominion at that time, where the king had gyuen them a manſion for there abode: there they contynued preaching and baptiſing ſuch as they had conuerted in the eaſt ſide of the Citty in the old church of S. Martine (where the Queene was wont to reſorte) vnto the time that the kyng was conuerted himſelfe to Chriſt. At length when the king had wel cōſidered the honeſt conuerſation of their life, and moued with the myracles wrought through gods hand by thē, he heard them more gladly, and laſtly by their wholſome exhortations, and example of godly life he was by them conuerted and chriſtened in the yeare aboue ſpecified. 586. and the 36. yeare of his reigne. After the King was thus conuerted, innumerable other daily came in, & were adioyned to the Church of Chriſt: whom the King did ſpecially embrace but cōpelled none: for ſo he had learned that the faith and ſeruice of Chriſt ought to be voluntary, and not coacted. Then he gaue to Auſten a place for hys Byſhops ſea at Chriſtes Church in Dorobernia, & builded the Abbey of Saint Peter and Paule, in the Eaſt ſide of the ſayde Citie, where after Auſten, and all the Kinges of Kent were buried, and that place is now called S. Auſten.

Miracles wrought by God for the conuerſion of the land.

Auſten made Archbiſhop.

In this while Auſten ſailed into Fraunce to the Byſhop Arelatenſis, called Ethereus: by him to bee conſecrated Archbiſhop, by the commaundement of Gregory, & ſo was. Alſo the ſaid Auſten ſent to Rome, Laurentius one of his cōpany, to declare to Gregory how they had ſped, and what they had done in Englande: ſending withall to haue the counſaile and aduiſe of Gregory, concerning ix. or x. queſtions, whereof ſome are partly touched before.

The tenour of his queſtions or interrogations, with the aunſweres of Gregory to the ſame: here follow in Engliſh briefly tranſlated.

The queſtions of Auſten Archbyſhop of Caunterbury ſent to Gregory, with the aunſwere agayne of Gregory to the ſame.

The firſt interrogation.

Ex decretis Grego-ry primi, concil. tom. 2.

1. Interrogation.

My firſt queſtion (reuerende father) is concerning Byſhops, how they ought to behaue themſelues towarde their clarks Or of ſuch oblations as the faithfull offer vpon the altar: what portions or diuidentes ought to be made thereof.

The aunſwere.

The aunſwere.

How a Biſhop ought to behaue himſelfe in the Congregation, the holy ſcripture teſtifieth which I doubt not but you know right well, eſpeciallye in the Epiſtles of S. Paule to Timothie: wherein he laboureth to informe the ſayd Timothe, how to behaue his conuerſation in y^e^ houſe of the Lord. The maner is of the ſea Apoſtolike, to warne and charge all ſuch as be ordeined Biſhops, of all their ſtipend or that which is giuen, to make foure pertitiōs. One to the Biſhop for hoſpitalitie, and receauing commers in. An other to the Clergy. The third to the pore. The fourth to the repairing of Churches. But becauſe your brotherhode inſtructed with rules of Monaſticall diſcipline, cānot liue ſeparated from your clerkes about you, therfore in the Engliſh Church (which nowe through the prouidence of God is brought to the faith of Chriſt) you muſte obſerue this inſtituion, concerning your conuerſation, which was in the firſt Fathers in the begynning of the prymitiue Church, among whom there was not one which counted any thing to be his owne proper, of all that he did poſſeſſe: but all was common among them.

Diſtribution of Churche goodes.

The ſeconde interrogation.

2. Interrogation.

I deſire to know and to be inſtructed, whether Clerkes that cannot containe, may marry. And if they do mary whether then they ought to returne to the ſecular ſtate againe or no?

The aunſwere.

The aunſwere.

If there be any Clerkes out of holy orders, which can not conteine, let them haue their wiues, and take their ſtipends or wages without. For we read it ſo written of the foreſayd fathers, that they deuided to euery perſon, according as their worke was. Therfore as concerning the ſtipend of ſuch, it muſt be prouided and thought vpon. And they muſt be alſo holden vnder Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, to liue a godly cōuerſation: to employ themſelues in ſinging Pſalmes, & to refraine their tongue, hart and body (by the grace of God) from all things vnſeemely, and vnlawfull. As for the vulgar and common ſort, which lyue after the common condition of men: to deſcribe what partitions to make, what hoſpitalitie to keepe, or what workes of mercy to exhibite to ſuch, I haue nothing to ſaye but to giue (as our maiſter teacheth) in all our deedes of mercy, of that which aboundeth. Of that (ſaith he) whiche aboundeth or is ouerplus, gyue almes, and beholde all thinges bee cleane vnto you.

The gloſe vppon the 12.q.1. Po rag. Si qu, ſayth tha this nowe holdeth not, and al ledgeth extrau. [illegible] comming ca. lib. Whereby note how the Popes decrees be repugnant to themſelues. Luke. 11.

The thyrd interrogation.

3. Interrog.

Seing there is but one faith, how happeneth it then, the ceremonies and cuſtomes of Churches to bee ſo diuers. As in the Church of Rome there is one cuſtome, and maner of Maſſe & and the French Church hath an other?

The aunſwere.

The aunſwere.

The cuſtome of the Church of Rome, what it is you know: wherin ye remēber that you haue bene brought vp frō your youth: but rather it pleaſeth me better, that whether it be in the church of Rome, or in any Frēch Church where ye finde any thing that ſeemeth better to the ſeruice and pleaſing of God: that ye chuſe the ſame: and ſo inſerte & bring into the Engliſh Church (which is yet new in the faith) the beſt & pikedſt thinges choſen out of many Churches: for things are not to be beloued for y^e^ place ſake, but the place is to be beloued for the things that be good: wherfore ſuch thinges as be good, godly, and religious: thoſe choſe out of all Churches, and induce to your people, that they may take roote in the mindes of Engliſhmen.

Note and thy ſaying of Gregory.

The fourth interrogation.

4. Interrogation.

I praye you what puniſhment iudge you for him, that ſhall ſteale or pylfer any thing out of the Church.

The aunſwere.

The aunſwere.

This your brotherhod may ſoone diſcerne, by the perſon of a theefe, how it ought to be corrected. For ſome there be which hauing ſufficient to liue vpon yet doe ſteale. Other there be which ſteale of meere neceſſity: wherfore conſidering the qualitye & difference of the crime, neceſſarye it is that ſome be corrected by loſſe of goodes, ſome by ſtripes ſome other more ſharply, and ſome more eaſly: yea, & whē ſharper correction is to be executed, yet that muſt be done with charity, and with no fury: for in puniſhing offenders this is the cauſe and ende wherefore they are puniſhed, bicauſe they ſhould be ſaued & not periſh in hell fire. And ſo ought diſcipline to procede in correcting the faithfull, as doe good Fathers in puniſhing their children, whom both they chaſten for their euill, and yet being chaſtened, they looke to haue them their heires, and thinke to leaue them all they haue, notwithſtanding they correct them ſometimes in anger. Therefore this charitie muſt be kepte in mind. And in the correction there is a meaſure to be had, ſo that the mind neuer do any thing without the rule of reaſon. Ye adde moreouer with what recompence of meaſure thoſe things ought to be required againe which be ſtollen out of Churches. But God forbid that the Church ſhould euer require againe with increaſe, that which is loſt in outwarde thinges, and to ſeeke her gaine by endamaging other.

The fift interrogation.

5. Interrogation.

Item, whether two brethen may mary two ſiſters, beyng far of from any part of kindred?

The aunſwere.

This in no part of ſcripture is forbidden, but it may well and lawfully be done.

The ſixt interrogation.

6. Interrogation.

Item, to what degree of kyndred may the matrimony of the faythfull extende with their kindred, or whether [illegible] it lawfull to marry with the ſtepmother and her kinſfolkes?

The aunſwere.

The aunſwere. In what degree of kindred a man may marry.

A certaine terrene law amongſt the old Romaines doth permit, that either brother or ſiſter, or the ſonne & daughter of two brethren may marry together. But by experyence we learne, that the iſſue of ſuch mariage doth neuer thryue, nor come forewarde. Alſo yͤ holye law of God forbiddeth to reueale the turpitude of thy bloude or kindred.

Wherefore neceſſary it is, that in the third or fourth degree the faithfull may lawfully marry, for in the ſeconde as being vnlawfull, they muſt needes refraine. To be coupled with the ſtepmother is vtterly abhominable, for it is written in the law. Thou ſhalt not reueale the turpitude of thy Father. Forſomuch then as it is ſo written in yͤ law and they ſhall be two in one fleſh: the ſonne then that preſumeth to reueale then the turpitude of his ſtepmother, which is one fleſh with his Father, what doth he then but reueale the turpitude of his owne father. Likewiſe it was forbidden and vnlawfull to mary with thy kinſwoman, which by her firſt Mariage was made one fleſh with thy brother. For the which cauſe Iohn yͤ Baptiſt alſo loſt hys head, and was crowned a Martyr. Who though he dyed not for the confeſſion of Chriſt: yet for ſo much as Chriſt ſaith: I am the truth, therfore in that Iohn Baptiſt was ſlayne for the truth, it may be ſayd his bloud was ſhedde for Chriſt.

By this rule the mariage of Kyng Henry with Queene Katherine Dowager, was vnlawfull.

The ſeuenth interrogation.

7. Interrogation.

Item, whether ſuch as be ſo coupled togither in filthy and vnlawfull matrymony ought to be ſeparated and denied the partaking of the holy Communion.

The aunſwere.

The aunſwere.

Becauſe there be many of the nation of Engliſh men which being yet in their infidelitie, were ſo ioyned & coupled in ſuch execrable mariage: the ſame comming now to faith, are to be admoniſhed hereafter to abſtaine from the like, & that they know the ſame to be greuous ſinne. That they dread the dreadfull iudgement of God, leaſt for their carnall delectation, they incurre the tormentes of eternall puniſhment. And yet notwᵗſtanding they are not to be ſecluded therefore from the participation of Chriſtes body & bloud, leſt we ſhould ſeme to reuenge thoſe things in them which they before their baptiſme, through ignoraunce did commit. For in this time the holy Church doth correct ſome faultes more feruently, ſome faultes ſhe ſuffereth againe through manſuetude and mekenes, ſome wittingly and willingly ſhe doth wink at, and diſſemble: that many times the euil which ſhe doth deteſt, through bearing and diſſembling ſhe may ſtop & bridle. All they therfore which are come to the faith, muſt be admoniſhed that they cōmit no ſuch offence. Which thing if they doe, they are to be depriued of the Communion of the Lords body & bloud. For like as in them that fall through ignoraunce, their default in this caſe is to be tollerate: ſo in them againe it is ſtrōgly to be enſued, which knowing they do nought, yet feare not to commit.

A diſcrete ſaying of Gregory to be noted.

The eight interrogation.

8. Interrog.

Item, in this I deſire to be ſatiſfied, after what maner I ſhould deale or do with the Biſhops of Fraunce, and of Britaines.

The aunſwere.

The aunſwere.

As touching the Biſhops in Fraunce, I geue you no authoritie or power ouer them. For the Biſhop of Arolas, or Orliance hath by the olde tyme of our predeceſſours receiued the Palle, whome now we ought not to depriue of hys authoritie. Therefore when your brotherhoode ſhall goe vnto the Prouince of Fraunce, what ſoeuer yee ſhal haue there to doe with the Byſhop of Orliance, ſo do, that he looſe nothing of that which he hath found and obtayned of the auncient ordinaunce of our forelders. But as concerning the Biſhops of Brittayn, we commit them all to your brotherhoode, that yͤ ignoraunt may be taught the infirme by perſwaſion may be confirmed, the wilful by authoritie may be corrected.

25. q. 2. cap. in Gallearum.

The ninth interrogation.

9. Interrog.

Whether a woeman being great with childe, ought to be baptiſed, or after ſhe hath children, after how long time ſhe ought to enter into the Church. Or els that which ſhe hath brought forth, leaſt it ſhould be preuented with death, after howe many dayes it ought to receaue Baptiſme. Or after howe long tyme after her childebyrth is it lawfull for her huſband to reſorte to her? Or els if ſhe be in her monthly courſe, after the deſeaſe of women, whether then ſhe may enter into the Churche, and receaue the Sacrament of the holy Communion? Or els her huſband after the lying with hys wife, before he be waſhed with water, whether is it lawfull for him to enter the Church, and to draw vnto the miſtery of the holy Communion? All which thinges muſt be declared and opened to the rude multitude of Engliſhmen.

The Aunſwere.

The aunſwere.

The childing or bearing woman, why may ſhe not be Baptiſed: ſeeing that the fruitfulnes of the fleſh is no fault before the eyes of almighty God. For our firſt parentes in Paradiſe, after they had tranſgreſſed: loſt their immortallitie by the iuſt iudgement of God which they had take before. Then, becauſe almighty God woulde not mankinde vtterly to periſh becauſe of hys fall (although he loſt nowe hys immortallitie for hys treſpaſſe) yet of hys benigne pietie, left notwithſtanding to hym the fruit and generation of iſſue. Wherefore the iſſue and generation of mans nature, which is conſerued by the gift of almighty God, how can it be debarred from the grace of holy Baptiſme?

As concerning the churching of women after they haue trauailed: where ye demaund after howe many dayes they ought to goe to the Church, this you haue learned in yͤ old law, that for a man child. 30. dayes, after a womā child. 66. dayes be appoynted her to keepe in. Albeit this you muſt take to be vnderſtād in a miſtery. For if ſhe ſhould yͤ houre after her trauayle enter into the Churche to geue thankes, ſhe committed therein no ſinne. For why the luſt and pleaſure of the fleſh, and not the trauaile and payne of the fleſh is ſinne. In the coniunction of the fleſhe is pleaſure, but in the trauaile and bringing forth of the child is payne & gronyng. As vnto the mother of all it is ſayd: In ſorrow thou ſhalt trauaile. Therefore if we forbid the woman after her labour to enter the church, thē what doe we els but count yͤ ſame the puniſhment geuen vnto her, for ſinne? Therefore for the woeman after her labour to be baptiſed, eyther that whiche ſhee hath trauailed foorth (if preſent neceſſitie of death doth ſo require) yea in the ſelfe ſame houre, eyther ſhee that hath brought foorth, eyther that which is borne in the ſamehoure when it is borne, to be baptiſed we doe not forbid.

The Churching of woemen.

He ſpeaketh here after the cuſtome of the tyme.

Moreouer, for the man to company with his wife, that he muſt not: before the child that is borne be wayned. But now there is a lewd and naughty cuſtome riſen in the conditiō of maryed folks, that mothers do contemne to nourſe their owne children, which they haue borne, but ſet them to other woemen out to nourſe: whiche ſeemeth onely to come of the cauſe of incontinency. For while they will not contayne themſelues, therefore they put from them their children to nourſe. &c.

Mothers that nurſe not their owne Children reprehended.

As concerning the woman in her menſtruous courſe whether ſhe ought to enter the Churche? To this I aunſwere: ſhe ought not to be forbid. For the ſuperfluitie of nature in her ought not to be imputed for any fault, neyther is it iuſt that ſhe ſhold be depriued of her acceſſe to the Church, for that which ſhe ſuffereth agaynſt her wil. And if the woeman did well, preſuming in touching the Lords coate in the tyme of her bloudy iſſue: why then may not that be graunted vnto all woemen infirmed by the fault of nature, which is commended in one perſon done in her infirmitie? Therefore to receaue the miſterie of the holy communion, it is not forbidden them. Albeit if ſhe dare not ſo farre preſume in her great infirmitie, ſhe is to be prayſed: but if ſhe do receaue, ſhe is not to be iudged. For it is a point of a good minde in ſome maner to knowledge hys ſinnes there, where is no ſinne: becauſe manye times that is done without fault, which commeth of fault. As when we be hungry, we eate without fault, notwithſtanding it commeth by the fault of our firſt father to vs that wee are hungrye, &c.

Where ye aſke, if a man after the company with hys wyfe, may reſort to the Church or to the holy Communion, before he be purged with water. The law giuen to the old people, commaunded that a man after the companye wyth his wife, both ſhoulde be purified with water, and alſo ſhould tary the Sunnes ſet before he came to the congregation. Which ſeemeth to be vnderſtand ſpiritually: for then moſt true it is, that the man companieth with the woman, when his minde through delectation is ioyned to vnlawfull concupiſcence in his hart and cogitation. At what time, before the ſaid fire of concupiſcence ſhall be remoued, let the perſon thinke himſelfe vnworthye the entraunce to the congregation, through the viciouſnes of his filthy will. But of this matter ſondry nations haue euery one their ſondry cuſtomes: ſome on way & ſome an other. The auncient maner of the Romanes frō our forefathers, hath beene, that in ſuch caſe, firſt they purged themſelues with water, then for a little they abſtaine reuerently, and ſo reſort to the Church. &c.

After many other wordes debated of this matter, thus he inferreth: but if any perſon not for voluptuouſnes of the fleſh, but for procreation of children, do company with his wife, that man concerning either the comming to the Church, or the receauing the miſteries of the Lords body & bloud, is to be left to his owne iudgement: for he ought not to be forbid of vs to come, which when he lieth in the fire will not burne. &c.

There is an other queſtion alſo to theſe adioyned, with his aunſwere likewiſe to the ſame, concerning pollutions in the night, but I thought theſe at this preſent to our engliſh eares, ſufficient.

To returne now to the ſtory againe, Gregory after he had ſent theſe reſolutions to the queſtions of Auſten, ſendeth moreouer, to the Church of Englande moe coadiutors, and helpers, as Mellitus, Iuſtus, Paulinus, and Ruffianus, with bookes and ſuch other implemēts as he thought neceſſary, for the Engliſh Church. He ſendeth moreouer to the foreſaide Auſten a palle with letters wherein he ſetteth an order betweene the two Metropolitane ſeates, the one to be at London the other to be at Yorke. Notwithſtanding he graunteth to the ſayde Auſten during his lyfe to be the onely chyefe Archbyſhop of al the lande: and after hys tyme, then to returne to the two foreſaide ſeats of London and Yorke, as is in ẏ ſame letter conteined, the tenour whereof here followeth in hys owne wordes as enſueth.

❧ The copie of the Epiſtle of Gregory, ſent to Auguſtinus into Englande.

Reuerendiſſimo & ſanctiſ. fratri Auguſtino coepiſcopo, Gregorius ſeruus ſeruorum Dei. Cum certum ſit, pro omnipotente Deo laborātibus ineffabilia æterni Regis præmia reſeruari, nobis tamen eis neceſſe eſt bonorum beneficia tribuere, vt in ſpiritualis operis ſtudio ex remuneratione valeant multiplicius inſudare: and ſo forth as followeth here in Engliſh.

TO the reuerende and vertuous brother Auguſtine, his felow Byſhop, Gregorius the ſeruaunt of the ſeruaunts of God. Although it be moſt certaine that vnſpeakeable rewardes, of the heauenly king, be laide vp for all ſuch, as labour in the wordes of almighty God, yet it ſhall be requiſite for vs, to reward the ſame alſo with our benefites, to the ende, they may be more encouraged, to go forward in the ſtudy of their ſpirituall worke. And for aſmuch now, as the new church of Engliſhmen is brought to the grace of almightie God, through his mightie helpe, and your trauayle, therefore we haue graunted to you the vſe of the palle, only to be vſed at the ſolemnitie of your Maſſe: ſo that it ſhall bee lawfull for you to ordaine twelue Biſhops, ſuch as ſhal be ſubiect to your prouince or dition. So that hereafter alwaies the Byſhop of the Citie of London, ſhall be ordeyned and conſecrate by his owne proper Synode: and ſo to receaue the palle of houour frō the holy and Apoſtolike ſeate, wherein I here (by the permiſsion of God) doe ſerue. And as touching the Citie of Yorke, we wyll ſende alſo a Byſh. thether, whō you may thinke meet to ordayne. So that if that Citie with other places bordering thereby, ſhall receiue the word of God, he ſhall haue power likewiſe to ordayne twelue byſhops, and haue the honour of a Metropolitane: to whō alſo if God ſpare me life, I entend by the fauour of God, to ſende a palle: this prouided, that notwithſtanding he ſhal be ſubiect to your brotherly appointment. But after your deceaſe, the ſame Metropolitane, ſo to be ouer the Byſhops whom he ordereth, that he be in no wiſe ſubiect to the metropolitane of Londō after you. And here after betwixt theſe two Metropolitanes, of London, & Yorke, let there be had ſuch diſtinction of honour, that hee ſhall haue the prioritie, which ſhall in time firſt bee ordeyned: Wyth common counſell, and affection of hart, let them go both together, diſpoſing with one accord, ſuch things as be to be done, for the zeale of Chriſt. Let them forethinke and deliberate together prudently, and what they deliberate wiſely, let them accompliſh concordly, not gerryng, nor ſwaruing, one from the other. But as for your part, you ſhall be indued with authoritie, not onelye ouer thoſe Byſhops, that you conſtitute, and ouer the other conſtituted by the byſhop of Yorke. But alſo you to haue all other Prieſtes of whole Brytaine, ſubiect to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: to the ende that through your preaching and holines of life, they may learne both to beleeue rightly and to liue purely, and ſo in directing their life, both by the rule of true faith and vertuous maners, they may attaine, when God ſhall call them, the fruition and kingdome of heauen. God preſerue you in health reuerend brother: the x. before the Kalend. of Iuly, in the raygne of our ſoueraigne Lord Mauritius, moſt vertuous Emperour.

Gregory calleth th Empero hys Lord.

Beſides this, the ſaid Gregory ſendeth alſo an other letter to Mellitus, concerning his iudgement what is to bee done with the idolatrous temples and Phanes of the Engliſhmen newly cōuerted, which Phanes he thinketh not beſt to plucke downe, but to conuert the vſe thereof, and ſo let them ſtand. And likewiſe of their ſacrifices and killyng of Oxen, how the ſame ought to be ordered, and howe to bee altered: diſputing by the occaſions therof, of the ſacrifices of the old Egiptians, permitted of God vnto the Iſraelits the ende a[illegible]e thereof being altered. &c.

A letter of Gregory. to Melli

He ſendeth alſo an other letter to the foreſaid Auſten, wherein he warneth him not to be proude or puft vp, for the miracles wrought of God by him, in conuertyng the people of Englande, but rather to feare and tremble, leaſt ſo much as he were puft vp by the outward work of miracles, ſo much he ſhoulde fall inwardly through the vayne glory of his hart: and therfore wiſely exhorteth him to repreſſe the ſwelling glory of hart, with the remembraunce of his ſinnes rather againſt God, whereby he rather hath cauſe to lament, then to reioyce for the other. Not all the elect of God (ſaith he) worketh miracles, and yet haue they their names written in the booke of life. And therefore he ſhoulde not count ſo much of thoſe miracles done, but reioyſe rather with the Diſciples of Chriſt, & labor to haue his name written in the booke of life, where al the electe of God be contained, neither is there any ende of that reioycing. And whatſoeuer miracles it hath pleaſed god by him to haue beene done, he ſhoulde remember they were not done for him: but for their conuerſion, whoſe ſaluation god ſought thereby, &c.

A letter of Gregory Auſten.

Item, he directed an other Epiſtle to king Ethelbert, as is expreſſed at large in the Chronicle of Henry Huntyngton, Lib. 3. in the which Epiſtle, firſt he praiſed God, then commendeth the goodnes of the king, by whom it pleaſed god ſo to worke ſuch goodnes of the people. Secondly exhorteth him to perſiſt and continue in the godly profeſſion of Chriſtes faith, and to be feruent and zealous in the ſame: in conuerting the multitude, in deſtroying the temples and works of idolatry, in ruling and gouerning the people in all holines & godly conuerſation, after the godly example of the Emperour Conſtantinus the great. Laſtly, cōforting him with the promiſes of lyfe and reward to come, wyth the Lord that raigneth and liueth for euer: premoniſhyng him beſides, of the terrours & diſtreſſes that ſhall happen (though not in his dayes) yet before the terrible daye of Gods iudgement: wherfore he willeth him alwaies to be ſollicitous for his ſoule, and ſuſpectfull of the houre of hys death, and watchfull of the iudgement, that he may be alwaies prepared for the ſame, when that iudgement ſhall come. In the ende he deſireth him to accept ſuch preſentes as giftes which he thought good to ſende vnto him from Rome, &c.

A letter of Gregory to King E thelbert.

Auſten thus receyuing his palle from Gregory, as is aboue ſaid, and now of a Monke beyng made an Archbyſhop, after he had baptiſed a great part of Kent: hee after made two Archbyſhops or Metropolitanes, by the commaundement of Gregory, as witneſſeth Polychronicon, the one at London, the other at Yorke.

A pittifull ſlaughter of vnarmed Monkes of Bangor.

Whether Auſten or the Brittaynes in this caſe were more to blame.

he charged the ſayd Byſhops, ẏ they ſhould preach wͭ him ẏ word of God to the Engliſhmen, & alſo that they ſhould among themſelues reforme certayne rytes and vſages in their church, ſpecially for keping of their Eaſtertyde: baptiſing after the maner of Rome, and ſuch other lyke. To theſe the Scotes and Brytons woulde not agree refuſing to leaue the cuſtome, which they ſo long time had contynued, wythout the aſſent of them all which vſed the ſame. Here the ſtories both of Bede, Ceſtrenſis in Polychron. Huntyngtonenſis, Iornalenſis, Fabianus and other moe, write of a certaine miracle wrought vpon a blinde Engliſhe man: whom when the Britons could not helpe, Auſten kneeling downe and praying, reſtored the blynde man to ſight before them all: for a confirmation (as theſe authours ſaye) of hys opinion in keeping of Eaſter. But concerning the credite of this miracle, that I leaue, to the authours of whom I had it. Then Auſten gathered an other Synode, to the which came ſeauen Byſhops of Brytons, with the wiſeſt men of that famous Abby of Bangor. But firſt they tooke counſell of a certayne wyſe and holye man amongeſt them, what to doe: and whether they ſhoulde be obedient to Auſten or not. And he ſaide: if he be the ſeruaunt of god agree vnto him. But howe ſhall wee knowe that, ſayde they? To whom he aunſwered againe: If he be meeke and humble of hart, by that know that he is the ſeruant of god. To this they ſaid againe: & how ſhal we know him to bee hũble & meeke of hart? By this quoth he [illegible] ſeing you are ẏ greater number, if he at your comming [illegible] your Synode riſe vp, & courteouſly receaue you, p[illegible] him to bee an humble and a meke man. But if he ſhall contemne and deſpiſe you (being as ye are) the greater part, deſpiſe you him agayne. Thus the Brytaine Byſhops entring into the Counſell, Auſten after the Romiſhe maner keeping hys chaire would not remoue. Whereat they being not a little offended, after ſome heate of words, in diſdain & great diſpleaſure departed thence. To whõ then Auſten ſpake: and ſaid, that if they would not take peace with their brethren, they ſhould receaue war with their enimies: And if they diſdained to preach with them the way of life to the Engliſh nation, they ſhould ſuffer by their handes the reuenge of deth. Which not lõg after ſo came to paſſe by the meanes of Ethelfride king of Northumberlande: who being yet a Pagan, and ſtirred with a fierce fury againſt the Britanes came with a great army againſt the city of Cheſter: where Brocmayl the Conſull of that Citie, a fryend and helper of the Britaines ſide, was readye with his force to receaue him. There was at the ſame time at Bangor in wales an exceding great Monaſtery, wherin was ſuch a number of Monkes, as Galfridus with other authors doe teſtifie that if the whole company were deuided into ſeuen parts in euery of the ſeuen parts were conteined not ſo few as 300. Mõkes: which al did liue with the ſweat of their browes, and labor of their owne hands, hauing one for their ruler named Dinoe. Out of this Monaſtery came the Monks to Cheſter to pray for the good ſucces of Brocmayl, fighting for them againſt the Saxons. Thre daies they cõtinued in faſting and praier. When Ethelfride the foreſaide king, ſeing them ſo intent to their praiers: demaunded the cauſe of their comming thether in ſuch a cõpany. When he perceaued it was to pray for their Conſull, then (ſaith he) although they beare no weapon, yet they fight againſt vs, & with their praiers & preachings they perſecute vs. Wherupon after that Brocmayl, being ouercome did flee awaye, the king commaunded his men to turne their wepons againſt the ſely vnarmed Monkes: of whome he ſlewe the ſame time, or rather Martired. 1100. onely fiftie perſons of that number did flee and eſcape awaye with Brocmayl: the reſt were all ſlaine. The authors that write of this lamentable murder, declare & ſaye howe the foreſpeaking of Auſten, was here verefied vpon the Britanes: which becauſe they would not ioine peace with their frends, he ſaid ſhould be deſtroied of their enimis. Of both theſe parties, the reader may iudge what he pleaſeth: I can not ſee but both together were to be blamed. And as I cannot but accuſe the one, ſo I cannot defend the other. Firſt Auſten in this matter can in no wiſe be excuſed, who being a monke before, & therfore a ſcholer & profeſſor of humilitie: ſhewed ſo litle humilitie in this aſſembly, to ſeuen Byſhops & an Archbiſhop, cõming at his cõmaundement to the Counſell, that he thought ſcorne once to ſtirre at their comming in. Much leſſe would his Phariſaicall ſolemnity haue girded himſelfe, & waſhed his brethrens feete, after their trauaile, as Chriſt our great maiſter did to his Diſciples: ſeyng his Lordſhip was ſo hie, or rather ſo heauy, or rather ſo proude, that coulde not finde in his hart to giue them a little mouing of his body to declare a brotherly & humble hart. Againe the Britaynes were much, or more to blame, who ſo much neglected their ſpirituall duety, in reuenging their temporal iniury: that they denyed to ioyne vnto their helping labour, to turne the Idolatrous Saxons to the way of lyfe and ſaluatiõ. In which reſpect all priuate caſes ought to geue place, and to be forgotten. For the whiche cauſe, although lamentable to vs, yet no great meruaile in them, if the ſtroke of gods puniſhment did light vpon thẽ: according to the wordes of Auſten, as is before declared. But eſpecially the cruell king, in this fact, was moſt of all to blame, ſo furiouſly to flee vpon them, which had neither weapõ to reſiſt him, nor yet any will to harme him. And ſo likewiſe the ſame or like, happened to himſelfe afterward. For ſo was he alſo ſlayne in the field by Chriſtian Edwine, who ſucceeded him: as he had ſlayne the Chriſtians before, whiche was about the yeare of our Lord. 610. But to returne to Auſten agayne, who by report of authors was departed before this cruelty was done: after he had baptiſed and chriſtened x. thouſand Saxons or Angles in the weſt riuer, that is called Swale, beſide Yorke on a Chriſtẽmaſſe day: perceauing hys end to draw neare, he ordayned a ſucceſſor named Laurentius to rule after him the Archbiſhops ſea of Dorobernia. Where note by the way Chriſtian Reader, that wheras Auſten baptiſed then in riuers: it followeth, there was then no vſe of fontes. Agayne, if it be true that Fabian ſayth, he baptiſed x. thouſãd in one day: the rite thẽ of Baptiſing at Rome was not ſo ceremoniall, neither had ſo manye trinkets at that tyme, as it hath had ſince, or els it could not be, that he coulde baptiſe ſo many in one daye.

Laurentius Archbiſh. after Auſten.

Baptiſing in riuers, not in fontes.

Baptiſing among the old Romaines was not vſed with ſo many ceremonyes as ſince.

In the meane ſeaſon, about this time departed Gregory Byſhop of Rome: of whom it is ſayd, that of the number of al the firſt Biſhops before him in the primitiue time, he was the baſeſt: of all them that came after him, hee was the beſt. About whiche tyme alſo dyed in Wales, Dauid Archbiſhop firſt of Kayrleion, who then tranſlated the ſea from thence to Menenia, and therefore is called Dauid of Wales. Not long after this alſo, deceaſed the foreſayd Auſten in England after he had ſet there xv. or xvi. yeares: by the which count we may note it, not to be true that Henry Huntington and other doe witneſſe, that Auſten was dead before that battaile of Ethelfride agaynſt the Mõkes of Bãgor. For if it be true that Polycronicon teſtifieth of this murder, to be done about the yeare of our Lorde. 609. and the comming of Auſten firſt into the Realme, to be an. 596. then Auſten enduring xvi. yeares could not be dead at thys battell. Moreouer Galfridus Monumetenſis declareth, concerning the ſame battell, that Ethelbert the king of Kent, beyng (as is ſayd) conuerted by Auſten to Chriſtes fayth: after he ſaw the Britaynes to diſdayne and deny their ſubiection vnto Auſten, neyther would aſſiſt him in preaching to the Engliſh nation: therefore ſtirred vp he the foreſayd Ethelfride to warre agaynſt the Brittaynes. But that ſeemeth rather ſuſpicious then true, that he being a Chriſten king, eyther could ſo much preuayle with a Pagan Idolater, or els would attempt ſo farre to commit ſuch a cruell deede. But of vncertayne things I haue nothing certainly to ſay, leſſe to iudge.

About this preſent tyme aboue prefixed, which is 610. I read in the ſtory of Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis, the writer of Polychronicon, of Iohn the Patriarche of Alexandria who for his rare example of hoſpitalitie and bountifulnes to the poore: I thought no leſſe worthy to haue place amongeſt good men, then I ſee the ſame now to be followed of few. This Iohn (beyng before belike a hard and ſparing man) as he was at hys prayer vpon a tyme (it is ſayd) there appeared to him a comely virgine hauing on her head a garland of Oliue leaues: which named her ſelfe mercy, ſaying to him and promiſing that if he would take her to wife, he ſhould proſper well. This, whether it were true or not, or els inuented for a moralitie, I would wiſh this floriſhing damſell ſo to be maryed to moe then to this Iohn, that ſhee ſhould not liue ſo long a virgine now as ſhe doth, becauſe no man will marry her. But to returne to his Patriarch, who after that day (as the ſtory recordeth: was ſo merciful and ſo beneficiall, eſpecially to the poore and needy, that he counted them as hys mayſters, and himſelf as a ſeruaunt and ſteward vnto them. This Patriarch was wont commonly twiſe a weeke to ſit at hys doore all the day long, to take vp matters, and to ſet vnitie, where was any variaunce: One day it happened, as he was ſitting all the day before hys gate, and ſaw no man come, lamented that all that day hee had done no good: To whome his Deacon ſtanding by, aunſwered agayne, that hee had more cauſe to reioyſe, ſeeing he had brought the Citie in that order and in ſuch peace, that there needed no reconcilement amongeſt them. An other time as the ſayd Iohn the Patriarche was at the Seruice and reading the Goſpell

The actes of Gregory the firſt.

As touching the actes and deedes of Gregory aboue mentioned, how he withſtood the ambitious pryd of Iohn, Patriarche of Conſtantinople, which woulde be the vnyuerſall Prieſt, and onely chiefe Byſhop of all other: declaring him to be no leſſe then the forerunner of Antichriſt, that woulde take that name vppon him: howe and wyth what reaſons he aunſwered againe the letters of the Emperor Mauritius in that behalfe, ſufficient relation is made thereof in the firſt entry and beginning of this booke. This Gregory among manye other thinges induced into the Churche (the ſpecialties whereof hereafter ſhall followe Chriſt willing more at large) fyrſt beganne and brought in thys title among the Romaine Biſhoppes, to be called Seruus ſeruorum Dei: putting them in remembraunce thereby both of their humblenes, and alſo of their duetie in the Churche of Chryſt. Moreouer as concerning his acte for the ſole lyfe of Pryeſtes fyrſt begonne, and then broken againe. Alſo concerning the order of Gregoryes Maſſe boke, to be receaued in all churches, hereof who ſo liſteth to read more, ſhall fynde the ſame in other places hereafter, namelye when wee come to the tyme of Pope Adrian the firſt.

Whereupon the Romaine Byſhops vſe in their ſtile, Seruus ſeruorū Dei.

After the death of Gregory, aboue mentioned, firſt came Sabinianus, who as he was a malicious detractor of Gregory & of his works, ſo he continued not long, ſcarſe the ſpace of two yeares. After whom ſucceded next Bonifacius the 3. which albeit he reigned but one yeare, yet in yͤ one yeare he did more hurt then Gregory, with ſo great labours, and in ſo many yeres could do good before: for that which Gregorye kept out, he brought in, obtaining of Phocas the wicked Emperour for him and his ſucceſſours after him, that the ſea of Rome aboue al other churches ſhould haue the preeminence: and that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould be the vniuerſall head, through all Churches of Chriſt in Chriſtēdome: alleadging for him this friuolous reaſon, that S Peter had and left to his ſucceſſours in Rome the keyes of byndyng and looſing, &c. And thus began firſt Rome to take an head aboue all other Churhes, by the meanes of Boniface the 3. who as he lacked no boldnes nor ambitiō to ſeeke it, ſo neither lacked he an Emperour fit and meete to gyue ſuch a gift. Thys Emperours name was Phocas a man of ſuch wickednes and ambitiō moſt lyke to his owne Biſhop Boniface, that to aſpire to the Empire, he murthered his owne maiſter and Emperour Mauritius, & his children. Thus Phocas coming vp to be Emperour, after this deteſtable vilanie done: thinking to eſtabliſh his Empire with friendſhip and fauour of his people, & eſpecially with the byſhop of Rome: quickly condeſcended to al hys petitions, & ſo graunted him (as it is ſayd) to be that he would, the vniuerſall and heade Biſhop ouer all Chriſten Churches. But as bloud commonly requireth bloud againe, ſo it came to paſſe on the ſaid Phocas. For as he had cruellye ſlayne the Lorde and Emperour, Mauritius, before, ſo he in lyke maner (of Heraclius the Emperour ſucceedyng hym) had his hands and feete cut of, & ſo was caſt into the Sea. And this wicked Phocas which gaue the firſt ſupremacy to Rome, loſt his owne. But Rome would not ſo ſoone looſe his ſupremacy once giuen, as yͤ gyuer loſt his life: for euer ſince frō that day it hath holden, defended, and maintained the ſame ſtill, and yet doth to this preſent day, by al force & policy poſſible. And thus much concerning Boniface, whō, by the words of Gregory, we may well call the runner before Antichryſt. For as Gregory brought into their ſtile, Seruus ſeruorum Dei, ſo this Boniface brought into theyr heades, firſt Volumus ac mandamus: Statuimus ac præcipimus. Mention was made a little before of Ethelbert kyng of Kent, and alſo of Ethelfride king of Northſaxone or Northumbria. This Ethelbert hauing vnder his ſubiection al the other Saxon kinges, vnto Humber, after he had fyrſt receaued himſelfe, and cauſed to be receaued of other, the Chriſtian faith by the preaching of Auſten, being cōfirmed afterward in the ſame faith, amōg other coſtly dedes, with the helpe of Sigebert kyng of Eſſex his nephew, then reigning vnder him, began the foundation of Paules Church within the Citie of London, & ordained it for the Biſhops ſea of Londō. In the meane time the foreſaid Ethelfride king of Northumberland, after the cruell murther of the Monkes of Bangor, eſcaped not long vnpaied his hire, for after he had raigned. 24. yeares he was ſlaine in the fielde of Edwine, who ſucceded in Northumberland after him.

This Edwyne being the ſonne not of Ethelfride, (as Galfridus Monumetenſis ſaith) but rather of Alla (as Giraldus Gambrenſis, ſemeth to witnes more truely) was firſt a Panim or id[illegible]e: afterward by Paulinus was Chriſtened and the firſt [illegible]ſtened king in Northōberland. The occaſion of which his calling or conuerſion, as is in ſundry ſtories contained, was this.

Edwine firſt Chriſtened king in Northumberland.

Giraldus Gambrenſis.

Edwine being yet a Pagane, maryed the daughter of Ethelbert king of Kent, called Edelburge a Chriſtian womā, otherwiſe called Tace. But before this mariage, Edwyne beyng yet young, Ethelfride the king, conceyuing enuy agaynſt him: perſecuted him ſo ſore, that he was forced to flee to Redwaldus king of Eaſtangles, as in the table of the kings is expreſſed. The which Redwaldus what for feare, what with bribes being corrupted of Ethelfride, at length priuily had intēded to haue betrayed Edwyne. But as gods will was, Edwyne hauing warning thereof by a ſecrete frynde of his, was moued to flee and to ſaue himſelfe beyng promiſed alſo of his friendes to bee ſafely conueyed away, if he would thereto agree. To whome Edwyne ſaid, whether ſhall I flee which haue ſo long fleene the handes of myne enymies, through all prouinces of the Realme? And if I muſt nedes be ſlayne I had rather that he ſhould doe it, then an other vnworthy perſon. Thus he remaynyng by himſelfe alone & ſolitarie, ſitting in a great ſtudy, there appeared vnto him ſodainely, a certaine ſtraunger, to hym vnknowne, and ſaide, I knowe well the cauſe of thy thought and heauines. What wouldeſt thou giue him that ſhould deliuer thee out of this feare, & ſhould recōcile king Redwald to thee againe? I woulde gyue him (ſaide Edwyne) al that euer I coulde make. And he ſaide agayne: And what if he make thee a mightier king, then was anye of thy Progenitours? Hee aunſwered againe as before. Moreouer, (ſaith he) and what if hee ſhewe thee a better kind and way of life, then euer was ſhewed to any of thine aunceters before thee: wilt thou obey him & doe after his counſell? Yea (ſaid Edwyne) promiſing moſt firmely, wyth al his hart ſo to do. Thē he laying his hand vpon his head when (ſaid he) this token hapneth vnto thee: then remember this time of thy tribulation, & the promiſe which thou haſt made, and the word which now I ſay vnto thee. And with that he uaniſhed out of his ſight ſodainely. After this ſo done as Edwyne was ſitting alone by him ſelfe penſiue and ſad: his foreſaid friend, which moued him before to flee commeth to him, bidding him be of good chere, for the hart (ſaid he) of king Redwaldus which had before intended thy deſtruction, was nowe altered through the counſell of the Queene, and is fully bent to keepe his promiſe wyth you, whatſoeuer ſhall fall thereupon. To make the ſtory ſhort Redwaldus the King (although Fabian following Henry Huntyngton) ſaith it was Edwyne) with al conuenient ſpeed aſſembled an hoſt: wherwith he ſodainly comming vpon Ethelfride, gaue battaile vnto him aboute the borders of Mercia, where Ethelfryde king of Northumberlande, alſo with Reyner Redwaldus ſonne was ſlaine in the fielde. By reaſon wherof Edwyne (his enimies now being deſtroyed) was quietly placed in the poſſeſſiō of Northumberlād. All this while yet Edwyne remained in his old Paganiſme, albeit his Queene being (as is aboue declared) king Ethelbertes daughter a Chriſten woman, with Paulinus the byſhop, ceaſed not to ſtirre and perſwad the king to chriſtian fayth. But he taking counſell with his nobles and counſellers vpon the matter, was hard to be wonne. Then the Lord, who deſpoſeth all things after his purpoſe, to bring al good things to paſſe, ſent an other trouble vpon him, by meanes therof to cal him. For by affliction God vieth commonly to call them whom he wil ſaue, or by whom he wil worke ſaluation vnto other. So his diuine wiſdome thinketh good to make them firſt to knowe themſelues, before they come to know him, or to teach him to other: ſo it was with Paule, who was ſtriken downe, before hee was lyfted vp, with Conſtantinus Edwynus and many moe. Howe long was Ioſeph in priſon before he bare rule? How hardly eſcaped this our Queene nowe being (Queene Elizabeth) by whō yet notwithſtanding it hath pleaſed god to reſtore this his goſpel now preached amongſt vs? In what conflictes and agonies inwardly in his ſpirite was M. Luther before he came to preach the iuſtification of Chriſt openly? And ſo be all they moſt commonlye, which come to anye liuely feeling or ſenſible working of Chriſt the Lord.

God calleth commonly by affliction and trouble

But to returne to Edwyne againe. The occaſion of hys trouble was this: Quicelinus with Kynegilſus his brother, Kings of weſtſaxons (as aboue is mentioned in the table of the Saxon kings) conſpiring the death of Edwyne now king of Northumberland: vpon enuy and malice ſent vpon an Eaſter day, a ſwordman named Emner, priuelye to ſlay the ſaid Edwyne. This ſwordman or cutthrote came to a Citie beſide the water of Darwent in Darbiſhire, there to waite his time, and laſtly founde the king ſmallye accompanied, and intēded to haue runne the king through with a ſword inuenemed. But one Lilla the kinges truſtye ſeruaunt, diſgarniſhed of a ſhield or other weapon to defēd his maiſter, ſtart betwene the king & the ſword, and was ſtrikē through the body and died, and the king was woūded with the ſame ſtroke. And after he wounded alſo the third which was a knight, & ſo was taken, and confeſſed by whom he was ſent to worke that treaſon. The other knight that was ſecondly wounded died, and the king lay after long ſicke, or he were healed.

After this, about whitſontide the king being ſcantlye hole of his wounde, aſſembled his hoſt, intending to make againſt the king of weſtſaxons: promiſing to Chriſt to be Chriſtened, if he would giue him the victory ouer his enimies. And in token therof cauſed his daughter borne of Edelburge ÿ ſame Eaſter day when he was woūded, named Eufled to be baptiſed: with xii other of his familye, of Paulinus. Thus Edwyne proceded to the battel againſt Quiceline and Kynegilſus with his ſonne Kenwalcus and other enimies, who in the ſame battell being al vanquiſhed & put to flight, Edwyn through the power of Chriſt returneth home victorer. But for all this victory & other things gyuen to him of God, as he was in wealth of the worlde, forgat his promiſe made, and had little mind therof, ſaue only that he by the preaching of Paulinus forſoke his maumentry. And for his excuſe ſaide that he might not clearly deny his olde lawe, which his forefathers had kept ſo long, and ſodeinly to be Chriſtened without authority and good aduiſe of his counſaile.

About the ſame ſeaſon Pope Boniface the 5. ſent alſo to the ſayd Edwyne letters exhortatory, wyth ſundrye preſentes from Rome to him, and to Edelburge the Queene. But neither would that preuaile. Then Paulinus ſeyng the king ſo hard to be conuerted, poured out his praiers vnto God for his cōuerſion: who the ſame time had reuealed to him by the holy ghoſt, the oracle aboue mentioned, which was ſhewed to the King, when hee was with Redwaldus king of the Eaſtangles. Wherupon Paulinus comming afterward to the king, on a certaine day, and laying his hād vpon the kings head, aſked him if he knew that tokē. The king hearing this & remembring wel the token, was ready to fall downe at his feete. But Paulinus not ſufferyng that, did lift vp hym againe, ſaying vnto him: behold, O king, you haue vanquiſhed your enimies, you haue obteined your kingdome, now performe the third, which you haue promiſed, that is to receaue the faith of Chriſt, and to be obedient to him. Wherupon the king conferryng with his Counſell, & his nobles, was baptiſed of the ſaid Paulinus at Yorke, with many of his other ſubiectes with hym: Inſomuch that Coyfi the chiefe of the Prelates of his olde maumentry armed him ſelfe wyth hys other Idolatrous Biſhops, and beſtrode good horſes, which before by their old law they might not do, nor ride but onely a Mare: & ſo deſtroied al the altars of the maumentrye, & their temple of Idoles, which was at Godmundham, not far from Yorke, and this was the xi. yeare of his raigne.

He was baptiſed in S. Peters Church at Yorke which he firſt cauſed to be made of woode, which after by S. Oſwald was builded of ſtone.

{An. 628.}

From that time forth, during the life of Edwyne which was the terme of vj. yeares moe, Paulinus chriſtened, continually in the riuers of Gweny, & Swala, in both prouinces of Deira, and in Bernicia, vſing the ſaid riuers for his fountes, and preached in the ſhire of Linceſey, where he builded alſo a Church of ſtone at Lincolne.

Note Paulinus chriſtened in riuers.

In this time was ſo great peace in the kingdome of Edwyne after his conuerſion, that a womā laden with gold might haue gone from the one ſide of the ſea to the other, and no man moleſt hir. Moreouer by the hye waye ſydes, through al his kingdom he cauſed by euery wel or ſpryng to be chayned a diſh, or bole of braſſe to take vp water, for the refreſhyng of ſuch as went by the way, which boles of braſſe there remained ſafe, that no man touched them, during all the life of the ſaid Edwyne. Such was then the tender care and ſtudy of Chriſten Princes, for the refreſhing of their ſubiectes. But that was then the Braſen worlde, which now is growne to yron and leade, called Ætas ferrea or rather plumbea.

This Edwyne, who firſt brought in the fayth in the North partes continuing after his Baptiſme, vj. yeres, at length was ſlaine in battell by Cedwalla, king of the Britaines, and by wicked Penda, king of the Mercians, wyth his ſonne alſo Offricus in the field called Hatfield.

{Annō. 634.}

This Paulinus was the firſt Archbyſhop of Yorke, and as he was of Iuſtus Archbyſhop of Caunterbury, ordained Archbyſhop of the ſea of Yorke, ſo he againe after the diſceaſe of Iuſtus, ordained Honorius to be Archbyſhop of Caunterbury.

And ſo the Churche of Northumberland lacked a Byſhop for the ſpace of xxx. yeares after. Notwithſtanding he left there one Iames his Deacon, a good man, who continued their baptiſing and preaching, in the North parts, till that peace being recouered, & the number of the faithfull increaſing, the church came againe to his ſtay. Erpwaldus otherwiſe named Corpwaldus, Kyng of Eaſtangles conuerted to the fayth of Chriſt.

After the deceaſe of Edwyne and his ſonne Offrike, both ſlayne in battell, reigned Oſricus and Eufridus the one in Deyra, the other in Bernicia. Oſricus was the ſonne of Elfricus which was brother to Ethelfride. Eaufridus, was the eldeſt ſonne of Ethelfride (for Ethelfride had three ſonnes to wit, Eaufridus, Oſwaldus, & Oſricus. These two kinges of Deſyra and Bernicia, Oſricus, and Eaufride, beyng fyrſt Chriſtened in Scotlande: after being kinges returned to their old idolatry, & ſo in the yeares following were ſlaine one after the other, by the foreſaide Cedwalla, and wycked Penda, as is in the table aboue expreſſed.

After whō ſucceded in Northumberlaad, the ſeconde ſonne of Ethelfride named Oſwaldus, hauing rule on both the Prouinces as well Deyra, as of Bernicia. Whereof when the foreſaide Cedwalla, (or Cadwallo) the Brytayne king had vnderſtanding: who before had made hauoke of the Saxons and thought to haue rooted them vtterlye out of England: he ſent king Penda wͭ a mighty hoſt of ÿ Britaines, thinking to ſlea alſo Oſwald, as he had before ſlaine his brother Eaufride, and King Edwyne before them. But Oſwald when he was warned of the great ſtrength of this Cadwal, and Penda made his prayes to God, and beſought him meekely of helpe to withſtand his enimie: for the ſaluation of his people. Thus after Oſwald had prayed for the ſauing of his people, the two hoſtes met in a fielde named Deneſburne, ſome ſay Heuenfield, where was faught a ſtrōg battell. But finally the armye and power of Penda, & Cedwall, which were farre exceeding the number of Oſwaldus hoſt, was chaſed and moſt part ſlaine by Oſwaldus, after he reigned ouer the Britanes xxij. yeares leauing after him a ſonne, whom Gaufridus called Cadwaladrus, the laſt king of the Britanes.

Moreouer, toward the poore and needy, his pitty & tendernes was ſuch, being notwithſtanding of ſo highe & Princely calling: that vpon a time being then Eaſter day, he ſitting with the ſaide Aidanus at meate and ſerued after the maner of kings in ſiluer, there commeth to him one of the ſeruitures bringing him word, that there was a great multitude of poore people ſitting in the ſtrete, which deſired ſome almes of the king. Berinus walking on the ſea with lye and al.

Of this Berinus Malmeſbery, Polychronicon, with dyuers other writers do report, a thing ſtraunge and myraculous which if it be a fable as no doubt it is, I cannot but marueil that ſo many authors ſo conſtantly agre in reporting and affirming the ſame. The matter is this: this Berinus being ſent as is ſaid, by Honorius to preach in Englād promiſeth him to trauell to the vttermoſt borders therof, and there to preach the Goſpell, where the name of Chriſt was neuer heard. Thus he ſeting forward in his iourney paſſeth through Fraunce, and ſo to the ſea ſide, where hee found a paſſage ready, and the winde ſerued ſo faire, that he was called vpon in ſuch haſt, that he had no leyſure to remember himſelfe to take all things with him, which hee had to cary. At length as he was on the ſea ſailing and almoſt in the middle courſe of his paſſage, remembred himſelfe of a certaine relique left behinde him for haſt: which Honorius had giuen him at his comming out. Malmeſberienſis calleth it Corporalia. Hiſtoria Iornalenſis calleth it Pallulam ſuper quam Corpus Chriſti conſecraret, which wee call a Corporas or ſuch a like thing, and what els encloſed with in it I can not tell. Here Berinns in great ſorow coulde not tell what to doe, if he ſhould haue ſpoken to the Heathen mariners, to turne their courſe backe againe, they woulde haue mocked him, and it had bin in vaine. wherfore as ẏ ſtories write, he boldly ſteppeth into the Sea, and walkeyng on fote back again, taketh to him that which was left behind, & ſo returneth to his company againe, hauing not one thred of his garments wette. Of his miracle, or whether I ſhould cal it a fable rather, let the reader iudge therof, as he thinketh, becauſe it is not written in the Scripture we are not bound to beleeue it. But if it were true, it is then thought to be wrought of god not for any holines in the man: or in the Corporas, but a ſpeciall gifte for the conuerſion of the heathen, for whoſe ſaluation God ſuffereth oft many wonders to be done. This Berinus being receiued in the ſhip againe with a great admiration of the Marynors, beyng therewyth conuerted and Baptyſed: was driuen at laſt by the weather, to the coaſt of the weſtſaxōs, where Kynigilſus and his brother Quicelinus aboue mentioned did raigne. which two kinges, the ſame time by ẏ preaching of Berinus were conuerted, and made Chriſten men, with the people of the country, being before rude and barbarous. It happened the ſame time when the forſaid kings ſhoulde bee chriſtened, that Oſwaldus (mentioned a little before) king of Northumberland, was thē preſent, and the ſame day maried Kynigilſus his daughter, and alſo was godfather to the king.

Oſwy King of Northumberland.

Thus Oſwald after he had reigned ix. yeares in ſuch holines and perfectnes of life, as is aboue ſpecified, was ſlayne at length in the field called Marfield, by wicked Penda, king of the Mercians, which Penda, at length after all his tyranny was ouercome and ſlaine by Oſwy brother to Oſwald, next king after Oſwald of Northumberland, notwithſtanding he had thryſe ẏ people which Oſwy had: this Penda being a Panim had iij. ſonnes Wolferus, Weda, and Egfridus. To this ſeconde ſonne Weda, Oſwy had before time maried his daughter, by conſent of Penda hys father. The whiche Weda by helpe of Oſwy was made Kyng of Southmercia, the which Lordſhip is ſeuered from northmercia by the ryuer of Trent. The ſame Weda moreouer, at what time he maried the daughter of Oſwy, promiſed to him that he would become a chriſten man, which thing he performed after the death of Penda his Father, but afterward within iij. yeares of his reigne, he was by reaſon of his wife ſlaine: And after him the kingdome fell to Wolferus the other brother, who beyng wedded to Ermenilda, daughter of Ercomber kyng of Kente, was ſhortlye after Chriſtened, ſo that he is accounted the firſt chriſtened king of Mercia. This Wolferus conquered Kenwalcus Kyng of Kent, and gat ẏ Iſle of wight, which after he gaue to Sigbert King of Theaſtangles, vpon condition he would be Chriſtened. And thus the Eaſtangles, which before had expulſed Mellitus there biſhop, as is declared recouered againe the Chriſtian faith vnder Sigbert their King, who by the meanes of the foreſayd Wolferus was reduced and Baptiſed by Finanus the Byſhop.

But to returne againe to Oſwy, from whom we haue a litle digreſſed, of whom we ſhewed before how he succeded after Oſwald in the prouince of Bernicia, to whom alſo was ioyned Oſwynus hys coſin, ouer the Prouince of Deyra, and therwith his felow, Oſwy, raigned the ſpace of vij. yere: this Oſwyne was gentle, & liberal to his people and no [illegible]ſſe deuout towarde God: who vpon a time had giuen to Aidanus the biſhop aboue mentioned, a Princely Horſe with the trappers, & al that appertained therto: becauſe he ſhould not ſo much trauel on foote but ſome tyme eaſe himſelfe withall. Thus Aidanus the Scottiſhe Byſhop as he was riding vpon his kingly horſe, by the way meteth him a certaine poore man aſking and crauing hys charitie. Aidanus hauing nothing els to giue him: lighted down, and giueth to him his horſe trapped and garniſhed as he was. The King vnderſtanding this, & not contented therwith, as he was entring to dinner with the ſayd Aidanus what ment you father Byſhop, (ſayd he) to giue away my horſe I gaue you, vnto the begger? Had not I other horſes in my ſtable that might haue ſerued him well inough, but you muſt giue awaye that which of purpoſe was pickt out for you among the chiefeſt? To whome the Biſhop made aunſwere againe ſaying or rather rebuking the king, what be theſe wordes (O king ſaide he) that you ſpeake? why ſet you more price by an horſe, which is but the fole of an horſe, then you do by him which is the ſonne of Mary, yea which is the ſonne of God? He ſaid but thys when the king forthwith vngirding his ſword frō about him (as he was then newly come in from hunting) falleth downe at the feete of the Biſhop, deſiring him to forgiue him that, and he would neuer after ſpeake word to him, for any treaſure he ſhould afterward giue away of his. The Biſhop ſeing the king ſo mekely affected, hee then takyng him vp, & chering him againe with words, began ſhortly after to weepe & to be very heauy, his miniſter aſking the cauſe therof, Aidanus aunſwered in his ſcottiſh language ſaying to him: I weepe ſaith he for that this king cannot liue lōg. This people is not worthy to haue ſuch a Prince as he is to raigne among them. And ſo as Aidanus ſayd, it came to paſſe. For not long after Oſwy the king of Bernicia diſdaining at him, when Oſwyne either being not able or not willing to ioyne with him in Battaile, cauſed hym traiterouſly to be ſlaine. And ſo Oſwy, with his ſonne Egfride raigned in Northumberland alone.

In the time & alſo in the houſe, of this Oſwy king of Northūberland, was a certaine man named Benedict, who was the bringer vp of Bede from his youth, & toke him to his inſtitution, whē he was but ſeuen yere old, & ſo taught him during his life. This Benedict, or Benet, deſcending of a noble ſtocke and rich kinne & in good fauour with Oſwy: forſoke ſeruice, houſe, and al his kindred to ſerue Chriſt, & wēt to Rome (where he had bene in his life time v. times) and brought from thence bookes, into Monaſteries, wyth other things which he thought then to ſerue for deuotion. And ouer that, as our hiſtories accord, they were ſo voyd of couetouſnes, that they receiued no poſſeſſions or territories as was forced vpon them.

Beda. lib. 4. cap. 5. Hunting. Polycr. Iornalenſis. Fabia.

An. 664.

About this ſeaſon or not much before, vnder the raigne of Oſwy & Oſwyne, kynges of Northumberlande, an other Synode or Councell was holden againſt the Brytaines and the Scottiſh biſhops, for the ryght obſeruyng of Eaſter, at Sternehalt. At what time Agilbertus Byſhop of weſtſaxons came to Northumberlande, to inſtytute Wilfride, Abbot of Rypon, where this queſtion for Eaſter day began to be moued. For Colmannus then Byſhop of Northūberland followed not ẏ cuſtome of Rome, nor of the Saxons: but followed the Brytaynes, and the Scottiſh Biſhops, his predeceſſors in the ſame ſea before. Thus on the on ſide was Colmannus the Archbyſhop of Yorke and Hilda the Abbes of Sternhalt: which alleaged for them the doinges and exambles of their predeceſſours, both godly and reuerend byſhops: as Aidanus, Finianus, Archbiſhops of that ſea of Yorke before them, and diuers moe. who had vſed alwaies to celebrate the Eaſter, from the xiiij. day of the firſt moneth, till the xxviij. of the ſame. And ſpecially for that S. Iohn ẏ Euangeliſt at Epheſus, kept and obſerued that day, &c. On the otherſide was Agilbert biſhop of weſtſaxons, Iames the Deacon of Paulinus aboue mentioned: Wilfride Abbot of Ripon: and King Alfride Oſwyes ſonne, with his Queene, holding on the ſame ſide. The full contentes of which diſputation here followeth, according as in the ſtory of Beda at large is deſcribed: with their reaſons and argumentes, on both ſydes as inſueth, &c.

Controuerſie about Eaſter day.

Ex Beda. lib. 2. cap. 23.

The queſtion of Eaſter, and of ſhauing, and other Eccleſiaſticall maters being moued, it was determined that in the Abbey which is called Streneſhalch, of the which Hilda a deuout woman was Abbes: a conuocation ſhould be had and this queſtion there determined. To the which place came both the kinges, the father and the ſonne. Byſhop Colman with his clergy of Scotland. Aigelbert wyth Agathon and Wilfride Prieſtes, Iames and Roman were on their ſides. Hilda the Abbes with her company was on the Scottiſh part. And the reuerend Byſhop Cedda was appointed Prolocutor for both parties in that Parliament. King Oſwye begā firſt with an Oration: declaring that it was neceſſary for ſuch as ſerued one God, to liue in one vniforme order, and that ſuch as loked for one kingdome in heauen ſhould not differ in celebration of the heauenly ſacraments, but ſhould rather ſeeke for the true tradition & follow the ſame. This ſaid, he commaunded his Byſhop Colman to declare what the rite and cuſtome was in thys behalfe that he vſed, and from whence it had the originall. Then Colman obeying his princes cōmaundement, ſayd: the Eaſter, which I obſerue I receaued of my aunceſtors that ſent me hether a Biſhop. The which, all our forefathers being men of God, did celebrate in like maner, & leſt it ſhould be contēned or deſpiſed of any man, it is manifeſtly aparant, to be ẏ very ſame, which ẏ holy Euangeliſt S. Iohn (a diſciple eſpecially beloued of the Lord) did cuſtomably vſe, in al churches and congregations, where he had authoritie. When Colman had ſpoken manye thinges to this effect, the king cōmaunded Aigelbert to declare his opinion in this behalfe, and to ſhew the order that he then vſed, from whence it came & by what authoritie he obſerued the ſame. Aigelbert requeſted the king, that his ſcoler Wilfride, a Prieſt, might ſpeake for him: in as much as they both with the reſt of his clergy, were of one opinion herein: and that the ſaid Wilfride coulde vtter his minde better and more plainely in the Engliſhe toung, then he himſelfe could. Then Wilfride at the kings cōmaundements, began on this ſort and ſayd: The Eaſter which we keepe, wee haue ſeene at Rome, whereas the holye Apoſtles, Peter, & Paule, did liue and teach, did ſuffer and were buried. The ſame alſo is vſed in Italy, and in Fraunce: the which coūtries we haue traueled for learning, and haue noted it to be celebrated of them all. In Aſia alſo and in Aphricke, in Egipt and in Greece, and finally in all the world, the ſame maner of Eaſter is obſerued, that we vſe: ſaue onelye by theſe here preſent with their accomplices, the Pictes & the Britanes: with the which two (& yet not altogither agreeing) they condeſcend & ſtriue fooliſhly in this order againſt the vniuerſal world. To whom Colman replied, ſaying, I maruel you wil cal this order foliſh, that ſo great an Apoſtle as was worthy to lie in the Lordes lap, did vſe, whom all ẏ world doth wel know to haue liued moſt wiſely: and Wilfride aunſwered, god forbid that I ſhould reproue S. Iohn of folye who kept the rites of Moſes law according to the letter (the Churche being yet Iewiſhe in manye pointes) and the Apoſtles not as yet able to abdicate al the obſeruations of the law before ordained: as for example ẏ could not reiect Images inuented of the Diuel, the which all men that beleue on Chriſt ought of neceſſitie to forſake, and deteſt: leaſt they ſhould be an offence to thoſe Iewes that were amongſt the Gentiles. For this cauſe dyd S. Paule Circumciſe Timothie, for this cauſe did hee ſacrifice in the temple, and did ſhaue his head with Aquila and Priſcilla, at Corinth. all which thinges were done to none other purpoſe, then to eſchue the offēce of the Iewes. Hereupon alſo ſaid Iames to Paule, thou ſeeſt brother howe many thouſand Iewes do beleue & all theſe be zealous (notwithanding) of the law. Yet ſeing the Goſpell is ſo manyfeſtly preached in the worlde, it is not lawfull for the faithfull to bee Circumciſed, neither to offer ſacrifice of carnall things to God. Therefore Iohn according to the cuſtome of the law, the xiiij. day of the firſt moneth at euening, did begin the celebration of the feaſt of Eaſter, nothing reſpecting whether it were celebrated in the Sabboth, or in any other feriall day. But Peter when hee preached at Rome, remembring that the Lord did ariſe from death on the firſt day after the Sabboth giuing thereby an hope to ẏ world of the reſurrection, thoughht good to inſtitute Eaſter on ẏ day, & not after the vſe and precepts of the law (that was) the xiiij. day of the firſt moneth. Euen ſo Iohn looking for the Moone at night if it did ariſe, & the next day after were Sonday, which was then called the Sabboth, then did he celebrate the Eaſter of the Lord in the euening like as wee vſe to do euē at this day. But if Sonday were not the next day after the xiiij. day, but fel on the xvi. day, or xvij or on any other day vnto the xxi: he taried alwayes for it, and did begin the holy ſolemnitie of Eaſter, on the euening nexte before ẏ ſabboth. And ſo came it to paſſe that Eaſter, was alwaies kept on the Sonday, and was not celebrated but from the xv. day vnto the xxi. Neither doth this tradition of the Apoſtle breake the law, but fulfilled the ſame. In the which it is to be noted, that Eaſter was inſtituted frō the xiiij. day of the firſt moneth at euening vnto the xxi. day of the ſame moneth at euening, the which manner all S. Iohns ſucceſſours in Aſia, after his death did follow, and the Catholike Church throughout the whole worlde. And that this is the true Eaſter, and onely of all Chriſtians to be obſerued, it was not newly decred: but confirmed by ẏ Councell of Nice, as appeareth by the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory. wherupon it is manifeſt that you (Colman) do neither folow the example of S. Iohn as ye thinke, nor of S. Peter whoſe tradition you do willingly reſiſt, nor of ẏ church nor yet of the goſpel, in the celebration of Eaſter. For S. Iohn obſeruing Eaſter according to the preceptes of the law kept it not on the firſt daye after the Sabboth. But you preciſely keepe it, onely on the firſt day after the Sabboth. Peter did celebrate Eaſter from the xv. daye of the moone to the xxi. day, but you keepe Eaſter from the xiiij. vnto the xx. day, ſo that you begin Eaſter oftentimes the xiij. day at night: of which maner neither the law nor the Goſpell maketh any mention. But the Lord in ẏ xiiij. day either did eate the olde paſſouer at night, or els did celebrate the ſacraments of the new Teſtament in the remēbraunce of his death and paſſiō. You doe alſo vtterly reiect from the celebration of Eaſter the xxi. daye, the whiche the law hath chiefly willed to be obſerued. And therfore as I ſaide in the keeping of Eaſter, you neither agree wyth S. Iohn, nor with Peter, nor with the lawe, nor yet with the Goſpel. Then Colman againe aunſwered to theſe things, ſaying. Did then Anatholius a godly man and on much cōmended in the foreſaid Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, agaynſt the law & the Goſpell: who writeth that the Eaſter was to be kept frō the xiiij. day vnto the xx: or ſhal we thinke that Columba our reuerend father, and his ſucceſſors being mē of God, who obſerued the Eaſter, after this maner, did againſt the holye Scripture: where as ſome of them were men of ſuch godlines and vertue as was declared by their wonderful miracles. And I hereby (nothing doubting of their holines) do endeuor to fallow their life, order, & dyſcipline. Then ſaide Wilfride, it is certaine that Anatholius was both a godly and a learned man, and worthy of great commendation, but what haue you to do with him, ſeyng you obſerue not his order: For he following ẏ true rule in keping his Eaſter, obſerueth the circle of xix. yeares. The which either you know not, or if you do, you cōtemne the common order obſerued in the vniuerſal church of Chriſt. And moreouer the ſaide Anathollus doth ſo count the xiiij. day in the obſeruation of Eaſter, as he confeſſeth the ſame to be the xv. day at night, after the maner of the Egiptiās. and likewiſe noteth the xx. day to be in the feaſt of Eaſter, the xxi. in the euening: the which diſtinctiō that you know not, by this may appeare, for that you keepe the Eaſter on the xiiij. daye before the full Moone. Or otherwiſe I can aunſwere you touching your father Columba, and his ſucceſſors, whoſe order you ſay you follow, moued therto by their miracles on this wiſe: that the Lorde will aunſwere to many that ſhall ſay in the day of iudgement, that in his name they haue propheſied & caſt out deuils, & haue done many miracles. &c. that he neuer knew thē. But God forbid that I ſhould ſay ſo of your fathers, bicauſe it is much beter to beleue wel of thoſe we know not, then ill. wherevpō I deny not, but they were the ſeruaunts of God and holy men, the which loued the Lord of a good intēt, though of a rude ſimplicitie. And I thinke that the order whiche they vſed in yͤ Eaſter, did not much hurt them, ſo long as they had none amongſt them that could ſhew thē the right obſeruation of the ſame, for them to follow. For I thinke if the truth had beene declared vnto them, they woulde as well haue receiued it in this mater as they did in others. But you and your felowes if you refuſe the order of the apoſtolicall ſea, or rather of the vniuerſal Church, which is confirmed by the holy ſcripture, without al doubt you doe ſinne: and though your forefathers were holy mē, * what is their fewnes being but a corner of an Ilelād, to be preferred before the vniuerſall Churche of Chriſt dyſperſed throughout the whole world? And if Columba your father (& ours alſo being of Chriſt) were mighty in miracles, is he therefore to bee preferred before yͤ Prince of the holy Apoſtles? to whom the Lord ſaid, thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I builde my Church, and the gates of hell ſhal not preuayle againſt it, & I will giue thee the keyes of the Kingdome of heauen?

The aucthoritie of men is not to be ſticked vnto, for their doyng of myracles.

The example of them that follow not, for lack of teaching excuſeth not them which being taught will not follow.

Yea ſir, Suffragia eccleſiæ non numeranda ſunt ſed ponderanda. Aug.

Wilfride hauing thus ended his argument, the kyng ſaid to Colman: Is it true that the Lord ſpake theſe things to S. Peter? And Colman aunſwered yea. Then ſayde the King: Can you declare any thing that the Lorde gaue to Colum. Colman aunſwered no. Then quoth the king doe both of you agree and conſent in this matter, without any controuerſie, and that theſe wordes were principally ſpoken to Peter, and that the Lord gaue him the keyes of the kingdome of heauen? And they both aunſwered yea. Then concluded the king on this wiſe: for almuch as S. Peter, is the dore keper of heauen. I will not gaineſay him: but in that I am able, I will obeye his orders in euery point leaſt when I come to the gates of heauen, he ſhut them againſt me.

The king concludeth.

Upon this ſimple & rude reaſon of the king, the multitude eftſoones conſented: and with them alſo Cedda was contented to giue ouer. Onely Colmanus the Scot, beyng thē Archbiſhop of Yorke, in diſpleaſure left the Realme, & departed into Scotlande, carying with him the bones of Aidanus, Bed. Lib.3. cap. 25. And thus much concerning this matter of Eaſter.

After the deceaſe of Oſwy, Egfride his ſonne was King after him in Northumberland xv. yeares. By this Egfride Cutbert was promoted to the Biſhopricke of the Ile of Farne. And Wilfride which before had bene Archbiſhop of Yorke, was diſplaced through the meanes of Theodore Archbiſhop of Canterbury: and Cedda poſſeſſed that ſea, Wilfride when he was put out, went to Rome & complained of him to Agathon the Biſhop, and was well allowed in ſome things. But the king and Theodorus had there ſuch Proctors and frindes, that hee returned without ſpeeding of hys cauſe. wherfore he returned into the Southſaxons and builded an Abbey in Sileſey, and preached vnto the Southſaxons xv. yeares. The king of the Southſaxons at that time, Ethelwold, to whom he declared a little before, that Wolferus king of the Mercians, gaue the Ile of wight vpon condition, that he would be Chriſtened, and ſo was baptiſed by Berinus: the ſayd Wolfer being his Godfather and ſonne in law, both in on day. wherfore Wolferus now being licenſed by Ethelwod the king, preached vnto his nobles & people of Southſexe, and conuerted thē to Chriſt. But now to returne again to the time of our Engliſh Saxons. In this meane ſeaſon Theodorus was ſent from Italy into England by Vitellianus the Pope, to bee Archbyſhop of Caunterbury, & with him diuers other monks of Italy, to ſet vp here in Englād Latine ſeruice, Maſſes, ceremonies, letanies, with ſuch other Romiſhe ware, &c. This Theodorus being made Archbiſhop and Metropolitane of Canterbury began to play the rex, placing & dyſplacing the byſhops at his pleaſure. As for Cedda & Wilfride Archbiſhops of Yorke he thruſt them both out, vnder the pretence, that they were not lawfully conſecrated, notwithſtanding they were ſufficientlye authoriſed by theyr kinges, and were placed againſt their willes. wherfore Wilfride as is before touched went vp to Rome, but could haue no redres of his cauſe: yet to ſhew what modeſty this Wilfride vſed againſt his enimie, being ſo violently moleſted as he was, becauſe the wordes of his complainte are expreſſed in W. This Wilfride therefore hauing ſuch iniury and violence offered vnto him by the handes of Theodore: although he had iuſt cauſe to doe his vttermoſt, yet in proſecuting his complaint, how hee tempered himſelfe: what wordes of modeſtie he vſed, rather to defende his innocencie, then to impugne his aduerſary, by this his ſuggeſtion offered vp to the Byſhop of Rome, may appeare: whoſe words in effect were theſe: Quid autem acciderit, vt Theodorus ſanctiſs. In the time of this Theodorus, and by the meanes of hym, a prouincial Synode was holden at Thetford, mentioned in the ſtorye of Bede: the principall contents wherof were theſe.

1. First that Eaſter day ſhoulde bee vniformely kept and obſerued through the whole Realme, vpon one certayne daye videlicet prima, 14. Luna menſis primi.

2. Secondly, that no Byſhop ſhould entermedle within the Dioces of an other.

3. Thirdly, that monaſteries conſecrated vnto GOD, ſhould be exempt and free from the iuriſdiction of the byſhops.

4. Fourthly that the Monkes ſhould not ſtray from one place (that is) from one Monaſtery to another, without ẏ licenſe of his Abbot: alſo to kepe the ſame obedience which they promiſed at their firſt entryng.

5. Fiftly, that no Clergyman ſhoulde forſake his owne Byſhop, and to be receaued in any other place, wyth out letters commendatory of his owne Byſhop.

6. Sixtly, that forraine Byſhops & Clergimen cõming into the Realme, ſhould be content onely with the benefite of ſuch hoſpitality, as ſhould be offered thẽ: neither ſhould entermedle any further within the precinct of any biſhop, without his ſpeciall permiſſion.

7. Seuenthly, that Synodes prouinciall ſhould be kept within the Realme at leaſt once a yeare.

8. Eightly, that no Biſhop ſhoulde preferre himſelfe before an other, but muſt obſerue the time and order of hys conſecration.

9. Ninthly, that the number of Byſhops ſhould be augmented, as the number of the people encreaſeth.

10. Tenthly, that no mariage ſhould be admitted, but that which was lawfull, No inceſt to be ſuffered: neyther any man to put away his wyfe for any cauſe, except onelye for fornication, after the rule of the Goſpell. And theſe bee the principall chapters of that Synode. &c.

In the next yere following was the ſixt general councell kept at Conſtaunce, whereat, this Theodore was alſo preſent vnder Pope Agatho, where Mariage was permitted to Greeke prieſts, and forbidden to the Latin. In this Councell the Latine Maſſe was firſt openly ſaide by Iohn Portuenſis the Popes Legate, before the Patriarche and Princes at Conſtantinople, in the temple of S. Sophy.

About the ſixt yeare of the raigne of this Iua or Iue, Polychronicon, & other make mentiõ of one Cuthlacus, whõ they call S.Cuthlake a confeſſour, who about the 24. of hys age, renouncing the pompe of the world, profeſſed himſelf a Monke in the abby of Repindon, and the third yeare after went to Crowlande, where he led the life of an Anker. In the which Ile and place of his buriyng was builded a faire Abbey, called afterward for the great reſort and gentle entertainment of ſtraungers, Crowlande the courteous: but why this Cuthlake ſhould be ſaincted for his doinges, I ſee no great cauſe, as neither doe I thinke the fabulous miracles reported of him to be true: as where the vulgare people are made to beleeue, that he encloſed the deuill in a boyling pot, and cauſed wicked ſpirits to erecte vp houſes, with ſuch other fables and lyſing miracles, &c.

What ſtraunge ſightes this Brithwalde, or Drithelm, did ſee after hys death, read the ix. booke of Henr. Huntington.

Among which lying miracles alſo maye be reckened that, which the ſtories mention in the xi. yeare of the raigne of Iua, to be done of one Brithwalde or Drithelmus: who being dead a long ſeaſon, was reſtored to lyfe againe, & told many wonders of ſtraunge things that he had ſeene, cauſing thereby great almes & deedes of charitie to bee done of the people, And ſo ẏ diſpoſing of his goods giuen in iij. partes went to the Abbey of Mailros, where he continued the reſt of his life.

As concerning theſe and ſuch other myracles, which William Malmeſbery, to hym attributeth, I can not conſent to him therein, but thynke rather the ſame to be Monkiſhe deuiſes, forged vpon their Patrons, to maintaine the dignitie of their Houſes. And as the Authour was deceaued (no doubt) in beleuing ſuch fables himſelfe: ſo maye he likewiſe deceaue vs, through the dexteritie of his ſtyle, and fyne handling of the matter, but that later experience hath taught the worlde nowe a dayes more wiſedome, in not beleuing ſuch practiſes: this Aldelmus was Byſhoppe of Schyrborne, which ſea after was vnited to ẏ ſea of winton. This brightnes being ſene of other, firſt commeth one of his Deacons running vnto the portche: who beholding the Biſhop their ſtanding in his praiers, and all the place repleniſhed with the holy ghoſt, was ſtrokẽ with the light therof, hauing al his face burnt, as it were with hote burning fire. Notwithſtanding the Biſhop by and by cured the face of his Deacon againe, charging him as the ſtorye ſaith, not to publiſhe what hee had ſeene duryng hys lyfe time. &c. which tale ſemeth as true, as that we read about the ſame time done of S. But to leaue theſe Monkiſhe phantaſies, and returne into the right courſe againe of the ſtory. In ẏ time of this foreſaide Iue, began firſt the right obſeruing of the Eaſter day to be kept of the Pictes, and of the Britaines. In the obſeruation of which day (as is largely ſet foorth in Bede, and Polychron, Lib.5 cap,17. and 22.) three thinges are neceſſary to be obſerued, the full Moone of the firſt Moneth, that is of the month of March: Secondly, the Dominical Letter: Thirdly, the Equinoctiall day, which Equinoctiall was wont to be counted in the Eaſt church, and eſpecially among the Egiptians, to bee about the 17. daye of Marche. So that the full Moone either vppon the Equinoctiall day, or after the Equinoctiall day being obſerued the next dominicall day following that full moone, is to be taken for Eaſter day. Wherin is diligetly to be noted two thinges. Firſt the fulnes of the Moone, muſt be perfectly ful, ſo that it be the beginning of the third weke of ẏ moone which is the 14, or 15, day of the moone. Secondly, is to be the booke of Numer. And they going out of Rameſſe the 15. day of the firſt moneth, the next day after held their Eaſter. &c.

A generall rule ſeruing for the obſeruation of Eaſter day.

This rule of Eaſter ſeemeth to be taken out of noted, that the ſaid perfect fulnes of the moone beginnyng the thirde weeke, muſt happen either in the very euening of yͤ Equinoctial day, or after the Equinoctial day. For els if it happen either on the Equinoctiall day before the euening, or before the Equinoctial day, then it belongeth to yͤ laſt moneth of the laſt yeare, and not to the firſt moneth of the firſt yeare, and ſo ſerueth not to be obſerued.

This rite and vſage in keping Eaſter day being receiued in the Latin church, began now to take place amōg the Pictes & Britaines, through the buſie trauaile of Theodorus Cuthlacus, but namelye of Elbert the holy Monke, as they terme him: and of Colfrid Abbot of Sirwin in Northumberlande, which wrote to Narcanus, or Naitonus the King of Pictes, concerning the ſame: who alſo among other thinges writeth of the ſhauen crownes of Prieſtes, ſaying: that it was as neceſſary for the vow of a Monke, or degre of a Prieſt, to haue a ſhauen crowne for reſtrainte of their luſtes: as for any Chriſten man, to bleſſe him againſt ſpirits, when they come vpon him. Bede Lib. 5. The coppy of which letter as it is in Bede, I haue here annexed, not for any great reaſon therin conteined, but only to delite yͤ Reader with ſome paſtime, in ſeing the fond ignorance of that Monkiſh age: the copy of the letter thus proceedeth.

Why prieſtes crownes were ſhauen. Bede de. geſt. lib. 5.

¶ Of the ſhauing of Prieſtes, out of the fift booke of Beda the xxi. chap.

Concerning the ſhauing of Prieſts (wherof you wryte alſo vnto me) I exhort you that it be decently obſerued according to the Chriſtian faith. we are not ignorant that the Apoſtles were not al ſhauen, after one maner, neither doth the Catholicke Church at this day agree in one vniforme maner of ſhauing, as they do in faith, hope, and charity. Let vs conſider the former time of the Patriarches, and we ſhall finde that Iob (an example of patience) euen in the very point of his afflictions, did ſhaue his head: and he proueth alſo: that in yͤ time of his proſperitye, he vſed to let his heare grow. And Ioſeph an excellent Doctour & executor of chaſtity, humilitie, pietie and other vertues: whē he was deliuered out of priſon & ſeruitude was ſhauen: wherby it appeareth that whilſt he abode in priſō he was vnſhauen. Behold both theſe being men of god did vſe an order in the habite of their body one contrary to the other, whoſe conſciences notwithſtanding within did wel agree in the like grace of vertues. But to ſpeake truely and frely the difference of ſhauing hurteth not ſuch as haue a pure faith in the Lord, & ſincere charity, towardes their neighbor: eſpecially for that there was neuer any controuerſie amongſt the Catholike fathers about the diuerſitie thereof, as there hath beene of the difference of the celebration of Eaſter and of faith. But of all theſe ſhauinges that wee fynde either in the Churche or els where: there is none in mine opinion ſo much to be followed & embraced, as that which he vſed on his head, to whō the Lord ſaid, thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will builde my Church and the gates of hel ſhall not preuaile againſt it, & I will gyue thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. And contrarywiſe there is no ſhauing ſo much to be abhorred and deteſted as that which he vſed to whom the ſame S. Peter ſaid, thy money bee with thee to thy deſtruction, becauſe thou thinkeſt to poſſeſſe the gift of God by thy money, therefore thy part nor lot is not in this worde. Neither ought we to bee ſhauen on the crowne onely becauſe Saint Peter was ſo ſhauen, but becauſe Peter was ſo ſhauen, in the remembraunce of the Lords Paſſion: therfore we that deſire by yͤ ſame Paſſion to be ſaued, muſt weare the ſigne of the ſame paſſion with him vpon the top of our head which is the higheſt part of our body. For as euery Church that is made a Church by the death of the Sauiour, doth vſe to beare the ſigne of the holy croſſe in the front: that it maye the better by the defence of that banner, bee kept from the inuaſions of euill ſpirits: & by the often admonition thereof, is taught to crucifie the fleſh, with the concupiſcence of the ſame: In like maner it behoueth ſuch as haue yͤ vowes of Monkes and degrees of the Clergy, to bind them ſelues with a ſtraiter bit of continencie for the Lords ſake. And as the Lord bare a crowne of thorne on his head in his paſſion, wherby he toke & caried away from vs the thornes and prickes of our ſinnes: ſo muſt euery one of vs by ſhauing our heads, patiently beare and willinglye ſuffer, the mockes and ſcorners of the worlde for his ſake: That wee may receaue the crowne of eternall life, which God hath promiſed to all that loue him, & ſhall by ſhauing their corporal crownes beare the aduerſity, & contemne the proſperity of this worlde. But the ſhauing which Symon Magus vſed, what faithful man doth not deteſt together with his magicall arte? The which at the firſt apparance hath a ſhew of a ſhauen crowne, but if you marke his necke, you ſhal finde it curtailed in ſuch wiſe as you will ſay it is rather meete to be vſed of the Symoniſtes then of the Chriſtians. And ſuch (of fooliſhe men) be thought worthye of the glory of the eternall crowne, whereas indede for their yll liuing they are worthy not only to be depriued of the ſame but alſo of eternall ſaluation. I ſpeak not this againſt thē that vſe this kinde of ſhauing, & liue Catholikely in fayth and good workes, but ſurely I beleeue there be diuers of them be very holy and godly men. Amongſt the which is Adamnan, the Abbot and worthy Prieſt of the Columbians: who when he came Embaſſadour from his country vnto king Alfride deſired greatly to ſee our Monaſtery: where he declared a wonderful wiſedowe, humilitie and Religiō both in his maners and wordes. Amongeſt other talke I aſked him why he, that did beleue to come to the crown of life yͭ ſhould neuer haue end, did vſe contrary to his belief a definite Image of a crowne on his head. And if you ſeke (quoth I) the felowſhip of S. Peter, why doe you vſe the faſhion of his crowne whom S. Peter did accurſe, and not of his rather with whom you deſire to liue eternally? Adanā anſwered ſaying: you know right well brother though I vſe Symons maner of ſhauing, after the cuſtome of my country, yet doe I deteſt & with all my heart abhorre hys infidelitie. I deſire notwithſtanding to imitate the footeſteps of the holy Apoſtle as far forth as my power wil extend. Then ſaid I: I beleeue it is ſo. But then is it apparaunt you imitate thoſe thinges which the Apoſtle Peter did frō the bottom of your hart, if you vſe the ſame vpon your face that you know he did. For I ſuppoſe your wiſedome vnderſtandeth that it is right decent, to differ in the triming your face or ſhauing, frō his whom in your hart you abhorre. And cōtrariwiſe as you deſire to imitate the doings of him whom you deſire to haue a * mediator betweene God & you, ſo it is meete you imitate the maner of his apparell and ſhauing. Thus much ſaide I, to Adamnan, who ſeemed then well to like our Churches: in ſo much that he returning into Scotland, reformed many of his churches there, after our celebratiō, albeit he could not do ſo amongſt the Monks, with whom he had ſpecial authority. He endeuoured alſo to haue reformed their maner of ſhauing if he had bene able. And nowe (O King) I exhort your maieſtie to labor together with your people (ouer whom the King of Kinges and Lorde of Lordes hath made you gouernor, to imitate likewiſe in all theſe points the Catholicke and Apoſtolical churches. So ſhall it come to paſſe that in the end of this your temporall kingdome yͤ moſt bleſſed prince of the Apoſtles ſhall opē you the gates of the heauenly kingdome together with the other elect of god. The grace of the eternal king preſerue you moſt derely beloued ſonne in Chriſt long time to reigne ouer vs to the great tranquility of vs all.

The copy of a Monkiſh letter of Colfride to King Naiton for the ſhauing of Prieſtes crownes.

How proueth he that the Apoſtles Iob and Ioſeph were ſhauen. Much ſayd, nothing proued.

Diuerſitie of rites hurteth not the Church. See how theſe ſhauelinges would father their ſhauing vpon Peter, which is neyther found in Scripture, nor in any approued ſtory, but onely in paynted clothes.

Why Prieſtes and Monkes be ſhauen in the crowne. The ſhauing of the crowne what it repreſenteth. How doth the ſigne of the croſſe defend Churches from euill ſpirites, when it cannot keepe them from euill Prieſtes?

If ſhauing of the crown doth teach men patience in ſuffering how commeth it that we ſee none more waſhpiſh and irefull then theſe ſhorne generations, of Monkiſh vipers.

Simon Ma-gus ſhauen as he ſayth.

The difference betweene the ſhauing of Peter and Simon Magus.

In outward habite chriſtians ought not to reſemble wicked doers.

*There is but one mediator betweene God and man Chriſt Ieſus.

The Scottiſh monkes and the Engliſhe monkes differed in their ſhauing.

If Peter ſhall let in the elect of God into heauen, Chriſt then ſerueth in little ſtede.

When this letter was read before king Nayton wyth other of his learned men, and diligentlye tranſlated into his proper language, he ſemed to reioyce very much at the exhortation therof, inſomuch as riſing vp from among his noble men, he kneled on the ground and gaue God thankes that he had deſerued to receaue ſo worthye a preſente out of England, & ſo cauſed it forthwith by publike proclamation to be writen out, learned, & obſerued throught out all the prouinces of the Pictes, defacing the errours that had bene vſed there by the ſpace of 700. and 4. yeares. For all the miniſters of the altar & all Monkes, were ſhauen, on the crowne. And al the people reioiced for the new dyſcipline of the moſt bleſſed Prince of the Apoſtles, S. Peter which they had receaued.

¶ By this monkiſh letter aboue prefixed, voide of all Scripture, of all probation & truth of hiſtory, thou maieſt note gentle Reader: howe this vaine tradition of ſhauen crownes hath come vp, & vpon how light and trifling occaſion: which in very deede was none other but the dreaming phantaſies of Monkes of that tyme, falſely grounding vpon the example of Peter: when by no olde monument of any auntient record they can euer proue, either Peter or Symon Magus to haue bene ſhauen. Moreouer in the ſaid leter alſo is to be noted, how the Scottiſh Clergy at that ſeaſon, did weare no ſuch Prieſtly crownes, as our Engliſh Churchmen then did.

A note to admoniſh the reader.

But to cut of this matter of ſhauing, more worthy to be laught at thē to be ſtoried, let vs now againe returne whereas we left at king Iue, of whom W. Malmesbery, and Fabian in his chronicle do record that whē the foreſaide Iue had ruled the weſt ſaxons by yͤ tearme of 37. yeares, by the importunate perſwaſion, and ſubtile policie of his wife Ethelburga, was allured to go to Rome, & there to be made a Monke, which Ethelburga after ſhe had a long tyme laboured vouted him to leaue the world, and could not bring about her purpoſe: vpon a ſeaſon when the king and ſhe had reſted them in a faire pallace richly behanged, & were vpon the morow thence departed: ſhe by her commaundement cauſed the pallace to be repleniſhed with all kinde of filth & dong, and hogs and vile beaſts therin to be layd, as wel in the chambers as other houſes of office. And in theyr owne chamber where they did lye, there was a Sow laid with her yong pigs. And when ſhe knew that this palace was thus deformed, being a certain ſpace out of the town, ſhe beſought the king to viſite the ſaid pallace. And when ſhe had brought him therunto, ſhe ſaid to him: I pray you my Lord behold now this houſe, where are now the rich tappets and clothes of gold & ſilke, and other rich apparel, that we left here this other day? And where be the delicacies & pleaſant ſeruitors, and coſtly diſhes, that you and I lately were ſerued with? Be not all theſe paſſed & gone? My Lord (ſaith ſhe) in like maner ſhall we vaniſh away, as ſodainly as you ſee theſe worldly things bene paſſed. And our bodies which now be delicately kept, ſhal fal and turne into the filth of the earth. wherefore haue in mynde my wordes that before tyme to you I haue often ſhewed & told, and buſie you to purchaſe that palace that euer ſhal endure in ioy without tranſmutation.

The crafty head of a woman.

King Iue reſigning hys kingdome, went to Rome and became a Monke.

By meane of theſe wordes and other, the Queene turned ſo the kings mynd, that ſhortly after he reſigned the gouernance of his kingdom vnto Ethelardus his nephew: & for the loue of Chriſt tooke vpon him the habite of a poore man. And ſetting apart all the pompe & pride of this wicked world, aſſociated himſelf in the felowſhip of poore men, and trauailed to Rome with great deuotion, when he had bene king of weſtſaxons, as before is ſayd 37. yeares. After whoſe departing, the foreſaid Ethelburga his wife, went vnto Barking 7. miles from London, where in the Nunry of Barking before of Erkenwald founded, ſhe continued & ended the reſt of her life, when ſhe had bene Abbes of the place a certaine time. The ſaid Malmesbery in his ſtory alſo teſtifieth, that this Iue was the firſt king that granted a peny of euery fire houſe through his dominion to be paid vnto the Court of Rome, which afterward was called Romeſcot, or Peter pence, & long after was paid in many places of England.

Ethelburga the Queene made Nūne of Barking.

Peter pence firſt graunted and payd to Rome.

The lawes made by King Iue to his people.

This Iue, like as for his time, he was worthy and valiaunt in his actes: ſo was he the firſt of the Saxon kings (that I read of) which ſet forth any lawes to his country: the reherſall of which lawes, to the number of 80. & odde, were not vnprofitable here to be inſerted together with other lawes of the weſtſaxon kings after him, before the tyme of William Conquerour: in caſe it were not for the length & prolixitie of this preſent volume. And thus much concerning the raigne of king Iue, king of weſtſaxons by the way. Now to repaire againe to the courſe of Northumberland kings ſomething intermitted.

The life of Bede, briefly deſcribed.

And for as much as I haue here entred into the mention of Bede, a man of worthy and venerable memory, becauſe of the certifiyng of the truth of that man: and for that I ſee all writers (as touching his life) do not agree, ſome ſaying that he was no Engliſhman borne: I thought ſo much to report of him, as I finde by his owne words teſtified of himſelfe in the latter end of his eccleſiaſtical hiſtory of England, offred to the ſaid Celulſus aboue mentioned the wordes of whom be theſe.

Thus much by the helpe of God, I Bede the ſeruant of Chriſt, and Prieſt of the Monaſtery of Peter and Paule at Wire, haue compiled and digeſted concerning the Britain hiſtory. And ſo the ſame Bede proceding further in his narration, declareth that he being borne in the territorie of the ſayd Monaſtery, beyng of the age of vij. yeares, was committed of his parents and friends, to the tuition and conducation of Benedict (of whom aboue relation is made) and of Celfride Abbots of the foreſaid Monaſtery. In the which place or Monaſtery he continuyng, from that tyme forth, all his lyfe long, gaue hymſelfe and all his whole ſtudy to the meditating of holy ſcripture. Whatſoeuer tyme or laiſure he had frō his daily ſeruice in the church, that he ſpent either in learning, or in teaching, or writing ſomthing. About xix. yeares of his age, he was made Deacon, the xxx. yeare of his age he was made prieſt. From the which time to the age of 59. yeares, he occupied himſelf in interpreting the workes of the auncient fathers for his owne vſe, and the neceſſitie of others: and in writing of treatiſes, which came in all to the number of 37. volumes, which he digeſted into 78. bookes.

This Benedict maiſter to Bede, was the firſt that brought in the vſe of glaſſe windowes into England. Alſo the ſayd Benet broght from Rome with him Iohn the Archaunter, who firſt taught in England to ſing in the quire after the maner of Rome.

Some ſay that he went to Rome, either there to defend his bookes to be conſonant to catholike doctrine: either els if they ſhould be found faulty, to amend & correct the ſame, as he ſhould thereto be commaunded. Albeit the reporter of this his life dare not certainly affirme that euer he was at Rome: but that he was inuited and called thether to come: both it is manifeſt in ſtories, and alſo this Epiſtle of Pope Sergius doth ſufficiently proue, declaryng moreouer in what price and eſtimation Bede was accompted, as wel in the court of Rome, as in other places beſides. The famous learning of Bede.

So notable and famous was the learning of this foreſayd Bede, that the Church of Rome (as by this letter appeareth) both ſtood in need of his helpe, and alſo requireth the ſame, about the diſcuſſing of certaine cauſes and controuerſies appertaining to learning. Moreouer the whole Latin church at that time, gaue him the maiſterie in iudgement and knowledge of the holy Scripture. In all his explanations his chiefeſt ſcope and purpoſe did euer driue, to inſtruct and informe his Reader ſimplely and without all curiouſnes of ſtile, in the ſincere loue of god, & of his neighbour. As touching the holynes and integritie of his life, it is not to be doubted: for how could it be, that he ſhould attend to any vicious idlenes, or had any laiſure to the ſame, who in reading & digeſting ſo many volumes, conſumed all his whole cogitations in writing vpon the ſcriptures: for ſo he teſtifieth of himſelfe in the 3. booke vpon Samuel, ſaying in theſe wordes. If my treatiſes and expoſitions, ſaith he, bring with them no other vtilitie to the Readers therof: yet to my ſelfe they conduce not a little in this, that while all my ſtudy and cogitatiō was ſet vpon them, in the meane while of the ſlipperie intiſements and vayne cogitations of this world I had little mynd. Thus in this trauail of ſtudy he continued til the age of 62. yeres. At length drawyng to his latter end, beyng ſicke vij. wekes togither beſides other occupiyngs of his mynde, and other ſtudies which he did not intermit: he tranſlated alſo the goſpell of S. Iohn into Engliſh. At length with great comfort of ſpirite departed this lyfe, pronouncyng many comfortable ſayings to them that ſtood about him, vpon the Aſcenſion day, the ſame yeare when Nothelmus was inſtituted Archbiſhop of Caunterbury. And thus much concernyng the ſtory of Bede.

Bede commended for integritie of lyfe.

Celulfus of a King made a Monke.

This Celulfus king of Northumberland afore mentioned, after he had raigned viij. yeares was made a Monke in the Abbey of Farne, otherwiſe called Lindeſfar, or holy Iland: where by his meanes licence was geuen to the monkes of that houſe to drinke wyne or ale, which before by the inſtitution of Aidanus aboue mentioned, dronke nothing but milke and water. After whom ſucceded Egbert his coſin, brother to Egbert (the ſame tyme beyng biſhop of Yorke) which brought againe thether the palle that hys pre-predeceſſors had forgone, ſince the tyme that Paulinus had left the ſea, & fled to Rocheſter, as is before declared. The ſaid Egbert alſo erected a noble Library in Yorke, whoſe example I would other biſhops now would follow.

About the beginning of the raigne of this Egbert, was Cutbert Archbiſhop of Caunterbury: who collected a great Synode of Biſhops and Prelates, in the yere of our Lord, 747. in the month of September, neare to the place called Cloneſho. In the which Synode aſſembled, theſe decrees were enacted.

Anno. 747.

Ex Malmeſb. lib. de geſtis pontifi. Anglo. Cutbert. Archbiſhop of Caunterbury.

3. That euery Biſhop once a yere ſhould go about al the Pariſhes of his Dioces.
4. That the ſaid Biſhops euery one in his dioces ſhould moniſh their Abbots & monks to liue regularly: and that Prelates ſhould not oppreſſe their inferiors, but loue thē.

6. That none ſhould be admitted to orders, before his life ſhould be examined.
7. That in Monaſteries the reading of holy Scripture ſhould be more frequented.
8. That Prieſts ſhould be no diſpoſers of ſecular buſines.
9. That they ſhould take no mony for baptiſing infants.
10. That they ſhoulde both learne and teache the Lordes Prayer and Crede in the Engliſh toung.
11. That all ſhould ioyne together in their miniſtery after one vniforme rite and maner.
12. That in a modeſt voice they ſhould ſing in the church.
13. That all holy and feſtiuall dayes ſhould be celebrate at one time together.
14. That the Sabboth day be reuerently obſerued & kept.
15. That the vij. houres Canonical euery day be obſerued.
16. That the Rogation dayes both the greater and leſſer ſhould not be omitted.
17. That the feaſt of S. Gregory, and S. Auſten our Patron, ſhould be obſerued.
18. That the faſt of the foure times ſhoulde be kept and obſerued.
19. That Monkes and Nunnes ſhould go regularly apparelled.
20. That Byſhops ſhould ſee, theſe decrees not to be neglected.
21. That the Churchmen ſhould not geue them ſelues to dronkenneſſe.
22. That the Communion ſhould not be neglected of the Churchmen.
23. Item, that the ſame alſo ſhould be obſerued of the laye men, as time required.
24. That lay men firſt ſhoulde be well tried, before they entred in Monkerie.
25. That almes be not neglected.
26. That Byſhops ſhould ſee theſe decrees to be notified to the people.
27. They diſputed of the profite of Almes.
28. They diſputed of the profite of ſinging Pſalmes.
29. That the Congregation ſhoulde be conſtitute, after their habilitie of their goodes.
30. That Monkes ſhould not dwell among lay men.
31. That publike prayer ſhould be made for kinges and Princes.

The rogation dayes had not then that ſuperſtition in them as they had afterward.

Boniface an Engliſh man Archb. of Mentz.

Theſe decrees and ordinaunces beyng thus among the Biſhops concluded: Cutbert the Archbiſhop, ſendeth the copy therof to Boniface, whiche Boniface otherwiſe named Winfride an Engliſh man borne, was than the Archbiſhop of Mentz, and after made a Martyr, as the Popiſh ſtories terme him.

Ethelwold kyng of Merceland.

This Boniface being, as is ſayd, Archbiſhop of Mentz in the time of this foreſayd Synode, wrote a letter to Ethelbald king of Merceland: which Ethelbald was alſo preſent in the ſame Synode, of whome Bede maketh mention in his hiſtorie, calling him proude Ethelbald, and the greateſt of the Saxon kinges in his time. Firſt this Ethelbald after the departing of Ceolulphe into his Monkerie, inuaded and ſpoiled the countrey of Northumberland. Moreouer he exerciſed mortall and horrible warre a long ſpace wyth Cudred, otherwiſe of ſome named Cutbert, King of weſtſaxons. Furthermore he with other Saxon kings, ſo impugned the Britains, that from that time they neuer durſt prouoke the Saxons any more. At length the ſaid Cudred refuſing the intollerable exactions of proud Ethelbald, doth incounter with him in battaile: where notwythſtanding the great power that Ethelbald had to him adioyned, of the Mercians, of the Eaſtſaxons, of the Eaſtangles, and of Cantuarites: yet the ſaide Cudred through Gods power, and the meanes of a certaine valiant warriour called Edelhim a Conſul, ouerthrewe the pride of Ethelbald, after a ſore and terrible cōflict. which Ethelbald notwithſtanding repairing his power againe the next yeare after, renued battaile with the foreſayd Cudred. In the which battaile Ethelbald after hee had raigned xli. yeares in Mercia, was ſlaine by one Beornered, who after raigned in that dition but a ſmal tyme. For Offa nephew to the ſayd Ethelbald expulſed the ſayd Beornered, and ſucceeded king in that prouince of Mercia, where he raigned xxxix. yeares, of whom more followeth hereafter (the Lord Jeſu ſpeeding therein our purpoſe) to be declared as place and time ſhal require. In the meane ſeaſon not to forget the letter before mentioned of Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz, ſent vnto thys Ethelbald: I thought the ſame not vnworthy here to be inſerted (at the leaſt the effect thereof) not ſo much for the authors ſake, as for that ſome good matter peraduenture may be picked thereout, for other Princes to behold & conſider.

Edelhim a ſtrong a valiaunt warriour. Pride ou throwne.

A letter of Boniface, otherwiſe called Winfride ſent to kyng Ethelbald.

Regi & filio chariſsimo, & in Chriſti amore cæteris regibus Anglorum præferendo Ethelbaldo, Bonifacius Archiepiſcopus legatus Germanicus Romanæ Eccleſiæ perpetuam in Chriſto charitatis ſalutem. Confiſtemus coram Deo, qui nouit an verè atque ex animo dicam: Quando proſperitatem veſtram, & fidem, & bona opera audimus, lætamur. Quando autem aliquid aduerſum vel in euentu bellorum, vel de periculo animarum de vobis cognoſcimus, triſtamur. Audiuimus enim quòd eleemoſinis intentus, furta & rapinas prohibes, & pacem diligis, & defenſor viduarum & pauperum es, & inde gratias Deo agimus. Quòd verò legitimum matrimonium ſpernis, ſi pro caſtitate faceres, eſſet laudabile. Sed quia in luxu & adulterio & cum ſanctimonialibus volutaris, eſt vituperabile, & damnabile. Nam & famam gloriæ veſtræ, coram Deo & hominibus confundit, & inter idololatras cōſtituit, quia templum Dei violaſti. Quapropter fili Chariſſime pœnitere, & memorare oportet, quàm turpe ſit, vt tu qui multis gentib⁹, dono dei, dominaris, ad iniuriā eius ſis libidinis ſeruus. Audiuimus præterea quòd optimates penè omnes gentis Merciorum, tuo exemplo legitimas vxores deſerant, & adulteras & ſanctimoniales conſtuprent. Quod quàm ſit peregrinum ab honeſtate, doceat vos alienæ gentis inſtitutio. Nam in antiqua Saxonia, vbi nulla eſt Chriſti cognitio: ſi virgo in materna domo, vel maritata, ſub coniuge fuerit adultera, manu propria ſtrangulatam cremant, & ſupra foſſa ſepultæ corruptorem ſuſpendunt, aut cingulo tenus (veſtibus abſciſſis) flagellant eam caſtæ matronæ, & cultellis pungunt. Et de villa in villam miſſæ occurrunt nouæ flagellatrices: donec interimant. Inſuper & vinuli, quod eſt fœdiſsimum genus hominum, hunc habent morem vt mulier viro mortuo, ſe in rogo cremantis pariter arſura præcipitet. Si ergo gentiles Deum ignorantes, tantum zelum caſtitatis habent: quid tibi conuenit fili Chariſsime, qui Chriſtianus & rex es? Parce ergo animæ tuæ: Parce multitudini populi tui pereūtis exemplo tuo: de quorum animabus redditurus es rationem. Attende & illud, quid ſi gens Anglorum (ſicut in Francia, & Italia, & ab ipſis Paganis nobis improperatur) ſpretis legitimis matrimonijs per adulteria deficit: naſcituraq; ſit ex ea commixtione gens ignaua & Dei contemptrix, quæ perditis moribus patriam peſſundet: ſicut Burgundionibus & prouincialibus, & Hiſpanis contigit, quos Saraceni multis annis infeſtarunt propter peccata præterita? Præterea nunciatum eſt nobis, quòd multa priuilegia Eccleſiarum & monaſteriorum auferens, ad hoc audendū duces tuos exemplo prouoces. Sed recogita quæſo quàm terribilem vindictam Deus in anteriores reges exercuit, eiuſdem culpæ conſcios, quam in te arguimus. Nam Celredum prædeceſſorem tuum ſtupratorem Sanctimonialium, & eccleſiaſticorum priuilegiorum fractorem, ſplendidè cum ſuis comitibus epulantem ſpiritus malignus arripuit: & ſine confeſsione & viatico, cum diabolo ſermocinanti, & legem Dei deteſtanti animam extorſit. Oſredum quoq; regem Deiorum & Bernicorum, earundem culparum reum, ita effrenatum regem egit: vt regnum & iuuenilem ætatem contemptibili morte amitteret. Carolus quoq; princeps Francorum monaſteriorum multorum euerſor, & Eccleſiaſticarū pecuniarum in vſus proprios commutator, longa tortione, & verenda morte conſumptus eſt. Et mox infra: Quapropter fili Chariſsime, paternis & obnixis precibus deprecamur, vt non deſpicias conſilium patrum tuorum, qui pro Dei amore celſitudinem tuam appellare ſatagunt. Nihil enim bono regi ſalubrius, quàm, ſi talia commiſſa cum arguuntur, libenter emendentur. Quia per Salomonem dicitur: Qui diligit diſciplinam, diligit ſapientiam. Ideo, fili Chariſsime, oſtendentes conſilium iuſtum, conteſtamur

Nihil factum quod non factum prius.

& obſecramus per viuentem Deum & per filium eius Ieſum Chriſtum, & per ſpiritum ſanctum, vt recorderis quàm fugitiua ſit vita præſens; & quam breuis & momentanea delectatio ſpurcę carnis: & quam ignominioſum ſit, vt breuis vitæ homo mala exempla in perpetuum poſteris relinquat. Incipe ergo melioribus moribus vitam cōponere, & præteritos errores iuuentutis corrigere: vt hic coram hominibus laudem habeas, & in futuro æterna gloria gaudeas. Valere celſitudinem tuam, & in bonis moribus proficere optamus.

The corrupt lyfe of Nunnes noted.

In this Epiſtle here is to be ſeene and noted, firſt the corruption and great diſorder of lyfe, which alwayes from tyme to tyme hath bene found in theſe religious houſes of Nunnes, whoſe profeſſed vow of coacted chaſtitie, hath yet neuer bene good to the Church, nor profitable to the common wealth, and leaſt of all to themſelues. Of ſuch yong & wanton widowes, S. Paul in his tyme complayneth, 1. Tim. 5. which would take vpon them the wilfull profeſſion of ſingle lyfe, which they were not able to perform, but falling into damnable luxurie deſerued worthily to be reprehended. How much better had it bene for theſe laſciuious Nunnes not to haue refuſed the ſafe yoke of chriſtian matrimonie, then to intangle themſelues in this their ſuperſtitious vow of perpetuall maidēhood, which neither was required of them, nor they were able to keepe.

The popiſh actes and doynges of Boniface Archbiſhop of Maguncе.

Secondly, no leſſe are they alſo to be reprehēded, which maintayned theſe ſuperſtitious orders of vnprofitable Nunnes and of other religions: In the number of whom was this forеſayd Boniface otherwiſe called Winfride, who although in this epiſtle doeth iuſtly reprehend the vicious enormities both of ſecular, and of religious perſons: yet he him ſelf is not without the ſame or rather greater reprehēſion, for that hee gaue the occaſion thereof in maintaining ſuch ſuperſtitious orders of ſuch laſciuious Nunnes and other religions, & reſtraining the ſame from lawful mariage. For ſo we finde of him in ſtories that hee was a great ſetter vp & vpholder of ſuch blinde ſuperſtition, and of all Poperie. who being admitted by Pope Gregory the ſecōd, Archbiſhop of Maguncе, and indued wt full authoritie legantine ouer the Germanes, brought diuers countreys there, vnder the Popes obedience: held many great Coūcels, ordained Biſhops, builded Monaſteries, canoniſed Saints, commaunded reliques to be worſhipped, permitted religious fathers to cary about Nunnes with them a preaching. Amongſt all other he founded the great monaſtery of Fulda in Germany of Engliſh monkes: into the which no women might enter, but only Lieba, & Tecla, two Engliſh Nunnes. Item, by the authoritie of ye ſaid Archbiſhop Boniface, which he receiued frō Pope Zacharie, Childericus king of Fraunce, was depoſed from the right of his crowne: and Pipinus betraier of his maiſter was cōfirmed, or rather intruded in. From this Boniface proceeded that deteſtable doctrine which now ſtandeth regiſtred in the Popes decrees, Diſt. 40. cap. Si Papa which in a certaine Epiſtle of his, is this. That in caſe the Pope were of moſt filthy liuing, and forgetfull or negligent of himſelfe, and of the whole chriſtianitie, in ſuch ſort, that he led innumerable ſoules with him to hell: yet ought there no man to rebuke him in ſo doing. For he hath (ſaith he) power to iudge all men, and ought of no man to be iudged agayne.

In the tyme of this Archbiſhop, Pope Gregory the ſecond, alſo Gregory the third, and Pope Zachary, and before theſe alſo Pope Conſtantine the firſt: wrought great maiſteries againſt the Greeke Emperours, Philippicus, & Leo, and others, for the maintaining of Images to be ſet vp in Churches. Of whom Philippicus loſt both his Empire and alſo his eyes. Leo for the ſame cauſe likewiſe was excommunicate of Gregory the third. This Gregory the third (ſo farre as I can coniecture) was he that firſt wrote the foure bookes of Dialogues in Greeke, falſely bearyng the name of Gregory the firſt, which bookes afterward Zachary hys ſucceſſour tranſlated out of Greeke into Latin. Item, the ſame Gregory the third, firſt brought into the Maſſe Canō, the clauſe for reliques beginning, Quorum ſolemnitates hodie in conſpectu, &c. Item, brought into the ſayd Canon the memoriall, the offring, and ſacrifice for the dead: Lyke as Zachary brought in the Prieſts veſture and ornaments: & as the foreſaid Conſtantinus alſo was the firſt that gaue his feete to be kiſſed of the Emperours. Segebert king of Weſtſaxons.

In the tyme of this Egbert king of Northumberland, Sigebert or Sigbert raigned in Weſtſaxony: a man of ſo cruell tyranny to his ſubiectes (turning the lawes & cuſtoms of his forefathers after his owne will and pleaſure) that when he was ſomewhat ſharpely aduertiſed by one of his nobles, an Earle called Combranus, to chaūge his maners, and to behaue him more prudently toward his people, he therfore maliciouſly cauſed him to be put to cruell death: whereupon, the ſayd king Sigebert continuing in his cruell conditions, by his ſubiectes conſpyring agaynſt hym, was put from his kingly dignity: and brought into ſuche deſolation, that wandring alone in a wood without comfort, was there ſlayne euen by the ſwineheard of the ſayd Earle, whom before he had ſo wrongfully murdered, as partly is aboue touched: whereby is to be ſeene, the cruell tyranny of Princes neuer to proſper well, without the iuſt reuenge both of God and man.

Offa King of Mercia.

Moreouer in the raigne of the foreſayd Egbert kyng of Northumberland, and in the viij. yeare of Kenulphus king of Weſtſaxons: Offa after he had ſlayne the tyraunt Beoruredus, which before had ſlayne Ethelwald kyng of Mercia, and Uncle to this foreſayde Offa: raigned King of that Prouince.

Of this Offa are told many notable deedes, which becauſe they concerne rather politicall affaires, and doe not greatly appertayne to the purpoſe of this eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, I omit here to recite. As his warres and victories againſt Egbert & the Northumbres, as alſo againſt Etheldred king of Eaſt Angles. Item, againſt Egbert king of Kent, otherwiſe called Wren, whom Fabian ſaith he tooke priſoner, & led him bound with him to Mercia. Malmeſbury witneſſeth otherwiſe, this to be done not by Offa, but by Kenulphus, as Chriſt willing hereafter ſhall appeare. After theſe victories Offa had ſuch diſpleaſure vnto the Citizens of Canterbury, that he remoued the Archbiſhops ſea, and landes of Lambrith Archbiſhop of Caunterbury (by the agreement of Pope Adrian) vnto Lichfield. He alſo chaſed the Britaines or Welchmen into Wales, and made a famous dyke betwene Wales and the vtter bonds of Mercia or middle England, which was called Offditche. And builded there a Church which long tyme after was called Offekyrke. This Offa alſo married one of his daughters to Brightricus that was king of Weſtſaxons. And for that in his tyme was variance betwene him and the Frenchmen, in ſo much that the paſſage of merchants was forbidden: therfore he ſent Alcuinus a learned man, vnto Charles the great, then king of France, to common the meanes of peace: which Charles had after that, ye ſaid Alcuinus in great fauour and eſtimation, and afterward made him Abbot of Turonia in Fraunce.

Ethelbert king of Eaſtangles wrongfully murdered by Offa.

About the latter tyme of the raigne of Offa, kyng of Mercia: Ethelbert beyng then kyng of Eaſtangles (a learned and a right godly Prince) came to the Court of Offa: prouoked by the counſell of his Nobles, to ſue for the mariage of his daughter, wel accompanied like a prince, with his men about him. Wherupon, the Queene conceiuyng a falſe ſuſpicion, and fearing that which was neuer minded: that Ethelbert with his company vnder the pretence and made matter of mariage, was come to worke ſome violence againſt her huſband, and the kingdom of Mercia, ſo ſhe perſwaded with king Offa: and certaine of her counſel that night: that the next day followyng, Offa cauſed him to be trayned into his pallace alone from his company, by one called Guymbertus: who tooke him and bound him, & there ſtroke of his head, which forthwith he thē preſented to the king & Queene. And thus the innocent king Ethelbert was wrongfully murthered, about the yeare of our Lord, 793. but not without a iuſt reuenge at Gods hand. For as the ſtory recordeth, the foreſayd Queene worker of this villanie, liued not iij. monthes after: and in her death was ſo tormented, that ſhe was fayne to bite and rent her tong in pieces with her owne teeth. Offa vnderſtanding at length the innocencie of this king, and the haynous cruelty of his fact: gaue the teth part of his goods to holy church and to the church of Hereford, in remembraunce of this Ethelbert, he beſtowed great landes. Moreouer, builded the Abbey of S. Albons, with certayne other monaſteries beſide. And ſo afterward he went vp to Rome for his penāce, where he gaue to the Church of S. Peter a peny through euery houſe in his dominion, which was called commōly Romeſhot, or Peter pence, payed to the Church of S. Peter: and there at length was transformed from a king to a monke, about the yeare of our Lord. 794. with Kenredus

Egfretus King of Mercia.

After Offa king of Mercia, when he had raigned xxxix. yeares ſucceded his ſonne Egfretus, who raigned but foure monthes: of whome thus writeth the foreſayd Alcuinus: Non arbitror quòd nobiliſsimus iuuenis Egfretus, propter peccata ſua mortuus ſit: Sed quia pater ſuus, pro confirmatione regni eius multum ſanguinem effudit, &c. That is: This noble yong man died not ſo much for offences of his owne, as for that his father had ſpilled much bloud, to confirme him in his kingdome.

Next to which Egfretus, ſucceded Kenulphus in the ſaid kyngdome of Mercia, which Kenulphus keping and retaining the hatred of Offa his predeceſſor againſt the Cantuarites, made warre againſt them: where he toke Egbert their king otherwiſe called Wren, whom he bound and led priſoner to Mercia. Notwithſtanding, ſhortly after being mollified with princely clemency in the towne of Winchcombe, where he had builded the ſame tyme a church: vpō the day when he ſhould dedicate the ſame in the preſence of xiij. biſhops, and of Cutbert, whom he had placed in yͤ ſame kingdom of Canterbury before, and x. Dukes, and many other great eſtates. Kyng Kenulphus brought the ſayd Egbert king of Kent out of priſon into the Church, where he enlarged him of impriſonment, and reſtored hym to his place agayne. At the ſight whereof, not onely Cutbert the foreſayd king reioyced, but alſo all the eſtates and people beyng there preſent, made ſuch an exclamation of ioy and gladnes, that the church, (and not onely the Church, but alſo the ſtreetes) range withall. At which tyme ſuch bountifulnes of gifts and iewels was then beſtowed, that from the higheſt eſtate to the loweſt, none departed without ſomthing geuē, according as to euery degree was thought meete. Although Fabian referreth this ſtory to king Offa, yet cauſes there be, why I aſſent rather to Malmesbury and to Polychronicon, which attribute the ſame to Kenulphus the ſecond king of Mercia, after Offa.

A place of Fabian doubted.

A little before in ſpeaking of certain biſhops of Rome, mention was made of Pope Conſtantine the firſt, Pope Gregory the ſecond, Pope Gregory the third, & of Pope Zachary, which depoſed Childerike, & ſet vp Pipinus the French king, &c. Next after this Zachary, in order followed Pope Stephen the ſecond, to whom the foreſayd Pipinus to gratifie agayne the ſea of Rome for this their benefite ſhewed to him, gaue and contributed to the ſaid ſea of Rome, the exarchat or Princedome of Rauenna, the kingdome of the Lombardes, and many other great poſſeſſions of Italie, with all the Cities thereto adioyning vnto the borders of Venice. And this donation of Pipine, no doubt if the truth were rightly tried, ſhould be found to be the ſame, which hitherto falſly hath bene thought to be the donatiō of Conſtantine. For els how could it be, that the exarchate of Rauenna could belong all this while to the Emperours of Conſtantinople, if Conſtantine before had geuen it and all Italy from the Empire to the ſea of Rome?

Pope Steuen the ſecond.

The donation of Pipinus falſely taken to be the donation of Conſtantine.

To this Pipinus, as witneſſeth Polychronicon, was ſent firſt into France, the inuention of the Organs out of Grecia, by Conſtantine Emperour of Conſtant. 757.

Ex polycr. lib. 5. cap. 25.

Next to this Stephen the ij. ſucceded Paule the firſt, who following his predeceſſors, thundred out great excōmunications againſt Conſtantinus the Emperor of Conſtantinople, for abrogating and plucking downe Images ſet vp in Temples. Notwithſtandyng this Conſtantine neglecting the Popes vaine curſes perſeuered in his bleſſed purpoſe, in deſtroying Idolatry till the end of his lyfe. Then came to be Pope, Conſtantinus the ſecond a lay man, and brother to Deſiderius the king of Lombardy: for the which cauſe he was ſhortly depoſed, and thruſt into a monaſtery, hauing his eyes put out.

Pope Paule the firſt. Images agayne mayntayned by the Pope agaynſt the Emperour. A lay man pope who was depoſed, and had hys eyes put out.

In whoſe ſtead ſucceded Stephen the iij. who ordained that after that, no lay man ſhould be Pope: condemnyng moreouer the councel of Conſtantinople the vij. for hereticall, becauſe in that councell the worſhipping of Images was remoued and condemned. Contrary to the which Councell, this Pope not only maintained the filthy Idolatry of Images in Chriſtian Temples, but alſo aduaunced their veneration, commaunding them moſt Ethnically to be incenſed, &c. At this tyme Carolus Magnus called Charles the great a little before mentioned, began to raign, by whom this Pope cauſed Deſiderius the Lombard king, to be depriued.

Pope Steuen the third. The counſell of Conſtantinople the 7. condemned of the Pope, for condemning Images. The pope alſo ordayned Gloria in Excelſis to be ſong in the maſſe at S. Peters altar by the Cardinals.

Then in this race of Popes, after this Stephen the iij. commeth Hadrianus the firſt, who likewiſe followyng the ſteps of his forefathers the Popes, added and attributed to the veneration of Images more then all the other had done before, writing a booke for the adoration and the vtilitie proceding of them, commaundyng them to be takē for lay mens Calenders, holdyng moreouer a Synode at Rome againſt Felix, and all other that ſpake againſt the ſetting vp of ſuch ſtockes and Images. And as Paul the firſt, before him made much of the body of Petronilla S. Peters daughter: ſo this Hadrian clothed the body of S. Peter all in ſiluer, and couered the aulter of S. Paule with a Palle of gold. This Pope Hadrian was he, whome we declared in the former part of this treatiſe, to ratifie and confirme by reuelation the order of S Gregories Maſſe, aboue the order of S. Ambroſe maſſe, for vnto this time which was about the yeare of our Lord, 780. the Liturgie of S. Ambroſe was more vſed in the Italian churches. The ſtory whereof, becauſe it is regiſtred in Durandus, Nauclerus, and Iacobus de Voragine, I thought here to inſert the ſame, to this eſpeciall purpoſe, for the Reader to vnderſtand the tyme, when this vſuall Maſſe of the Papiſts began firſt to be vniuerſall & vniforme, & generally in churches to be receaued. Thus it foloweth in the ſtory by the foreſayd authors ſet forth. Iacobus de Voragine in the life of Pope Gregory the firſt telleth a tale concernyng this matter.

Ex Dur do Nau ro. Iac Voragin in Vita. Greg.

In tymes paſt (ſaith he) when the ſeruice which Ambroſe made, was more frequented and vſed in Churches, then was the ſeruice which Gregory had appointed, the biſhop of Rome then called Adrian, gathered a Councell together: in the which it was ordained, that Gregories ſeruice ſhould be obſerued and kept vniuerſally: which determination of the Councell, Charles the Emperor did diligētly put in executiō while he ran about by diuers Prouinces, & inforced all the Clergy, partly with threatnings, and partly with puniſhments, to receiue that order. And as touching the bookes of Ambroſe ſeruice, he burnt them to aſhes in all places, and threw into priſon many prieſts that would not conſent and agree to the matter. Bleſſed Eugenius the Biſhop comming vnto the Councell, found that it was diſſolued iij. dayes before his comming. Notwithſtanding through his wiſedome, he ſo perſwaded the Lord Pope, that he called agayne all the Prelates that had bene preſent at the Councell, and were now departed by the ſpace of three dayes. Therfore when the Councell was gathered agayne together, in this all the fathers did conſent and agree, that both the Maſſe bookes of Ambroſe and Gregory ſhould be layd vpon the aulter of bleſſed Peter the Apoſtle, and the church dores diligently ſhut, and moſt warily ſealed vp with the ſignets of many and diuers biſhops. Againe, that they ſhould all the whole night geue themſelues to prayer, that the Lord might reueale, open & ſhew vnto them by ſome euident ſigne or token, which of theſe two ſeruices he would haue vſed in the Temples. Thus they doing in all pointes as they had determined, in the morning opened the church dores, and founde both the Myſſals or Maſſe bookes open vpon the aulter: or rather, as ſome ſay, they found Gregories Maſſe booke vtterly plucked aſunder one piece from an other, and ſcattered ouer all the church. As touching Ambroſe booke, they only found it open vpō the aulter in the very ſame place where they before laid it. This miracle Pope Adrian like a wyſe expounder of dreames, ſaith, that as the leaues were torne and blown abroad all the church ouer, ſo ſhould Gregories booke be vſed throughout yͤ world. Wherupō they thought themſelues ſufficiently inſtructed and taught of God, that the ſeruice which Gregory had made, ought to be ſet abroad & vſed throughout the world, and that Ambroſe his ſeruice ſhould onely be obſerued and kept in his owne church of Mediolanum, where he ſometyme was biſhop.

Et tamen ipſis commentum placet. Terent.

Note well the practiſ of Prelat in planting their popi maſſe.

Thus haſt thou heard (brother Reader) the full and whole narration of this miſticall miracle, with the Popes expoſition vpon the ſame, which ſemeth to be as true, as that which Daniell ſpeaketh of, how the Idoll Bell did eate vp all the meate that was ſet before him all the night, Daniel, 14. Concerning the which miracle, I need not admoniſh thee to ſmell out the blind practiſes of theſe night crowes, to blind the world with forged inuentiōs in ſtead of true ſtories. Albeit to graunt the miracle to be moſt true & vnfallible, yet as touching the expoſition therof, another man beſide the Pope, percaſe might interprete this great miracle otherwiſe, as thus: That God was angry with Gregories booke, and therfore rent it in pieces, and ſcattered it abroad, and the other as good, lay found vntouched, and at the leaſt ſo to be preferred. Notwithſtanding, whatſoeuer is to bee thought of this miracle with the expoſition therof, thus the matter fell out, that Gregories ſeruice had only the place, and yet hath to this day in the greateſt part of Europe, yͤ ſeruice of Ambroſe beyng excluded. And thus much touching the great act of Pope Adrian, for the ſetting vp of the Maſſe. By the relation wherof, yet this knowledge may come to the Reader, at leaſt to vnderſtand, how that commonly in chriſten nations abroad, as yet no vniforme forme order of any Miſſall or Maſſe booke was receiued, as hath bene hetherto diſcourſed.

Gregories maſſe taketh place in Europe.

Carolus Magnus beneficiall to the ſea of Rome.

Rex Chriſtianiſſimus intituled to Fraunce.

Now from the Popes to returne againe to the emperours from whence we digreſſed, like as Pipinus the father of Charles (as hath bene before ſufficiently told) had geuen to the ſea Papall all the princedome of Rauenna, with other donations and reuenewes, & landes in Italy: ſo this Carolus following his fathers deuotion, did confirme the ſame, adding moreouer therunto, the Citie and dominion of Venice, Hiſtria, the Dukedome Foroiulienſe, the dukedom Spoletanum and Beneuentanum, and other poſſeſſions moe, to the patrimonie of S. Peter, making him the Prince of Rome and of Italy. The Pope agayne to recompence his ſo gentle kindnes, made him to be intituled moſt Chriſten king, and made him Patricium Romanum Moreouer ordeined him onely to bee taken for Emperour of Rome. For theſe and other cauſes moe, Carolus bare no little affection to the ſayd Adrian aboue all other Popes: as may well appeare by this letter of Carolus Magnus ſent to king Offa, what tyme the ſaid Offa (as is aboue prefixed) ſent to hym Alcuinus for entreatie of peace: wherunto the foreſayd Carolus aunſwereth agayne to the meſſage of Offa in a letter, the contents wherof be theſe.

The tenour of a Letter ſent by Carolus Magnus to king Offa, anſwering to his requeſt concerning the intreatie of peace betwene them.

How the Pope heareth the cry of poore widowes and Orphanes

The cauſe why this Carolus writeth ſo fauorablye of Adriã partly is touched before, partly alſo was, for yͤ Carolomane his elder brother being dead, his wife called Bertha with her two Children came to Adrian, to haue them confirmed in their fathers kingdome: whereunto the Pope to ſhew a pleaſure to Carolus would not agree: but gaue the mother with her two children, & Deſiderius the Lombard king with hys whole kingdome, hys wife and Children, into the handes of the ſaid Carolus, who led them with him captiue into Fraunce, and there kept them in ſeruitude during their lyfe.

The Empire tranſlated from Greece to Fraunce.

Thus, Carolus Magnus beyng proclaymed Emperour of Rome, through the preferment of Adrian, and of Pope Leo the third which ſucceeded next after him, was the Empire tranſlated from the Grecians about the yeare of our Lord 801. vnto the Frenchmen: where it continued about 102. yeares till the comming of Conradus and hys nephew Otho, which were Germaynes: and ſo hath continued after them amõg the Almanes vnto this preſent time. This Charles builded ſo many Monaſteries as there be letters in the row of A.B C. he was beneficiall chiefly to Churchmen alſo mercifull to the poore, in hys actes valiaunt and triumphaunt, ſkilde in all languages, he held a counſell at Francford, where was condemned the Councell of Nice and Irene, for ſetting vp and worſhipping Images. &c.

Concerning which Councell of Nice, & thinges there concluded and enacted (becauſe no man ſhal thinke, the deteſting of Images to be any new thing now begon) thus I finde it recorded in an auncient written hiſtory of Roger Houeden, called Continuationes Bedæ. His wordes in Latin be theſe: Anno 792. Carolus Rex Francorum miſit Sinodalem librum ad Britanniam, ſibi à Conſtantinopoli directum. In quo lib. Heu, proh dolor, multa inconuenientia, & veræ fidei contraria reperiuntur, maximè quòd pene omnium orientalium Doctorum non minus quàm 300. vel eo amplius Epiſcoporum vnanimi aſſertione confirmatum ſit, imagines adorari debere: Quod omnino Eccleſia Dei execratur. Contra quod ſcripſit Albinus Epiſtolam ex autoritate diuinarum ſcripturarum mirabiliter affirmatam, illamq; cum eodem libro ex perſona Epiſcoporum ac principum noſtrorum, Regi Francorum attulit. Hæc ille. That is. In the yeare of our Lorde, 792. Charles the Frenche King ſent a booke contayning the actes of a certeine Synode, vnto Brittayne, directed vnto hym from Conſtantinople. In the which booke (lamentable to behold) many thinges inconuenient, & cleane contrary to the true fayth are there to be found: eſpecially for that by the common conſent of almoſt all the learned biſhops of the Eaſt Church, not ſo few as 300. it was there agreed that Images ſhould be worſhipped. which thing the church of god hath alwayes abhorred. Againſt which booke Albin' wrote an Epiſtle ſubſtantially grounded out of the authoritie of holy Scripture. which Epiſtle with the booke, the ſayde Albinus in the name and perſon of our Biſhops and Princes, did preſent to the French king.

And thus much by the way of Romiſh matters: now to returne agayne to the Northumberland kings where we left at Egbert. which Egbert as is before declared, ſucceded after Ceolulphus after he was made Monke. And likewiſe the ſayd Egbert alſo followyng the deuotion of hys vncle Ceolulphus, and Kenredus before him: was likewyſe ſhorne monke after he had raigned 20. yeres in Northumberland, leauing his ſonne Oſulphus after him to ſucceede: about which tyme, and in the ſame yeare when Ceolulphus deceaſed in his Monaſtery, which was the yeare of our Lord, 764. diuers Cities were burnt with ſodaine fire, as the citie of wenta, the citie of London, the citie of Yorke, Doaceſter, with diuers other townes beſides. After, Alcredus whẽ he had raigned 10. yeres, was expulſed out of his kingdom by his people. Then was Ethelbert otherwiſe named Edelred the ſonne of the foreſayd Mollo receaued kyng of Northumberland. which Ethelbert, or Adelred in like ſort after he had raigned v. yeares, was expulſed. After whome ſucceeded Alfwold, who likewiſe when he had raigned 11. yeres, was vniuſtly ſlaine. So likewiſe after him his nephew, and the ſonne of Alcredus named Oſredus raigned one yeare & was ſlayne. Then the foreſayd Ethelbert the ſonne of Mollo after 12. yeares baniſhment, raigned agayne in Northumberland the ſpace of foure yeares, and was ſlayne: the cauſe wherof (as I finde in an old written ſtory) was that forſaking his old wife, he maried a new. Concerning the reſtoring of whõ Alcuinus writeth in this maner: Benedictus Deus qui facit mirabilia ſolus. Nuper Edelredus filius Edelwaldi de carcere proceſſit in ſolium, & de miſeria in maieſtatem, cuius regni nouitate detenti ſumus ne veniremus ad vos, &c. And afterward the ſame Alcuinus againe ſpeaking of his death, writeth to king Offa, in theſe wordes: Sciat veneranda dilectio veſtra, quod Do. Carolus amabiliter & fideliter ſæpe mecum locutus eſt de vobis, & in eo habetis fideliſſimum amicum. Ideo & veſtræ dilectioni digna dirigit munera, & per Epiſcopales ſedes regni veſtri, ſimiliter & Edelredo Regi, & ad ſuas Epiſcoporum ſedes direxit dona. Sed heu Proh dolor, donis datis, & Epiſtolis in manus miſſorum, ſuperuenit triſtis legatio per miſſos qui de Scotia per nos reuerſi ſunt, De infidelitate gentis, & nece Regis. The kingdom of Northumberland ceaſeth.

Northumberland kingdome ceaſeth.

Thus as you haue heard, after the raigne of king Egbert, before mentioned, ſuch trouble and perturbatiõ was in the dominion of Northumberland: with ſlaying, expulſing, and diſpoſing, their kings one after an other, that after the murdering of this Edelred aboue ſpecified, none durſt take the gouernemẽt vpon him, ſeing the great danger thereupon inſuing. Inſomuch that the foreſayd kingdome did lye void and waſte the ſpace of xxxiij yeares together, after the terme of which yeares this kingdome of Northumberland, with the kingdomes alſo of the other Saxons beſides, came all together into the handes of Egbert king of the weſtſaxons and his progeny: which Monarchy began in the yeare of our Lord. 827. and in the 28. yeare of the raygne of the ſayd Egbert: whereof more ſhall be ſayd (Chriſt willing) hereafter. Ouer and beſides the ſame author Alcuinus writyng to the foreſayd Edelred king of Northumberland, maketh record of a ſtraunge ſight which he himſelfe did ſee the ſame time in ÿ citie of Yorke, to raine bloud: wherof, his wordes which he wrote concerning the ſame, to the ſaid king Edelred be theſe. Quid ſignificat pluuia ſanguinis, quam quadrageſimali tempore in Eboraco ciuitate, quæ caput eſt totius regni in Eccleſia beati principis Apoſtolorum, vidimus de borealibus partibus domus, (ſereno aëre) de ſummitate minanter cadere? Nonne poteſt putari, à borealibus partibus venire ſanguinem ſuper terram? That is: what ſignifieth the rayne of bloud which in tyme of Lent in the Citie of Yorke, the chiefe Citie of that dominion, and in the church of S. Peter the chiefe of the Apoſtles, we our ſelues did ſee to fall from the Church top (the element being cleare) out of the North partes of the temple, &c. This wondrous ſight teſtified by Malmeſburienſis, is thought of Fabian to happen in the ſecond yere of the raigne of Brigthricus (as with the tyme doth well agree) which was the yeare of our Lord, 780. & is thought of ſome expoſitors to betoken the comming of the Danes into this land, which entred ſhortly after about vij. yeres, in the 9. yeare of the raigne of Brigthricus king of the Weſtſaxons. Which Brigthricus in defence therof, ſent forth hys Steward of his houſholde with a ſmall companie which ſhortly was ſlaine: but by the ſtrength of the ſayd Brigthricus and the other Saxon kings, they were compelled to voyd the land for that time, which was, An. 790. To this Brigthricus king Offa, as is aforeſaid, gaue his daughter Ethelburga to wife, by whom he at length was impoyſoned, beſides certaine other of his nobles: vpon whom, the ſaid Queene before hym had practiſed the ſame wickedneſſe. Who then after that, fledde ouer to Charles the great into Fraunce, where ſhe beyng offred for her beautie to marrie either to him, or to his ſonne, becauſe ſhe chuſed rather his ſonne, married neither the one nor yet the other: but was thruſt in a Monaſtery, where ſhe then playing the harlot with a Monke, was expulſed from thence, and ended her lyfe in penury and miſery.

The ſecond councell at Nicea.

The wickednes of Irene condingly rewarded.

In the meane tyme while this Edelburga was thus workyng her feates in England: Irene Empreſſe of the Greekes, was as buſie alſo for her part at Conſtantinople. Who firſt through the meanes of Pope Adrian, tooke vp the body of Conſtantine Emperour of Conſtantinople, her owne huſbands father. And when ſhe had burned the ſame, ſhe cauſed the aſhes to be caſt into the ſea, becauſe he diſanulled Images. Afterward raigning with her ſonne Conſtantine the 6. ſonne to Leo the 4. (whome alſo we declared before to be excommunicate for taking away Images) beyng at diſſention with him, cauſed him to be taken & laid in priſon. Who afterward through power of frends beyng reſtored to his Empire againe, at laſt ſhe cauſed the ſame her owne ſonne to bee caſt in priſon, and his eyes to be put out ſo cruelly, that within ſhort ſpace he dyed. After this the ſayd Irene Empreſſe, with the counſaile of Theraſius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, held a Councell at Nicea, where it was decreed that Images ſhould agayne be reſtored to the church: which Councell, after was repealed by an other Councell holden at Franckford by Charles the great. At length ſhe was depoſed by Nicephorus (who raigned after) and was expulſed the Empire: who after the example of Edelburga aboue mentioned (condignely puniſhed for her wickedneſſe) ended likewiſe her lyfe in much penurie and miſerie.

Kenelmus king of Mercia innocently ſlayne.

Celulphus, Ceolulphus, Bernulphus kings of Mercia.

The kingdome of Mercia ceaſeth.

About the tyme when the foreſayd Brigthricus was impoyſoned by Edelburga his wife, died alſo king Offa, which was about the yeare of our Lord, 795. or as ſome ſay, 802. After which Offa (as is aforeſayd) ſucceeded Egfert, then Kenelphus, after whom ſucceeded Kenelmus his ſonne, who in his yonger age was wickedly murthered by his ſiſter Quindreda, and Aſkebertus, about the yeare of our Lorde, 819. And in the Church of Winchecombe was counted for an holy Martyr. After him ſucceded his vncle Ceolulphus, whom Bernulphus in the firſt yeare of his raigne expulſed and raigned in his place. Who likewiſe the third yeare of his raigne was ouercome and expulſed by Egbert kyng of the Weſtſaxons, and afterward ſlayne by the Eaſtangles. And the kingdom of Mercia alſo ceaſed, and came into the handes of the Weſtſaxons.

Hetherto I haue brought, as thou ſeeſt (good Reader) the confuſed and turbulent raignes of theſe vij. Saxon kings, who after the expulſion of the Britaines, ruled and raigned aſunder in ſundry quarters of this land together, vnto this preſent tyme of Egbert king of the Weſtſaxons. By whom it ſo pleaſed God to begin to reduce and vnite all theſe ſcattred kingdomes into one monarchicall forme of dominion. Wherfore, as in the foreſayd Egbert beginneth a new alteration of the common wealth here in this land among the Saxons: ſo my purpoſe is (the Lord willing) with the ſame Egbert to enter a new beginnyng of my third booke, after a briefe recapitulation firſt made of ſuch things as in this ſecond booke before, are to be collected and noted, eſpecially touching the monaſteries builded, the kings which haue entered the life and profeſſion Monaſtike: alſo Queenes & Queenes daughters, which the ſame tyme profeſſed ſolitary life in monaſteries, which they or their auncetors had erected.

Vniuſt dealinges of men iuſtly rewarded.

And thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) concerning the vij. kingdoms of theſe Saxons, ruling altogether in England, the courſe and order of their doings briefly deſcribed and diſcourſed vnto thee, in ſuch order, as the matter beyng ſo intricate, in ſuch confuſion & diuerſitie of things incident together, would permit: followyng eſpecially in this ſtory hitherto, the line of the Northumberland kings as the other ſtories moſt folow the line of Weſtſaxō kings. The which ſeuen kingdoms of theſe ſayd Saxones, after they had vnruely expulſed and chaſed out the Britaines from their land, like as they neuer were in quietnes amōg themſelues, raigning thus together till the tyme of this Egbert: ſo alſo after the raigne of Egbert, the whole realme beyng reduced into one regimēt, no leſſe were they impugned & afflicted by the Danes continually frō tyme to time, till the laſt conqueſt of William the Normand. Thus it pleſeth (God euer) lightly to reuenge with bloud, bloudy violence, and the vniuſt dealings of men, with iuſt and lyke retribution. But of this let the chriſtian Reader conſider, as Gods grace ſhall worke in him. In the meane tyme we, as much as in vs did lye, ſatiſfiyng the part of an Hiſtorician, haue thus hetherto ſet forth and declared concerning theſe vij. foreſayd kingdoms: firſt the names and lineall deſcent of the kings ſeuerally by themſelues, as by the table precedent may appeare, then what were the doings and actes of the ſame. How firſt being Pagans, they were conuerted to the chriſtian faith: what things in their time happened in the church, how many of them, of kings were made monkes: how deuout they were then to holy church and to the churchmen, and eſpecially to the church of Rome. But the churchmen then were much otherwyſe in lyfe, then afterward they declared themſelues to bee. Through which deuotion of the ſaid kings, firſt came in, the Peterpence or Romeſchots in this Realme, as by Iue firſt in his dominion, then by Offa in his Lordſhip, & afterward by Adelwulph brought in and ratified through the whole Realme: where alſo is to be noted, that by the foreſayd Kings and Queenes of the ſayd Saxons, the moſt part of the greateſt Abbais & Nunneries in this realme, were firſt begun and builded, as partly the names of ſome here follow to be ſeene.

Two thinges to be wiſhed in them, that firſt builded Monkiſhe Monaſteries.

The article of free iuſtification not knowne.

Thus ye ſee what monaſteries in what tyme began to be founded by the Saxons kings, newly conuerted to the Chriſtian fayth, within the ſpace of 200. yeares: who, as they ſemed then to haue a certain zeale & deuotion to godward, according to the leading & teaching that then was: ſo it ſemeth againe to me, two things to be wiſhed in theſe foreſayd kings. Firſt, that they which began to erect theſe monaſteries and celles of Monkes and Nunnes, to lyue ſoly and ſinglely by themſelues out of the holy ſtate of matrimony: had foreſeene what daunger & what abſurd enormities might and alſo did thereof enſue, both publikely to the Church of Chriſt, & priuately to their own ſoules. Secondly, that vnto this their zeale & deuotion had bene ioyned like knowledge & doctrine in Chriſtes goſpell, eſpecially in the article of our free iuſtification by the faith of Ieſu Chriſt. Becauſe of the lacke wherof, as wel the builders & founders therof, as they that were profeſſed in the ſame, ſeeme both to haue run the wrong way, & to haue bene deceiued. For albeit in them there was a deuotion & zeale of mynd, that thought well in this their doyng, which J will not here reprehend: yet the end and cauſe of their deedes & buildings cannot be excuſed, beyng contrary to the rule of Chriſtes Goſpel, for ſo much as they did theſe things ſeeking thereby merites with God, and for remedy of theyr ſoules, and remiſſion of their ſinnes, as may appeare teſtified in their owne recordes, wherof one here J thought to ſet forth for probation of the ſame. Read this Charte (if it pleaſe thee gentle Reader) of king Ethelbald his donation, & charter giuen to churches and religious perſons, which Ethelbald was the builder (as is ſayd) of Peterborough, the wordes of his record and inſtrument be theſe.

❧ The donations and priuiledges granted and geuen by King Ethelbald, to religious men of the Church.

Ex Cronicis Guliel. Malmeſb. Lib. 1.

PLerumq; contingere ſoleſit, pro incerta temporum viciſsitudine, vt ea quæ multarum fidelium perſonarum teſtimonio conſilioq; roborata fuerint: fraudulenter per contumaciā plurimorum, & machinamenta ſimulationis, ſine vlla conſideratione rationis, periculoſè diſſipentur, niſi autoritate literarum (teſtamento Chyrographorum) æternæ memoriæ cōmittantur. Quapropter, ego Ethelbaldus Rex Merciorum, pro amore cæleſtis patriæ, & remedio animæ meæ, ſtudendum eſſe præuidi: vt eam per bona opera liberam efficerem in omni vinculo delictorum. Quoniam enim mihi omnipotens Deus per miſericordiam clementiæ ſuæ, abſque vllo antecedente merito, ſceptra regiminis largitus eſt: ideo libenter ei, ex eo quod dedit, retribuo. Huius rei gratia hanc donationem, me viuente, concedo, vt omnia monaſteria & Eccleſiæ regni mei, à publicis vectigalibus, & operibus, & oneribus abſoluantur: niſi inſtructionibus arcium, vel pontium quæ nulli vnquam proſunt. Præterea habeant famuli Dei, propriam libertatem in fructibus ſiluarum & agrorum, & in captura piſcium, ne munuſcula præbeant vel regi, vel principibus, niſi voluntaria. Sed liberi Deo ſeruiant, &c.

By the contentes hereof may well be vnderſtand (as where he ſayth, pro amore cæleſtis patriæ, pro remedio animæ, pro liberatione animæ, & abſolutione delictorum, &c.) how great the ignoraunce and blindeneſſe of theſe men was: who lacking no zeale, onely lacked knowledge to rule it withall: ſeeking their ſaluation not by Chriſt onely, but by their owne deſeruings and meritorious deedes. Which J recite not here to any infamy or reprehenſiō of them, but rather to put vs in minde and memory, how much we at this preſent are bound to God, for the true ſincerity of his truth: hidden ſo long before to our forefathers, and opened now to vs by the good will of our God, in his ſonne Chriſt Jeſu. This onely lamenting by the way, to ſee them to haue ſuch works, and to lacke our fayth: and vs to haue the right fayth, and to lacke their workes. And this blinde ignoraūce of that age, thus aboue prenoted, was the cauſe not onely why theſe kinges builded ſo many Monaſteries vpon zealous ſuperſtition, but alſo why ſo many of them, forſaking their orderly vocation of Princely regiment, gaue themſelues ouer to Monaſticall profeſſion, or rather wilfull ſuperſtition. Concerning the names and number of which kings that were profeſſed Monkes, is ſufficiently in the ſtorye before declared: the names of whome were ſhewed to be ſeuen or eight, within the ſpace of theſe two hundreth yeres. Such was then the ſuperſtitious deuotiō of kings & Princes in that age: and no leſſe alſo to bee noted in Queenes and kings daughters, with other noble women, of the ſame age and time. The names of whom, it were to long here to recite.

Werburga was the daughter of Vlferus king of Mercians, & made Nunne at Ely. Kinreda ſiſter of king Vlferus and Kinſwida her ſiſter, were both Nunnes profeſſed. Sexburga daughter of kyng Anna king of Mercians, and wyfe of Ercombert kyng of Kent, was Abbeſſe at Ely. Elfrida daughter of Oſwy kyng of Northumberland, was Abbeſſe of Whitney. Mildreda, Milburga, and Milguida, all three daughters of Merwaldus king of weſt Mercians, entred the profeſſion and vow of Nuniſh virginitie. Kineburga, wife of Alfride king of Northumberland, and ſiſter to Ofricus king of Mercians, and daughter of king Penda, was profeſſed Abbeſſe of the Monaſtery in Gloceſter. Elfleda, daughter of Oſwy king, and wyfe of Peda, ſonne of king Penda, likewiſe incloſed her ſelf in the ſame profeſſion and vow of Romiſh chaſtitie. Likewiſe Alfritha wyfe to king Edgar. And Editha daughter to the ſayd Edgar, with Wolfrith her mother, &c. All which holy Nunnes with diuers mo, the Romiſh catholikes haue canoniſed for Saintes, and put the moſt part of thē in their Calender, and onely becauſe of the vowe of chaſtitie ſolemnly profeſſed. Concerning the which chaſtitie, whether they kept or no, little I haue to ſay againſt them, and leſſe to ſweare for them. But whether they ſo kept it or not, if this gift of chaſtitie which they profeſſed, were geuen them of God, ſmall prayſe worthy was it in them to keepe it: If it were not geuen them, I will not ſay here of them ſo much, as hath bene ſayd of ſome other, which ſufficiently haue painted out to the world, the demeanour of theſe holy votaries. But this will I ſay, that although they kept it neuer ſo perfectly, yet it is not that which maketh ſaints before God, but only the bloud of Chriſt Ieſus, and a true fayth in him.

Likewiſe remayneth, that as we haue declared the deuotion of theſe noble women, which profeſſing Monaſtick lyfe, haue caſt of all worldly dignitie and delightes: ſo we ſhould alſo intreate of ſuch noble men, who among the Saxon kings in lyke zeale of deuotion, haue geuen ouer themſelues from the world (as they thought) to the contemplatiue life of Monkiſh profeſſion. The names of whō as in the Catalogue of the Saxon kings before is deſcribed, be theſe, to the number of ix.

Firſt to vij. altogether raigning, then to one. &c. And this alteratiō not onely happened in ẏ ciuile gouernment, but alſo followed in the ſtate Eccleſiaſtical. For as in the Britaynes tyme the Metropolitan ſea was in Londō: ſo in the Saxons time after the comming of Auſten, it was remoued to Cāterbury, the Catalogue and order of which Metropolitanes, from the tyme of Auſten to Egbertus, is thus, as in the hiſtory of Malmeſberienſis deſcribed.

NOw remayneth (by the grace of Chriſt) in the next booke followyng, to proſecute the order of ſuch kings as principally raigning alone, had this realme in their poſſeſſion: from the tyme of Egbert king of weſtſaxons, to the comming of William Conqueror the Normand, comprehending therin the reſt of the next 300. yeares, with the actes & ſtate of Religion, as in that ſpace was in the Church: wherin may appeare the declining tyme of the Church, and of true Religiō, preparing the way to Antichriſt, which not long after followed. For here is to be noted, that during yet this meane tyme, Sathan (as is ſayd) was bound vp from his raging and furious violence, counting from the tyme of Conſtantinus, to the next looſing out of Sathan, which was foretold by the Reuelation of S. Iohn aboue mentioned, to be a thouſand yeares, wherof by the order of the hiſtory (Chriſt graunting) more ſhall be ſayd hereafter.

THE THIRD BOOKE CONTEINING THE next 300. yeares, from the raigne of King Egbertus, to the tyme of William Conquerour.

NOW remayneth likewiſe as before I did in deſcribing, the diſcent and diuerſitie of the ſeuen kings altogether raigning and ruling in this land, ſo to proſecute in like order the lineal ſucceſſion of them, which after Egbert king of weſtſaxones, gouerned and ruled ſoly, vntill the conqueſt of William the Normand: firſt expreſſing their names, & afterward importing ſuch acts as in their tyme happened in the Church worthy to be noted. Albeit, as touching the actes and doyngs of theſe kings, becauſe they are ſufficiently and at large deſcribed, and taken out of Latine writers into the Engliſh tong by ſondry authors, and namely in the ſtory or Chronicle of Fabian. I ſhall not ſpende much trauaile therupon, but rather referre the reader, to him or to ſome other: where the troubleſome tumultes betwene the Engliſhmen and the Danes at that tyme may be ſeene, who ſo liſteth to read them. Onely the Table of their names and raigne, in actes done vnder their raigne, I haue compendiouſly abridged; vſing ſuch breuitie, as the matter would ſuffer.

¶ King Egbertus.

Egbert king of the Weſtſaxons, afterward Monarke and king of the whole Realme.

IN the raigne of Brigthricus a litle before mentioned, about the yere of grace 785. there was in his dominion a noble perſonage, of ſome called Egbert, of ſome Ethelbert, of ſome Athelbright, who being feared of the ſame Brigthricus, becauſe he was of a kingly bloud, & nere vnto the crowne, was by the force & conſpiracie of the forenamed Brigthricus, chaſed & purſued out of the land of Britain into Frãce, where he endured till the death of the ſayd Brigthricus. After the hearing whereof, Egbert ſped him ſhortly out of Fraunce, vnto his countrey of weſtſaxe, where he in ſuch wiſe behaued himſelfe, that he obteined the regiment and gouernance of the aboueſaid kingdom.

In this tyme came in the Danes, firſt into the North partes and were driuen out agayne.

{Anno. 807.}

Example what it is to deſpiſe other. Example of patience.

Bernulphus king of Mercia aboue mentioned, with other kings, had this Egbert in ſuch deriſion, that they made of him diuers ſcoffing geſtes, and ſcorning rimes, at which he ſuſteined for a time. But when he was more eſtabliſhed in his kingdome, & had proued the mindes of his ſubiects and eſpecially God working withall: he afterward aſſembled his knights, and gaue to the ſaide Bernulphus, a battaile in a place called Elinde, in the prouince of Hampton. And notwithſtanding in that fight was great oddes of number, as 6. or 8. againſt one, yet Egbert (through the might of the Lord which giueth victory as pleaſeth him) had the better and wan the field: which done he ſeaſed that Lordſhip into his hand. And that alſo done, he made war vpon the Kentiſh ſaxons, and at length in likewiſe, of them obtained the victory. And as it is in Polychronicon teſtified, he alſo ſubdued Northumberland, and cauſed the kings of theſe three kingdomes to liue vnder him as tributaries or ioyned them to his kingdome. Ex Flor. Hiſt. This Egbert, alſo wan from the Britons or welſhmẽ, the town of Cheſter, which they had kept poſſeſſion of, till that daye. After theſe & other victories, he peaceably enioying the land, called a Councell of his Lords at wincheſter, where by their aduiſes he was crowned king & chief Lord ouer this land. which before that day was called Britaine: but thẽ he ſent out into all coaſts of the land his commaundements and cõmiſſions, charging ſtraightly ỷ from that day forward the Saxons ſhould be called Angles, and the land Anglia.

{Anno. 826.}

Of this victory went a prouerb, Riuus cruore rubuit, ruina reſtitit, fœtore tabuit.

This land firſt called Anglia.

{Anno. 833.}

Danes now the ſecond tyme entred in this land.

About the 30. yeare of the raigne of Egbert, the heatheniſh people of the Danes, which a little before had made horrible deſtruction in Northumberland, & eſpecially in ỷ Iſle of Lindeſfarne, where they ſpoyled the Churches, and murthered the miniſters, with men, women, and children, after a cruell maner, entered now the ſecond tyme with a great hoſt into this land, and ſpoyled the Iſle of Shepy in Kent, or nere to Kent, where Egbert hearing therof, aſſembled his people and met with them at Carrum. But in that conflict ſped not ſo well as he was wont in tymes before, but with his knights was compelled to forſake the field. Notwithſtanding in the next battail, the ſayd Egbert with a ſmall power ouerthrew a great multitude of them, and ſo droue them backe. The next yeare following, the ſayd Danes preſuming vpon their victory before, made their returne again into the land weſtward, where ioining with the Britaines, by the helpe and power of them, they aſſayled the landes of Egbert, & did much harme in many places of his dominion, and els where, ſo that after this day, they were continually abiding in one place of the realme of england or other, till the time of Hardeknutus, laſt king of the Danes bloud, ſo that many of them were maried to Engliſh women, and many that now be, or in times paſt were called Engliſhmen, are deſcended of them. And albeit that they were many and ſundry times driuen out of the land, & chaſed from one countrey to an other, yet that notwithſtãding, they euer gathered new ſtrengthes and power, that they abode ſtill within the land.

England fiue tym s plagued by other natiõs.

Ex Rog. Houed. Lib. 5.

And thus (as by the ſtoryes appeareth) this troubleſome land of Britaine, now called England, hath bene hetherto by v. ſundry outward nations plagued. Firſt, by the Romains, then by the Scots & Pictes, 3. by the Saxons, 4. by the Danes, of whoſe outragious crueltye & hoſtilitie, our Engliſh hiſtories do moſt exclayme & complayne: fiftly by the Normanes, which I pray God be the laſt.

Thẽ it followeth in the ſtory, that the time of this perſecution of the foreſayd Paganes and Danes continuing, king Egbert when he had ruled the weſtſaxons, and ouer the more part of England, by the terme of xxxvij. yeares, dyed, and was buried at wincheſter, leauing to his ſonne Ethelwolfe his kingdome, which firſt was Byſhoppe of wincheſter (as Houeden recordeth) and after vpon neceſſity made king, leauing withal and pronouncing this ſaying to his ſonne: Fœlicem fore, ſi regnum, quod multa rexerat induſtria, ille conſueta genti illi non interrumperet ignauia.

Anno. 837.

Athelwulfus, the ſonne of Egbert, in his former age had entred into the order of Subdeacon, and as ſome other ſay was made Byſhop of wincheſter. But afterward being the onely ſonne of Egbert was made king through the diſpenſation (as Fabian ſayth) of Pope Paſchalis, but that can not be: for Paſchalis then was not Byſhopp: ſo that by the computation of tyme, it ſhould rather ſeeme to be Gregory the 4. This Athelwulfe (as being himſelf once nuſeled in that order) was alwayes good and deuoute to holye Church and religious orders. In ſo much that he gaue to them the tythe of all his goods and landes in weſtſaxons, with liberty and freedome from all ſeruage and ciuil charges. whereof, his charte inſtrument beareth teſtimony after this tenour proceeding: much like to the donation of Ethelbaldus king of Mercians, aboue mentioned.

A place in Fabian to be amended.

Pro remiſ. Note the blinde ignoraunce and erroneous teaching in thoſe dayes.

Hereby may it appeare, how when the Churches of England, began firſt to be indued with temporalties and lands: alſo with priuileges & exemptiõs enlarged. Moreouer (and that which ſpecially is to be conſidered & lamented) what pernicious doctrine was this, wherewith they were led: thus to ſet remiſſion of their ſinnes, and remedy of their ſoules: in this donation and ſuch other deedes of their deuotion, cõtrary to the information of Gods word, and no ſmall derogation to the Croſſe of Chriſt?

Theſe thinges thus done within the Realme, then the ſayd Ethelwulfus the king, taking his iourney to Rome, with Alured his youngeſt ſonne, committed him to the bringing vp of Pope Leo the iiij. where he alſo reedified the Engliſh ſchole at Rome: which being founded by king Offa, or rather by Iue king of Mercians (as in the flowers of Hiſt. is affirmed) was lately in the tyme of king Egbert his father, conſumed with fire. Farther and beſides, this king gaue and graunted there vnto Rome, of euery fire houſe a peny to be payd through his whole land, as king Iue in his dominion had done before. Alſo he gaue & graũted yearely to be payd to Rome. 300. markes, that is to the mainteining of the light of S. Peter. C. markes: to ẏ light of S. Paul. C. markes: to the vſe of the Pope alſo an other hundreth. This done, returning home through Fraunce, maried their Iudith the daughter of Carolus Caluus, ẏ Frẽch king: whom he reſtored afterward, contrary to the lawes of weſtſaxons, to the title and throne of a Queene. For before, it was decreed among the weſtſaxons (by the occaſion of wicked Ethelburga, who poiſoned Brigthricus her owne huſband) that after that, no kinges wife there ſhould haue the name or place of a Queene.

Peter pence through the whole Realme graunted to Rome.

Money beſtowed to burne day light.

And forſomuch as I haue here entred into the mention of Iudith, daughter of Carolus Caluus: the occaſion thereof putteth me in memory, here to inſert by the way a matter done, although not in this Realme, yet not impertinent to this eccleſiaſticall hiſtory. And firſt to deduct the narration hereof from the firſt originall. The father of this Carolus Caluus, whoſe name was Ludouicus, firſt of that name, called Pius king of Fraunce, had two wiues: whereof by the firſt, he had iij. ſonnes, Lothary, Pipin, and Lewys. Which iij. ſonnes vnnaturally and vnkindly, cõſpiring againſt their father, and his ſecond wife, with her ſonne, their youngeſt brother, perſecuted him ſo, that through a certaine councell of Lordes ſpirituall and temporall, they depoſed the ſame their naturall and right godly father, diſpoſſeſſing and diſcharging him of all rule and dominion. Moreouer, cauſed him to renounce his temporal habite, incloſing him in the Monaſtery of S. Marke, for a monke or rather a priſoner. All which done, they deuided his Empire and kingdome among themſelues.

Note here the holy and holeſome counſailers and doynges of the ſpiritual Lordes.

Thus was Ludouicus Pius, of impious ſonnes left deſolate. But the power of God, whiche worketh when all earthly power ceaſeth, of hys deuine mercy ſo ayded and recouered him out of all this tribulation to this Imperial dignitie agayne: that it was to all his enemyes confuſion, and to all good men a miracle. But this by the way. By his 2. wife whoſe name was Iudith, he had this Charles the Bald here mentioned. which Iudith was thought and ſo accuſed to the Pope, to be within ſuch degree of aliance, that by the Popes law, ſhe might not continue hys wife without the popes diſpenſation. It ſo fell out in the meane time that this Ludouicus the Emperour, had promoted a young man named Frederick to be Biſhop of Vtricke and to hym had geuen ſad and good exhortation, that he remembring and following the conſtancy of his predeceſſours, woulde mayntayne right and trueth without all exception of anye perſon, & puniſh miſdoers with excommunication, as wel the riche as the poore, with ſuch like wordes of godly counſaile. Fredericke hearing the king thus to ſay, ſitting at dinner with him, as the manner was beyng newly inueſted, in theſe words anſwered to the Emperor again. I thanke your maieſtie ſaith he, which with your ſo wholeſome exhortation putteth me in mind of my profeſſion. But I beſeech you of your benigne fauour & patience, that I may freely diſcloſe, that which hath long encombred and pierced my conſcience. To whõ leaue being geuen, thus he began. I pray you (Lord Emperor) to ſhew me herein your mynd (pointing to the fiſh before him) whether is it more according, to attain this fiſh here preſent, beginning firſt at the head or at the taile? what a tale is this, quoth the Emperor, of the taile & of the head: At the head quoth he. Then Frederike taking thereof his occaſion, proceedeth: Euen ſo let it be (Lord Emperour) ſayth he, as you haue ſayd. Let Chriſtian fayth and charitie firſt begin with your ſelfe, as with the head, admoniſhing you to ceaſe frõ your fact, and error, that your ſubiects by your example be not boldned to follow your miſdoing. wherefore firſt forſake you, your vnlawful wedlock, which you haue made with Iudith your neare kinſwoman. Theſe wordes of the new Biſhop, although they moued Ludouicus the Emperor not a litle, yet he, with a gentle modeſtie, and modeſt ſilence was contented, ſuffring the biſhop to go home in peace. But the word beyng vttered in ſuch an audience, could not ſo be concealed but ſpread and braſt out in much talke in the whole court, and eſpecially among the Biſhops, conſultyng earneſtly with themſelues about the matter. Through whoſe counſail and labour ſo at length it fell, that the Emperour was conſtrained to leaue the company of his wife, till hee had purchaſed a licence of the biſhop of Rome, to retaine her again, who then forgaue the ſaid biſhop all that was paſt. But the woman hired two knights that ſlew him in hys veſtimentes, when he had ended his maſſe. Ranulphus, and Guliel. Libro de pontificib, geue forth this ſtory in his great com-

And forasmuch as mention hath bene made of Ludouicus Pius, here is to be noted, that in Fraunce then was vſed of Prieſtes and Churchmen, precious and ſhewing veſture, and golden, and rich ſtaring girdles, with rings and other ornamentes of golde. wherefore the ſayd Lewes purchaſed of the Biſhop of Rome a correctiõ, for all ſuch as vſed ſuch diſordinate apparell, cauſing them to weare browne and ſad colours, according to their ſadnes. Fab.

Of this Lewes the Papiſtes doe fayne, that becauſe he conuerted certayne of their Church goodes and patrimonie to yͤ wages of his ſouldiours, his body (ſay they) was caryed out of his tombe by deuils, and was no more ſeene.

Swithinus Biſhop of Wincheſter.

And thus a little hauing digreſſed out of our courſe, now let vs returne out of Fraunce into England agayne: kyng Ethelwulfus, who comming from Rome by the coũtrey of Fraunce, was now returned agayne into his own dominion, where he continued not long after.

This Ethelwulfus, had eſpecially about him two Biſhops, whoſe counſell he was moſt ruled by, Swythinus Byſhop of wincheſter, and Adelſtanus Byſhop of Syreborne. Of the which two, the one was more ſkilfull in tẽporall and ciuill affayres touching the kings warres, and filling of hys coffers, and other furniture for the king. The other (whiche was Swythinus) was of a contrary ſorte, wholly diſpoſed and enclined to ſpirituall meditation, and to miniſter ſpirituall coũcel to yͤ king: who had ben ſcholemaiſter to the king before. wherein appeared one good cõdition of this kings nature, among his other vertues, not onely in following the preceptes and aduertiſementes of his old ſchoolemaiſter: But alſo in yͭ he like a kinde & thãkfull pupille did ſo reuerence hys bringer vp, and old ſcholmaiſter (as he called him) that he ceaſed not, till hee made hym Byſhop of wincheſter, by the conſecration of Celnoch then Archbiſhop of Canterbury. But as concerning the miracles which are read in the Churche of wincheſter, of this Swythinus, them I leaue to be read together with the Iliades of Homere, or tales of Robenhood.

Pretious garmentes of ſcarlet or, other riche colour forbidden men of the Clergy.

Great families not lawfull for men of the Clergy.

Ringes and gold in their ſhoes forbidden.

The feaſt of all Sainctes firſt ordayned.

This Gregory the fourth here in this preſent Chapter aboue mentioned: was the third pope which ſucceeded after Paſchalis the firſt, being but. 4. yeares betwixt them, which Paſchalis ſucceeded after Steuen the 4. who followed after Leo the 3. next Pope vnto Hadrian aboue in our hiſtory mentioned, whereas we intreated of Charles the great. From the tyme of that Hadrian the firſt, vnto Pope Hadrian the 3. The Emperours had ſome ſtroke in the election (at leſt in the confirmation) of the Romaine Pope. Notwithſtanding, diuers of thoſe foreſayd popes in the meane time began to work their practiſes to bring that purpoſe about. But yet all their deuiſes could take no full effect, before the ſayd Hadrian the iij. as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhalbe declared. So that the Emperours all this while bare ſome rule in chuſing the Popes, and in aſſembling generall Councels. wherfore by the commaundement of Ludouicus the Emperour, in the tyme of this Gregory the iiij. a generall Synode was commenſed at Aquiſgraue, where it was decreed by the ſayd Gregory and his aſſiſtaunce: firſt that euery Church ſhould haue ſufficient of his owne proper landes and reuenewes, to finde the Prieſtes thereof: that none ſhould need to lacke or go about a begging. Itẽ that none of the Clergy of what order or degree ſoeuer he be, ſhould vſe any veſture of any precious or ſcarlet coulour. Neither ſhall weare ringes on their fingers, vnleſſe it be when Prelates be at Maſſe, or geue their conſecrations. Item that Prelates ſhould not keepe to great portes or families, nor keepe great horſe, vſe dice, or harlots. And the Monkes ſhould not exceed meaſure in glotony or riot. Item that none of the Clergye being either annoynted or ſhauen: ſhould vſe either golde or ſiluer in their ſhooes, ſlippers, or girdles, like to Heliogabalus. By this it may be coniectured, what pompe and pride in thoſe daies was crept into the Clergy. Moreouer, by the ſayd pope Gregory the 4. at the commaundement of Ludouicus Emperour, the feaſt of all Saintes was firſt brought into the Church.

After this Pope, came Sergius the ſecond which firſt brought in the altering of the Popes names, becauſe hee was named before os porci, that is, Swines ſnout: which alſo ordayned the Agnus thrice to be ſong at the Maſſe, and the hoaſt to be deuided into three partes.

Pope Leo the 4.

After him, was Pope Leo the iiij. to whom this kyng Ethelwulfus (as in this preſent chapter is aboue ſpecified) did commit the tuition of his ſonne Alured. By this Pope Leo, it came in, and was firſt enacted in a Counſell of hys, that no Biſhop ſhould be condemned vnder 72. witneſſes, according as ye ſee in the witneſſes, at the condemnation of Stephen Gardiner, orderly practiſed.

No Byſhop by the Popes law to be condemned vnder 72. witneſſes.

The golden croſſe firſt borne before the pope.

Item contrary to the law of Gregory the iiij. his predeceſſor: this Pope ordayned the croſſe (all ſet with golde & precious ſtone) to be caried before him, like a Pope.

And here next now followeth & commeth in, the whore of Babylon (rightly in her true colours by the permiſſion of God and manifeſtly without all tergiuerſation) to appeare to the whole world: and that not onely after the ſpiritual ſenſe, but after the very letter, and the right forme of an whore in deed. For after this Leo aboue mentioned, the Cardinals proceeding to their ordinary electiõ (after a ſolemne Maſſe of the holy Ghoſt, to the perpetuall ſhame of them & of that ſea) in ſtead of a mã Pope, elected an whore in deed to miniſter Sacraments, to ſay maſſes, to geue orders, to conſtitute Deacons, Prieſts, and biſhops, to promote Prelates, to make Abbots, to conſecrate Churches and altars, to haue the raigne and rule of Emperors and kings: And ſo ſhe did in deede, called by name Ioan. the 8. This womans proper name was Gilberta (a Dutch woman of Magunce) who went with an engliſh monke out of the Abbey of Fulda in a mans apparell vnto Athens, and after through her dexteritie of wit and learning, was promoted to the Popedom, where ſhe ſate two yeres & 6. monthes. At laſt openly in the face of a general proceſſion, fell in labour & trauail of child, & ſo died. By reaſon whereof, the Cardinals yet to this day do auoid to come nere by that ſtreete where this ſhame was taken. By Benedictus the iij. who ſucceeded next in the whoriſh ſea, was firſt ordained (as moſt writers record) the Dirge to be ſayd for the dead. Albeit before him, Gregory the iij. had done in that matter, worthily for his part already.

Pope Nicolas the firſt.

After him ſate Pope Nicholas the firſt, who enlarged the Popes decrees with many conſtitutions, equallyng the authoritie of them, with the writings of the Apoſtles. He ordayned that no ſecular Prince, nor the Emperour himſelf, ſhould be preſent at their Councels, vnles in matters concerning the fayth: to the end that ſuch as they iudged to be heretikes, they ſhould execute and murther. Alſo, that no lay men ſhould ſit in iudgement vpon the clergy men, or reaſon vpon the Popes power. Item that no Chriſtian Magiſtrate ſhould haue any power vpon any Prelate, alledging that a Prelate is called God. Item that all Church ſeruice ſhould be in Latine: yet notwithſtanding, diſpenſing with the Sclauonians, and Polonians, to retaine ſtill their vulgar language. Sequences in the Maſſe were by him firſt allowed. By this Pope, Prieſtes began to be reſtrained and debarred from marrying: whereof Hulderike Biſhop of Auſbrough (a learned & an holy man) ſending a letter vnto the Pope, grauely and learnedly refuteth and reclaimeth against his vndiſcreet proceedings touching yͤ matter. The copy of which letter, as I thought it vnworthy to be ſuppreſſed, ſo I iudged it here worthy & meete for the better inſtruction of the Reader, to bee inſerted. The wordes whereof here follow out of Latine into Engliſh tranſlated.

The mariage of prieſtes begon to be forbiddẽ.

* A learned Epiſtle of Hulderike biſhop of Auſbrough, ſent to Pope Nicholas the firſt, prouing by probations ſubſtantiall, that Prieſtes ought not to bee reſtrayned from Mariage.

Anno. 867.

A letter written to Pope Nicolas concerning Prieſtes not to refrayne from Mariage.

NIcolao Domino & patri, peruigili ſanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ prouiſori, Huldericus ſolo nomine Epiſcopus, amorem vt filius, timorem vt ſeruus. Cum tua (O pater & Domine) decreta ſuper clericorum continentiam, &c.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

Hulderike biſhop onely by name, vnto the reuerend father Nicholas the vigilant prouiſor of the holy church of Rome: with due commendation ſendeth loue as a ſonne, and feare as a ſeruaunt. Vnderſtanding reuerend father your decrees which you ſent to me concerning the ſingle lyfe of the Clergy, to be far diſcrepant from all diſcretiõ, I was troubled partly with feare, partly with heauineſſe. With feare, (for that, as it is ſayd) the ſentence of the paſtor, whether it be iuſt or vniuſt, is to be feared.

For I was afrayde for the weake hearers of the Scripture (which ſcarſely obey the iuſt ſentence of their Paſtour) much more deſpiſing this vniuſt decreement, through the onerous and importable tranſgreſſion of their Paſtor, ſhould ſhew themſelues diſobedient. With heauines I was troubled, and with compaſsion: for that I doubted how the members of the body ſhould doe (their head being ſo greatly out of frame.) For what can be more greuous or more to be lamẽted, touching the ſtate of the church then for you, being the Biſhop of the principall ſeat, to whom appertaineth the regiment of the whole church, to ſwarue neuer ſo little, out of the right way? Certes, in this you haue not a little erred, in that you haue gone about to conſtraine your Clergy to ſinglenes of life, through your imperious tiranny: whom rather ye ought to ſtirre vp to the continency of mariage. For is not this to be counted a violence and tiranny to the iudgement of all wiſe men: when a man is compelled by your decrees to doe that which is againſt the inſtitution of the Goſpell, and the proceeding of the holy Ghoſt? Seyng then there be ſo many holy examples both of the olde and new Teſtament, teachyng vs (as you know) due information: I deſire your patience not to thinke it greuous for me to bryng a few here out of many.

Prieſtes Mariage in the olde law permitted, in the new law not forbidden.

Firſt in the olde law, the Lord permitteth mariage vnto the Prieſtes, which afterward in the new law, we doe not read to bee reſtrayned, but in the Goſpel thus he ſayth: There bee ſome Eunuches which haue gelded themſelues for the kingdome of heauen, but all men do not take this word, he that can take it, let him take it. Wherſore the Apoſtle ſayth, concerning virgins I haue no commaundement of the Lord, but onely I geue counſell. Which counſaile alſo all men do not take, as in the commaundement of the Lord before, but many there be, falſe diſſemblers and flatterers, goyng about to pleaſe men and not God, whome we ſee vnder a falſe pretence of continencie, to fall into horrible wickedneſſe: Some to lye with their fathers wiues, ſome to bee Sodomites, and not to abhorre to play the beaſtes with bruite beaſtes. And therfore, leaſt through the infection of this wicked peſtilẽce, the ſtate of the Church ſhould too much go to ruine: therfore he ſayd, becauſe of fornication, let euery man haue his owne wyfe. Touching which ſaying, our falſe hypocrites falſly do lye, & ſaine: as though onely it pertayned to the laitie, and not to them. And yet they themſelues ſeming to be ſet in the moſt holy order, are not afrayd to abuſe other mens wiues, and as we ſee with (weeping eyes) all they do outrage in the foreſayd wickednes.

The inconuenience of ſingle life.

Theſe men haue not rightly vnderſtanded the Scripture, whoſe breſtes while they ſucke ſo hard (in ſtead of milke) they ſuck out bloud. For the ſaying of the Apoſtle: let euery man haue his own wiſe: doth except none in very deede, but him onely which hath the gifte of continency, prefixing with himſelfe to keepe and to continue hys virgine in the Lord. Wherfore (O reuerend father) it ſhalbe your part to cauſe & ouerſee, that whoſoeuer, either with hand or mouth, hath made a vowe of continencie, and afterward would forſake, either ſhould be compelled to keepe his vowe, or els by lawfull authoritie ſhould be depoſed from his order.

The ſaying of the Apoſtle, let euery one haue hys own wiſe.

And to bring this to paſſe, ye ſhall not onely haue me, but alſo all other of my order, to be helpers vnto you. But that you may vnderſtand, that ſuch which know not what a vowe doth meane, are not to be violently compelled thereunto: heare what the Apoſtle ſayth vnto Timothie. A Biſhop (ſayth he) muſt be irreprehenſible, the husband of one wife. Which ſentence, leaſt ye ſhould turne and apply onely to the Church, marke what he inferreth after: he that knoweth not (ſayth he) to rule his owne houſeholde and familie, how ſhould he rule the Church of God? And likewiſe the Deacons (ſayth he) let them be the husbandes of one wyfe, which haue knowledge to gouerne their owne houſe and children. And this wyfe, how ſhe is woont to bee bleſt of the Prieſt, you vnderſtand ſufficiently: I ſuppoſe, by the decrees of holy Silueſter the Pope.

To theſe and ſuch other holy ſentences of the Scripture, agreeth alſo, he that is the writer of the rule of the Clergy, writing after this maner. A Clarke muſt be chaſte and continent, or els let him be coupled in the bandes of Matrimony, hauing one wyfe. Wherby it is to be gathered, that the Biſhop and Deacon, are noted infamous and reprehenſible, if they be deuided in mo women then one: otherwiſe, if they do forſake one vnder the pretence of Religion, both they together, as well the Biſhop as the Deacon bee here condemned by the Canonicall ſentence, which ſayth: Let no Biſhop or Prieſt forſake his owne wife, vnder the colour and pretence of Religion. If he doe forſake her, let hym bee excommunicate. And if he ſo continue, let hym bee diſgraded. Saint Auguſtine alſo, a man of diſcrete holyneſſe, ſayth in theſe wordes: There is no offence ſo great or grieuous, but it is to auoyd a greater euill.

This Decree is contrary to the Biſhops and Prelates in Queene Maryes tyme.

Furthermore, we read in the ſecond booke of the Tripartite hiſtory: That when the Councell of Nice, goyng about to eſtabliſh the ſame decree, would enact that Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, after their conſecration, either ſhould abſtaine vtterly from their own wiues, or els ſhould be depoſed. Then Paphnutius (one of thoſe holy Martyrs, whom the Emperor Maximus had put out the right eie, & hockt their left legs) riſing vp amongſt thẽ, withſtood their purpoſed decreement: confeſsing Mariage to be honourable, and calling the bed of matrimony to be chaſtitie, and ſo perſwaded the Councell from making that law, declaring thereby what occaſion might come to themſelues & their wiues of fornication. And thus much did Paphnutius (being vnmaried himſelf) declare vnto thẽ. And the whole Councell commending his ſentence, gaue place thereto, & left the matter freely without cõpulſion, to the will of euery man, to do therein as he thought.

Notwithſtanding there be ſome, which take S. Gregory for their defence in this matter, whoſe temeritie I laugh at, & ignorance I lament, for they know not, being ignoraunly deceiued, how daungerouſly the decree of this hereſie was (being made of S. Gregory) who afterward well reuoked the ſame, with condign fruit of repentaunce.

For vpon a certaine day as he ſent vnto his fiſhpond to haue fiſh, and did ſee more then ſixe thouſand infants heades brought vnto him, which were taken out of the ſame pond or mote: did greatly repent in himſelfe the decree made before, touchyng the ſingle lyfe of Prieſts, which he confeſſed to be the cauſe of that ſo lamentable a murther. And ſo purging the ſame with condigne fruite of repentaunce, altered agayne the things which he had decreed before, commending that counſaile of the Apoſtle, which ſayth: It is better to marry then to burne. Adding moreouer of himſelf thereunto, and ſaying: It is better to marry, then to giue occaſion of death.

More then 6000 heads of infantes found in the Popes mote through the wicked decree of the ſingle lyfe of prieſtes. Let Prieſtes note well the ſaying of Gregory.

Peraduenture if theſe men had read with me this, which ſo happened: I thinke they would not be ſo raſh in their doing and iudging, fearyng at leaſt the Lordes commaundement: Doe not iudge, that ye be not iudged. And S Paule ſayth: Who art thou that iudgeſt an other mans ſeruant? Either he ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maiſter, but he ſhall ſtand, for the Lord is mighty and able to make him ſtand. Therfore let your holynes ceaſe to compell and enforce thoſe, whom onely ye ought to admoniſh: leaſt through your owne priuate commaundement (which God forbid) you be found contrary, as well to the olde Teſtament, as to the new. For as S. Auguſtine ſayth to Donatus: this is onely that we do feare in your iuſtice, leſt (not for the conſideration of chriſtian lenitie, but for the grieuouſnes and greatneſſe of tranſgreſſions committed) you be thought to vſe violence in executyng puniſhment of that which onely we do deſire you (by Chriſt) not to do. For tranſgreſsions are ſo to be puniſhed, that the lyfe of the tranſgreſſours may repent. Alſo an other ſaying of Auguſtine we would you to remember, which is this: Nil nocendi fiat cupiditate, omnia conſulendi charitate, & nihil fiat immaniter, nihil inhumaniter. That is: Let nothing be done through the greedines of hurting, but all things through the charitie of profiting: Neither let any thing be done cruelly, nothing vngently. Item of the ſame Auguſtine it is written. In the feare and name of Chriſt I exhort you, which of you ſoeuer haue not the goods of this world be not greedy to haue them. Such as haue them, preſume not to much vpon them. For I ſay, to haue them is no damnation, but if ye preſume vpon them, that is damnation, if for the hauing of thẽ ye ſhal ſeeme great in your owne ſight, or if ye do forget the cõmon condition of man through the excellencie of any thing you haue. Vſe therfore therin due diſcretion, tempered with moderation, the which cup of diſcretion is drawen out of that fountaine of the Apoſtolike preaching which ſayth: Art thou looſe frõ thy wife? Do not ſeeke for thy wife. Art thou bound to thy wife? Seke not to be looſed from her? Where alſo it followeth, Such as haue wiues, let them be as though they had them not, and they that vſe the world, let them be as not vſing it.

Auguſt. ad Donatum.

Note well the ſaying of Auſten.

Auguſt.

Item concerning the widow he ſayth: Let her marry to whõ ſhe wil, only in the Lord. To marry in the Lord, is nothing els but to attempt nothing in cõtracting of matrimony, which the Lord doth forbid. Ieremy alſo ſaith: Truſt not in the words of lies, ſaying, The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord. The which ſaying of Ieremy, Hierome expounding, ſaith thus: this may agree alſo, & be applied vnto ſuch virgins, which brag & vaunt their virginitie with an impudent face, pretending chaſtitie, when they haue an other thing in their conſcience, and know not how the Apoſtle defineth the virgin, that ſhe ſhould be holy in body, and alſo in ſpirit. For what auayleth the chaſtitie of the body, if the mind inwardly be defloured? Or if it haue not the other vertues, which the prophetical Sermon doth deſcribe? The which vertues, for as much as we ſee partly to be in you, and becauſe we are not ignorant, that this diſcretiõ (although neglected in this part, yet in the other actiõs of your life to be kept honeſtly of you) do not diſpaire, but you wil alſo ſoone amend the little lacke which is behind. And therfore with as much grauitie as we can, we ceaſe not to call vpõ you, to correct and amend this your negligẽce. For although according to our common calling, a biſhop is greater then a Prieſt, yet Auſten being leſſe then Hierome (notwithſtãding the good correctiõ proceeding frõ the leſſer to the greater) was not to be refuſed or diſdained, eſpecially when he which is corrected, is found to ſtriue againſt the truth to pleaſe mẽ. For as S. Auſten ſaith, writing to Boniface: the diſputatiõs of all mẽ, be they neuer ſo Catholick or approued perſõs: ought not to bee had in ſtead of the Canonicall Scriptures. So that we may diſprooue or refuſe (ſauing the honor & reuerence which is due vnto thẽ) any thing that is in their writings: if any thing there be found, contrary to trueth: and what can be found more contrary to the trueth then this? When as the trueth him ſelfe ſpeaking of continency, not of one onely, but of all men together, (the number onely excepted of them which haue profeſſed continencye) ſayth: He that can take, let him take: the which ſaying, theſe men (mooued, I cannot tell by what occaſion) doe turne and ſay: he that cannot take, let him be accurſed. And what can bee more fooliſhe amongeſt men, then when anye Byſhoppe or Archdeacon, runne themſelues headlong into all kinde of luſt, to adultery

The whiche truely they would not ſay, if they were eyther of hym, or in him, which ſaith, wo to you Phariſeis which do all thinges before men. And by the Pſalmiſt: becauſe they pleaſe men, they are confounded: for the Lord hath deſpiſed them. Theſe be the men, who rather ought to perſwade vs, that we ſhould ſhame to ſinne priuily in the ſight of him, to whē all things be open, thē to ſeeme in the ſight of men for to be cleane. Theſe men therfore, although through their ſinful wickednes, deſerue no counſell of godlines to be giuen thē: yet we not forgetting our humanitie, ceaſe not to giue them counſell by the authoritie of Gods word, which ſeketh al mens ſaluation, deſiring thē by the bowels of charitie, & ſaying with the wordes of Scripture: Caſt out thou hypocrite firſt the beame out of thine owne eye, and then thou ſhalt ſee to caſt out the mote of the eye of thy brother.

But yet I require you that be the competent miniſters and executors of the law: Take heede what yee adde thereunto, take heede alſo I pray you, what you are your ſelues: for if (as the Scripture ſaith) thou ſhalt well conſider thy ſelfe, thou wilt neuer defame or detract an other.

Moreouer it is ſignified to vs alſo, that ſome there be of them, which (when they ought like good ſhepherds to giue their liues for the Lordes flocke) yet are puffed vp, with ſuch pride: that without all reaſon they preſume to rent and teare the Lords flocke, with whippings and beatings, whoſe vnreaſonable dooynges Saint Gregory bewailing, thus ſaith: Quid fiat de ouibus quando paſtores lupi fiunt? That is, what ſhall become of the ſheepe when the paſtors themſelues be Woolues? But who is ouercome but he which exerciſeth cruelty? Or who ſhall iudge the perſecutor, but he which gaue patiently his backe to ſtripes? And this is the frute which commeth to the Church by ſuch perſecutors, alſo which commeth to the clergy, by ſuch deſpitefull handling of their Byſhoppes or rather Infidels. For why may ye not call them Infidels, of whome Saint Paule thus ſpeaketh and writeth to Tymothie? that in the latter dayes there ſhall certaine depart from the faith, geue heede to ſpirits of errour and doctrine of deuils, of them that ſpeake falſe through hypocriſie, and hauing their conſciences marked with an hote yron, forbidding to marry, and commaunding to abſtaine from meates. &c. And this is if it be well marked, the whole handfull of the darnell and cockell growing amongeſt the corne: this is the couente of all madnes, that whiles they of the Clergye, be compelled to relinquiſh the cōpany of their own lawful wiues: they become afterward fornicators and adulterers with other women, and wicked miniſters of other ſinnefull filthineſſe. Theſe bee they which bring into the Church of God this hereſie (as blinde guides leading the blinde) that it might be fulfilled which thē Pſalme ſpeaketh of: as foreſeeing the errors of ſuch men, & accurſing thē after this maner, let their eyes be blinded that they ſee not, & bow down alwais their backe. For as much then (O Apoſtolical Sir) as no man which knoweth you, is ignorant, that if you, through the light of your diſcretion had vnderſtanded and ſeene, what poyſoned peſtilence, might haue come into the Churche thorough the ſentence of this your decree: they would neuer haue conſēted to the ſuggeſtions of certaine wicked perſons. Wherefore we counſell you by the fidelitie of our due ſubiection, that wyth all diligence, you would put away ſo great ſlāder from the Church of God: and through your diſcret diſcipline, you will remooue this Phariſaicall doctryne from the flocke of God: ſo that thys onely Sunanite of the Lords (vſing no more adulterous huſbāds) do not ſeparate the holy people, and the kingly Prieſthoode from her ſpouſe which is Chriſt, through an vnrecouerable diuorſement: ſeing that no man without Chaſtitie (not only in the virgines ſtate, but alſo in the ſtate of matrimony) ſhall ſee our Lord, who with the father and the holy ghoſt, lyueth and raigneth for euer, Amen.

Then to returne where we lefte, touching the ſtorye of King Ethelwolfe. About the latter ende of his reigne, the Danes which before had inuaded the Realme, in the time of king Egbert, as is aboue declared: now made there reentre againe, with 33. ſhippes arriuing about Hamſhyre: through the barbarous tyranny of whō, much bloudſhed and murther happened here among engliſhmen, in Dorcet ſhire, about Pourtchmouth in Kent, in Eaſtangle, in Lindeſey, at Rocheſter, about London, and in weſtſexe, where Ethelwolfe the king was ouercome, beſides diuers other vnder kings and dukes, whome the Danes dayly approching, in great multitudes in dyuers victories had put to flight. At length king Ethelwolfe, with his ſonne Ethelbaldus, warring againſt them in Southrey, at Oclea, draue them to the ſea, where they houering a ſpace, after a while braſt in againe with horrible rage and crueltie, as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared, ſo much as to our purpoſe ſhall ſerue, profeſſing in this hiſtory, to write not of matters externe and politike, but onely pertaining to the Church. The cauſe of this great affliction ſent of God vnto this realme thus I found expreſſed and collected in a certayne olde wrytten ſtorye, which hath noe name: the wordes of which writer, for the ſame cauſe as he thought to recite them, writing as he ſaith (ad cautelam, futurorum) I thought alſo for the ſame here not to be omitted, albeit in all partes of his commendation I doe not fully with him accorde. The wordes of the writer be theſe, Ex vetuſto exemplo hiſtoria Cariana. W.C.i.

In Anglorum quidem Eccleſia primitiua, religio clariſſime, reſpēduit: ita vt Reges & Reginæ et Principes ac Duces, Conſules, & Barones &c.

In Engliſh thus.

In the primitiue Church ſaith he of the Engliſhmen, Relygiō did moſt clerely ſhine, in ſo much that kings Queenes, Princes and Dukes, Conſuls, Barons, and Rulers of Churches, incenſed with the deſire of the kingdome of heauen, laboring and ſtryuing among themſelues to enter into Monkery, into voluntarye exile and ſolitary life, forſoke all and followed the Lord. Where in proceſſe of time, all vertue ſo much decayed among them, that in fraude and trechery none ſeemed like vnto them: Neither was to them any thing odious or hatefull but pietie and iuſtice Neither any thing in price or honor, but ciuill warre and ſheddyng of innocent bloud. Wherfore almighty God ſent vpon them pagane and cruell nations, like ſwarmes of Bees, which neyther ſpared women, nor children, as Danes, Norwagians, Gothes, Sueuians, Vandals, and Freſians. Who from the beginning of the reigne of king Ethelwolfe till the comming of the Normandes, by the ſpace neere of 230. yeares, deſtroyed their ſinfull land from the one ſide of the ſea, to the other, from man alſo to beaſt. For why? they inuading England oft times, of euery ſide, went not about to ſubdue and poſſeſſe it, but onely to ſpoyle and deſtroy it. And if it had chanced them at any time to be ouercome of Engliſhmen, it auailed nothing, when as other nauies ſtill with greater power in other places were ready vpon a ſodaine and vnawares to approche vpon them, &c. Hiſtoria Cariana.

The cauſe of Gods wrath, wherby the Realme of England was ſcourged by the Danes.

Thus farre haue ye the wordes of mine author, declaring the cauſe, which prouoked Gods anger, whereunto may be adioyned the wickednes, not onely of them but of their forefathers alſo before them, who falſely breaking the faith and promiſe made wyth the Britanes, did cruellye murther their nobles, wickedly oppreſſed their cōmons, impiouſly perſecuted the innocent Chriſtians, iniuriouſly poſſeſſed their land and habitation: chaſing the inhabitaunts out of houſe and country, beſides the violent murther of the Monkes of Bangor, and diuers foule ſlaughters againſt the poore Brytaines, who ſent for them to be their helpers. Wherefore, Gods iuſt recompence fallyng vpon them from that time, neuer ſuffered them to be quiet from forreine enimies, till the comming of William the Normande, &c.

Moreouer, concerning the outward occaſiōs giuē of the Engliſhmens partes, mouing the Danes firſt to inuade the Realme, I find in certain authors two, moſt eſpecially aſſigned. The one iniuſtly giuē, & iuſtly take. The other not giuen iuſtly, and vniuſtly taken. Of the which two, the firſt was giuen in Northumberland, by meanes of Oſbryght, reigning vnder king of Weſtſaxons, in the North partes. This Oſbright vppon a time iourneying by the way, turned into the houſe of one of his nobles called Bruer. Who hauing at home a wife of great beautie (he beyng Bruer conſulting with his frindes, firſt went to the king, reſigning to his hands, all ſuch ſeruice and poſſeſſions which he did hold of him: that done tooke ſhipping and ſailed into Denmarke, where he had great friends: and had his bringing vp before. There making his mone to Codrinus the king, deſired his aide in reuenging of the great vilany of Oſbryght againſt him and his wife. Codrinus hearing this, and glad to haue ſome iuſt quarell to enter that land: leuied an army with al ſpede: & preparing all things neceſſary for the ſame, ſendeth forth Inguar and Hubba two brethren, his chief Captaines, with an innumerable multitude of Danes into England. who firſt arriuing at Holderneſſe, there brent vp the country, & killed without mercy both men, women, and childrē, whō they could lay hads vpon. Then marching toward York, entred their battaile, with the foreſayde Oſbryght, where he with the moſt part of his armye was ſlaine. And ſo the Danes entred the poſſeſſion of the Citie of Yorke. Some other ſay, and is by the moſt part of ſtorye writers recorded, that the chiefe cauſe of the comming of Inguar & Hubba with the Danes, was to reuenge king Edmund reygnyng vnder the weſtſaxons ouer the Eaſtangles in Northfolke and Southfolk: for the murdering of a certaine Dane being father to Inguar and Hubba which was falſelye imputed to king Edmund. The ſtory is thus told.

Codrinus king of Denmarke.

Inguar and Hubba captaynes of the Danes.

An other cauſe of the comming of the Danes.

Lothbroke father to Inguar, and Hubba.

A certaine noble man of the Danes of the kings ſtock called Lothebrocus father to Inguar and Hubba entring vpon a time with his hauke into a certaine ſchaffe or cockebote alone: by chaunce through tempeſt was driuen with his hauke to the coaſt of Northfolke named Rodhā, where he being found and detained was preſented vnto the king. The king vnderſtanding his parentage, & ſeing his caſe: entertained him in his court accordingly. And euery daye more and more perceiued his actiuities, and great dexteritie in hunting & hauking, bare ſpeciall fauour vnto him. In ſo much that the kinges faukener, or maiſter of game, bearing priuy enuy againſt him, ſecretly as they were hūting together in a woode, did murther him, & threw him in a buſh. This Lothebroke, being murthered, within two or three daies began to be miſſed in the kinges houſe: of whō no tidings could be heard, but onely by a dogge or ſpaniel of his, which continuing in the wood with the corps of his maiſter, at ſondry times came and fauned vpon the king: ſo long that at length they folowing the traſe of the hound were brought to the place where Lothebroke laye. Whereupō inquiſition made, at length by certeine circumſtances of words and other euidences, it was knowne how & by whom he was murthered, that was by the kings hunteſman named Berike. Who thereupon being conuicted, was ſet into the ſame bote of Lothebroke, alone and without any takeling to driue by ſeas, either to be ſaued by the weather or to be drowned in the deepe. And as it chaunced Lothebroke from Dennemarke to be driued to Northfolke, ſo it happened that from Northfolke he was caried into Denmarke. Where the bote of Lothebroke being well knowen, hands were laid vpon him, & inquiſition made of the party. In fine in his torments, to ſaue himſelfe, he vttered an vntruth of king Egmund, ſaying, that the king had put him to death in the country of Northfolke. Wherupon grudge firſt was conceiued, thē an army appointed, & great multitude ſent into England, to reuenge that fact: where firſt they arriuing in Northumberland, deſtroyed (as is ſayd) thoſe parties firſt. From thence ſayling into Northfolke they exerciſed the like tyranny there, vpon the inhabitāts thereof, eſpecially vpon the innocent prince, & bleſſed marter of God, king Edmund. Cōcerning the farther declaration wherof, hereafter ſhal follow (Chriſt our Lord, ſo permitting) more to be ſpoken, as place and obſeruation of time and yeares, ſhall require.

What miſerable enuy worketh.

King Ethelbald the eldeſt ſonne of Ethelwulfe, ſucceeding his father in the prouince of weſtſaxe: and Ethelbright in the prouince of Kent: reigned both togither, the terme of v. yeares, one with the other. Of the which two, Ethelbald, the firſt left this infamie, behinde him in ſtoryes, for marrying and lying with his ſtepmother, wife to hys owne father named Iudith. After theſe two ſucceded Ethelred, the thirde ſonne, who in his time was ſo encombred with the Danes, bruſting in on euery ſide: eſpeciallye about Yorke, (which Citie they then ſpoyled and brent vp) that he in one yeare ſtoode in ix. battailes againſt them, w the helpe of Alured his brother. In the beginning of thys Kinges reigne, the Danes landed in Eaſt Englande, or Northfolke & Southfolke. But (as Fabian writeth) they were compelled to forſake that country, and ſo toke again ſhipping, and ſayled Northward, and landed in Northūberlande: where they were met of the Kinges then there reigning, called Oſbright, and Ella, which gaue to them a ſtrong fight. But notwithſtanding the Danes, with help of ſuch as inhabited the country, wanne the City of York, and helde it a certaine ſeaſon as is aboue foretouched.

Who ioyning altogether in one counſel, made al one courſe, & laſtly landed in Eaſt England, or Northfolke, & in proces of time came to Thetford. Thereof hearing Edmund, then vnder king of that prouince: aſſembled an hoſt, that gaue to them battaill. But Edmund and his company was forced to forſake the field, & the king with a few perſons fled vnto the caſtle of Framingham, whō the Danes purſued. But he in ſhort while after, yelded himſelfe to the perſecution of the Danes: aunſwering in this maner to yͤ meſſēger, that told him in the name of Inguar Prince of the Danes: which moſt victoriouſly (ſaith he) was come with innumerable legions, ſubduing both by ſea and land manye nations vnto him: & ſo now arriued in thoſe parts, requireth him likewiſe to ſubmit himſelf, yelding to him his hid treaſures, and ſuch other goods of his aunceters, and ſo to reign vnder him, which thing if he would not do, he ſhold (ſaid he) be iudged vnworthy both of life & reigne. Edmūd hearing this proud meſſage of yͤ Pagane, conſulted wyth certayne of his fryends: and amongeſt other, with one of his biſhops being thē his Secretary, who ſeyng the preſent daunger of the king: gaue him counſell to yeeld to the conditions. That Edmūd a chriſtian king, for the loue of temporall life, will not ſubmitte himſelfe to Pagane Duke, vnleſſe he before woulde bee a Chriſtian. Incontinent vpon the ſame, the wicked & crafty Dane approching in moſt haſty ſpeede vpon the King, encountred with him in battell (as ſome ſay) at Thetford: where the king being put to the worſe, & pittieng the terrible ſlaughter of his men: thinking with himſelfe rather to ſubmit his owne perſon to daunger, then his people ſhould be ſlaine did flye (as Fabian ſayth) to the Caſtle of Framingham: or (as my author writeth to Haleſdō, now called S. Duke Ethelwold ſlayne.

Oſrike king of Denmark landeth in England.

As the tidings hereof was brought to king Etheldred, (which put him in great heauines) word alſo was brought the ſame time of the landing of Oſrike, king of Denmarke: who with aſſiſtence of the other Danes had gathered a great hoſt, and were enbattelled vpō Aſhdowne. To this battaile king Ethelred with his brother Alured (forced by great neede) ſped them ſelues to withſtand the Danes. At which time, the king a litle ſtaying behind being yet at his ſeruice, Alured which was comen before, had entred already into the whole fight with the Danes: who ſtrake together with huge violēce. The king being required to make ſpeede (hee being then at ſeruice, and meditations) ſuch was his deuotion: that he would not ſtirre out one foote, before the ſeruice was fully cōplete. In this meane while, the Danes ſo fearſly inuaded Alured and his mē, that they wanne the hill: and the Chriſten men were in the valley, and in great daunger to looſe the whole fielde. Neuertheleſſe through the grace of God, and their godly manhoode, the king comming from his ſeruice, with his freſh ſouldiours recouered the hill of the infidels: and ſo diſcōfited the Danes that day, that in fleing away not only they loſt the victory, but moſt part alſo of them their liues. In ſo much that their Duke or king Oſride or Oſege, and fiue of their Dukes, with much of their people were ſlain, and the reſt chaſed vnto Reding towne.

The Danes ouerthrown at Aſhdon.

After this, the Danes yet reſembled their people, and gathered a new hoſt, ſo that within xv. dayes, they mete at Baſingſtoke, and there gaue battaile vnto the king, & had the better. Then the king againe gathered his mē, which at that field were diſparkled, and with freſh ſouldiours to them accompanied, mete the Danes within two monethes after at the towne of Merton, where hee gaue to them a ſharpe battaile: ſo that much people were ſlaine as well of the Chriſten, as of the Danes, but in the ende, the Danes had the honour of the fielde, and king Ethelred there was wounded, and therefore faine to ſaue himſelfe.

Another battayle fought with the Danes.

Another battayle fought with the Danes at Merton.

After theſe ij. fields thus won by the Danes, they obtained great circuit of groūd, and deſtroyed man & childe, that would not yeld to them. And Churches and temples they turned to the vſe of ſtables, & other vile occupations.

Thus the king beſet with enemies on euery ſide, ſeing the land ſo miſerably oppreſſed of the Danes: his knights and ſoldiours conſumed: his owne land of Weſtſaxons in ſuch deſolation: he being alſo wounded himſelf: But eſpecially for that he ſending his commiſſions into Northumberland, into Mercia, and Eaſtanglia, could haue of them but ſmal or litle comfort (becauſe they through wicked rebellion, were more willing to take the part of the Danes, then of their king) was ſore perplexed therewithall, as the other Kinges were both before him and after him, at that time. So that, as Malmeſbury witneſſeth, magis optarēt honeſtum exitium, quàm tam acerbum imperium. That is, They rather wiſhed honeſtly to die, then with ſuch trouble and ſorrow to reigne. And thus this King not long after deceaſed, when he had reigned, as Fabian ſayth viij. yeres, as Malmeſbury wryteth, but v. yeares. During which time of his reigne, notwithſtanding hys ſo great troubles and vexations in martiall affaires, (as is in ſome ſtories mentioned) he founded the houſe or college of Chanōs at Exeter, and was buried at the Abbey of Winborn or Woborn. *King Alured otherwiſe called Alfrede.

{An. 872.} Alured K. of England.

AMong the Saxon kinges hetherto in this hiſtorie afore mentioned: I finde fewe or none to be preferred (or almoſt to be compared) to this Alured, or Alfrede for the great and ſingulare qualities in this king worthy of high renowne and commendation. Whether we behold in him the valiant actes, and manifold trauailes which he continually from time to time ſuſtained againſt his enemies in warres, during almoſt all the time of his raigne, for the publicke preſeruation of his people: Or whether we conſider in him, his godly and excellent vertues, ioyned with a publicke and tender care, and zealous ſtudy, for the common peace and trāquility of the weale publike: appearing as wel in his prudēt lawes by him both carefully ſet forth, and with the like care executed, as alſo by his own priuate exerciſes touching the vertuous inſtitution of his life. Or whether we reſpect that in him, which with equall praiſe matcheth with both the other before: That is, his notable knowledge of good letters, with a feruēt loue and Princely deſire, to ſet forth the ſame through all his Realme (before his time being both rude and barbarous) All whych his heroical properties, ioyned together in one Prince, as it is a thing moſt rare, and ſeldome ſeene in Princes now a daies: ſo I thought the ſame the more to be noted and exampleſide in this good king. Therby either to moue other rulers and Princes in theſe our daies, to his imitation: or els to ſhew them what hath ben in times paſt, in their anceters, which ought to be, and yet is not founde in them. Wherefore of theſe three partes to diſcourſe either part in order, firſt we wil enter to entreat of his actes and painefull trauailes ſuſtained, in defence of the Realme publicke: againſt the raging tyrannie of the Danes, as they be deſcribed in the Latin hiſtories of Rog. Houeden, and Huntington: whome Fabian alſo ſeemeth in this part ſomewhat to follow. King Alfred therfore, firſt of al the Engliſh kings, taking his crowne and vnction at Rome of Pope Leo (as Malmeſberienſis and Polycronicō do recorde) in the beginning of his raigne, perceauing his Lordes & people much waſted and decaied, by the reaſon of the great warres of Ethelred, had againſt the Danes: yet as well as he coulde, gathered a ſtrength of men vnto him, and in the ſecōd moneth that he was made King, he met with the Danes beſide Wylton, where hee gaue to them battaile. But being farre ouermatched, through the multitude of the contrary part, was put there to the worſe: although not wythout a great ſlaughter of the Pagane army. Which army then of the Danes, after that victorie, by compaction made wyth King Alfrede, to depart out of his dominion of Weſtſaxe: remoued from Reading to London, where they abode all that winter. Where Halden their king, taking truſe wyth Burhered, King of Mercians, the next yeare followinge voyded thoſe partes, and drewe to Lyndeſey: in robbing and ſpoyling the townes and villages as they went, and holding the common people vnder their ſeruage. From thence after to Repyngdon: where they ioyning wyth the three other Kings of the Danes (called Surdrim, Oſketel, and Hamond) grewe thereby in mighty force and ſtrength. Who then deuiding their armie in two partes, the one halfe remained wyth Halden in the countrey of Northumberland: the reſidue were with the other three kings, wintering and ſoiourning all the next yeare at Grantbrige, which was the fourth yeare of King Alfred. In the which yeare King Alfred his men had a conflict on the Sea, with ſixe of the Danes ſhippes, of which one they tooke, the other fled away. In this yeare went Rollo the Dane into Normandie, where hee was Duke thirtie yeare, and afterwarde was Baptiſed in the faith of Chriſt, and named Robert The foreſayde armie of the three Dane Kinges aboue mētioned frō Grantebryge, returned again to Weſtſaxonie, and entred the Caſtle of Warham: where King Alfrede with a ſufficiēt power of men, was ready to aſſault them. But the Danes ſeeing his ſtrength durſt not attēpt with him, but ſought delaies, while more ayd might come. In the meane ſeaſon they were conſtrayned to intreat for truce: leauing alſo ſufficient pledges in the Kinges hand, promiſing moreouer vpon their othe, to voyde the country of the Weſtſaxons. The king vpon the ſurety let them go. But they falſely breaking their league, priuely in the night brake out, taking their iourny toward Exceter. In which iourny, they loſt vi. ſcore of their ſmall ſhips, by a tempeſt at Sandwych (as Henry Huntington in hys ſtorye recordeth.) Then kyng Alfrede followed after the horſmen of the Danes, but coulde not ouertake them, before they came to Exceter, where he tooke of thē pledges and fayre promiſes of peace, and ſo returned. Notwithſtanding the number of the Pagāes did dayly more and more increaſe, in ſo much (as one of my authors ſayth) that if in one day 30. thouſand of them were ſlayn, ſhortly after they increaſed double as many agayne. After this truce taken with King Alfrede, the Danes then voyded to the land of Mercia, whereof part of that kingdome they kept themſelues, part they committed to one Ceolulphus: vppon condition

King Alfrede flyeth into a deſert wood.

Etheling which is to ſay the Ile of Nobles.

A ſwineheard made Byſhop of Wincheſter.

The next yere inſuing, which was the vij. yeare of the raigne of Alfred, the Danes, who nowe hauing all the rule of the Northpart of Englande, from the riuer of Tames, with Mercia, London, and Eſſex: diſdained that Alfrede ſhoulde beare any dominion on the other ſide of Tames ſouthward. whereupon the foreſayde three Kings with all the force and ſtrength they coulde make, marched towarde Chippenham in weſſexe, with ſuch a multitude, that the king wͭ his people was not able to reſiſt them. In ſo much that the people which inhabited there, ſome fled ouer the ſea, ſome remained with the king, diuers ſubmitted themſelues to the Danes. Thus King Alfrede being ouerſet wͭ multitude of enemies, and forſaken of hys people, hauing neither lād to hold, nor hope to recouer that which he had loſt: withdrew himſelfe wͭ a fewe of his nobles about him, into a certaine wood countrey in Somerſetſhire, called Ethelyng: where he had right ſcant to liue with, but ſuch as he and his people might purchaſe by hunting and fiſhing. This Edelyng or Ethelyng or Ethelyngſey, ſtandeth in a great Marreſſe or More, ſo that there is no acceſſe vnto it, without ſhip or boate: and hath in it a great woode called Selewood, and in the midle a litle plaine, about of two acres of ground. In which Ile is veneſon, and other wilde beaſtes, with foule and fiſhes, great plenty. In this wood, King Alured at his firſt comming, eſpied a certaine deſerte cotage of a poore Swynarde, keeping ſwine in the woode, named Dunwolphus: of whome the King then vnknowen was entertained and cheariſhed, with ſuch poore fare as he and his wife could make him. For the which, King Alfrede afterwarde, ſet the poore Swinarde to learning, and made him Biſhop of wincheſter.

In the meane ſeaſon, while King Alfrede accompanied with a few, was thus in the deſert wood, waiting the euent of theſe miſeries: certaine ſtories recorde of a poore beggar, which there came and aſked hys almes of the King. And the night folowing he appeared to the King in hys ſleepe: ſaying his name was Cutbert, promiſing (as ſent frō God, vnto him for his good charitie) great victories againſt the Danes. But to let theſe dreaming fables paſſe, althoughe they be teſtified by diuers authours, both Wilielmus Lib. de Reg. Polychronicon, Rog. Houeden, Iornalenſis, and other mo. Notwythſtanding the king in proceſſe of time, was ſtrēgthened and cōforted more, through the prouidence of God: reſpecting the miſerable ruine of the Engliſhmen. Firſt the brother of King Haldene the Dane before mentioned, comming in with xxiij. ſhips, landed about Deuonſhire: where by chaunce being reſiſted by a buſhment of king Alfredes men (who for their ſafegarde there lay in garyſon) were ſlaine to the number of 1300. men, and their enſigne called the Rauen was taken. Houedenus in hys booke of Continuationis wryteth, that in the ſame cōflict both Inguar and Hubba were ſlain among the other Danes. After this, King Alfrede being better cheared, ſhewed him ſelfe more at large: ſo that daily reſorted to him, men of wiltſhyre, Somerſetſhyre, and Hamſhyre, till that hee was ſtrongly accompanied.

A bold aduenture or attempt of king Alfrede, ventring himſelf into the tentes of the Danes.

Ex Fabiano.

Then the King put himſelfe in a bold and dangerous venture (as wryteth Wilelmus Lib. de Reg. Polychron. and Fabian which followeth them both) for he apparelling him in the habite of a Minſtrell (as hee was very ſkilfull in all Saxon Poemes) with his inſtrument of Muſike, entred in the tentes of the Danes, lying then at Eddendime: and in ſhewing there his interlude and ſongs, eſpied all theyr ſlouth and ydlenes, and heard much of their counſell. And after returning to hys companie, declared vnto them the whole manner of the Danes. Shortly vpon the ſame, the King ſodainly in the night fell vpon the foreſaid Danes, & diſtreſſed and ſlewe of them a great multitude, chaſed them from that coaſt. In ſo much that through hys ſtrong & valiaunt aſſaultes vpon his enemies, out of his tower of Edelyng newly fortified: he ſo encōbered them, that he clearly voyded the countrey of them, betweene that and Selwodes. His ſubiectes eftſones, hearing of theſe hys valiaunt victories, and manful deedes, drewe to him daily out of all coaſts. who through the helpe of God, and their aſſiſtāce, helde the Danes ſo ſhort, that he wanne from them wincheſter, & diuers other good townes. Briefly, at lēgth he forced them to ſeeke for peace: the which was concluded vpon certaine couenaunts. whereof one and the principal was, that the forenamed Gutrum their King ſhoulde be Chriſtened. The other was, that ſuche as woulde not be Chriſtened, ſhould depart and voide the countrey.

Gutrum the Prince of the Danes was Chriſtened.

King Gutrum named Athelſtane.

Upon theſe couenants, firſt the ſayde Gutrum the Daniſh Prince cōming to wincheſter, there was Chriſtened with xx. of his greateſt Dukes or Nobles, To the whyche Gutrum King Alured being hys Godfather at hys Baptiſme, named hym Athelſtane. who after a certaine ſeaſon that he had feaſted the ſaid Danes: he according to his promiſe before made, gaue vnto theyr King the countrey of Eaſtanglia, containing Northfolke & Suffolke, and part of Cambridſhire. Moreouer (as ſaith Polychron.) he grāted to the Danes that were Chriſtened, the Countrey of Northumberland. So the reſidue that wold not be Chriſtened, departed the land, and ſailed into Fraunce: where, what vexation and harme they wrought, the Chronicles of Fraunce do partly comprehend.

King Athelſtane thus hauing the poſſeſſion of theſe countreis, had all Eaſtangles vnder his obedience. And albeit that he held the ſayd prouince as in fee of the king, & promiſed to dwel there as his liege mā: yet that notwithſtanding, hee continued more like a tyrant, by the terme of xi. yeare and died in the xij. yere. During the which ſpace, King Alfrede hauing ſome more reſt and peace, repaired certain townes and ſtrong holds afore by the Danes empaired. Alſo he builded diuers houſes of religiō, as ẏ houſe of Nunnes at Shafteſbury. An other religious houſe at Ethelyng he foūded. Item an other in wincheſter, named the new monaſtery. Item, he endewed richly the Churche of S. Cutbert in Dyrham. He ſent alſo to India, to pay and performe his vowes to S. Thomas of Inde, which he made during the time of his diſtreſſe againſt the Danes.

beſieged of the Danes.

About the xv. yeare of the reigne of Alfred, the Danes returning from France to England, landed in Kent, and ſo came to Rocheſter, and beſieged that City: and there lay ſo long, that they builded a Tower of tymber againſt the gates of the Citie. But by ſtrength of the Citizens, that tower was deſtroyed, and the Citie defended til King Alfrede came and reſcued them. whereby the Danes were ſo diſtreſſed, and ſo nere trapped: that for feare, they left their horſes behind them, and fled to their ſhips by night. But the King, when he was thereof ware: ſent after them and tooke xvi. of their ſhippes, & ſlew many of the ſaid Danes. This done, the King returned to London, & repaired the ſame honorably (as ſayth Houedenus) & made it habitable, which before was ſore decaied and febled by the Danes.

An. 892.

The third yeare after this, which was the xix. yeare of the raigne of king Alfred: the foreſayd Athelſtane the Daniſh king of Northfolke (which by Alfred was Chriſtened before) deceaſed. Not lōg after this, about the xxi. yeare of this kinges reigne, the Danes agayne landed in foure places of this land: which was, in Eaſtinglande: in the North: and in the weſt, in two places. Before the landyng of theſe Danes, it chaunced king Elfred, hearing of the death of King Athelſtane, and of other complayntes of the Danes, was then in Eaſtengland, when theſe tidings came to him.

The Danes driuen from Norfolke.

The Danes returne agayne to Norfolke.

When King Alfrede was hereof aſcertained: forſomuch as ſome of the Danes were landed in that coaſt, thincking with themſelues the further they wēt in thoſe parties, the leſſe reſiſtaunce to haue, and the more ſpeede, as they were wont to haue before: Alfride therefore ſending meſſengers in all haſt to Etheldred Duke of Mercia, to aſſemble to him an hoſt, to withſtand the Danes which landed in ẏ weſt, made forth toward hys enemies there, where hee was in Eaſtanglia, whom he purſued ſo ſharpely, that hee droue them out from thoſe parties. They then landed in kent, whether the king with his people ſped him, and in lyke maner draue the Danes from thence, without anye great fight, ſo farre as in our authors we can ſee. After this, agayne the Danes tooke ſhipping, and ſayled into Northwales, and there robbed and ſpoyled the Britones, & from thence returned by the ſea into Eaſtanglia, with an hundreth ſhips, and there reſted them, for ſo much the king then was gone weſtward.

The Danes driuen out of Cheſter.

The Danes driuen from Lewes.

The fourth hoſt of the Danes, the ſame yeare came to Cheſter, which at length they won, but then, the countrey adioyning preſſed ſo ſore vpon them, and beſieged them ſo long, keeping them ſelues wythin the City, that at the laſt the Danes weryed with the long ſiege, were compelled to eat their owne horſes for hunger. But by appointment, at laſt they gaue ouer the towne, and went about by Northwales to Northumberland, whyche was about the xxiij. yeare of king Alfrede: which Alfrede in the meane while with his hoſt, ſped him thetherward. Thē the Danes, leauing their ſtrong holdes and Caſtles garniſhed with men and vitaile: tooke againe ſhipping, and ſet theyr courſe in ſuch wiſe that they landed in Suſſex, & ſo came to the porte of Lewes: and from thence towarde London, and builded a Tower or Caſtle neare vnto the riuer of Ley, xx. mile frō London. But the Londiners hearing therof, manned out a certaine number of men of armes, who wͭ the aſſiſtence of them of that countrey, put the Danes from that tower:

and after beat it downe to the grōd. Soone after the king came downe thether. And to preuent the daungers that might enſue, commaunded the riuer of Luye to be deuided in iii. ſtreames: ſo that where a ſhyp might ſayle in times before, then a litle boate might ſcantly row. Frō thence the Danes, leauing their ſhippes & wiues, were forced to flie that countrey, and tooke their way againe toward wales, and came to Quadruge neare to the Riuer of Seuerne. where, vpon the borders therof, they builded then a caſtle, there reſting themſelues for a time: whome the King eftſoones wyth his armie purſued. In the meane tyme, the Londiners at Luye taking the Danes ſhippes: ſome of them they brought to London, the reſt they fired. During all theſe three yeres, from the firſt comming of the Danes to Luye, Englande was afflicted with three maner of ſorrowes: with the Danes, wyth peſtilence of men, and morreine of beaſts. The which troubles notwithſtanding, yet the King manfully reſiſted the malice of his enemyes, and thāked God alway, what trouble ſoeuer fel to him, or vnto his Realme, and ſuſteined it wyth great pacience & humilitie. Theſe three yeares ouerpaſt, the next yeare folowing, which was the xxviij. of the reigne of Alfrede: the Danes deuided their hoſte: of whom part went to Northumberland, ſome to Northfolke, part ſailed ouer to Fraunce, ſome other came to weſtſaxe. where they had diuers conflictes with the Engliſhmen, both by lande and eſpecially vpon the Sea: of whome ſome were ſlaine: many by ſhypwracke peryſhed, diuers were taken and hanged, and xxx. of their ſhippes were taken.

Not long after this, king Alfred, when he had reigned xxix. yeares, and vj. monethes, chaunged this mortall life. And thus much (and more peraduēture, then will ſeeme to thys our Eccleſiaſticall ſtorie appertaining) touching the painfull labours and trauailes of this good king: which he no leſſe valiantly atcheued, then paciently ſuſteined, for the neceſſary defence of his Realme and ſubiects.

Now if there be any Prince, who liſteth to ſee and folow the vertuous and godly diſpoſition of this king: both touching the inſtitution of his owne life, & alſo concerning his carefull gouernement of the cōmon weale: thus the hiſtories of him do record. That at what time he being yōg, perceaued hymſelfe ſomewhat diſpoſed to the vice of the fleſh, & thereby letted from many vertuous purpoſes: did not as many young Princes, and Kinges ſonnes in the world be now wont to do: that is to reſolue thēſelues into all kind of carnal licence, and diſſolute ſenſualitie, running and folowing without bridle, whether ſoeuer their licence geuen doth leade them (as therefore not without cauſe the common prouerbe reporteth of them) that Kings ſonnes learne nothing well els, but onely to ride. Meaning therby, that Princes and Kinges ſonnes hauing about them flatterers, whych bolſter them in theyr faultes: onely their horſes geue to them no more, then to any other: but if they ſit not faſt, they wil caſt them. But this young king ſeeing in him ſelfe the inclination of his fleſhly nature, minding not to geue hym ſelfe ſo much as he might take, but rather by reſiſtence to auoid the tentation thereof: beſought God that he wold ſend to him ſome continual ſicknes, in quenching of that vice, whereby he might be more profitable to the publike buſines of the cōmon wealth, and more apt to ſerue God in his calling. Then at Gods ordinance, he had the euill called Ficus, til he came to the age of xx. yeres, wherof at length he was cured (as is ſayd in ſome ſtories) by the virgin called Modwen, an Iriſhwoman. After this ſickneſſe being taken away, to him fell an other: which continued with him from the xx. yeres of his age, to xlv (according to his own petition & requeſt made vnto God) wherby, he was the more reclaimed & attempered from other more great incōueniences, and leſſe diſpoſed to that which he did moſt abhorre.

Moreouer to beholde the bountiful goodnes ioyned wt like prudence in this man: in the ordering & diſpoſing hys riches and rents, it is not vnworthy to be recited. How he deuided his goods in two equall partes: the one apperteining to vſes ſecular, the other to vſes ſpirituall or Eccleſiaſticall. Of the which two principall partes, the firſt he deuided into three portiōs: the firſt to the behoſe of his houſe and family, the ſecond vpon his workmen and builders of his new works. whereof he had great delight & cunning: the third vpon ſtrangers. Likewiſe the other ſecond halfe, vpon ſpirituall vſes, he did thus diuide in foure portions: One to the releuing of the poore: An other to monaſteries: The iij. portion to the ſchooles of Oxforde, for the mainteining of good letters: The iiij. he ſent to foreine Churches, without the Realme. This alſo is left in ſtories written to his commendation, for his great tolerance and ſufferance: that when he had builded the new Monaſtery at wincheſter, and afterward hys ſonne Edward had purchaſed of the Byſhop and the Chapter a ſufficient peece of grounde for certaine offices to be adioyned vnto the ſame, & had geuen for euery foote of ground, mancam auri pleni ponderis (which was as I thynke a marke of golde) or more: yet Alfrede therwithal was not greatly diſcontented to ſee his coffers ſo waſted.

The liberall hart of king Alfrede.

Ouer and beſides, how ſparing and frugall hee was of time (as of a thing in this earth moſt precious) and howe farre from al vain paſtimes and idlenes he was: this doth well declare, which in the ſtorie of William de Reg. & other wryters is tolde of hym. That hee ſo deuided the day and night in three parts, if he were not let by warres, or other great buſines: that eight houres hee ſpent in ſtudie & learning: and other eight houres he ſpent in praier and almes dedes: and other eight houres he ſpent in his natural reſt, ſuſtenance of his body, and the needes of the realme. The which order he kept duely by the burning of waxen tapers kept in his cloſet by certaine perſons for the ſame purpoſe. Guliel.

How well and godly this king ſpent his tyme.

How ſtudious he was & carefull of the commō wealth and maintenance of publike tranquillitie: his lawes moſt godly ſet forth and diuiſed by him may declare. wherein eſpecially by him was prouided, for the extirping and aboliſhing all theft and theeues out of the Realme. wherby, the Realme through his vigilant care, was brought into ſuch trāquillitie or rather perfection, that in euery croſſe or turning way, he made be ſet vp a golden brouch at leaſt of ſiluer gilded, through his dominiōs: and none ſo hardy neither by day nor night to take it downe: for the more credit wherof, the wordes of the Latin ſtory be theſe: Armillas aureas iuberet ſuſpendi, quæ viantium auiditatem irritarent, dum non eſſent, qui eas abriperent. &c. Guliel. Lib. de Regibus Angl. And no great maruel therein, if the Realme in thoſe dayes was brought in ſuch an order, and that iuſtice then was ſo well miniſtred, when the king him ſelfe was ſo vigilant in ouerſeeing the doings of his iudges and officers. whereof thus alſo we read in the ſaide author teſtified: Iudiciorum a ſuis hominibus factorum, inquiſitor, perperam actorum aſperrimus corrector. i. he was (ſayeth mine author ſpeaking of the king) a vigilant inquiſitor of the doings of his iudges, and a ſtrict puniſher of theyr miſdoinges. Iornalenſis alſo wryting vpon the ſame, thus ſayth: Facta miniſtrorum ſuorum, & potiſsimè iudicum diligenter inueſtigauit, adeo vt quos ex auaritia aut imperitia errare cognoſceret, ab officio remouebat, that is, he did diligently ſearch out the doings of his officers, & eſpecially of his iudges: ſo that if he knewe any of them to erre eyther through couetouſnes, or vnſkilfulnes: them he remoued from their office.

And thus much concerning the valiant actes, and noble vertues of this worthy Prince: whereunto although there were no other ornamēts adioyning beſides: yet ſufficient were they alone to ſet forth a Prince worthy excellent commendation. Nowe beſides theſe other qualities & gifts of Gods grace in him, aboue mentioned: remayneth an other part of his no litle praiſe & commendation, which is his learning and knowledge of good letters: wherof he not onely was excellently expert hym ſelfe, but alſo a worthy mainteiner of ye ſame through al his dominiōs: where before, no vſe of Grammer or other ſciences was practiſed in this Realme, eſpecially about the weſtparts of the lād: there through the induſtrie of this king, ſchooles began to be erected, and ſtudyes to floriſh. Although amōg the Britaynes in the towne of Cheſter in Southwales lōg before that, in kyng Arthurs tyme, as Galfridus writeth: both Grammer, and Philoſophy with other tongues was thē taught. After that ſome writers record, that in the tyme of Egbert kyng of Kent, this Iſlande began to floriſhe with Philoſophy. About which tyme ſome alſo thinke: that the Uniuerſitie of Graūtecheſter, neare to that which nowe is called Cambrige, began to be founded, by Bede: folowing this coniecture therein, for that Alcuinus (before mētioned) which after went to Rome, & from thence to Fraunce in the tyme of Charles the great, where he firſt began the Uniuerſitie of Paris: was firſt traded vp in the exerciſe of ſtudies, at the ſame ſchoole of Graūtecheſter. Beda Lib. III. cap. 18. writing alſo of Sigebert king of Eaſtangles, declareth how the ſayd Sigebert returning out of Fraunce into England (according to the examples whiche hee did there ſee) ordered and diſpoſed ſchooles of learning, through the meanes of Felix then Biſhop: and placed in them maiſters and teachers, after the vſe and maner of the Cantuarites. And yet before theſe times, moreouer is thought to be two ſchooles or vniuerſities within the realme: the one Greek, at ye town of Greglade, which afterward was called Kyrklade: The other for Latine, whiche place was then called Latinclade: afterward Lethelade neare to Oxford.

But howſoeuer it chãced that the knowledge and ſtudy of good letters being once planted in this realme, afterwarde went to decay: yet King Alfrede deſerueth no little praiſe, for reſtoring or rather increaſing the ſame. After whoſe time they haue euer ſince continued, albeit not continually through euery age in like perfection. But this we may ſee, what it is to haue a Prince learned him ſelfe, who feeling and taſting the price and value of ſcience & knowledge, is thereby not only the more apt to rule, but alſo to inſtruct & frame his ſubiectes, from a rude barbaritye, to a more ciuile congruencie of life, & to a better vnderſtanding of thinges: as we ſee in this famous Prince to happen. Cõcerning whoſe firſt education & bringing vp, although it was ſomewhat late before he entred any letter: yet ſuche was the apt towardneſſe & docilitie of his nature, that being a childe, he had the Saxon Poemes (ſuch as were vſed then in his owne toung) by hart and memory. Who afterward with yeares and time grewe vp in ſuch perfection of learning and knowledge, in ſo much, that as mine author ſayeth, Nullus Anglorum fuerit vel intelligendo acutior, vel in interpretando elegantior. The which thing in him the more was to be marueiled, for that he was xij. yeares of age before he knew any letter. Then his mother, careful and tender ouer him, hauing by chance a booke in her hand, which he wold faine haue: promiſed to geue him the ſame, ſo that he wold learne it. Wherupon he for greedines of the booke, eftſoones learned the letters, hauing to his Scholemaiſter Pleimundus, after biſhop of Canterbury. And ſo daily grew more and more in knowledge, that at length, as mine author ſayth, Plurimam partem Romanæ bibliothecæ, Anglorum auribus dedit, optimam prædam peregrinarum mercium, ciuium vſibus conuertens. That is. A great part of the Latin Librarie hee tranſlated into Engliſh, conuerting to the vſes of his Citizens, a notable pray of forein ware & marchãdiſe. &c. Of which bookes by him and through him tranſlated, was Oroſius: Paſtorale Gregorij. The hiſtorie of Bede: Boëtius de conſolatione Philoſophiæ. Alſo a booke of his owne making and in his owne toung, which in the Engliſh ſpeach he called a hãdbooke, in Greke called it Enchiridion, in Latine a Manuel. Beſides the hiſtorie of Bede tranſlated into the Saxons toung, he alſo himſelfe compiled a ſtory in the ſame ſpeach, called the ſtorie of Alfrede. &c. which both bookes in the Saxons tounge I haue ſeene, though the language I do not vnderſtãd. And as he was learned himſelf excellently well, ſo likewiſe did he inflame all his countrey men to the loue of liberall letters, as the wordes of the ſtorie reporteth, Illos præmijs, hos minis hortando, neminem illiteratum, ad quamlibet curiæ dignitatem aſpirare permittens. That is. He exhorted and ſtirred his people to the ſtudie of learning, ſome with giftes, ſome by threates, ſuffering no man to aſpire to any dignitie in the Court, except he were learned. Moreouer an other ſtorie thus ſayth, ſpeaking of his nobles: Optimates quoq; ſuos ad literaturam addiſcendam in tantum prouocauit, vt ſibi filios ſuos, vel ſaltem ſi filios nõ haberent, ſeruos ſuos, literis commendarent. That is. Alſo his nobles ſo much hee did allure to the embracing of good letters, that they ſet all their ſonnes to ſchoole: or if they had no ſonnes, yet their ſeruauntes they cauſed to be learned. Whereby the common prouerbe may be found not ſo common, as true. Such as is the Prince, ſuch be the ſubiectes. He began moreouer to tranſlate the Pſalter in Engliſh, & had almoſt finiſhed the ſame, had not death preuẽted him. Guliel. de Regib Angl. In the Prologue of the booke intituled Paſtorale Grego. thus hee wryteth: declaring the cauſe why hee was ſo earneſt and diligent in tranſlating good bookes from Latine into Engliſh, ſhewing the cauſe thereof, why he ſo did, as foloweth: Quòd Eccleſiæ in quibus innumeræ priſcæ bibliothecæ continebantur, cum libris a Danis incenſæ ſint: quodq; in tota inſula ſtudium literarum ita abolitũ eſſet vt quiſq; minus timeret capitis periculum, quam ſtudiorum exercitia adire. Qua propter ſe in hoc, Anglis ſuis conſulere &c. That is. The cauſe was, for that innumerable auncient Libraryes which were kept in Churches, were conſumed with fire by the Danes: And that men had rather ſuffer perill of their life, thẽ to follow the exerciſe of ſtudyes: And therefore he thought thereby to prouide before for the people of the Engliſh nation. &c.

The cauſe why the king turned latine bookes into Engliſh.

It is tolde of him both in Polychron Malmeſb. Ironalenſis, and other ſtoryes mo, whereof I haue no names: that he ſeing his countrey (namely weſtward) to be ſo deſolate of ſcholes and learning, partly to profite himſelfe, partly to furniſh his countrey & ſubiectes with better knowledge, firſt ſent for Grimboldus a learned Monke out of Fraunce, to come into England. Alſo ſent for an other learned man out from the partes of Wales, whoſe name was Aſſerion, whome he made Byſhop of Shyreborne. Item out of Mercia, he ſent for Werefrithus, biſhop of Worcetor: to whõ he put the Dialogues of Gregoy to be tranſlated. But chiefly he vſed the Counſell of Neotus, who then was counted for an holy man, and Abbot of a certaine Monaſterie in Cornwal. By the aduiſement of which Neotus, hee ſent for theſe learned men aboue recited: and alſo ordained certaine ſcholes of diuers artes, firſt at Oxforde, and alſo fraunchiſed the ſame with many great liberties. Guliel. Iornalenſ. Fabi. cap. 171. Wherof perhaps the ſchole, now called the new Colledge (firſt then begon of this Neotus) myght take hys name: which (afterwarde peraduenture) the Byſhops of Wincheſter after a larger manner did reed.fie, and inlarge wyth greater poſſeſſions.

Learned men ſent for and placed about the king.

The newe Colledge in Oxford. Ioan. Scotus.

Moreouer, amõg other learned men which were about king Alfrede: hiſtories make mention of Iohannes Scotus (a godly Diuine, and a learned Philoſopher) but not that Scotus, which nowe we call Duns. For that Iohannes Scotus came after this, many yeares. This Iohannes is deſcribed to be a ſharpe wit, of great eloquence, and well expert in the Greeke toung: pleaſant and mery of nature and cõditions, as appeareth by diuers his doings & aunſweres. Firſt he comming to Fraunce out of his owne countrey of Scotland, by reaſon of the great tumultes of warre, was there worthily intertained: and for hys learning had in great eſtimation of Carolus Caluus the French king, whom he commonly and familiarly vſed euer to haue about him, both at table, and in chamber. Upon a time the King ſitting at meate, and ſeeing ſomething (belike in thys Iohn Scot) which ſemed not very courtly: caſt forth a mery word aſking of him, what difference there was betwixt a Scot, & a Sot. Whereunto the Scot ſitting ouer againſt the King, ſomewhat lower, replied againe ſodainly, rather then aduiſedly (yet merely) ſaying: Menſa tantùm, that is, the table onely: importing thereby himſelf to be the Scot, and ſo calling the king a Sot by craft. Which word howe other princes would haue taken to ſtomake, I knowe not: but thys Charles, for the great reuerẽce he bare to his learning, turned it but to a laughter among his nobles, & ſo let it paſſe.

The aunſwere of Ioannes Scotus to the French king.

An other time, the ſame king being at dinner, was ſerued wyth a certaine diſh of fiſh: wherein, were two great fiſhes, and a litle one. After the king had taken thereof his repaſt, ſetteth downe to Iohannes Scotus the foreſayde fiſh, to diſtribute vnto the other ij. Clarkes ſitting there wyth him: which were two tall and mighty perſons, he himſelfe being but a litle man. Iohannes taketh the fiſh, of the which the two great, he taketh and carueth to himſelf: the litle fiſh he reacheth to the other two. The king perceiuing this his diuiſion thus made, reprehended the ſame. Then Iohannes, whoſe maner was euer to finde out ſome honeſt matter to delite the King, anſwered to him againe, prouing his diuiſion to ſtand iuſt and equal. For here (ſayth he) be two great, and a little, poynting to the two great fiſhes & himſelfe: And likewiſe here again is a litle one and two great, pointing to the litle fiſh, & two great perſons, I pray you (ſayeth hee) what oddes is there, or what diſtribution can be more equall? Whereat the King with his nobles, being much delighted, laughed merely.

At the requeſt of thys Charles ſurnamed Bawld, the Frenche king, this Scotus tranſlated the booke of Dionyſius, intituled De Hierarchia, from Greeke into Latin, worde for worde, quo fit (as my author ſayth) vt vix intelligatur Latina litera, quum nobilitate magis Græca, quam poſitione conſtruitur Latina. He wrote alſo a Booke De corpore & ſanguine Domini, whych was afterward condemned by the Pope In Concilio Vercellenſi.

Ioan Scotus tranſlated Hierarchiam Dionitij. from Greeke to Latine.

The ſame Iohannes Scotus moreouer compiled a booke of his own, geuing it a greeke title, περὶ φυσικῶν διαιρεσίων, that is, De naturæ diuiſione. In which booke (as ſayeth my foreſayd author) is contained the reſolution of many profitable queſtions (but ſo) that he is thought to followe the Greeke Churche, rather then the Latine, and for the ſame was counted of ſome to be an hereticke: becauſe in that booke ſome thinges there be, which in all poyntes accorde not with the Romiſh Religion. Wherfore the Pope, wryting to the ſaide king Charles of thys Scotus, complayneth, as in his owne wordes here followeth:

The booke of Ioannes Scotus called περὶ φυσικῶν.

Ioannes Scotus addicted more to the Greeke Churche then the Latine.

Relatũ eſt Apſtolatui noſtro, quòd opus Dionyſij Areopagitæ, quod de diuinis nominibus, & de cæleſtibus ordinibus, Græco deſcripſit eloquio, quidam vir Ioannes (genere Scotus) nuper tranſtulit in Latinum. Quod, iuxta morem Eccleſiæ, nobis mitti, & noſtro iudicio debuit approbari: præſertim quum idem Ioannes (licèt multæ ſcientiæ eſſe prædicitur) olim non ſane ſapere, in quibuſdam frequenti rumore dicatur. &c. That is: Relation hath bene made vnto our Apoſtleſhip, that a certaine man called Iohannes a Scottiſh man, hath tranſlated the booke of Dionyſius the Areopagite: of the names of God, and of the heauenly orders, from Greeke into Latin. bene approued by our iudgement: namely ſeeing the ſayde Iohn (albeit he be ſayde to be a man of great learning and ſcience) in time paſt hath bene noted by common rumour, to haue bene a man, not of vpright or ſounde doctrine, in certaine pointes. &c. For this cauſe the ſayde Scotus, being conſtrained to remoue from Fraūce, came into England, allured (as ſome teſtifie) by the letters of Alured or Alfrede, of whom he was with great fauour entertained, and conuerſant a great ſpace about the king: til at length (whether before or after the death of the king it is vncertaine) he wēt to Malmeſbery, where he taught certaine ſcholers a fewe yeares, by the which Schollers at laſte moſt impiouſly he was murthered and ſlaine with their penknifes, and ſo died, as ſtories ſay, a Martyr, buried at the ſayd monaſtery of Malmeſbury with this Epitaph.

King Alfrede hauing theſe helpes of learned men about him, & no leſſe learned alſo himſelf, paſt ouer his time not onely to great vtilitie and profite of his ſubiectes, but alſo to a rare & profitable example of other Chriſten kings and Princes, for them to follow. This foreſaid Alfrede had by his wife called Ethelwitha, two ſonnes: Edwarde and Ethelward, and three daughters: Elflena, Ethelgora, and Ethelguida: Quas omnes liberalibus fecit artibus erudiri. That is, whome he ſet all to their bookes and ſtudy of liberall arts: as my ſtorie teſtifieth. Firſt Edward his eldeſt ſonne ſucceded him in the kingdome, The ſecond ſonne Ethelward died before his father. Ethelgora hys middle Daughter was made a Nunne. The other two were married, the one in Marceland, the other to the earle of Flanders. Thus king Alfrede the valiaunt, vertuous and learned Prince, after he had thus Chriſtianly gouerned the realme the terme of 29. yeares & 6. monethes, departed this life. v. Kal. Nou. and lyeth buried at Wincheſter. An Dom. 901. Of whome thys I finde moreouer greatly noted and commended in hiſtorie, and not here to be forgotten, for the rare example thereof touching this Alfrede: that whereſoeuer he was, or whetherſoeuer he went, he bare alwaies about him, in his boſome or pocket, a litle booke cōtaining the Pſalmes of Dauid, and certaine other Oraſons of his owne collecting. wherupon he was continually reading or praying whenſoeuer he was otherwiſe vacant, hauing leiſure therunto. Finally what were the vertues of this famous king, thys litle table here vnder written, which is left in ancient writing, in the remembraunce of his worthy and memorable life: doth ſufficiently, in fewe lines containe.

9. Popes in ix. yeares at Rome.

Formoſus firſt Pope.

Ex Chronico Sigeberti.

Schiſmes among the Popes.

As touching the courſe and proceedings of the Romiſh Biſhoppes there: where I laſt entred mention of them pag. 139. I ended wyth Pope Stephen the fifth. After hys time was much broyle, in the election of the Byſhops of Rome: one contending againſt an other: in ſo much that wythin the ſpace of ix. yeares, were ix. Byſhops. Of the which, firſt was Formoſus, who ſucceded next vnto the forenamed Stephen 5. being made pope againſt the mind of certaine in Rome: that wold rather Sergius then deacon of the church of Rome, to haue bene Pope. Notwythſtanding, Mars and money preuailed on Formoſus part. This Formoſus, of whome partly alſo is mentioned in other places, of this Eccleſiaſtical hiſtorie, being before biſhop of Portuake: had in time paſt (I knowe not vpon what cauſes) offended Pope Iohn the viij. of that name. By reaſon whereof for feare of the Pope, he voided away, and left his Biſhopprike. And becauſe hee being ſent for againe by the Pope, woulde not returne: therfore was excommunicated. At length comming into France, to make there his ſatiſfaction vnto the Pope, was degraded from a Byſhop into a ſecular mans habite, ſwearing to the Pope that he would no more reenter into the City of Rome, nor claime his Biſhoprike againe: ſubſcribing moreouer with his owne hand to continue from that time in the ſtate of a ſecular perſon. But then, Pope Martin (the next Pope after Iohn) releaſed the ſaide Formoſus of his othe, and reſtored him againe vnto his Biſhoprike. whereby Formoſus entred not onely into Rome againe, but alſo obtained ſhortly after yͤ papacie. Thus he being placed in the popedome, aroſe a great doubt or controuerſie among the Diuines, of his conſecration, whether it was lawfull or not: ſome holding againſt him, that for ſo much as he was ſolemnly depoſed, degraded, vnprieſted, and alſo ſworne not to reiterate the ſtate Eccleſiaſtical: therefore he ought to be taken no otherwiſe, then for a ſeculare man. Other alledged againe, that what ſoeuer Formoſus was, yet for the dignitie of that order, and for the credite of them, whom he ordered: all his conſecrations ought to ſtand in force, eſpecially, ſeeing the ſayd Formoſus was afterwarde receiued and abſolued by Pope Martin, from that his periury and degradation. &c. In the meane time (as witneſſeth Sigebertus) this Formoſus ſendeth for King Arnulphus for aide againſt his aduerſaries. who then marching toward Rome, was there reſiſted by the Romaines from entring. But in the ſiege (ſayeth the author) the Romaines within ſo playd the Lyons, that a poore Hare (or ſuch a like thing) comming towarde the Citie: the hoſte of Arnulphus followed after with ſuch a maine crie, that the valiaunt Romaines vpon the walles for very feare, (where there was no hurt) caſt themſelues deſperately ouer the walles: ſo that Arnulphus with little laboure ſcaled the walles, and gate the Citie. Thus Arnulphus obtaining the Citie of Rome, reſcueth Pope Formoſus, and beheadeth hys aduerſaries, whome the Pope, to gratifie wyth like recompence againe, bleſſeth and crowneth him for Emperoure. Thus Formoſus ſitting faſt about yͤ ſpace of 4. or 5. yeres followed his predeceſſours: after whoſe time (as I ſayde) within the ſpace of ix. yeares were ix. Biſhops as followeth. But in the meane time concerning the ſtorie of thys Formoſus declared by Sigebert, and many other Chroniclers: this thing woulde I gladly aſke, and more gladly learne of ſome indifferent good Catholike perſon, whyche not of obſtinacie, but of ſimple errour being a papiſt wold aunſwere his conſcience. whether doth he thinke the holy order of Prieſthode, which hee taketh for one of the ſeuen Sacramentes, to be Character indelebilis or not? If it be not indelebilis, that is, if it be ſuch a thing, as may be put of: why then doeth the Popes doctrine ſo call and ſo hold the contrary, pretending it to be indelebile, vnremoueable? If it be in deede, ſo as they teach and affirme, indelebilis character, why then did Pope Iohn, or could Pope Iohn, adnichilate & euacuate one of his vij. Popeholy Sacramentes: making of a Prieſt a non Prieſt, or a layman: vncharactering hys owne order, which is (as he ſayeth) a Character, which in no wiſe may be blotted out, or remoued? Againe,

Character indelebilis.

Whether the pope with hys Cardinals may erre.

how ſoeuer Pope Iohn is to be iudged in this matter, to do either wel or not wel, this word I know, if he did well in ſo diſprieſting and diſcharactering Formoſus, for ſuche priuate offences? If yea, how then ſtādeth his doing wyth his owne doctrine, which teacheth the contrary? If he did not well, how then ſtandeth his doctrine with his doings to be true, which teacheth that the Pope with his Synode of Cardinals can not erre? Moreouer if this Pope Iohn did not erre in his diſordering Formoſus: howe then did Martinus hys ſucceſſoure not erre, in repealing the ſayd doing of hys predeceſſour? Or how did not Pope Formoſus erre hymſelfe, who beyng vnprieſted by Pope Iohn: afterwarde wythout reiterating the Character or order of Prieſthoode, toke vppon hym to be Pope, and made actes and lawes in the Churche? Againe, if Formoſus nowe Pope did not erre, how then did Pope Stephen hys ſucceſſoure afterwarde not erre: who did annihilate the conſecration, and all other actes of the ſaid Formoſus, as erroneous? Or againe, if we ſay that this Stephen with his Synode of Cardinalles did right: then howe could it be, that Pope Theodore, & Pope Iohn the tenth, which came after the foreſayde Stephen, did not plainely erre? who approuing the conſecration of Formoſus: did condemne, and burne the acts Synodale, of Stephen and his Cardinals, which before had condemned Formoſus: according as in ſtorie here conſequently may appeare?

After Formoſus had gouerned the Sea of Rome fiue yeres, ſucceded firſt Bonifacius the vj. who continued but 25. dayes, then came Stephen the vj. which ſo enuyed the name of his predeceſſor Formoſus: that he abrogated and diſſolued his decrees: And taking vp his bodye, after it was buried, cut two fingers of his right hande, and commanded them to be caſt into Tiber, & then buried the body in a priuate or laymans ſepulchre.

Thus Stephen after he had ſat in the chaire of peſtilēce one yeare: ſucceeded in the ſame chaire, Pope Rhomanus, and ſate iij. mouthes: repealing the actes decreed by Stephen his predeceſſor, againſt Formoſus. Next to whome came Theodorus 2. who likewiſe taking parte with Formoſus againſt the foreſaid Stephē, reigned but 20. dayes. Then ſate Pope Iohn the 10. who did fight and repugne againſt the Romanes. And to confirme the cauſe of Formoſus more ſurely, did holde a Sinode at Rauenna of 74. Biſhops, wt the French king Endo and his Archbiſhops being preſent at the ſame. At the which councel, were ratified all the decrees and doings of Formoſus: and the contrary acts of the Synode of Stephen the vj. were burned. This Pope liued not Pope fully two yeares: after whom ſucceded Benedictus the 4. which kept the chaire three yeares. After whom Leo the 5. was next Pope, who within 40. daies of his papacie, was with ſtrong hand taken & caſt in priſon by one Chriſtopher his own houſhold chaplain, whō he had long norithed before in his houſe. Which thing (ſayeth Platina) could not be done without great conſpiracie and great ſlaughter of men. Which Chriſtofer being Pope about the ſpace of ſeuen monthes, was likewiſe himſelfe hoiſted from his Papall throne by Sergius, like as he had done to hys maiſter before. And thus within the ſpace of 9. yeares, had bene 9. Popes one after an other. Then Sergius after he had thruſt downe Pope Chriſtofer, and ſhorne him Monke into a Monaſterie, occupied the roume 7. yeares. This Sergius a rude man, and vnlearned, very proude and cruell: had before bene put backe from the Popedome by Formoſus aboue mentioned. By reaſon whereof, to reuenge Formoſus againe being nowe in his papacie, cauſed the body of Formoſus, where it was buried to be taken vp: and afterwarde ſet in the Papall ſea (as in his pontificalibus) firſt diſgraded him, then commanded his head to be ſmitten off, wt the other thre fingers that were left (as Sigebertus writeth) which done, he made his body to be throwne into Tiber, depoſing likewiſe all ſuch, as by the ſaid Formoſus before had bene conſecrated and inueſted. This body of Formoſus thus throwne into Tiber, was afterward (as our writers ſay) found & taken vp by certaine fiſhers, and ſo brought into ſ. Peters temple. At the preſence whereof (as they ſay) certaine images there ſtanding by, bowed downe themſelues, and reuerenced the ſame, with lie and all. But ſuch deceiueable miracles of ſtocks and images in monkiſh and frierly tēples, be to vs no newes, eſpecially here in England: where we haue bene ſo inured with the like, & ſo many, that ſuch wily practiſes cannot be to vs inuiſible: though this crownſhorn generation, thinke themſelues to daunce in a nette. But the truthe is, while they thinke to deceaue the ſimple, theſe wily beguily moſt of all deceiue themſelues, as they will finde except they repent. By this Pope Sergius, firſt came vp to beare about candels on Candelmas day: for ẏ purifying of the bleſſed virgine. As though the ſacred conception of Ieſus the ſonne of God, were to be purified as a thing vnpure, and that with candell light.

After Sergius, entred pope Anaſtaſius, in whoſe time the body of Formoſus forenamed, is thought to be foūd of fiſhermen in the riuer of Tiber, & ſo brought, as is ſaid, into the temple to be ſaluted of the images, which thing may quickly be tainted as a lie. For how it is to be thought that the body of Formoſus ſo long dead before, and now lying 7. yeares in the riuer: could remaine whole all that while, that Fiſhers might take it vp, & diſcerne it to be the ſame? After Anaſius had ſate two yeres, folowed Pope Lando, the father (as ſome ſtories think) of pope Iohn, which Iohn is ſayde to be the paramour of Theodora a famous harlot of Rome, & ſet vp of the ſame harlot eyther againſt Lando, or after Lando his father to ſuccede in hys roume. There is a ſtorie writer called Liuthprandus, who wryting de Imperatoribus. Lib. 2 cap. 13. maketh there mention of this Theodora, and Pope Iohn xj. and ſayeth moreouer, that this Theodora had a daughter named Marozia: which Marozia had by pope Sergius aboue mentioned, a ſonne which afterward was Pope Iohn the 12. The ſame Marozia afterward it chāced to marry with Guido Marques of Tuſcia: through the meanes of which Guido and hys frends at Rome, ſhe brought to paſſe that this pope Iohn the 11. was ſmothered with a pillow laid to his mouth, after he had reigned 13. yeares. And ſo the foreſayd Iohn the 12. her ſonne, to ſuccede next after him. But becauſe ẏ clergie and people of Rome did not agre to his election, therfore was Pope Leo the 6. in his place ſet vp. Thus Pope Iohn the ſonne of Sergius and Marozia being deiected, reigned Pope Leo 7. moneths. After him Pope Stephen 2 yeares. Who being poyſoned, then was Pope Iohn the 12. aboue rehearſed, the ſonne of Sergius and Marozia, ſet vp againe in the Papacie, where hee reigned neare the ſpace of 5. yeres. Of the wickedneſſe of this ſtrompet Marozia, howe ſhe maried two brethren, one after the death of the other: And howe ſhe gouerned all Rome, & the whole church at that time, I let it paſſe. Although the latin verſes wherewith the ſayd Liuthprandus, doeth inuey againſt ſuch women as marie two brethren, were neither worthy here to be recited, and perhappes might be further applied then to that Marozia of Rome, but for ſhortneſſe I let them alſo paſſe.

This Edwarde began his reigne, the yeare of our Lord. 901. and gouerned the land right valiantly and nobly 24. yeares. In knowledge of good letters and learning, he was not to be compared to his father. Otherwiſe, in princely renowne, in ciuile gouernment, and ſuch like martiall proweſſe, he was nothing inferior, but rather excelled him. Through whoſe valiant actes, firſt the princedome of Wales, and kingdom of Scotland, with Conſtantine king thereof were to hym ſubdued. He adioyned moreouer to his dominion the coūtrey of Eaſtanglia, that is, of Norfolke, Suffolke and Eſſex. All Merceland alſo he recouered and Northumberlād out of the hands of the Danes. In all his warres he neuer lightly wēt without victory. The ſubiects of his prouinces and dominions were ſo inured, and hardened in continuall practiſe and feates of warre: that when they hearde of any ennemies comming (neuer tarying for any bidding from the king, or from his dukes) ſtraightwayes they encountred wyth them: both in number, and in knowledge of the order of warre excelling alwayes their aduerſaries. An. 904.

was one called Clito Ethelwoldus a yong man, king Edwardes vncles ſonne. who firſt occupying the Towne of Wimborne (taking thence a Nonne wt him, whome then he had maried) fledde by night to Northumberland, to adioyne himſelf vnto the Danes, who was made chiefe king and captaine ouer them. Then chaſed from thence, hee fled ouer into France, but ſhortly returning againe into England, landed in Eaſtengland, where the ſaide Clyto wyth a company of Danes of that countrey gathered vnto him, deſtroied and pilled much of the countrey about Crekinford and Crikeland. And ſo paſſing ouer Thamis after he had ſpoyled the lande there to Bradeneſtocke: returned againe to Northfolke and Suffolke, where he meting with a buſhment of Kentiſh men, which dragged & taried after the maine hoſte of Edwarde, contrary to his commaundement, incloſed them in, and ſlewe the moſte parte of them. Sone after the two hoſtes meeting together, betwene the two diches of S. Edmunds lad, after a long fight, Clyto with many of the Danes were ſlaine, and the remnaunte were conſtrained to ſeeke for peace, which vpon certaine conditions, and vnder a tribute was to them graunted.

An. 913.

In proceſſe, about the 12. yeare of his reygne, the Danes repenting them of their couenants, and minding to breake the ſame: aſſembled an hoſte and met wt the king in Staffordſhire at a place called Totenhall, & ſone after at Wodnefield: at which two places the king ſlew two kings, two erles, & many thouſand of Danes, that occupied the countrey of Northumberland.

Cheſter repayred and enlarged. The Caſtle of Herford builded. Caſtles builded vpon the riuer of Auene, and Ouſe. The townes of Towcetour and wigmore builded. The newe towne of Nottingham builded. Thilwall. Mancheſter repayred.

Thus the importunate rage of the Danes being aſſwaged, King Edwarde hauing nowe ſome leyſure geuen from warres, to other ſtudies: gaue his minde to the building or repairing of cities, townes, and caſtles, that by the Danes were raſed, ſhatred, and broken. As firſt of Cheſter, which citye he double enlarged to that it was before: compaſſing the caſtle within the walles of the ſame, which before ſtood without. That done, the king builded a ſtrong caſtle at Herford in the edge of Wales. Alſo for the ſtrengthening of the Countrey, he made a Caſtle at the mouth of the water of Auene, and an other Caſtle at Buckingham, and the third faſt thereby vpon the riuer of Owſe. Moreouer he builded or reedified the townes of Toweſtor, and Wigmore, & deſtroied the caſtle that the Danes had made at Demeſford. Likewiſe vpon the riuer of Trent againſt the old towne of Notingham, he builded a new towne on the ſouthſide, and made a bridge ouer the riuer, betweene the ſaid ij. townes. Alſo by the riuer of Merce, he builded a citie or towne, in the North end of Mercia, and named it Thilwall, and after repaired the citie of Mancheſter, that ſore was defaced with warre of the Danes.

In this renuing and building of townes and Caſtles for the more fortifying of his Realme: his Siſter Elfleda, daughter of king Alfrede, & maried to the Duke of Mercia (as is afore mentioned) was no ſmall helper. Of this Elfleda it is firmely of wryters affirmed that ſhee being as is ſayde maried to Ethelrede Duke of Mercia, after ſhe had once aſſayed the paines of women in traueling wyth her childe: ſo much ſhee abhorred euer after the embracing of her huſbande, that it ſeemed to her (ſhe ſayde) not ſeemely for a noble womā to vſe ſuch fleſhly liking, wherof ſo gret ſorow and trauaile ſhould enſue. And yet notwithſtāding the ſame Elfleda, for all her delicate tenderneſſe in eſchewing the natural paſſion, which neceſſity geueth to women: ſo hardy ſhe was in warlike daungers, which nature geueth not to women, that fighting againſt the Danes, ſo venturous ſhee was of ſtomacke, that foure of her next knights, which were gardeins of her body, were ſlain faſt by her. This Elfleda among her other noble actes, whereby ſhe deſerued praiſe, was a great helper and ſtirrer vp of her brother Edward: who builded and newly repaired many Caſtels and townes, as Tomworth, beſide Lichfielde, Staffordе, Warwike, Shrowesbury, Watriſbury, Eldiſbury, beſides Cheſter in the forreſt now deſtroyed. Alſo in the North ende of Mercia, vpon the riuer of Merce, a caſtle called Rimcorne, alſo a bridge ouer Seuerne named Brimmiſbury bridge.

Elfleda. Cittyes, Townes, and Caſtles builded by Elfleda.

As touching the lawes and ſtatutes of thys Edwarde, as alſo of his father Alfrede made before him, I omit heere to recorde them for length of matter and waſt of time: yet notwithſtanding, this admonition by the way I thinke good to note: that in thoſe dayes of theſe auncient Kinges reigning in Englande, the authoritie then both of conferring Biſhopprickes, and ſpirituall promotions, and alſo of preſcribing lawes as well to the church men, as to the laitie, and of ordering and intermedling in matters mere ſpiritual, was then in the hands of kings, ruling in the land, and not onely in the hande of the Pope, as appeareth by theſe lawes of Alfred.

The lawes of king Alfred and K. Edward.

Si quis fornicetur cum vxore aliena, &c,
Si quis in quadrageſima ſanctum velum in publico vel in lecto. &c.
Vt Chriſtiani Deum diligant & paganiſmo renuncient. &c.
Si quis Chriſtianitatem mutet. &c.
Si quis ordinatus ſacris furetur. &c.
Si præsbyter ad rectum terminum ſanctum Chriſma. &c.
Si duo fratres, vel cognati cum vna aliqua fornicentur. &c.

By theſe and other ſuch like conſtitutions of King Alfrede, it may appeare: how the gouernaunce and direction of the church in thoſe daies, depended not vpon Monſieur le Pope of Rome: but vpon the kings which here in their time (vnder the Lorde) did gouerne the land. To this alſo the example of King Edwardes time geueth teſtimonie: which Edward wyth Pleimundus (aboue mentioned) Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and with other biſhops in a ſinode aſſembled: aſſigned and elected 7. Byſhops in 7. Metropolitane churches of the realme. which were, 1. Frideſtane. 2. Adelſtane. 3 Werſtane 4. Adelelme. 5. Edulfus 6 Dernegus. 7 Kenulphus. In which election the kings authoritie ſemed then alone to be ſufficient. &c.

Note howe kinges of England in tymes paſt had authoritie in ſpirituall cauſes.

Anno. 925.

The Children of K Edward the elder.

This Edward (as in the beginning was ſayd) reigned 24. yeares. who had three wiues, Egwine, Elfled, and Ethelwide. Of Egwine hee had hys eldeſt ſonne Adelſtane, who next ſucceeded in the kingdom, and a daughter maried after to the duke of Northumberland. Of Elflede, he receiued two ſonnes, and vj. daughters, to witte Ethelward and Edwyne. Ethelward was excellently well ſeene in all knowledge of learning: much reſembling both in countenance and conditions his grandfather Alfrede, and died ſone after his father. Of his vj. daughters, two of them. 1 Elflede and Ethelhilda, were made nonnes. The other foure were maried. Edgina to Charles the French King, in hys fathers time. Ethilda by King Ethelſtane was maryed to Hugo, the ſonne of Duke Robert. Edgitha and Algina, were both ſent to Henricus Prince of Almaines. Of which two ſiſters the ſeconde, the ſayd Henricus, maried to hys ſonne Otho, who was the firſt Emperour of the Almains. The other ſiſter which was Edgitha, the foreſayde Henticus, maried to a certaine Duke about the border of the Alpes, in Italie. Of his thirde wife Ethelwide, he receiued two ſonnes, Edmund, and Edred: which both reigned after Adelſtane. And two daughters, Egburga whome hee made a Nonne, and Eadguina who was married to Ludouicus, Prince of Aquitania in Fraunce. Theſe ſonnes and daughters Kyng Edwarde thus brought vp: Hys daughters hee ſet to ſpinning, and to the needle. Guliel. de Reg. His ſonnes he ſet to the ſtudie of learning, vt quaſi Philoſophi ad gubernandam remp. non iam rudes procederent: that is, to the ende, that they being as firſt made Philoſophers, ſhould be the more expert thereby to gouerne the common wealth.

Prince Ethelwald excellent in learning.

¶ King Ethelſtane, or Adelſtane.

King Ethelſtane, or Adelſtane.

Ethelſtane or Adelſtane, after the death of Edwarde hys father: began his reigne in England, and was crowned at Kingſtone. He was a prince of worthy memorie, valyant and wiſe in all his actes, nothing inferiour to hys father Edwarde, In like worldly renowne of ciuile gouernance, ioyned with much proſperous ſucceſſe, in reducing this realme vnder the ſubiection of one monarchie. For he both expelled the Danes, ſubdued the Scottes, and quieted the Welſhmē, as wel in Northwales, as alſo in Cornwale. The firſt enemie againſt this Ethelſtane, was one Elfredus: who, with a faction of ſeditious perſons conſpiring againſt the ſaide Ethelſtane at Wincheſter, continently after the death of hys father, went about to put out his eyes. Notwithſtanding the king eſcaping that daunger through the helpe of God, was at that time deliuered. Elfrede vpon the ſame being accuſed, fled to Rome: there before ye Pope to purge himſelfe by hys othe. Who being brought to the Churche of S. Peter, and there ſwearing (or rather forſwearing) himſelf to be cleare, which in deede was guiltie thereof: ſodenly vpon his othe fell downe, and ſo brought to the Engliſh houſe in Rome, within 3. daies after departed. The Pope ſending worde to king Ethelſtane, whether he would haue the ſayde Eldred buried among Chriſtians or not: at length through the perſwaſions of his friendes and kinſfolkes, it was concluded that he ſhould be buryed in Chriſten buriall. This ſtorie although I finde in no other writers mentioned, but only in the Chronicles of Guliel. Lib. de Regi. yet foraſmuch as it beareth the witneſſe and wordes of the king himſelfe, as teſtified in an old dede of gift, giuen to the monaſtery of Malmeſbury: I thought the ſame the more to be of credite. The wordes of the king procede in this tenor as followeth.

Anno. 927.

Northumberland ſubdued to king Ethelſtane. The Scots ſubdued to the king of England. It is more honour to make a king, then to be a king.

In the ſecond yeare of the reigne of King Adelſtane, for an vnitie and a peace to be had betwene the King and the Danes of Northumberlande: hee marryed to Sythericus their king his ſiſter, whereof mention is made before. But ſhortly after, within one yeare this Sythericus died. After whoſe death King Ethelſtane ſeazed that prouince into hys owne hande, putting out the ſonne of the foreſayde Sythericus called Alanus: who wyth his brother Godfridus fledde the one into Irelande, the other to Conſtantine King of the Scottes. And when he had thus accorded with the Danes of Northumberlande, hee ſhortly made ſubiect vnto him Conſtantine King of Scottes. But the ſayde Conſtantine meeked himſelfe ſo lowly to the King, that he reſtored him to his former dignitie, ſaying, that it was more honour to make a king, then to be a king.

A fabulous miracle falſely reported of king Athelſtane.

Not long after, the ſayde Conſtantine King of Scottes did breake couenaunt with king Ethelſtane. Wherefore hee aſſembled his Knights, & made toward Scotland. Where he ſubduing his enemies, and bringing them againe vnto due ſubiection, returned into England with victory. Here by the way in ſome ſtorie wryters (who forgetting the office of hiſtoricians, ſeme to play the Poetes) is written and recorded for a maruell, that the ſayde Ethelſtane, returning out of Scotland into England, came to Yorke, and ſo into the Churche of S. Iohn of Beuerly, to redeeme his knife, which before hee had lefte there for a pledge at hys going forth. In the which place he praying to God & to S. Ihon of Beuerley, that he might leaue there ſome remembrance wherby they that came after, might know, that the Scots by right ſhould be ſubdued to the Engliſh mẽ: ſmote with ſword (they ſay) vpon a great hard ſtone ſtanding nere about the caſtle of Dunbar, that with the ſtroke thereof the ſtone was cut a large elne deepe (with a lie no leſſe deepe alſo, then was the ſtroke in the ſtone.) But of this poetical or fabulous ſtorie, albeit Polychronicon, Fabian, Iornalenſis, and other mo conſtantly accorde in the ſame: yet in Guliel. and Henricus, no mention is made at all. But peraduenture hee that was the inuentour firſt of this tale of the ſtone, was diſpoſed to lie for the whetſtone: wherefore in my minde he is worthy to haue it.

Briſtanus Byſhop.

Anno. 933.

A ridiculous miracle forged vpon Briſtanus Byſhop of Wincheſter.

Of like truth & credite ſeemeth alſo to be this that followeth, about the ſame yeare and time, vnder the raigne of King Ethelſtane, being the viij. yeare of hys raigne, of one Briſtanus Biſhop of Wincheſter, who ſucceeded Frithſtanus in the ſame ſea, and gouerned that Biſhoprike iiij. yeares. This Briſtanus being a deuout Biſhop in prayer and contemplation: vſed much among his ſolitary walkes, to frequent late the churchyard, praying for the ſoules there, and all chriſten ſoules departed. Vpon a time, the ſayde Briſtanus after hys wonted maner proceding in hys deuotions, when he had done, came to requieſcant in pace. Whereunto, ſodainly a great multitude of ſoules aunſwering together with one voyce, ſaid Amen. Of thys miracle, albeit I haue not much to ſay (haſting to other matters) yet this queſtion wold I aſke of ſome indifferent papiſt, which were not wilfull, but of ignorance deceiued: if this multitude, which here anſwered Amen, were the ſoules of them buried in the churchyard or not? If yea, then howe were they in purgatorie, what time they were hearde in that place anſwering Amen? Except we ſhoulde thinke Purgatorie to be in the churchyarde at Wincheſter, where the ſoules were hearde then ſo many anſwering and praying Amen. And yet thys ſtorie is teſtified by the accord of wryters of that time, Guliel. Polychron. Houedenus, Iornalenſis, and other moe. Much like miracles and Prophecies alſo wee reade of Elphegus, which ſucceeded him: but becauſe we haſte to other thiugs let theſe fables paſſe.

A miracle of ſoules aunſwering Amen.

Ye heard a little before, howe king Ethelſtane after the death of Sythericus King of Northumberland, ſeazed that land or prouince into his owne hand, & put out hys ſonne Alanus: who after flying into Scotland, maried the daughter of Conſtantine King of Scots. By whoſe ſtirring and exhortation, he gathered a company of Danes, Scots, and other, and entred the mouth of Humber with a ſtrong nauie of 615. ſhips.

A ſore battaile fought at Brimford.

An other vnlike myracle of K. Athelſtans ſword.

Whereof King Ethelſtane wyth his brother Edmunde hauing knowledge: prepared his army, and at length ioyning in fight with him & his people, at a place called Brimãbruch or Brimford: where he fighting with them from morning to euen, after a terrible ſlaughter on both ſides (as the like hath not bene ſene lightly in England) had the victorie. In which battaile were ſlaine fiue ſmall and vnder kings, with Conſtantine king of Scots: and xij. Dukes with the more part of all the ſtrangers which at that time they gathered to them. Here alſo our wryters put in an other miracle in this battaile: howe king Ethelſtanes ſworde miraculouſly fell into his ſheath through the prayer of Odo, then Archbiſhop of Canterburie.

Odo Archbiſhop of Cant.

Concerning this battaile, I finde in a certaine written Chronicle theſe verſes: which becauſe they ſhoulde not be loſt, I thought not vnworthy here of rehearſall,

Tranſierat quinos, & tres, & quatuor annos,
Iure regens ciues, ſubigens virtute tyrannos:
Cum redit illa Lues Europæ noxia labes.
Iam cubat in terris fera barbaries Aquilonis,
Et iacet in campis pelago pirata relicto,
Illicitas toruaſque minas Analanus anhelans, Analaus.
Bacchanti furiæ, Scotorum rege volente,
Commodat aſſenſum Borealis terræ ſerenum.
Et iam grande tument, iam terrent aera verbis.
Cedunt indigenæ, cedit plaga tota ſuperbis.
Nam quia rex noſter fidens alacriſque iuuenta,
Emeritus pridem detriuerat ocia lenta,
Illi continuis fœdabant omnia prædis,
Vrgentes miſeros iniectis ignibus agros.
Marcuerant totis viridantia gramina campis,
Ægra ſeges votum deluſerat agricolarum.
Tanta fuit peditum, tam barbara vis equitantum,
Innumerabilium, concurſus quadrupedantum.
Exciuit tandem famæ querimonia regem,
Ne ſe cauterio tali pateretur inuri.
Quod ſua barbaricæ ceſsiſſent arma ſecuri,
Nec mora, victrices ducentia ſigna cohortes,
Explicat inuentum vexilla ferocia centum,
Iuncta virum virtus, decies bis milia quina,
Ad ſtadium belli comitantur præuia ſigna.
Hicque ciet ſtrepitus armatorum legiones.

Fugit Analaſus de tot modo millibus vnus &c.

The North Brittaynes brought to tribute.

The South Brittaynes ſubdued.

After thys victorie thus obtained of the Danes and Scottes: King Ethelſtane alſo ſubdued (or at leaſt quieted) the North Brytaines. Whome he conuenting together at Herforde (or there about) forced them to graunt vnto him as a yerely tribute, xx. pound of gold: three hundreth poũde of ſiluer: and of heades of neate xxv. hundred: with haukes and dogs, to a certaine number. This done, he wẽt to Exceter, and there likewiſe ſubduing the South Brytaines about Exceter and Cornewall: repaired the walles of Exceter with ſufficient ſtrength, and ſo returned.

Among theſe victorious and noble actes of this King: One blot there is of him written and noted, wherein he is as much worthy to be reprehẽded, as in the other before to be commended (that is) the innocent death and murther of his brother Edwyne. The occaſion thereof was this: King Edwarde aforenamed their father, in the time of his youth, comming by a certaine village or grange, where he had bene nurſed and brought vp of a child: thought of curteſy to goe ſee howe his nurſe did. Where hee entring into the houſe, eſpied a certaine yong damſel beautifull and right ſeemely attired, Egwina by name. This Egwina before being a poore mans daughter, had a viſion by night, ẏ of her body ſprang ſuch a bright light of the Moone, that the brightnes therof gaue light to the Realme of England. By reaſon wherof, ſhe was taken into the foreſaide houſe, & daintely brought vp in ſtead of their owne daughter: for hope of ſome commoditie to enſue thereby, as afterwarde it came to paſſe. For King Edward (as it is declared) comming into the houſe, and rauiſhed with the beautie of the maiden: begate of her the ſame night this Ethelſtane. Wherefore the ſayd Ethelſtane being thus baſely borne of Egwina, the firſt wife to Edward (as is ſayd) before he was married to her: and fearing his next brother Edwyne, which was rightly borne (eſpecially being ſtirred therunto through the ſiniſter ſuggeſtion of his Butler) did caſt ſuch diſpleaſure to the foreſayde Edwine hys brother, being yet but young, that (notwithſtanding hys innocent ſubmiſſion and purgation made againſt his accuſers) he cauſed him to be ſet in an old rottē boate in the broade Sea (onely with one Eſquier wᵗ hym) wᵗout any tackling or other prouiſion to the ſame. Where the young and tender Prince being diſmaid with the rage of windes and of the floudes, and nowe weary of his life, caſt himſelfe ouer board into the ſea, and ſo was drowned. Notwithſtanding the Eſquire ſhifting for himſelfe as he could, and recouering the body of his maſter, brought it to Sandwich, where it was buried. Which done, the king afterwarde comming to the remembraunce of himſelfe, was ſtroken with great repentaunce the ſpace of vij. yeares together. And at length was reuenged of him that was the accuſer of his brother. This accuſer (as is ſayde) was the kings cupbearer, who (as God the righteous iudge of all things woulde haue it) vpon a certaine ſolemne feaſt, bearing the cuppe vnto the king, chanced in the middle of the floure to ſtumble with one foote, helping and recouering himſelfe with the other, ſaying in theſe wordes: Thus one brother (as ye ſee) helpeth an other. Theſe wordes being thus ſpokē in the hearing of the king, ſo moued his mind, that forthwith he commaunded the falſe accuſer of his brother to be had out to execution. Whoſe iuſt recompence I would wiſh to be a warning to all men, what it is to ſowe diſcorde betwixt brother and brother.

K. Ethelſtane ſeeketh the death of his owne brother.

A note to learne not to ſowe diſcorde betwixt brother and brother.

King Ethelſtane (beſides hys vij. yeares lamentation, for this acte) builded the two Monaſteries of Midletone, and of Michelenes, for hys brothers ſake (or as the ſtories ſay) for his ſoule. Whereby it may appeare, what was the cauſe moſt ſpeciall in thoſe daies, of building monaſteries, to wit, for releaſing the ſinnes both of them departed, and them aliue, which cauſe howe it ſtandeth wyth the grace and veritie of Chriſtes Goſpell, and of his paſſion, let the Chriſten reader trie & examine with himſelfe. This cruell fact of the king towarde Edwyne, cauſed him afterwarde, to be more tender and careful toward his other brethren and ſiſters left in his handes vnmarried. Which ſiſters, as is partly in the Chapter before declared, he richly beſtowed, in great mariages: As one to the king of Northumberlād Sithericus: an other he gaue to Lewes king of Aquitania, the thirde to Henricus Duke of Almaine for hys ſonne Otho: who was the firſt Emperour of the Germanes. Whereby it is to be vnderſtand, that the Empire at this time began firſt to be tranſlated from Fraunce (where it remained about C. yeares and halfe) vnto Germanie where it hath euer ſince continued.

The cauſe of building Abbeyes examined.

Otho firſt Emperour of the Germaines.

The fourth of his ſiſters, being a virgine of ſingulare beuty Hugo ẏ French king required to be geuen vnto him: ſending to King Ethelſtane precious and ſumptuous preſents, ſuch as were not before ſeene in England. Among the which preſents & gifts, beſides the rare odours of ſondry ſauours & fine ſpices: and beſides the precious & coſtly gemmes, namely of Smaradges of moſt redolēt grene, beſides alſo many and great courſers and palfries richly trapped, eſpecially of one iewell (as wryters make mention) which was, a certaine veſſell finely and ſubtilly made of the precious ſtone Onichinus ſo radiantly wrought, ẏ in it appeared the liuely corn growing, and mens images walking. &c. Ouer and beſides was ſent alſo the ſworde of Conſtantine the great, wᵗ the name of the poſſeſſor wrytten in golden letters. Where in the haft of the ſame al beatē in gold, was one of the yron nailes, wherwith our Sauiour on the croſſe was nailed. Of the veritie whereof I am not diſpoſed at thys preſent muche to ſay what I ſuſpect, but that this in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtorie of Euſebius, is euidēt. That two of the foreſaid nailes of Chriſt, was ſpēt on the bridle of Conſtantine: the 3. he caſt into the Sea in a raging tempeſt. Wherfore, if Chriſt were nailed wᵗ 4. nailes, perhappes this naile might be one. If he were nailed but with iij. I ſee not how this ſtorie can ſtand with other ſtories, neither howe this fourth naile can ſtand with truthe. Among the reſt moreouer, was the ſpeare (as is reported) wherwith the ſide of our Sauiour was opened: which alſo the ſayd Conſtātine was wōt to cary in the field againſt his enemies: with a portion likewiſe of the holy croſſe incloſed in Criſtall: Alſo a part of the crowne of thorne in like maner incloſed. &c. Of the whych Reliques, part was geuen to Wincheſter, part to the Church of Malmeſbury, where king Ethelſtane was buried. As this King was indued and enlarged, by the gift of God (the ſetter vp & diſpoſer of all kings) wᵗ great victories of worldly renowne: hauing vnder hys ſubiection both the Scottes, and Britons, and the whole Monarchie of the land: So he deuiſed diuers good and holſom lawes for the gouernment of the ſame, as wel concerning the ſtate of the orders Eccleſiaſticall, as alſo of the ſecular or lay people. Whereby it is to be vnderſtād, that the vſurped power of the biſhop of Rome, did not then extend it ſelfe ſo largely, nor ſo proudly to derogate frō the authority of kings & princes: but that euery one in his owne dominion, had (vnder God, and not vnder the Pope) the doing of all matters within the ſame his dominion contained: whether they were cauſes tēporal, or ſpiritual. As by the decrees and conſtitutions of this king (& alſo of other as well before him, as after him) may euidently be teſtified: as where hee among other lawes, thus ordeineth touching the biſhop, in wordes as folowe.

Precious iewels ſent to king Ethelſtane from the French K.

Epiſcopo iure pertinet, omnem rectitudinem promouere Dei videlicet, ac ſeculi. In primis, debet omnem ordinatum inſtruere, quid ei ſit agendum iure, & quid hominibus ſecularibus iudicare debeant.

Debet etiam ſedulò pacem & concordiam operari cum ſeculi iudicibus: qui rectum velle diligunt, & in compellationum allegationem edocere, ne quis alij perperam agat, in iureiurando, vel ordalio.

Nec pati debet aliquam circumuentionem iniuſtæ menſuræ, vel iniuſti ponderis. Sed conuenit vt per conſilium & teſtimoniū eius, omne legis rectum, & burgi menſura, & omne pondus ſit ſecundum * ditionem eius, inſtitutum valde rectū: ne quis proximum ſuum ſeducat, pro quo decidat in peccatum.

Et ſemper debet Chriſtianis prouidere contra omnia, quæ prædicta ſunt, & ideo debet ſe de pluribus intromittere: vt ſciat quomodo grex agat, quem ad Dei manum cuſtodire ſuſcepit, ne diabolus eum dilaniet, nec malum aliquod ſuperſeminet. Nunquam enim erit populo benè conſultum, nec dignè Deo conuerſabitur, vbi lucrum impium & magis falſum diligitur. Ideo debent omnes amici Dei quod iniquum eſt eneruare, & quod iuſtum eſt eleuare, nec pati vt propter falſum, & pecuniæ queſtum homines ſe forisfaciant erga verè ſapientem Deum, cui diſplicet omnis iniuſtitia.

The law of king Ethelſtane concerning tythes.

The ſayde Ethelſtane beſides, preſcribed other conſtitutions alſo, as touching tithes geuing: where hee ſayeth and proclaimeth. Ego Ethelſtanus Rex, conſilio Vlſelmi Archiepiſcopi mei & aliorum Epiſcoporum, mando præpoſitis omnibus in regno meo, in nomine Domini & ſanctorum omnium, vt inprimis reddant de meo proprio decimas Deo, tam in viuente capitali, quàm in mortuis frugibus terræ: & Epiſcopi mei ſimiliter faciant de ſuo proprio, & Aldermanni mei & præpoſiti mei, &c. That is, I Ethelſtane King, charge and commaund all my officers through my whole Realme, to Tythes.

geue tithes vnto God of my proper good, as wel in liuing cattel, as in the corne and fruites of the groūd, and that my Byſhops likewiſe of their proper goods, and mine Aldermen, and my officers and headmen ſhal do the ſame. Item this I wil: that my Biſhops & other headmen doe declare the ſame, to ſuche as be vnder their ſubiection, & that to be accompliſhed at the terme of S. Iohn the Baptiſt. Let vs remember what Iacob ſaid vnto the Lord: Of all things that thou geueſt to me, I wil offer tithes vnto ẏ Lord. &c. Alſo what the Lord ſayeth in the Goſpel of S. Mathewe. To him that hath, it ſhalbe geuen: and he ſhall aboūd. We muſt alſo cōſider how terribly it is written in bookes, that if we will not offer our tenths, from vs ix. partes ſhall be taken away, and only the x. part ſhalbe left vs. &c. And in the ſame place, after that he hath aſſigned ẏ Churchrightes to be paide in the place, whereto they belong: it followeth thus. Facite etiam vt mihi mea propria cupiatis, quæ mihi poteritis recté acquirere. Nolo vt aliquid mihi iniuſtè cōquiratis. Sed omnia veſtra concedo vobis eo tenore, quo mihi mea ſimiliter exoptetis. Cauete ſimul & vobis, & eis quos admonere debetis, ab ira Dei, & tranſgreſsione mea.

And thus much briefly concerning the hiſtorie of King Ethelſtane, & things in his time done: who reigned about the ſpace of xvj. yeares. And becauſe he died without iſſue, therfore after him ſucceeded his brother Edmund, the yere of our Lord. 940. who reigned vj. yeares.

❧ King Edmund.

Anno. 940. Edmundus kyng of England.

Edmund the ſonne of Edwarde the elder, by his thirde wife (as is declared) and brother of Ethelſtane, being of the age of xx. yeares, entred his raigne: who had by hys Queene Elgina, two ſonnes, Edwyne, and Edgarus, ſurnamed Pacificus, which both reigned after him, as followeth. This Edmund continued his reigne vj. yeares & a halfe. By him were expulſed the Danes, Scottes, Normandes, and all foreine enemies out of the land. Such Cities and Townes which before were in the poſſeſſion of ſtrangers: as Lyncolne, Nottingham, Derby, Stafforde, and Leycetour, he recouered out of their hands. Thus the realme being cleared of foreine power, for a time: then the king ſet his ſtudy and mind in the redreſſing and maintaining the ſtate of the Church: which all ſtoode then in building of Monaſteries, and furniſhing of Churches, eyther with newe poſſeſſions, or in reſtoring the olde which were taken away before. In the time of thys Edmund, thys I find in an old written ſtory, borowed of W. Cary: a citizen of London, a worthy treaſurer of moſte worthy Monuments of antiquitie. The name of the author I can not alledge: becauſe the booke beareth no title, lacking both the beginning, and the latter end. But the words therof faithfully recited, be theſe: Huius regis tempore, facta eſt diſperſio Monachorum Euſhmenſis cœnobij, cum ſubſtitutione Canonicorum per Althelmum, & Vlricum laicos, & Oſulphum Epiſcopum. &c. That is: In the time of this King, there was a ſcattering or diſperſion made of the Monkes out of the Monaſtery of Euſham, and Canons ſubſtituted in theyr place: through the doing of Athelmus, & Ulricus lay men, and of Oſulfus Byſhop. &c.

Ex hiſtoria Carsona.

Monkes put out of Euſham, the yeare of our Lord. 941.

The difference betweene Monkes and prieſtes.

Where, as concerning this matter betwene Monkes and other of the clergie, firſt it is to be vnderſtande: that in the realme of England, heretofore before the time of Dunſtane: the Byſhops ſeas and cathedrall churches were repleniſhed with no monkes, but wyth prieſtes and canons (called then clerks or men of the clergy) After this beginneth to riſe a difference or a ſect betwixt theſe two parties, in ſtraitneſſe of life and in habite: ſo that they which liued after a ſtraiter rule of holines, were called monkes, & profeſſed chaſtitie: that was, to liue from wiues, (for ſo was chaſtitie then defined in thoſe blinde daies) as though holy matrimony were no chaſtitie, according as Paphnutius did well define it in the councel of Nice. The other ſort whych were no monkes but prieſts or men of the clergy called, liued more free from theſe monkiſh rules and obſeruances: and were then commōly (or at leaſt lawfully) maryed, and in theyr life and habite, came nearer to the ſecular ſorte of other chriſtians. By reaſon wherof great diſdaine & emulation was among them: in ſo much that in many Cathedral churches, where as prieſts were before, there monks were put in. And contrary, ſometime where as Monkes were intruded, there prieſts and canons againe were placed, and monkes thruſt out: wherof more ſhal appere hereafter (by the grace of Chriſt) when we come to the lyfe of Dunſtane. In the meane time, ſomething to ſatiſfie the cogitation of the reader, which peraduenture either is ignorant, or els would know of the firſt cōming in of monks, into this realme and Church of England in the Saxones time: this is to be noted, according as I finde in old Chronicles, namely in the latine hiſtory of Guliel. de geſtis pontificum Angl. recorded, touching the ſame. That about thys time of king Edmund or ſhortly after, when hardnes and ſtraitneſſe of life, ioyned with ſuperſtition, was had in veneration, and counted for great holineſſe: Men therefore, either to winne publique fame with men, or merites with God, gaue themſelues to lead a ſtraite life: thinking thereby, the ſtranger their conuerſation was, and farther from the common trade of vulgar people, the more perfect to be toward God and mā. There was at that time (and before that) a monaſtery in France named Floriake, after the order and rule of Benedict: from the which Monaſterie did ſpring a great part of our engliſh mōks. Who being there profeſſed, and afterward returning into England, did cōgregate men daily to theyr profeſſion. And ſo, partly for ſtrangeneſſe of theyr rule: partly for outwarde holineſſe of their ſtrait life: partly for the opinion of holineſſe that many had of them, were in great admiration: not onely with the rude ſort, but with kinges and princes: who founded their houſes, maintained their rules, and enlarged them with poſſeſſions. Among the which order of monks comming from Floriake, eſpecially was one Oſwaldus, firſt a monke of Floriake, then biſhop of Wirceter and of Yorke: a great patrone and ſetter vp of monckery. Touching the which Oſwaldus, William in his booke, De pontific. writing of his hiſtorie, hath theſe wordes: Familiaris per id temporis Anglis conſuetudo fuit, vt ſi qui boni afflati eſſent deſiderio, in beatiſsimi Benedicti monaſterio cænobialem ſuſciperet habitū: a quo, religionis huiuſce manauit exordium, &c. That is, It was a common cuſtome at that time amōg Engliſh men, that if any good men were well affected or minded toward religiō, they went to the Monaſterie of bleſſed S. Benedict in France, and there receiued the habite of a Monke: Wherupon the firſt origine of this religion began, &c. But of this Oſwald biſhop of Yorke, and Dunſtane biſhop of Canterburie, and Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, howe they repleniſhed diuers Monaſteries, & Cathedral Churches with Monkes: and howe they diſcharged maryed Prieſtes and Chanans out of their houſes, to plante in Monkes in their celles: more ſhall be ſpoken (by the grace of Chriſt) heereafter. Nowe let vs returne againe to the matter where we left, of king Edmund: who beſides his noble victories againſt his enemies, and recouering the Cities aboue expreſſed into his own hāds: did alſo ſubdue the prouince of Cumberland. And after he had put out the eyes of the two ſonnes of Dunmail king of Cumberland, he committed the gouernance therof to Malcolinus king of Scots: vpon promiſe of his truſtie ſeruice & obedience, when the king ſhould ſtande in any neede of him. In the time of this king, Dunſtane was not yet Archbi. of Canterbury, but onely Abbot of Glaſtenbury: of whom many fabulous narrations paſſe among the wryters, importing more vanity then verity. Wherfore this is one of the firſt: what time Edgarus called Pacificus was borne, Dunſtane being the ſame time Abbot of Glaſtenbury (as the monkiſh fables dreame) heard a voyce in the ayre of certaine Angels ſinging after this tenour, and ſaying: Nowe peace commeth to the church of England in ẏ time of this child and of our Dunſtane, &c. This I thought to recite, that the chriſtian reader might the better pōder wyth himſelfe, the impudent and abhominable fictions of this Romiſh generation. Out of the ſame mīnt alſo haue they forged, how the ſayd Dunſtane ſhould heare the aungels ſing the Kyrieeleyſon, vſed to be ſong at euenſong in the church. Guliel de pontif. lib. 1. Which is as true as that the Harpe hanging in a womans houſe, played by it ſelfe the tune of the Antheme, called Gaudent in coelis, &c. What would not theſe deceiuers faine in matters ſomething likely, whych in thinges ſo abſurde and ſo inconuenient, ſhame not to lie and to forge ſo impudently & alſo ſo manifeſtly? Through the motion of this Dunſtane: King Edmund builded and furniſhed the monaſterie of Glaſtenbury, & made the ſayd Dunſtane Abbot thereof.

Concerning the ende and death of this King, ſundrye opinions there be, Alfridus and Marianus ſay: that while this King Edmund endeuored hymſelfe to ſaue his ſewer from the daunger of his enemies, which would haue ſlaine him at Pulcherchurch: the king in parting of the fray was wounded, and died ſhortly after. But Guliel. de Regibus. lib. 2. ſayeth, that the king being at a feaſt at Pulcherchurch vpon the day of S. Auguſtine, eſpied a fellon ſitting in the hall, named Leof, whom he before for his fellony had exiled. And leaping ouer the table did flie vpon him, & plucked the thiefe by the haire of the head to the ground. In which doyng, the fellon with a knife wounded the king to the death, and alſo with the ſame knife wounded many other of the kings ſeruants, and at length was all to hewen, and died forthwith.

The lawes of king Edmunde touching as well the ſtate ſpirituall as temporall.

By the lawes of king Edmund (ordeyned and ſet forth, as well for the redreſſe of church matters, as alſo of ciuile regiment) it may appeare, that the ſtate both of cauſes temporal & likewiſe ſpiritual, appertained then to ẏ kings right (the falſe pretenſed vſurpatiō of the biſhop of Rome notwithſtanding) as by theſe lawes is to be ſeene: where he by the aduiſe of his lordes and biſhops, did enact & determine concerning the chaſtitie & pure life of eccleſiaſticall miniſters, and ſuch as were in the orders of the Church, wͭ the penalties alſo for them which tranſgreſſed the ſame.

Item, for flying into the church for ſanctuary, &c.

Vlſtanus Archbiſhop of Yorke, Odo Arch. of Canterbury.

In the tyme of this Edmund, was Vlſtanus Archb. of Yorke, and Odo Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which Odo beyng a Dane borne (as is before touched) was promoted to that ſea by king Ethelſtane, for that (as they ſay) hee being firſt biſhop of Wiltone, & preſent with kyng Ethelſtane in the field againſt Analaſus before mentioned, what tyme the ſaid Ethelſtane had loſt his ſword, he through his interceſſion vp to heauen, did ſee a ſworde from heauen, come downe into the ſheath of the kyng. Whereof relation beyng made to the kyng by the foreſayd Byſhop, Ethelſtane vpon the ſame was ſo affected toward Odo, that not onely he counted him for a Patrone of his life, but alſo made him Primate of Canterbury after the deceaſe of Vlfelmus. This Odo was the firſt from the commyng of the Saxons, till his tyme which was Archbiſhop of Canterbury being no mōke. For all the other before him were of the profeſſion of Monkes, of whō a great part had bene Italiās vnto Berctualdus. Notwithſtanding this Odo, beyng alſo a ſtranger borne, after he was elected into the biſhopricke, to aunſwer to the old cuſtome of others before him, ſayled ouer into France, and there at Floriake (after the vſuall maner aboue mentioned of Engliſhmen) receiued the profeſſion and habite of monkiſh religion, as ſayth my foreſayd author. And like as the ſayd Odo firſt beyng no monke, was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury. So alſo Vlſtanus the ſame tyme, beyng biſhop of Yorke and of Worceſter, differed from diuers his predeceſſours before him in profeſſion and in habite: of whome the forenamed author thus writeth in his iij. booke, ſpeaking of Vlſtanus qui ſanctitate diſcrepabat & habitu, that is, he differed in ſanctimonie and in habite. Whereby is to be collected, that in thoſe dayes was a difference in habite & garment, not only betwene monkes & biſhops, but alſo betwene one Biſhop and an other. Albeit what difference it was yet, I do not finde. But I returne agayne to Odo, who by the deſcription of his maners, might ſeeme not to be the worſte that occupied that place, were it not that our lying hiſtories faining falſe miracles vpon him (as they do of other) make him in deede to ſeeme worſe then he was. As where they imagine that he ſhould ſee from heauen a ſworde fall into the ſcabberd of king Ethelſtane. Itē, where he ſhould couer and defend the church of Canterbury with his praiers from raine. And alſo where he ſhould turne the bread of the aulter (as the writer termeth it) into liuely fleſhe, & from fleſh into bread againe, to confirme the people which before doubted in the ſame. Where note agayn (good Reader) that albeit this miracle were true, as no doubt it is vntrue: yet is it to be noted, ẏ in thoſe dayes was a great doubt among engliſhmen of the popiſh ſacrament, & that tranſubſtantiatiō was not receiued into the chriſtiā creed. The like iudgement is to be geuē alſo of that, where our Engliſh writers teſtifieng of the ſame Odo, ſay that hee ſhould propheſie long before of Dunſtan, to be his ſucceſſor in the church of Canterbury. But to let theſe fantaſies and idle ſtories paſſe, this which we find of Odo, his owne writing is certain, that the ſaid Odo in the raigne of kyng Edmund, had a ſynode commenſed of the chiefe Prelates and mē of the clergy in his time, to whom he directed this letter here followyng: the copy whereof I thought to expreſſe, for the Reader to ſee what zelous care raigned in Archbiſhops then toward the Church of the Lord. The wordes of his epiſtle proceed in this tenour.

¶ The letter or an Epiſtle of Odo Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, ſent to the other Biſhops and men of the Clergy.

The letter of Odo Archb. to the prelates.

Mirabili cunctipotentis polorum præſulis clementia opitulante: Ego Odo, eccleſiæ Saluatoris Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti Archiepiſcopus, Douernienſis ciuitatis Metropolitanus, coepiſcopis fidei catholicæ compagatoribus ſpirituali charitatis rigore meis confratribus. Præſentium proſperitatem æthereiq; decoris beatitudinem, &c.

The ſame in Engliſh.

By the deuine grace of God, I Odo of the church of our lord and ſauiour Ieſus Chriſt, Archbiſhop & Metropolitane of the citie of Douer, to my fellow biſhops, and fellow planters of the catholike fayth, and my fellow brethren in the ſpirituall bonde of charitie, with greeting, wiſh proſperitie in this world preſent, & in the world to come felicitie. If it were ſo, or by any meanes could be, that all the riches of this world were layd before myne eyes, ſo that I beyng Emperour had all things vniuerſally vnder my ſubiection, all thoſe things gladly would I geue, yea and my ſelfe alſo would offer willingly for the health of your ſoules, as which alſo do deſire and truſt likewiſe my ſelf to be ſtrengthened with the feruencie of your holyneſſe, as appertaynyng to thoſe things wherin the Lord our God hath ſet vs to be workmen, &c.

And after a few other wordes of like effect, wherein he doth declare the heauy burden of his office, it followeth after this maner.

Wherfore moſt humbly and one vnworthy, but yet a deuout fellow brother of yours, I beſeech and exhort your holines: that you will not ſhew your ſelues cold and negligent in the cure and regiment of ſoules, ſo that in the tyme of the fearefull iudgement, the Lord doe not complaine of you, ſaying, my ſhepeheards did not feed my flocke, but they fed thēſelues And agayne they were princes of my flocke, and I knew not of it. But rather let vs take heede, and be diligent ouer the houſhold of the Lord, ouer which he hath ſet vs to be the leaders: to geue them meate & true meaſure of corne in tyme conuenient: that is to ſay, wholeſome doctrine. And although vpon myne owne demerites or worthineſſe I do not preſume to comfort or exhort any man: but as one beyng vnworthy & faultie in tranſgreſſions innumerable, am glad, and ſtand in neede, rather to be ſtrenghthened by your brotherly admonitions: yet for the auncient authoritie of my predeceſſors as of Auguſtine, of happy memory, and alſo of all other ſaintes by whoſe induſtrie the rule of chriſtianitie did firſt floriſh and ſpring from this Metropolitane ſea, vnto all quarters of England. Therefore I haue thought good to direct vnto you theſe my letters to the profit of you all: eſpecially, for that our renowmed & princely king Edmond, with all his people doth ioy to folow that which he heareth in you, and of you: and alſo, forſomuch as all his ſubiectes which be vnder his Imperiall dominion, doe loue and delight to follow moſt ioyfully, the fame and report of your ſincere conuerſation, &c.

Elſinus Archb. of Caunt. elect.

This Odo continued biſhop the ſpace of 20. yeres. After whom Elſinus was elected and ordained by the kyng to ſucceede through fauour and money: but in goyng to Rome for the Popes palle, in his iourney through the Alpes, he decayed and died for cold. Whereupon ſucceeded Dunſtane, as in tyme and place (by the leaue of Chriſt) followeth to be declared.

S. Edmundeſbury.

This Edmund gaue to S. Edmund the Martyr before mentioned, the towne of Bedricheſworth, which is now called S. Edmondeſbury, with great reuenues and lands appertaynyng to the ſame. But concerning the friuolous miracles which our Monkiſh ſtorywriters here fayne of this good Edmund, by the way (or rather out of the way) I let them paſſe.

The children of King Edmund.

Anno. 946.

And thus much concerning the raign of king Edmūd, who after he had raigned vi. yeres and halfe, was ſlaine as is ſayd at Pulcherchirch, and buried at Glaſtenbury of Dunſtane: leauing behynd him two children, Edwine & Edgar, by his wife Elgina. But becauſe the foreſaid children were yet yong & vnder age, therfore Edrede brother to king Edmund, and vncle to the children, gouerned as Protector about the ſpace of 9. yeres and halfe, til Edwine the eldeſt ſonne came to age. This Edrede with great moderation, and fidelitie to the young children, behaued himſelfe

Edrede gouernour of the Realme.

Dunſtane made byſhop of Wircceter and after of London.

ſelfe during the tyme of his gouernement. In his tyme, Dunſtane was promoted through the means of Odo the Archbiſhop, from Abbot of Glaſtenbury, to be Biſhop of Wircceter, and after of London. By the counſayle of this Dunſtane, Edrede was much ruled, and to much thereto addicted: In ſo much that the ſayd Edrede is reported in ſtories to ſubmit himſelfe to much fond penance, and caſtigations inflicted to him of the ſaid Dunſtane. Such zelous deuotion was then in princes, and more blynd ſuperſtition in biſhops. And here agayn is an other miracle as fantaſticall as the other before, forged of Dunſtane. That whē that Edrede beyng ſicke, ſent for Dunſtane to be hys confeſſor by the way: Dunſtane ſhould heare a voyce declaring to him before, that Edrede was already departed, at the declaring wherof Dunſtans horſe fel immediatly dead vnder hym, with lye and all.

With lye and all.

✻ King Edwine.

K. Edwyne.

Anno. 955.

Edwine the eldeſt ſonne of king Edmund afore mētioned, after his vncle Edrede, began his raigne about the yere of our Lord, 955. being crowned at Kingſton by Odo the Archbiſhop of Caunterbury. Of this Edwine it is reported of diuers writers, that the firſt day of his coronation, ſitting with his Lordes, brake ſodainly from them & entred a ſecrete chamber, to the company of a certaine woman, whom he inordinately retained (being as ſome ſay an other mans wife) whoſe huſband he had before ſlayne, as other ſay being of his aliance, to the great miſlikyng of hys Lordes, and eſpecially of the Clergy. Dunſtane was yet but Abbot of Glaſtenbury, who following the king into the chamber, brought him out by the hand, and accuſed him to Odo the Archbiſhop, cauſing him to be ſeparate from the company of the foreſayd partie, by the which Odo, the king was for his fact ſuſpended out of the Church. By reaſon whereof the king beyng with Dunſtane diſpleaſed, baniſhed him his land, & forced him for a ſeaſon to flee to Flanders where he was in the monaſtery of S. Amandus. About the ſame ſeaſon the Monaſticall order of Benedict Monkes or blacke monkes (as they were called) began to multiply and encreaſe here in England. In ſo much, that where before tyme other prieſtes & Canons had bene placed, there monkes were in their roumes ſet in, and the ſecular prieſts (as they then were called) or Canōs put out, But king Edwine for the diſpleaſure he bare to Dunſtan, did ſo vexe all the order of the ſaid monkes, that in Malmeſbury Glaſtenbury, & other places mo, he thruſt out the monkes, and ſet in ſecular prieſtes in their ſtead.

The king ſuſpenſed by the Archbiſhop. K. Edwyne an enemye to Monkes.

Monkes put out, and ſecular prieſtes placed in their roomes.

Notwithſtanding it was not long, but theſe prieſtes and Canons were agayne remoued, and the ſaid monkes in their ſtead reſtored, both in the foreſayd houſes, and in diuers other Churches Cathedrall beſides, as in the next ſtory of Kyng Edgar (Chriſt willyng) ſhall at more large appeare.

The death of K. Edwyne.

In fine kyng Edwine beyng hated by reaſon of certaine his demeanours, of all his ſubiectes (eſpecially the Northumbrians and Mercians) was by them remoued from his kingly honour, and his brother Edgar in his ſteade receiued: ſo that the Riuer of Thamis deuided both theyr kingdomes. which Edwine after he had raigned about the terme of foure yeares departed, leauing no heyre of hys bodye. wherefore the rule of the lande fell vnto Edgar his younger brother.

¶ King Edgar.

Anno. 959.

K. Edgar called Pacificus.

Edgar the ſecond ſonne of Edmund, and brother to Edwine being of the age of xvj. yeares, began his raygne ouer the realme of England, in the yeare of our Lord, 959. but was not crowned till 14. yeares after: the cauſes wherof here vnder follow (Chriſt willing) to be declared. In the beginning of his raigne he called home Dunſtane, whome king Edwine before had exiled. Then was Dunſtane, which before was Abbot of Glaſtenbury, made biſhop of Worceſter, & then of London. Not long after, this Odo the Archbiſhop of Cant. deceaſeth, after he had gouerned yͤ Church 24. yeares. After whom Brithelinus biſhop of Wincheſter, firſt was elected. But becauſe he was thought not ſufficiēt to furniſh yͤ roome: Dunſtane was ordained Archb. and the other ſent home agayne to his old Church. where note by the way, how in thoſe dayes the donatiō and aſſignyng of eccleſiaſticall dignities remayned in the kings hand, onely they ſet their palle frō Rome, as a token of the Popes confirmation. So Dunſtane beyng by the kyng made Archb. toke hys iourny to Rome for his palle of Pope Iohn the 13. which was about the beginning of the Kings raygne. Thus Dunſtane obtaynyng his palle, ſhortly after his returne agayne from Rome, entreateth King Edgar, that Oſwaldus (who, as is ſaid, was made monke at Floriake, and was nephew to Odo late biſhop of Cant.) might bee promoted to the biſhoprike of Worceſter, which thyng to him was granted. And not long after, through the means of the ſayd Dunſtane, Ethelwoldus (whom ſtories doe ſayne to be the great patrone of Monkery) firſt Monke of Glaſtenbury, thē Abbot of Abbendon, was alſo made Byſh. of Wincheſter. Of this Ethelwold, Gulielmus libro de geſtis pōtificum recordeth, that what tyme he was a Monke in the houſe of Glaſtenbury, the Abbot had a viſon of him which was this. How that there appeared to him in hys ſleepe a certayne great tree, the branches wherof extended through out all the foure quarters of the Realme, which branches were al couered with many little Monkes coules, where, in the top of the tree was one great maiſter coule, which in ſpreading it ſelfe ouer the other coules, incloſed all the reſt, which maiſter coule in the tree top, myne Authour in the interpretation applyeth to the lyfe of this Ethelwold. Of ſuch prodigious fantaſies, our monkiſh hiſtories bee full, and not onely our hiſtories of England, but alſo the Heathen hiſtories of the Gentiles be ſtuffed with ſuch kynd of dreames of much like effect.

Monkiſhe dreames.

Of ſuch a lyke dreame we read of the mother of Ethelſtane, how the Moone did ſpring out of her wombe, & gaue light to all England. Alſo of king Charles the Emperour, how he was led by a threed to ſee the torments of hel. Likewiſe of Furceus the Heremite mentioned in the third booke of Bede, who ſawe the ioyes of heauen and the 4. fires that ſhould deſtroy the world: the one of lying, for breakyng our promiſe made at Baptiſm. The ſecond fire was of couetous. The third of diſſention. The fourth was of the fire of impietie and wrongfull dealing. Item, in like ſort of the dreame of Dunſtane, and of the ſame Ethelwold, to whom appeared the three biſhops, Briſtanus, Birinus, and Swithinus, &c. Itē, of the dreame of the mother of this Ethelwold, who beyng great with him, did ſee a golden Egle flee out of her mouth, &c. Of the dreame likewiſe, or the viſion of Kyng Edgar concerning the falling of the two apples, and of the pots, one being full of water, the other empty, &c. Alſo of king Edward the Confeſſor, touching the ruine of the lande by the conqueſt of the Normands. We read alſo in the hiſtory of Aſtiages, how he dreamed of Cyrus. And likewiſe of many other dreames in the bookes of the monkes, & of the Ethnike writers. For what cannot either the idle vanitie of mans head, or the deception of the lying ſpirite worke by man: in foreſhewing ſuch earthly euentes as happen commonly in this preſent world? But here is a difference to be vnderſtood betwene theſe earthly dreames, ſpeaking of earthly things, and matters of humaine ſuperſtition, & betwene other ſpiritual reuelations ſent by God touching ſpirituall matters of the Church, pertaynyng to mans ſaluation. But to our purpoſe, by this dreame, and by the euent which followed after, it may appeare how & by what meanes the multitude of Monkes began firſt to ſwarme in the Churches of England (that is) in the dayes of this Edgar, by the meanes of theſe three Biſhops, Dunſtane, Ethelwold and Oſwold. Albeit Dunſtane was the chiefeſt ring leader of this race, yet Ethelwold beyng now Biſhop of Wincheſter, & Oſwald biſhop of Worceſter, were not much behind for their partes. By the inſtigation and counſail of theſe three aforeſaid, king Edgar is recorded in hiſtories to build either new out of the ground, or to reedifie monaſteries decayed by the Danes, mo then xl. As the houſe of Ely, Glaſtenbury, Abington, Burgh by Stamford, Thorney, Ramſey, Wilton, Wenton, Winchcombe, Thamſtock in Deuonſhire, with diuers other moe. In the ſettyng vp and building of the which, the foreſayde Ethelwold was a great doer and a founder vnder the king. Moreouer, through the motion of this Dunſtane and his fellowes, kyng Edgar in diuers great houſes and Cathedrall Churches, where Prebendaries and prieſtes were before, diſplaced the prieſts, and ſet in Monkes. wherof we read in yͤ chronicle of Rog. Houeden, in wordes and forme as followeth: Hic namq; Ethelwoldus Regem cuius eximius erat conſiliarius, ad hoc maximè prouocauit, vt clericos à Monaſterijs expelleret, & monachos ſanctimonialeſq; in eis collocaret, &c. That is, Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, who was then one of the kings cōſaile, did vrge the K. chiefly to expel Clerks out of Monaſteries, and in their rowmes to beſtow Monks and Nunnes, &c. whereunto accordeth likewiſe Hiſtoria Iornalenſis, containing the like effect in theſe wordes: Hoc anno Ethelwoldus Wint. & Oſwaldus Wygornenſis Epiſcopi, iuſſu Regis Edgari (clericis de quibuſdam maioribus Eccleſijs expulſis) Monachos inſtituerunt, aut de eiſdem clericis & alijs monachos in eiſdem fecerunt. Gulielmus alſo writing of the tyme of Dunſtane, maketh the matter ſomwhat more plain where he ſayth: Itaq; clerici multarum Eccleſiarum data optione, vt aut amictum mutarent, aut locis valedicerent, melioribus habitacula vacuefacientes. Surgebant itaque in tota inſula, religioſorum monaſteria, cumulabâtur mole pretioſi metalli ſanctorum altaria, &c. Thus the ſecular prieſts being put to their choiſe, whether to chaunge their habite, or to leaue theyr roumes, departed out of their houſes, geuing place for other better men to come in. Then the houſes & Monaſteries of Religious men through all the Realme, went vp apace, &c.

After the kings mynd was thus perſwaded and incited by theſe biſhops to aduance Monkery, then Oſwaldus biſhop of worceſter, & alſo made Archbiſhop of Yorke, after the deceaſe of Oſkitellus, ſui [illegible] compos effectꝰ (as Houeden writeth) hauing his ſea in the cathedrall Church there of S. Peter, began firſt with faire perſwaſions to aſſay the myndes of the Canons and prieſts, whether they could be content to change their profeſſion, and to be made monks, or no: which when he ſaw it would not take effect, he practiſed this pollicie with thē. Nere to the ſaid Church of S. Peter, within the churchyard he erected an other Church of our Lady, which when he had repleniſhed wͭ Monkes, there he continually frequented, there he kept, there he ſat, and was euer there conuerſant. By reaſon wherof, the other church was left naked and deſolate, and all the people gathered there where the biſhop was. The prieſts ſeyng themſelues ſo to be left and neglected both of the Biſhop and of the people, to whome nothing remayned but ſhame and contempt, were driuen of ſhame either to relinquiſh the houſe (ſuch as would not enter the Monkiſh profeſſion) or els to become monkes, ſuch as had nothyng els to ſtay vpon. After the like ſuperſtition (although not after the ſame ſubtletie) did Ethelwold alſo driue out the Canons and prieſts from the new Monaſtery in wincheſter, afterward called Hida, and placed his monkes. So in Orford and in Mildune, with diuers other places moe: the ſecular Prieſts with their wiues were expelled to geue place to Monkes. The cauſe wherof is thus pretended in certaine ſtory writers, whom I ſee alſo Fabian to folow, for that the prieſts and Clerkes were thought ſlack and negligent in their Church ſeruice, and ſet in Vicares in theyr ſtead, while they liued in pleaſure, and miſpent the patrimony of the Church after their owne luſt. Then king Edgar gaue to the Vicars the ſame land which before belonged to the Prebendaries, who alſo not long after ſhewed themſelues as negligent as the other. wherfore king Edgar (as mine authors write) by the conſent of Pope Iohn, 13. voyded clerely the prieſts, and ordained there monkes. Although certaine of the nobles, and ſome of the Prelates were therewith not well contented, as in the chapter following, may partly appeare.

But for ſo much as we haue entred into the mention of Monkes & Nunnes, and of their profeſſion, which I ſee ſo greatly in our Monkiſh ſtories commended: leſt perhaps the ſimple Reader may be deceiued thereby, in hearing the name of monkes in all hiſtories of tymes to be ſuch an auncient thing in Chriſtian life (euen frō the primitiue church after the Apoſtles tyme) both commonly recited and well receiued: therfore to helpe the iudgement of the ignorant, and to preuent all errour herein, it ſhall not be vnprofitable in followyng the preſent occaſion here geuen (by way of a little digreſſion) to entermedle ſomewhat concerning the originall inſtitution of monkes, what they were in the old tyme, which were called Monachi, wherin the monkes of the primitiue tyme, did differ from the Monkes of the middle time, and from theſe our Monkes now of this latter age. Moreouer, wherein all theſe three do differ from Prieſts (as we call them) and frō men of the clergy. wherfore to aunſwer to the ſuperſtitious ſcruple of ſuch, which alledge the old antiquitie of the name and title of monks: firſt I graunt, the name and order of Monkes to be of old continuance, during neare from the tyme of 300. yeares after Chriſt. Of whom diuers old authors do record, as Auguſtinus, Hieronymus, Baſilius Magnus, who was alſo himſelf one of the firſt inſtitutors and commenders of that ſuperſtition. Chryſoſtomus, Nazianzenus, Euagrius, Sozomenus, Dionyſius, and diuers other. In the number of theſe monkes (which then were deuided into Heremites or Anachorites and into Coenobites) were Antonius, Paulus, Ioannes, wyth diuers other recluſes. Among the which was Hierome, Baſile, Macarius, Iſidorus, Pambus, Nilammon, Simeon, with infinite other, both in Paleſtina, Syria, Thebaide, Meſopotamia in Egypt, in Africa and Scythia. In ſo much that Caſsianus, Lib. 2 cap. 4. de Canon. Noctur. orat. maketh mention of a certaine Monaſtery in Thebaide, wherin were aboue 5000. monks, vnder the gouernment of one Abbot. And here alſo in England mention is made before of Bangor, wherein were two thouſand & two hundred Monkes vnder one mans ruling, in the yeare of our Lord, 596. wherby it appeareth that Monkes were then, and 200. yeares before in the primitiue tyme of the Church. But what monks theſe were, is to be conſidered. Such as either by tiranny of perſecution were driuen into ſolitary and deſert places, or els ſuch as not conſtrained of any, but of their owne voluntary deuotion (ioyned with ſome ſuperſtition among, for the loue they had to ſpirituall contemplation, and for hatred of the wicked world) withdrewe themſelues from all company, either hauyng nothyng to themſelues proper, or els all things common with other. And all theſe were then nothing els but lay men. Of which lay men there were two ſundry ſortes, one of the vulgare & common people, which onely were pertakers of the Sacraments, the other in folowing a Monaſticall kynde of lyfe, were called Monkes (beyng nothing but lay men) leadyng a more ſeuere and ſtraighter trade of lyfe, then the other, as may ſufficiently appeare by Auguſt. Lib. de moribus Eccleſiæ cap. 13. Item, Lib. de operibus Monachorum. Item Epiſtola ad Aurelium. Alſo by Hierome ad Heliodorum, writing theſe wordes: Alia Monachorum eſt cauſa, alia clericorum. Clerici paſcunt oues, ego paſcor, &c. That is, One thing pertaineth to Monkes, an other thing to them of the Clergy. They of the Clergy feede their flocke. I am fed, &c. Et ex Dionyſio. Alſo the ſame appeareth likewiſe by the 4. Canon of the Councel of Chalcedone, where it is prouided, Ne Monachi ſe Eccleſiaſticis negocijs immiſceant. That is, That Monkes ſhould not intermedle with matters of the Church. &c. Et Leo Epiſtola 62 vetat Monachos & laicos, etſi ſcientię nomine glorientur, admitti ad officium docendi & concionandi.

By theſe foreſayd authors alledged, it is euident: that Monkes in the former age of the church, albeit they lyued a ſolitary life, yet they were then no other but only lay mē, differing from prieſts, & differing from the other monkes, which ſucceded them afterward in the middle age of the Church, and that in iij. pointes. Firſt, they were tyed and bound to no preſcript forme eyther of diet or apparel, or any thing els, as we may ſee teſtified by the wordes of S. Auguſtine, which be theſe: Neq; inter hæc nemo vrgetur in aſpera, quæ ferre non poteſt: Nulli quod recuſat imponitur. Nec ideo contemnitur à cæteris, in quod eis imitandis ſe fatetur inualidum. Meminerunt enim quantoperè commendata ſit in Scripturis charitas. Meminerunt omnia munda mundis, &c Nō quod intrat in os coinquinat hominem, ſed quod exit. Itaq; non reijciendis generibus ciborum, quaſi pollutis, ſed concupiſcentiæ perdomandæ, & dilectioni fratrum retinendæ, inuigilat omnis induſtria. And Sozomenus, Lib 3. cap. 16. ſpeaking of the Monkes of the ſame time, which in cities had ſeuerall manſions frō other, ſayth: Alij in turba ciuitatum conuerſabantur, ſic ſeipſos gerentes, vt nullius momenti viderentur, & à multis nihil differrent, &c. i. Some liued in cities, ſo behauing themſelues, as ſeeming nothing worth, and they differed nothyng from the multitude, &c. The ſecond point wherin they were diſcrepant from the latter Monkes: was, in that they remained no other but in the order of lay men (onely beyng of a ſtraighter lyfe then the reſt) and had nothing to do in matters & charges Eccleſiaſticall. which was afterward broken, by Pope Bonifacius the 4. as followeth more (the lord willing) to be ſene and ſayd. Thirdly, the foreſaid monkes of that age (albeit the moſt part of them liued ſole & ſingle from wiues) yet ſome of them were maried: certes none of them were forbidden or reſtrayned from mariage. Of ſuch as were maried, ſpeaketh Athanaſius in Epiſtola ad Dracontium, qui ait ſe nouiſſe & Monachos & Epiſcopos coniuges & liberorum patres, &c. That is, which ſayth that he knew both Monkes and Biſhops maried men, and fathers of children, &c.

And yet the ſaid Monkes of the old tyme, though they were better then the other which folowed them, yet al that notwithſtanding, ſuperſtitiō with them and among them begā then to creepe into the church, through the crafty ſubtilty of Sathan, and all for the ignoraunce of our free iuſtification by faith in Ieſus Chriſt. Examples to declare the vaine and prodigious ſuperſtitiō of theſe Monaſticall ſort of men, which examples do not lacke: if laiſure rather did not lacke to bring them in. But ij. or iij. ſhal ſuffice for many, which I purpoſe (the Lord willing) here to inſerte: to the intent the mind of the godly reader may the better conſider and vnderſtand, how ſoone after the tyme of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, the doctrine of chriſtian iuſtification began to be forgotten, true religion turned to ſuperſtition, & the price of Chriſtes paſſion to bee obſcured through the vayne opinion of mens merites, &c. A certaine Abbot named Moſes thus teſtifieth of himſelfe, in the Collations of Caſſianus, that he ſo afflicted himſelfe with much faſting and watching, that ſometymes for ij. or iij. dayes together, not Superſtition crept in with monkery. The ignoraunce of our free iuſtification by Chriſt, is the cauſe of all ſuperſtition.

Monkes of the olde tyme.

not onely he felt no appetite to eate, but alſo had no remembraunce of any meat at all, and by reaſon thereof was driuen alſo frō ſleepe. In ſo much, that he was cauſed to pray to God, but for a little refreſhing of ſleepe to be geuen him ſome piece of the night. In the ſame author, mention is made of a certaine old man an Hermite, who becauſe hee had conceiued in himſelfe ſuch a purpoſe neuer to eat meat without he had ſome gueſt or ſtrāger with him, ſometyme was conſtrained to abſtaine v. daies together vntil Sonday, while he came to the Church and there brought ſome ſtranger or other home with him.

Caſſianus lib. de ſpiritu Gaſtrimarg. cap. 40.

Two other examples yet more will I adde out of the ſaid Caſſianus, to declare how the ſubtiltie of Sathan, thorough ſuperſtition and falſe colour of holynes, blindeth ÿ miſerable eyes of ſuch which rather attend mens traditions, then the word of God. In the xl. chap. of the ſayd author in his booke de Gaſtrimargia, is told of a certain Abbot named Ioannes, in the deſert of Scythia, who ſent ij. of hys Nouices with figs vnto one that was ſicke in the wildernes 18. miles off from the Church. It chaunced theſe two yong Nouices miſſing the way, wandered ſo long in the wild foreſt or wildernes, and could not find the Celle, that for emptines and wearines they waxed faint & tired. And yet rather would they die then taſt the figs committed to them to cary, and ſo dyd, for ſhortly after they were found dead, their figges lying whole by them.

Superſtition.

Caſſian. lib. 6. cap. 2.

An other ſtory he alſo reciteth of two Monaſticall brethren, who making their progreſſe, in the deſert of Thebaide: purpoſed with thēſelues, to take no ſuſtenance, but ſuch as the Lord ſhould miniſter himſelfe vnto them. It happened, as they were wandering deſolate in the deſert, and faynting almoſt for penury, certayne Mazices, a kinde of people by nature fearce and cruel: notwithſtanding, being ſodenly altered into a new nature of humanitye, came forth and of their owne accord offered bread vnto them. Which bread the one thankfully receaued, as ſent of God. The other as counting it ſent of man and not of God, refuſed it, and ſo for lacke periſhed.

Hereunto might I alſo annexe the ſtory of Mucius, who to declare his obedience, did not ſticke at the commaundement of his Abbot, to caſt his ſonne into the water, not knowing whether any were appointed there ready to reſcue him from drowning, ſo far were the Monkes in thoſe dayes drowned in ſuperſtition. What is this, but for mans traditions and commaundements, to tranſgreſſe the commaundement of God, which ſaith: Thou ſhalt do no murther. Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God? What man is ſo blynd, that ſeeth not by theſe & infinite examples mo: what pernitious ſuperſtition hath begun by reaſon of this Monkery, almoſt from the beginnyng to creepe into the Church? Wherfore I cannot marueil inough, ſeeyng that age of the Church, had in it ſo many learned and famous Doctors, who not onely did approue and allow theſe monaſticall ſectes of life: but alſo certaine themſelues were the authors and inſtitutors of the ſame, yea and of mens traditions made the ſeruice of God. In number of whome may be reckoned Baſilius Magnus, & Nazianzenus, who with immoderate auſteritie did ſo plucke downe themſelues, that when they were called to the office of Biſhops, they were not able to ſuſtaine the labour therof.

Monkes of the middle and latter age of the church deſcribed.

After theſe foreſayd monkes of that tyme aboue recited, followed other Monkes of the middle age of the Church: who as in multitude, ſo alſo in ſuperſtition increaſing, began by little and little from their deſolate dens in the vaſte wildernes, to approch more neare to great towns, where they had ſolemne Monaſteries founded by Kinges and Queenes, and kings daughters, and other rich Conſuls, as is partly before touched. And the cauſes alſo touched withall, for the which they were firſt founded, as theſe: pro remedio animæ meæ, pro remiſſione peccatorum meorum, pro redemptione peccatorū meorum, & pro ſalute regnorum, quiq; meo ſubiacent regimini populorum. In honorem glorioſæ virginis, &c. For all theſe impious, and erroneous titles, and cauſes, we finde alleaged in ſtoryes, as in Malmeſberienſis, Iornalenſis, Henricus, and other moe. In which hiſtories I alſo note, that the moſt part of theſe foreſayd monaſteries were erected firſt vpon ſome great murther, either by war in the field, or priuately committed at home: as ſhall well appeare to them which read the bookes whom I haue alledged. But to returne to our Monks agayn, who (as is ſayd) firſt began to creepe from the cold field into warme townes and cloyſters: from townes, then into citties, and at length from their cloſe cellers and citties, vnto Cathedrall Churches (as here appeareth by this ſtorye of King Edgar) where, not onely they did abound in wealth and riches (eſpecially theſe Monkes of our latter tyme) but much more did ſwimme in ſuperſtition, and Phariſaicall hipocriſie, beyng yoked and tied in all their doings, to certaine preſcript rules and formal obſeruances: in watching in ſleeping, in eating, in riſing, in praying, in walkyng, in talking, in looking, in taſting, in touching, in handling, in their geſtures, in their veſtures, euery mā apparailed, not as the proper condition of other would require, nor as the ſeaſon of the yeare did ſerue, but as the coacted rules & order of euery ſect did inforce them. The number of which ſectes was infinitely diuers: ſome after Baſilius rule, went in white: ſome after Benets rule in blacke: ſome Cluniacēſis, firſt ſet vp by Otho in the tyme of this King Edgar, wearing after the rule of Benets order: ſome after Hieroms rule leather girdled and coped aboue their white coate: ſome Gregorians copper coloured: Some de valle vmbroſa, graye Monkes: Some Grandimontenſes, wearing a coate of mailes vpon theyr bare bodyes, with a black cloake thereupon: Some Ciſtercianes, who had white rochets on a blacke coate: Some Celeſtines, all in blew, both cloake, coule, and cap: Some Charter Monkes, wearing heare-cloth next their bodyes: Some Flagellants, going barefoot in long white linnen ſhirtes, with an open place in the backe, where they beat themſelues with ſcourges on the bare ſkinne euery day, before the peoples eyes, till the bloud ranne downe: ſaying that it was reuealed to them by an Angell, that in ſo ſcourging themſelues, within 30. dayes and 12. houres, they ſhould bee made ſo pure from ſinne, as they were whē they firſt receiued baptiſme: ſome ſtarred Monkes: Some Ieſuites, with a white girdle & a ruſſet coule. Briefely, who can recken vp the innumerable ſectes and diſguiſed orders of their fraternities? Some holding of S. Benet, ſome of S. Hierome, Some of S. Baſill, Some of S. Barnard: Some of S. Bridget: Some of S. Bruno: Some of S. Lewes: as though it were not enough for Chriſten men to holde of Chriſt onely: ſo ſubiect were they to ſeruile rules, that no part of Chriſten liberty remayned among them. So drowned and ſunck in ſuperſtition: that not onely they had loſt Chriſtes religion, but alſo almoſt the ſenſe and nature of men. For where men naturally are and ought to be ruled by the deſcrete gouernment of reaſō, in all outward doynges, wherein no one rule can ſerue for all men: the circumſtaunce of tyme, place, perſon, and buſines being ſo ſundry and diuers. Contrary, among theſe, not reaſon but onely the knock of a bell, ruled all their doinges: their riſing, their ſleeping, theyr praying, their eating, their comming in, their going out, their talking, their ſilēce, & altogether like inſenſible people, either not hauing reaſon to rule themſelues, or els as perſons vngrateful to God, neyther enioyning the benefite of reaſon created in them, nor yet vſing the grace of Chriſtes libertie, whereunto he redemed them.

Monarchi flagellan

Monkes are ſubiect and ruled by the knocke of a bell.

Thus thou ſeeſt (gentle Reader) ſufficiently declared, what the monkes were in ÿ primitiue tyme of the Church, & what were the Monkes of the middle age, and of theſe our latter dayes of the church. Whereunto ioyne this withall, that where the Monkes of elder tyme (as is ſayd) were meere lay men and no ſpirituall miniſters. Afterward Bonifacius the 4. made a decree, an. 606. that Monkes might vſe the office of preaching, of Chriſtening, of hearing confeſſions, & alſo of aſſayling them of their ſinnes, &c. So thē monkes, who in the beginning were but lay men, and no ſpirituall miniſters, forbidden by the generall Councell of Chalcedon (as is aboue related) to intermeddle with matters eccleſiaſticall: afterward in proces of time did ſo much incroch vpon the office of ſpirituall miniſters, that at lēgth the Prieſts were diſcharged out of their Cathedrall churches, & monkes ſet in their places. Becauſe that Monkes in thoſe dayes leading a ſtraighter lyfe, and profeſſing chaſtitie, had a greater countenance of holynes amōg the people, then the Prieſts, who then in the dayes of king Edgar had wiues (at leaſt ſo many as would) no law forbidding them to the contrary, till the tyme of Hildebrand, now called Gregory the 7. whereof more ſhall be ſayd (Chriſt willing) in the booke next followyng.

Monkes made ſpirituall miniſters contrary to the old decrees and cuſtoms of the Church.

Prieſtes in King Edgars tyme had wyues.

And thus much by the way as touching the order and profeſſion of Monkes. Nowe to turne in agayne from whence we digreſſed (that is) to the matter of kyng Edgar, who followyng the counſaile and leading of Dunſtane, and the foreſayd Ethelwold Biſhop of Wincheſter, was ſomewhat thereby inclined to ſuperſtition. But otherwyſe of his owne nature, well geuen to all vertues and princely actes worthy of much commēdation, and famous memory. So excellent was he in iuſtice, and ſharpe in correctiō of vices (as well in his magiſtrates, as other ſubiectes) that neuer before his dayes was leſſe felony by robbers, nor leſſe extortion or bribery by falſe officers. Such Prouinces & lordſhips as were not yet come vnder the kings ſubiection, he vnited and adioyned to his dominion. And

A note for men of nobilitie to marke.

A notable example of a prince to admoniſhe all princes what to do.

ſo made one perfect monarchy of the whole realme of England, with all the Iſlelands and borders about the ſame. Such as were wicked, he kept vnder, he repreſſed thẽ that were rebels, the godly he maintayned, he loued the modeſt, he was deuout to God, and beloued of his ſubiects, whom he gouerned in much peace and quietnes. And as he was a great ſeeker of peace, ſo God did bleſſe hym with much aboundaunce of peace and reſt from all warres: ſo that as the hiſtory recordeth of hym, Nullas inſidias domeſticorum, nullum exterminium alienorum ſenſerit, for the which he was called Pacificus. He neyther taſted of any priuy treſon among his ſubiectes, nor of any inuaſion of forayne enemies. So ſtudious he was of the publike profite of hys Realme, and fruitfull in his gouernment, that as the ſayd ſtory teſtifieth of him, Nullus ferè annus in Chronicis præterijt, quo non magnum & neceſſarium patriæ aliquid fecerit: No yeare paſſed in all the tyme of his raigne, wherein he dyd not ſome ſingular and neceſſary commoditie for the common wealth, &c. A great mainteyner he was of Religion and learning, not forgetting herein the foreſteps of Kyng Alfred his predeceſſor. Among his other princely vertues this chiefly is to be regarded, that where as other princes commonly in much peace and quietnes, are wont to grow into a diſſolute negligence of life, or obliuiõ of their charge committed vnto them. This king in continuance of peace (that notwithſtanding) kept euer with him ſuch a watch, & a vigilant ſeueritie ioyned with a ſeemely clemency, that I cannot here but recite the witneſſe of our ſtory writers, teſtifiyng of his diligent care ouer the common wealth: which was ſo great, Vt nullum cuiuſcunq; dignitatis hominẽ, leges eludere impunè permitteret i. That he would ſuffer no man of what degree of nobilitie ſo euer he were, to dally out his lawes without condigne puniſhment, &c. And followeth more in the ſame author. Nemo eius tempore priuatus latro, Nemo popularis prædo, niſi qui mallet in fortunas alienas graſſari propriæ vitæ diſpendio, &c. In all his tyme there was neither any priuy picker nor open thiefe, but he that in ſtealing other mens goods, would venter and ſuffer (as he was ſure) the loſſe of his owne lyfe, &c. Guliel. de Reg.

Wolues firſt driuen out of Englend.

Moreouer, as the ſtudious induſtrie of this Prince was forward in all other points, ſo his prudent prouiſion dyd not lacke in this alſo, in driuing out the deuouring & rauening wolues, throughout all his land. Wherein he vſed this pollicie, In cauſing Ludwallus Prince or Kyng of Wales, to yelde to him yearely by way of tribute, 300. wolues. By meanes whereof, within the ſpace of 4. yeres after in England and Wales, might ſcantly be founde one wolfe alyue.

The prouiſion of kyng Edgar in keeping the ſeas.

A notable example in a prince, for all good princes to marke and to follow.

The deuiſe of K. Edgar to auoyde dronkennes.

This Edgar among other of his politike deedes, had in readines 3600. ſhips of warre, to ſcoure the Seas in the Sommer tyme, whereof 1200. kept the Eaſt ſeas, as many to defend the Weſt ſide, againe, as many on the Southſeas to repulſe the inuaſion of forayne enemies. Moreouer, in winter ſeaſon, the vſe and maner of this vertuous Kyng was this: During all the tyme of his life, to ride ouer the land in progreſſe, ſearching and inquiring diligently (to vſe here the wordes of mine author.) Quomodo legum iura, & ſuorum ſtatuta decretorum obſeruarentur: & ne pauperes à potentibus præiudicium paſſi opprimerentur. That is, How his lawes and ſtatutes by him ordeined were kept, & that the poore ſhould ſuffer no preiudice or be oppreſſed any maner of wayes by the mightier, &c. Briefly, as I ſee many things in this worthy prince to be commended, ſo this one thing in him I cannot but lament, to ſee him like a Phenix to flee alone, that of all his poſteritie ſo few there bee that ſeeke to keepe him company. And although I haue ſhewed more already of this king, then I thinke will wel be folowed, yet this more is to be added to the worthines of his other acts. That where as by the multitude of the Danes dwelling in diuers places of Englãd, much exceſſiue drinking was vſed, whereupon enſued dronkennes, and many other vices, to the euill example and hurt of his ſubiects: he therfore to preuent that euill, ordeined certaine cuppes with pinnes, or nailes ſet in them, adding therunto a law, that what perſon dranke paſt that marke at one draught, ſhould forfaite a certaine peny. Whereof one halfe ſhould fall to the accuſer, and the other half to the ruler of the borough or towne, where the offence was done.

Viij. kinges do homage to K. Edgar.

The Glory of king Edgar reprehended.

Wherein kinges ought to glory.

It is reported of this Edgar by diuers authors, that about the 13. yere of his raign, he being at Cheſter, 8. kings (called in hiſtories Subreguli) to wit, petykings, or vnderkings, came & did homage to him. Of whom the firſt was the king of Scots, called Kinadius: Macolinus of Cumberland. Mackus or Maſcuſinus king of Moniæ, and of diuers other Ilands, & all the kings of Wales, the names of whõ were Duſuall, or Dunewaldus, Sifreth, Huwall, Iacob, Vikyll, Inchell. All which kings after they had geuen their fidelitie to Edgar: the next day following (for a pompe or royaltie) he entred with theſe aforeſaid kings into the riuer of Dee. Where he ſitting in a boate toke the rule of the helme, and cauſed theſe 8. kings, euery perſon taking an ore in hys hand, to row him vp and downe the riuer to and from the Church of S. Iohn vnto his palace agayne, in token that he was maiſter and Lord of ſo many prouinces: whereupõ he is reported to haue ſayd in this maner: Tunc demum poſſe ſucceſſores ſuos gloriari, ſe Reges Angliæ eſſe, cum tanta prærogatiua honorum fruerẽtur. But in my mynd this king had ſayd much better, if he had rather ſaid with S. Paule, Abſit mihi gloriari, niſi in cruce Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti.

K. Edgar a ſuperſtitious vpholder of Monkery.

Ex Edmero.

And thus ye haue heard hetherto touching the cõmendation of king Edgar, ſuch reportes as the old Monkiſh writers thought to beſtow vpon him, as vpon the great patron of their monkiſh religion, who had builded ſo many monaſteries for them, as were Sondayes in the yeare, (as ſome ſay) or, as Edmer reporteth, but 48.

Vices noted in King. Edgar.

King Edgar circumuented by one of hys own counſell.

Now on the other ſide, what vices in him were raigning, let vs likewiſe conſider, according as we find in the ſayd authors deſcribed, which moſt write to his aduancement. Whereof, the firſt vice is noted to be crueltie, as well vpon others, as namely vpon a certaine Erle being of his ſecret counſaile called Ethelwold. The ſtory is this, Ordgarus Duke of Deuonſhire, had a certaine daughter named Elfrida, whoſe beautie beyng highly commended to the king, he being inflamed therwith, ſent this forſaid Ethelwold (whom he eſpecially truſted) to the partie, to ſee and to bring him word againe, & if her beautie were ſuch as was reported, willing him alſo to make the match betwene them. Ethelwold wel viewing the partie, and ſeing her beautie nothing inferior to her fame, and thinking firſt to ſerue his owne turne, tolde all things contrary to the king. Whereupon the king withdrawing his mynd otherwiſe, in the ende it came to paſſe that Ethelwold hymſelfe did marry her.

Cruelty in king Edgar noted.

Not long after, the king vnderſtanding further by the complaints and rumors of certayne, how he was preuented and beguiled, ſet a faire face vpon the matter before Ethelwold, and merily ieſting with hym, tolde hym how he would come and ſee his wyfe, & in deed appointed the day when he would be there. Ethelwold the husband perceauing this matter to go hardly with hym, made haſt to hys wife, declaring to her the comming of the king, and alſo opening the whole order of the matter how he had done, deſired her of all loue, as ſhe would ſaue his life, to diſgrace & deforme her ſelfe with garmentes and ſuch attyre, as the king might take no delighting in her. Elfrida hearing this what did ſhe, but contrary to the requeſt of her husband, & promiſe of a wife, againſt the kings commyng trimmed her ſelfe at the glaſſe, & decked her in her beſt aray. Whom when the king beheld, he was not ſo much enamoured in her, as in hatred with her husband who had ſo deceaued him. Whereupon the king ſhortly after making as though he would goe to hunt in the foreſt of Harwood, ſent for Ethelwold to come to him vnder the pretence of huntyng, & there ran him thorow and ſlew him. After this the baſtard ſonne of Ethelwold comming to him, the king aſked hym how he liked that hunting. Who aunſwered againe, that which pleaſeth the king, ought not to diſpleaſe him. For the death of which Ethelwold, Elfrida afterward builded a Monaſtery of Nunnes in remiſſion of ſinnes.

Great detriment happening in this Realme by King Edgar.

W. Malmeſb.

An other fault which Malmeſbury noteth in hym, was the comming in of ſtrangers into this land, as Saxones, Flemmings, & Danes, whome he with great familiaritie retained, to the great detriment of this land, as the forſaid ſtory of Malmeſbury recordeth, whoſe wordes be theſe. Vndè factum eſt, vt fama eius per ora omnium volitante, alienigenæ, Saxones, Flandritæ, ipſi etiam Dani huc frequenter annauigarent, Edgaro familiares effecti: quorum aduentus magnũ prouincialibus detrimentum peperit. Inde meritò iureq; reprehendunt eum literæ, &c. That is, wherby it happened, that diuers ſtraungers out of forayne countreys, allured by hys fame, came into the land, as Saxones, Flemmings, and Danes alſo, all which he retained with great familiaritie. The comming of which ſtraungers wrought great dammage to the realme, and therfore is Edgar iuſtly blamed in ſtories, &c. with the which reprehenſion all the Saxone ſtories alſo do agree.

The incontinent life of King Edgar.

Editha baſe daughter of Wilfrede the kinges lemman.

The third vice to him obiected, was his incontinent & laſciuious luſt in deflouring maides, as firſt of a Dukes daughter being a Nunne, and a virgin named Wilfrida, or Wilfrude, of which Wilfride was borne Editha, a baſtard daughter of Edgar. Alſo of an other certaine virgin in the town of Andeuar. Who was priuily conueied into his bed by this meanes. The laſciuious king commyng to Andeuar, not farre from Wincheſter, and thinking to haue his pleaſure of a certayne Dukes daughter, of whoſe beautie he heard much ſpeaking, commaunded the mayde to bee brought vnto him. The mother of the virgine grieued to haue her daughter made a concubine, ſecretly by night cōueyed to the kings bed in ſtead of her daughter, an other mayden of beauty and fauour not vncomely: who in the morning riſing to her worke, and ſo beyng knowen of the king what ſhe was, had graunted vnto her of yͤ king ſuch libertie and freedome, that of a ſeruant ſhe was made miſtreſſe both to her maiſter, and alſo to her miſtreſſe. Ex Mat. Pariſ. lib. de Regib.

Edward borne in baſtardie of Elflede. King Edwardes concubine.

An other concubine he had alſo beſides theſe aforeſaid, which was Egelfleda or Elfleda, called Candida yͤ white daughter of duke Ordmere (as Guliel. Malmeſb. recordeth) ſhe beyng alſo a profeſſed Nunne, of whom he begot Edward in baſtardy. For the which he was enioined by Dūſtane 7. yeares penance. After which penance beyng complete, then he tooke to him a lawfull wyfe (as Malmeſbury ſayth) Elfritha, the mother of Edmund and Ethelred, or otherwiſe called Egelred, whereof more ſhall be ſayd (the Lord willing hereafter.

King Edgar a great mayntayner of monkery.

Ouer and beſides all theſe vices noted and obiected to king Edgar in our monkiſh ſtorywriters, I alſo obſerue another no leſſe, or rather greater vice then the other afore recited, which was blynd ſuperſtition and idolatrous mōkery brought into the church of Chriſt, with the wrongfull expulſing of lawful maried prieſts out of their houſes. Whereupon, what inconueniences enſued after in this realm, eſpecially in the houſe of the Lord, I leaue it to the conſideration of them which haue heard of the deteſtable enormities of theſe religious votaries. The occaſiō whereof, firſt and chiefly began in this Edgar through the inſtigation of Dunſtane and his fellowes, who after they had inueigled the kyng & had brought him to their purpoſe, they cauſed him to call a Councell of the Clergy, where it was enacted and decreed, that the Canons of diuers Cathedral churches, Colleginars, Perſons, Vicars, Prieſts and Deacons, with their wiues and childrē, either ſhould geue ouer that kind of life, or els geue roume to Monkes, &c. For execution of which decree, two principall Viſitors were appointed, Athelwold or Ethelwold, biſhop of Winchester, and Oſwold biſhop of Worceſter, as is partly before touched. Oſbernus in vita Dunſtani, Malmeſb. De vit. pontif. Rog. Houed.

K. Edgar ſeduced by Dunſtane and Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter.

Ex Oſberno in vita Dunſtani Fol. 27. Malmeſb. Houeden & alijs.

And thus much concerning the hiſtory of king Edgar and of ſuch things as in his tyme happened in the church. Which Edgar after he had entred into the partes of Britannie, to ſubdue the rebellion of the Welchmen, and there had ſpoiled the coūtrey of Glamorgan, & waſted the country of Ono within x. dayes after, when he had raigned the ſpace of xvj. yeares, died, and was buried at Glaſtenbury, leauing after him two baſtards, to witte, Editha and Edward, and one ſonne lawfully begottē, named Ethelred, or otherwiſe by corruption called Egelred: For Edmund the elder ſonne died before his father.

The death of K. Edgar.

Ye heard before how king Edgar is noted in all ſtories to be an incontinent liuer in defloURing maydes and virgines. Of which virgins iij. notoriouſly are expreſſed in authors, to witte, Wlſtrude or Wlfride: The ſecond, was the dukes maid at Andeuar, nie to Wincheſter: The third, was Elflede mother of Edward, for the which Elflede he was ſtayd and kept backe from his Coronation by Dunſtane Archbiſhop of Cant. the ſpace of 7. yeares, and ſo the ſayd kyng beginning his raigne in the 16. yeare of his age beyng the yeare of the Lord, 959. was crowned at his age 31. An. dom. 974. as is in the Saxon Chronicle of Worceſter church to be proued. For the more euident declaration of which matter concerning the coronation of the kyng, reſtrained, and the preſumptuous behauiour of Dunſtan againſt the king: and his penance by the ſayd Dunſtane enioyned, ye ſhall heare both Oſborne, Malmeſb. and other authors, ſpeake in their owne wordes as followeth, Perpetrato itaq; in virginem velatam peccato, &c. After that Dunſtane had vnderſtanding of the kings offence perpetrated with the profeſſed Nunne, and that the ſame was blaſed amongſt the people, with great ire and paſſion of mynde he came to the king. Who ſeing the Archb. comming, eftſones of gentlenes aroſe from his regall ſeate towards hym, to take him by the hand, and to geue him place. But Dunſtan refuſing to take him by the hand, and with ſterne countenance bending his browes, ſpake after this effect of wordes (as ſtories import) vnto the king: You that haue not feared to corrupt a virgine mayde handfaſt to Chriſt, preſume you to touch the conſecrated handes of a biſhop? you haue defiled the ſpouſe of your maker, & thinke you by flattring ſeruice to pacifie the friend of the bridegrome? No ſir, his frend will not I be, which hath Chriſt to his enemy, &c. The king terrified with theſe thundring wordes of Dunſtan, and compuncted with inward repentance of his crime perpetrated, fel down with weping at the feete of Dunſtane. Who, after he had rayſed him vp from the ground againe, began to vtter to him the horriblenes of his fact, and finding the king redy to receiue whatſoeuer ſatiſfaction he would lay vpon him, enioyned him this penance for 7. yeres ſpace, as followeth: That hee ſhould weare no crowne all that ſpace, that he ſhould faſt twiſe in the weeke, he ſhould diſtribute his treaſure left to him of his aunceſters, liberally vnto the poore, he ſhould build a Monaſterie of Nunnes at Shaftſbury, that as he had robbed God of one virgine through his tranſgreſſion, ſo ſhould he reſtore to him many again in tymes to come: Moreouer, he ſhould expell Clerkes of euil life (meaning ſuch prieſts as had wiues and children) out of churches, and place Couents of Monkes in their rowme, &c.

Ex Chronico Saxonico Eccleſia Wigornenſis.

Ex Oſberno in vit. Dunſtani.

Dunſtane refuſeth to take the king by the hand.

The wordes of Dunſtane to K. Edgar.

Penaunce enioyned to K.Edgar by Dunſtane.

It followeth then in the ſtory of Oſborne, that whē the 8. yeres of the kings penance were expired: Dunſtan calling together all the pieres of the Realme, with Biſhops, Abbots, and other eccleſiaſticall degrees of the Clergy, in the publike ſight of all the multitude, ſet the crowne vpon the kings head at Bathe, which was the 31. yeare of hys age, and the 13. yeare of his raigne, ſo that he raigned only but 3. yeares crowned king. All the other yeares beſides, Dunſtan belike ruled the land as he liſted. Furthermore, as touching the ſōne of the ſayd Elfled, thus the ſtory writeth: Puerum quoq; ex peccatrice quondam progenitum, ſacro fonte regeneratum lauauit, & aptato illi nomine Edwardo in filium ſibi adoptauit. i. The child alſo, which was gotten of the harlot, he baptiſed in the holy fountaine of regeneration, and ſo geuing his name to bee called Edward, did adopt him to be his ſonne, &c. Ex Oſberno.

K. Edward raygned but three yeares crowned king.

Elflede proued a Nūne and Edward her ſonne a baſtard.

By the which narration of Oſberne, agreing alſo with the ſtory of the Saxon booke aboue mentioned, is conuinced a double vntruth or error, eyther negligently ouerſeen or of purpoſe diſſembled in our latter Monkiſh ſtorywriters, as in Malmeſbury, Math. Pariſ. Math. Weſtm. & other mo. Who to conceale the fault of king Edgar, or to beare with Dunſtans fact, in ſetting vp Edward for the maintenance of their monkiſh order, firſt doe falſly affirme, that Editha the daughter of Wlfride was borne after Edward, & that for her this penance was enioyned to king Edgar, which neither is, nor can be ſo, as in proceſſe hereafter (the Lorde willing) ſhall appeare.

Errours in Malmeſbery, and certayne other Monkes ſtoryes.

The 1. error. The kinges penaunce not enioyned for Edith but for Edward.

Secondly, they are deceiued in this, that they affirme king Edgar to haue two wiues, and that Elfleda the mother of Edward was not a profeſſed Nunne in deede, but diſſembled ſo to be, to auoid the violēce of the king: whereas in deede the truth of the ſtory both geueth her to bee a Nunne, and her ſonne to be baſe, and ſhe her ſelfe neuer to be maried vnto the king.

The 2. error. Elflede the mother of Edward proued to be a profeſſed Nunne.

Now, forasmuch as we haue hitherto entred mention of Elfleda and Editha, alſo of Wlfrede and Dunſtane, here would not be let paſſe to ſpeake ſomething of their lying miracles, falſly forged to the great ſeductiō of chriſten people by ſuperſtitious Monkes, who cared not what fables and lyes they brought into the church, ſo they might haue the vantage of poore mens purſes and oblations. And firſt here commeth in the fabulous myracles wrought at the tombe of Elfleda the kings concubine, which W. Malmeſb. in theſe verſes expreſſeth:

The lying myracles of Elflede, Dunſtane and Editha reproued.

Nam nonnullis paſſa annis morborum moleſtiam,
Defecatam & excoctam Deo dedit animam.
Functas ergo vitæ fato beatas exuuias.
Infinitis clemens ſignis illuſtrauit Deitas.
Inopes viſus & auditus ſi adorant tumulum.
Sanitati reſtituti probant ſanctæ meritum.
Rectum greſſum refert domum, qui acceſſit loripes.
Mente captus redit ſanus, boni ſenſus locuples.

Idolatrous worſhipping the tumbe of Alflede.

The Engliſh of which verſes is needeleſſe here to bee recited. Briefly, the effect is this: That both the blynde, deafe, halte, and ſuch as be mad, receiue their health agayne, if they worſhip the tombe of this Elfleda, &c.

The like fainings and monſtrous miracles we reade alſo in chronicles of doting Dunſtane, drowned in all ſuperſtition, if he were not alſo a wicked ſorcerer: Firſt, how he beyng yet a boy, chaſed away the deuil, ſet about with a great company of dogs, and how the Angels did open the church dore for him to enter. Then how the Lute or Harpe hanging vpon the wall, did ſing or play without any finger theſe wordes: Gaudent in coelis animæ ſanctorum, qui Chriſti veſtigia ſunt ſequuti, & qui pro eius amore ſanguinem ſuum fuderunt: ideo cum Chriſto regnabunt in æternum. Item where a certayne great beame or maiſterpoſt was moued out of the place: he with making the ſigne of a Croſſe, ſet it in right frame agayne. Moreouer, how the ſayd Dunſtane being tempted vpon a tyme of the deuil with the cogitation

The idle phantaſies and forged myracles of Dunſtane.

A doubt whether Dunſtane was a ſorcerer.

Dunſtane a poſt-ſetter.

gitation of women, caught the deuill by the noſe with a whote paire of tongs, and helde him faſt. Item, how ofte heauenly ſpirits appeared to him, and vſed to talke with him familiarly. Item, how he propheſied of the birth of king Edgar, of the death of king Egelred, of the death of Editha, and of Ethelwood biſhop of Wincheſter. Alſo how our Lady with her fellowes appeared viſibly to hym, ſinging this ſong: Cantemus Domino ſociæ, cantemus honorem. Dulcis amor Chriſti perſonet ore pio. Agayne, how the Angels appeared to him, ſinging the Hymne called Kyrie Rex ſplendens, &c. And yet theſe prodigious fantaſies with other mo, are written of him in Chronicles, and haue bene beleued in Churches.

Dunſtane caught the deuill by the noſe with an hote payre of tonges. Our Lady appeareth to Dunſtane. What maruell if certayn bookes and epiſtles be falſly intituled to the Doctours whē the papiſtes ſhame not to aſcribe other mens verſes alſo to the virgin Mary her ſelfe.

Among many other falſe and lying miracles, forged in this corrupt tyme of Monkery, the fabulous or rather filthy legēd of Editha were not to be ouerpaſſed, if for ſhame and honeſty it might well be recited. But to caſt the dyrt of theſe Pope holy monkes in their owne face, which ſo impudently haue abuſed the church of Chriſt, and ſimplicitie of the people with their vngratious vanities, let vs ſee what this miracle is, & how honeſtly it is told. Certayne yeres after the death of Editha, ſaith Will. of Malmeſ. which yeres Capgraue in his new Legend reckoneth to be thirtene, the ſaid Editha & alſo S. Denys holding her by the hand, appeared to Dunſtan in a viſion, willing and requiring him that the body of Editha in the church of Wilton, ſhould be taken vp & ſhrined, to the entent it might be honored here in earth of her ſeruants, according as it is worſhipped of her ſpouſe in heauen. Dunſtan vpon this, comming from Saliſbury to Wilton, where Editha was interred, commaunded her body to be taken vp with much honor & ſolemnitie. Who there in opening her tombe (as both Malmeſ. and Capgraue with ſhame enough recorde) found all the whole body of this Editha cōſumed to earth, ſaue only her thombe, her belly, & the part vnder the belly. Wherof the ſaid Editha expounding the meaning, declared that her thombe remained ſound, for the much croſſing ſhe vſed with the ſame. The other partes were incorrupted for a teſtimony of her abſtinence, and integritie, &c. Ex Malmeſ. & Capgrauo. What Sathan hath ſo enuied the true ſinceritie of chriſtian faith and doctrine, ſo to contaminate the ſame with ſuch impudent tales, ſuch filthy vanities, & Idolatrous fantaſies as this? Such Monkes with theyr deteſtable houſes, where Chriſtes people were ſo abhominably abuſed and ſeduced to worſhip dead carcaſes of men and women, whether they deſerued not to bee raſed, and pluckt downe to the ground, let all chaſte Readers iudge. But of theſe matters enough and to much.

A foule filthy Monkiſh myracle in the ſtory of Editha. An other dreame of Dunſtane.

King Edward called the Martyr.

An. 975.

The ſtory of king Edward.

Ex Simone Durham.

After the death of Edgar no ſmal trouble aroſe amōgſt the Lordes and Biſhops for ſucceſſion of the crowne: the principall cauſe wherof roſe vpon this occaſion, as by the ſtory of Symon of Durham, and Roger Houeden, is declared. Immediately after the deceaſe of the king, Alferus Duke of Mercia, and many other nobles, which held with Egelrede or Ethelrede the onely right heyre and lawfull ſonne of Edgar, miſliking the placing and intrudyng of Monkes into churches, & the thruſting out of the ſeculare Prieſtes, with their wiues and children out of their auncient poſſeſſions, expelled the Abbots and Monkes, and brought in againe the foreſayd prieſtes with theyr wyues. Againſt whom, certayne other there were on the contrary part, that made reſiſtance, as Ethelwine Duke of Eaſtangles, Elfwoldus his brother, and the Erle Brithnothus, ſaying in a councell togither aſſembled, that they would neuer ſuffer the religious Monkes to be expulſed and driuen out of the Realme, which held vp all Religion in the land, and therupon eftſones leuied an army, whereby to defend by force the Monaſteries, ſuch as were within the precinct of Eaſtanglia.

Contention amongſt the Lordes about the putting in of Monkes.

In this hurly burly amongſt the Lordes about the placing of Monkes and putting out of Prieſts, roſe alſo the contention about the crowne, who ſhould be their king: the biſhops and ſuch lordes as fauoured the Monkes, ſeeking to aduance ſuch a king as they knew would inclyne to their ſide, ſo that the lordes thus deuided, ſome of them would haue Edward, and ſome conſented vpon Egelred the lawfull ſonne. Then Dunſtane Archb. of Cant. & Oſwold Archb. of Yorke, with other their fellowbiſhops, Abbots, and diuers other Lordes and Dukes aſſembled in a councell together. In the which councell Dunſtan cōmyng in with his croſſe in his hand, & bringyng Edward before the Lords, ſo perſwaded them that in the ende Edward by Dunſtans meanes was elected, conſecrated, and annointed for theyr kyng.

Contention amongſt the Lordes for chuſing the king.

Edward the baſtarde made K. and the right heyre put backe.

And thus haſt thou (good Reader) the very truth of this ſtory, according to the writing of authors of moſt antiquitie which liued nereſt to that age, as Oſberne and others, which Oſberne liuyng in the dayes of William Conquerour, wrote this ſtory of Dunſtan through the motiō of Lanfrancus, and alledgeth or rather tranſlateth the ſame out of ſuch Saxon ſtories as were writtē before his tyme. Beſides which Oſberne, we haue alſo for witneſſe hereof, Nic. Trinet, in his Engliſh ſtory written in French, and alſo Ioannes Pariſ, in his French ſtory written in the Latine tong, where he plainly calleth Edward, non legitimum filium, that is, no lawfull ſonne. Whereunto adde moreouer the teſtimony of Vincentius and Antoninus, who in playne termes likewyſe report the ſame.

Ex Oſberno. Nic. Triuet. Ioan. Pariſ. Vincentio. Antonino.

Nowe hauing layd the foundation for the truth and ground of this matter, let vs come to examine how truely our latter writers do ſay, which write that Editha, and not Edward was the child for whom Dunſtane enioined to the king 7. yeares penaunce, and alſo how truely they report Edward to be a lawfull heyre, and Elflede to bee a lawfull wyfe to king Edgar.

Editha proued not to be the childe for whom King Edgar was enioyned penance.

For firſt touching Editha, this is confeſſed by the ſayd writers themſelues, that ſhe was of good yeares, at what tyme Edgar her father was enioyned his penaunce. After the which ſeuen yeares of his penaunce expyred, he lyued at the moſt but iij. yeares and a halfe. Which ſeuen yeares and 3. yeares and a halfe, make in all but x. yeres & a halfe. But now the ſaid authors themſelues do graunt, that ſhe was made Abbas by her father, he beyng then alyue. And how can this then ſtand with her Legend, which ſayth that ſhe was not leſſe then 15. yeares of age? By which accompt it muſt needes fall out, that ſhe could not be ſo little as v. yeres old, before the birth of that chyld for whom the kyng did penaunce.

And thus much touching Editha. Now in like maner, to conſider of the tyme of Edward. Firſt, this by all writers is graunted, that he was ſlayne in the 15. yeare of his age. Which yeares do well agree to that chyld which king Edgar begate in baſtardy, & for the which he did hys penance. For the more euidence whereof, let vs come to the ſupputation of yeares in this ſort.

The yeares of Editha and Edward, caſt by the ſupputation of Legendes and ſtories.

Firſt, the penaunce of the king, after the byrth of this child, laſted 7. yeres. Then the king after the ſame lyued 3. yeres & a halfe. After whoſe death Edward raigned other 3. yeres and a half, which in all make the full ſumme of 14. yeres. About the count of which age, the ſaid Edward goyng on his 15. yeres, by their owne reckoning was ſlaine.

And thus haue ye by manifeſt demonſtration proued by the right caſting of the yeres, after their owne graunt & reckoning, that Editha daughter of Wilfride in no caſe can be the child which was borne after Edward, & for whom the king was enioyned penance, but that Edward rather was borne after Editha, and was the childe for whom the penance was enioined, contrary to the opinion commonly receiued in the church, which for ignorance of ẏ ſtory hath hetherto holden Edward to be an holy Martyr, and right heyre vnto the crowne. Which error and opinion, how it firſt ſprang and by whom, albeit it pertaine not to my ſtory to diſcuſſe, yet were it no hard matter to coniecture.

King Edward called martir proued to be a baſtard.

Firſt, after that Dunſtane and Oſwolde, wyth other Biſhops, Abbots, and certayne Lordes & Dukes of that faction, for the maintenaunce of Monkery, had aduaunced Edward to be king againſt Queene Alfrith mother of Ethelred, & Alferus duke of Mercia, and certaine other Nobles, which held with the contrary ſide of the Prieſtes agaynſt the Monkes. In proceſſe of tyme the monkes that came after to write ſtories, perceiuing Dunſtane to be reputed in the Church of Rome for an holy Saint, and the ſayd king Edward for an holy Martyr, and partly alſo to bolſter vp their owne religion of Monkery ſo muche as they could: to the intent therfore they would ſaue the credite both of Dunſtane and of the kyng, and eſpecially bearing fauour to their owne religion, and partly that the reputation of the church of Rome ſhould not be diſteined by opening ỹ truth of this matter, either did not ſee, or would not confeſſe herein what they knew, but rather thought beſt to blanch the ſtory, and colourably to hide the ſimple truth thereof, making the people falſly beleue, that Elfleda the mother of Edward was wife to king Edgar, and Edward to be lawfully borne, and alſo that Editha was born after Edward, & to be the child for which the king was enioyned penance. All which is falſe and cõtrary both to the order of tyme aboue declared, and alſo to the plaine wordes of Malmeſbury, which ſpeaking of king Edgars laſt concubine, ſayth in plaine wordes: Dilexit vnicè, integram lecto vni deferens fidem, quoad legitimam vxorem accepit Elſthridé, filiam Ordgari. That is, he had a concubine whom he loued entirely, keping true faith of his bed to her alone, vntil the tyme he maried for his lawfull wife Elfride the daughter of duke Ordgare, &c. wherby we haue to vnderſtand that whatſoeuer concubine this was which Malmeſbury ſpeaketh off, certaine it is, that Edgar liued in whoredome till tyme he maried his lawfull wyfe. Furthermore, and finally to conclude, beſide theſe arguments and allegations aboue recited, let this alſo be perpended, how the ſaid Dunſtan with his complices, after the killing of king Edward, leauing the right heyre of the crowne (which was Ethelred) went about, as Capgraue and their owne Legend cõfeſſeth, to ſet vp Editha the other baſtarde to poſſeſſe the crowne, but that ſhe more wiſe then her brother Edward, refuſed the ſame. wherby what is to be thought of the doyngs of Dunſtane, and what ſhould be the cauſe why hee preferred both Edward and Editha to the crowne rather then the lawfull heyre, I leaue to all indifferent Readers therof to iudge.

Malmeſb. in lib. de Regibus.

Dunſtane ſuborneth Editha the baſtard to take the crowne from the right heyre.

Ex Capgrauo in Vita ſancta Editha.

After that Dunſtane and his felowes had thus ſet vp Edward for their king, they were now where they would be, ſuppoſing all to be ſure on their ſide, and that they had eſtabliſhed the kingdom of Monkery for euer, through the helpe of the young king, and the Duke of Eaſtangles, and certaine other nobles whom they had drawn to their part. Howbeit this matter paſſed not ſo wel with them, as they hoped. For ſhortly after the coronation of this yong king, Alferus duke of Mercia, who folowed much the deedes of the Queene with other great men, ſtoutly ſtanding on the contrary ſide, droue out the Monkes from the Cathedrall churches, which king Edgar before had ſet in, and reſtored agayne the Prieſts (as Ranulphus ſayth) with their concubines: but in the hiſtorie of the Librarie of Iornall, I find it plainly expreſſed with their wiues. The wordes of the very author be theſe: Alferus princeps Merciorum, cæteriq; plures, eiectis monachis de magnis monaſterijs, quos rex Edgarus nuper inſtituerat, clericos cum vxoribus reduxerunt: That is, Alferus duke of Mercia, with other great men mo, droue out the Monkes from the great monaſteries, whom king Edgar had there ſet in before, & reſtored againe the prieſts with their wyues.

Duke Alpherus.

Prieſtes with their wiues reſtored.

Hiſtoria Iornalenſis in Vita Edgari.

Wherby it doth euidently appeare, that prieſts in thoſe dayes were maried and had their lawfull wiues. The like before that in king Inas tyme is plaine, that Biſhops then had wiues and children, as appeareth by the words of the lawe then ſet forth, extant in the hiſtory of the ſaid Iornalenſis, which be theſe: Si quis filiolum alterius occidat vel patrinum, ſit ſimile cognationi, & creſcat emendatio ſecundum Weram eius Regi, ſicut cognationi. Si de parentela ſit qui occidit eum, tunc excedat emendatio patrini, ſicut manbota Domini. Si Epiſcopi filiolus ſit, ſit dimidium hoc, &c. And thus much by the way for Prieſtes wyues and their children.

Now to the purpoſe agayne of our matter, which is to declare how the Duke and Nobles of England expulſed the Monkes out of the Monaſteries after the death of kyng Edgar. Whereof let vs heare what the Monkiſh ſtory of the Abbey of Crouland recordeth. Monachis de quibuſdam Monaſterijs eiectis, clerici ſunt introducti, qui ſtatim monaſteriorum maneria ducibus terræ diſtribuebant, vt ſic in ſuas partes obligati, eos contra monachos defenſarent. Tunc de monaſterio Eueſhamenſi, monachis expulſis, clerici fuerant introducti. Terræq; tyranni de terris Eccleſiæ præmiati ſunt, quibus Regina nouercali nequitia, ſtans cum clericis in regis opprobrium, fauebat. Cum monachis autem Rex, & ſancti Epiſcopi perſiſtebant. Sed tyranni fulti Reginæ fauore & potentia, ſuper monachos triumphabant. Multus inde tumultus in omni angulo Angliæ factus eſt. Ex Chronico Ingulphi Abbatis de Crouland, &c. That is, The Monkes beyng expelled out of certayne Monaſteries, the Clarkes agayne were brought in, who diſtributed the Manors or Fermes of the ſayde Monaſteries, to the Dukes and Lordes of the land, that they beyng obliged to them ſhould defẽd them againſt the Monkes. And ſo were the monkes of Eueſham thruſt out and the ſeculare Clarkes placed, & the landes of the church giuen to the Lordes, with whom the Queene, the Kings ſtepmother holding the ſame time, toke part alſo with the ſayd Clerkes againſt the king. On the contrary part ſtood the king & the holy biſhops, taking part with the monkes. Howbeit, the lordes & peeres of the Realme ſtaying vpon the fauour and power of the Queene, triumphed ouer the monkes, &c.

Ex Chronico Ingulphi Abbatis de Crowland.

Great bu nes in the land about placing Monkes and diſplacing Prieſtes.

Thus as much ado there was through all quarters of the realme, about the matter among the Lordes, ſo aroſe no leſſe contention betwene the prieſts & monkes of England. The Prieſtes complaynyng to the Kyng and Dunſtane, layd for themſelues that it was vncomely, vncharitable, yea and vnnaturall, to put out an old knowen dweller for a new vnknowen: and that God was not pleaſed, that to be taken from the aunceient poſſeſſor which by God was geuen him, neither that it could be to any good man accepted, to ſuffer any ſuch iniury to be done, leaſt peraduenture the ſame thing wherein he was preiudiciall to an other, might after reuert & redound vpon himſelf at length. The monkes on the other ſide, layd for their part, ỹ Chriſt allowed neither the old dweller, nor the new commer, nor yet looked vpon the perſon, but who ſo would take ỹ croſſe of penaunce vpon him, and follow Chriſt in vertuous liuing, ſhould be his diſciple.

The obiection of prieſts agaynſt the Monkes.

The anſwere of Monkes agaynſt the Prieſtes.

These & ſuch other were the allegations of the monkes. But whether a monkes coule or a wiueles life, make a ſufficient title to enter into other mens poſſeſſiõs or no, I referre it to the iudgemẽt of the godly. The troublous cares in mariage, the neceſſary prouiſion for houſe keepyng, the vertuous bringing vp of children, the daily helping of pouertie and bearing of publike charges, with other manifold perturbations and combraunces daily incident to the ſtate of matrimony, might rather appeare to godly wyſe men, to come nearer to the right croſſe of penance, then the eaſie & loytring idlenes of monkery. In the end, vpõ this controuerſie was holden a Councell of Biſhops, & other of ỹ Clergy. Firſt, at Reading or at Wincheſter as Guliel. ſaith, where the greater part both of the nobles & commõs iudged the prieſtes to haue great wrong, and ſought by all meanes poſſible, to bring thẽ agayne to their old poſſeſſions and dignities. Iornalenſis here maketh rehearſall of an Image of the Crucifixe, or a roode ſtanding vpon the frater wall, where the Councell was holden. To this roode Dunſtane requireth them all to pray, beyng belike not ignorant of ſome ſpiritual prouiſiõ before hand. In the middeſt of their prayer the roode, or els ſome blind monke behynd him in a trunke through the wall, is reported to ſpeak theſe words: Abſit hoc vt fiat, abſit hoc vt fiat: iudicaſtis benè, mutaretis non benè. In remembraunce whereof, theſe verſes were written vnder the roodes feete.

Of this Dunſtanicall, or rather Satanical oracle, Henricus maketh no mention, nor Ranulphus, nor yet Houedenus, nor Fabian in their hiſtories. Gulielmus in his booke de Regibus, reporteth it but by hearſay, in theſe wordes ſaying: Aliæ literæ docent, &c. Wherfore the leſſe it ſeemeth to be of credite. Albeit if it were of credible truth, yet it proueth in this matter nothing els, but Dunſtan to be a Sorcerer, as Polydorus Virgilius, alſo himſelfe ſeemeth to ſmell ſomething in this matter.

Here lacked a Thomas Cromwell to try out falſe iugling.

Notwithſtanding for all this, yet the ſtrife ceaſed not. In ſo much that a new aſſembly of the Clergy and other, was appointed after at a place called the ſtreete of Calue, where the Councell was kept in an vpper lofte. In this Councell many grieuous complaints were obiected (as Malmeſburienſis ſaith) againſt Dunſtane. But yet he kept his opinion, and would not remoue from that which hee began to maintaine. And while they were there in great contention and argument which way ſhould be admitted and allowed, (if it be true that in the ſtories is written) ſodenly the ioyſes of the loft failed, & the people with the nobles fell downe, ſo that certaine were ſlaine, & many hurt. But Dunſtane (they ſay onely, ſtanding vpon a poaſt of the ſollar, which remained vnbroken) eſcaped without dãger. Which thing, whether it ſo happened to portend before the ruine of the Realme and of the nobles (as Henry Hunting. doth expoũd it) which after enſued by the Danes, or whether it was ſo wrought by Dunſtanes ſorcerie (as was not vnpoſſible) or whether it were a thing but fained of the monkiſh writers, and not true, all this I leaue to the Readers, to thinke therein what them liketh. The ſtories ſay further, that vpon this the matter ceaſed, and Dũſtan had all his will.

The horrible wickednes of the Queene the mother.

after the ſame, that king Edward, whom the writers deſcribe to be a vertuous and a meeke prince, much pitifull & beneficiall to the poore, about the iiij. yeare of hys raigne, came vpon a ſeaſon from hunting in the foreſt alone, without the company of his ſeruaunts, to the place in the weſt countrey, where Alfrith his mother, with her ſonne Egelred did lye. when the Queene the mother was warned of his comming by her men, anone ſhe calleth a ſeruaunt of hers, which was of her ſpeciall truſt, opening to hym all her conceiued counſaile, & ſhewyng him all pointes how & what to do for the accompliſhing of her wicked purpoſe. which thing ſo done, ſhe made towards the king, and receaued him with all curteſie, deſiring him to tary yͤ night. But he in like curteſie excuſed himſelfe, and for ſpeede deſired to ſee his brother, and to drinke, vpõ his horſe ſitting, the which was ſhortly brought.

K. Edward trayterouſly murdered by hys ſtepmother and her ſeruant.

K. Edward found dead, and buried, not knowne to be king. Coref Caſtle.

The body of king Edward after three yeares honorably taken vp and tranſlated to Shafteſbury.

Two Nunneries founded vpon murther.

And while the cup was at his mouth, the ſeruaunt of the Queene (before informed) ſtrake him in the body with a long two edged dagger. After the which ſtroke the king tooke the horſe with the ſpurres, and ran toward the way, where he ſuppoſed to meete with his company. But he bled ſo ſore, that with faintnes he fell from hys horſe, hys one foote beyng in the ſtyrrup. By reaſon whereof, he was drawen of his horſe ouer fieldes and landes, till he came to a place named Coryſgate, where he was found dead. And for that, neither the maner of his death, nor yet he himſelfe, for the king was knowen, was buried vnhonourably at the towne of Warham, where the body remayned yͤ ſpace of iij. yeares, and then after was taken vp by Duke Alfere aboue mentioned, and with pompe and honor accordingly, was remoued to the Minſter of Shafteſbury, and there beſtowed in the place called Edwardſtow. Many tales runne (moe perchaunce then be true) concerning the finding and taking vp of his body, which our moſt common hiſtories aſcribe to myracles and great wonders, wrought about the place where the king was buried. As firſt how a poore woman borne blynde, receyued her ſight by the meanes of S. Edward, there where he did lye. Alſo how a piller of fire from heauen, deſcended ouer the place of his buriall. Then how the foreſaid Queene Alfrith taking her horſe to goe to the place, was ſtopped by the way, that neither her horſe could be driuen by any meanes, nor ſhe her ſelfe on foote was able to approch neare to the place where the corpes of S. Edward was. Furthermore, how the ſayd Queene in repentaunce of her facte, afterward builded two Nunneries, one at Ameſbury by Saliſbury, the other at Werewell, where ſhe kept her ſelfe in continuall repentaunce all the dayes of her lyfe. And thus as ye haue heard, was this vertuous yong king Edward murthered when he had raigned almoſt iiij. yeares, leauing no iſſue behynd him, whereby the rule of the land fell to Egelredus his brother.

Pope Iohn xiii. a wicked Pope.

Pope Iohn. xiii. depoſed.

In the order and courſe of the Romain Biſhops, mention was made laſt of Agapetus the ſecond. After whome next ſucceded Pope Iohn xiij. of whom Dunſtane Archbiſhop of Canterbury, receiued his palle, as in the ſtory of King Edgar is before mynded. This Pope is noted to be very wicked and infamous, repleate from his firſt bringing vp with abhominable vices: a whoremaiſter, an adulterer, inceſtuous, libidinous, a gameſter, an extorcioner periured, a fighter, a murtherer, cruell, and tyrannous. Of his Cardinals, ſome he put out their eyes, from ſome he cut of their tongues, ſome their fingers, ſome their noſes, &c. In a generall councell before the Emperour Otho, the firſt of that name (who was the firſt Emperour of the Germaines) after the Empire was tranſlated out of Fraunce to Germany by Pope Agapetus (as is aboue hiſtoried) theſe obiections were articulate agaynſt hym. Firſt, that he neuer ſayd hys ſeruice, that in ſaying hys Maſſe he did not communicate, that he ordained Deacons in a ſtable, that he committed inceſt with two of hys ſiſters, that playing at dice, he called for the Deuill to helpe, that for money he made boyes Biſhops, that he defloured Virgins and ſtrangers, that of the palaice of Laterane he made a Stewes, that he lay with Stephana his fathers concubine, likewiſe with Ramera and with Anna and her neeſe, that he put out the eyes of the biſhop Benedict, that he cauſed houſes to be ſet on fire, that he brake open houſes, that he dranke to the deuill, that he neuer croſſed himſelfe, &c. For the which cauſes (and worthily) he was depoſed by the conſent of the Emperour with the Prelates, and Pope Leo was ſubſtitute in his place. But after hys departing (thorough the harlots of Rome and their great promiſes) the ſaid Pope Iohn was reſtored agayne to his place, and Leo (ſet vp by the Emperour) was depoſed. At length about the tenth yere of the Popedome of this Iohn he beyng found without the citie with another mãs wife, was ſo wounded of her huſband, that within viij. daies after he dyed.

The Emperour hearing this, with all ſpeede returned with his army agayne to Rome, who after execution done vpon the authors and chief doers of that fact, among other committed the foreſayd Petrus, to the Popes arbitrement. whom [illegible] cauſed firſt to be ſtript naked, then his beard beyng ſhauen, to be hanged by the haire a whole day together, after that to be ſet vpon an Aſſe (his face turned backward, and his hands bound vnder the aſſes tail) and ſo to be led through the Citie, that all men might ſee him: that done, to be ſcourged with rods, and ſo baniſhed the Citie. KIng Edward thus being murthered as is aforeſayd, the crowne fell next to Egelrede his yonger brother, & ſonne to king Edgar by the foreſayd Queene Alfrith, as we haue declared. This Egelred had a long raigne geuen of God, which dured the terme of 38. yeares, but very vnfortunate, and full of great miſeries. And he himſelf (by the hiſtories) ſeemeth to be a Prince, not of the greateſt courage to gouerne a common wealth. Our Engliſh ſtories writing of him, thus report of his raigne: That in the beginning, it was vngracious, wretched in the middle, and hatefull in the latter end. Of this Egelred it is read, when Dunſtane the Archbiſhop ſhould chriſten him, as hee dyd hold him ouer the Fonte, ſomething there happened, that pleaſed not Dunſtan: whereupon he ſware, per ſanctā Mariam, iſte ignauus homo erit. i. By the mother of Chriſt he will be a Prince vntoward and cowardlike, Chron. de Croulād. I finde in William of Malmeſbury, Lib. 2. de Regi. That this Egelred beyng of the age of x. yeares, when he heard hys brother Edward to be ſlayne, made ſuche ſorow & weping for him, that his mother falling therewith in a rage, tooke waxe candles (hauing nothing els at hand) wherwith ſhe ſcourged him ſo ſore (well neare till he ſwounded) that after the ſame, he could neuer abide any waxe candles to burne before him. After this, about the yeare of our Lord, 981. (the day of his coronation beyng appoynted by the Queene, the mother, and the nobles) Dunſtan the Archb. of Cant. (who firſt refuſed ſo to doe) with Oſwald Archb. of Yorke, were enforced to crowne the king. And ſo they did at Kingſtō. In doing wherof, the report of ſtories go, that the ſaid Dunſtane ſhould ſay, thus propheſieng vnto the king: that for ſo much as he came to the kingdome by the death of his brother, and through the conſpiracie of the wicked conſpirators and other Engliſhmen: they ſhould not be without bloudſheding and ſword, till there came a people of an vnknowen tongue, and ſhould bring them into thraldome, neither ſhould that treſpaſſe be clenſed without long vengeaunce, &c.

In the Chronicles of Crouland, I finde theſe wordes, Quoniam aſcendiſti ad thronum tuum, per mortem fratris tui, quem occidit mater tua, propterea audi verbum Domini, hoc dicit Dominus. Nō deficiet gladius de domo tua, ſæuiens in te omnibus diebus vitæ tuæ, & interficiens de ſemine tuo, & de gente tua, vſque dum regnum tuum transferatur in regnum alienum: Cuius ritum & linguam gens tua non nouit, nec expiabitur, niſi longa vindicta, & multa ſāguinis effuſione peccatum matris tuę, & peccatum virorum peſſimorum, qui conſenſerunt conſilio eius nequam, vt mitterent manum in Chriſtum Domini, ad effundendum ſanguinem innocentem. The Danes recourſe to England.

London conſumed with fire.

The king warred againſt the Byſhop of Rocheſter.

An. 990.

The bloudy flixe and hote feuers reigned in this land.

Not long after the coronation of this king, a cloud was ſeene throughout the land, which appeared the one halfe like bloud, and the other halfe like fire. And changed after into ſondry colours and vaniſhed at the laſt in the morning. Shortly after the appearaunce of this cloud, in the iij. yeare of his raigne, the Danes arriuing in ſondry places of the land, firſt ſpoyled Southhampton, either ſlaying the inhabitants, or leading them captiue away. Frō thence they went to the Iſle of Thanet, then they inuaded Cheſter, from thence they proceeded to Cornwall and Deuonſhire, & ſo to Suſſex: where, in thoſe coaſtes they did much harme, and ſo retired to their ſhips agayne. Roger Houeden writing hereof, ſayth: that London, the ſame tyme (or as Fabian ſayth) a great part of London, was conſumed with fire. About this tyme fell a variance betwene the foreſayd Egelred, and the biſhop of Rocheſter: In ſo much, that he made warre againſt him, and beſieged the Citie. And notwithſtāding that Dunſtan required the king, ſending him admoniſhment to geue ouer, for the ſake of S. Andrew, yet continued he his ſiege, till the biſhop offred him an hundreth pounds of gold, which he receaued, and ſo departed. The Danes ſeing the diſcord that then was in the realme, and ſpecially the hatred of the ſubiectes againſt the kyng: roſe againe, and did great harme in diuers places of England: In ſo much, that the king was glad to graunt them great ſummes of mony for peace to be had. For the aſſurāce of which peace, Analeffe captaine of the Danes, became a chriſten man, and ſo returned home to his countrey, & did no more harme. Beſides theſe miſeries before recited, a ſore ſicknes of the bloudy flixe, and hote feuers fell among the people, wherof many died, with a like morraine alſo among the beaſtes. Moreouer, for lacke of iuſtice, many thieues, rioters and bribers were in the land, with much miſerie and miſchiefe.

The death of Dunſtane. Ethelgarus, Elfricus, Siricus, Elphegus, Archb. of Canterb.

About the xi. yeare (ſome ſay the ix. yeare) of this kings raigne, died Dunſtan. After whom ſucceded Ethelgarus, or as Iornalenſis writeth, Stilgarus. After him Elfricus, as affirmeth Guliel. lib. 1. de pontif. But as Polydorus ſayth, Siricius. After him Elfricus came, but Siritius after the mynd of William, Lib. 1. But Polydorus ſayth Aluritius, thē Elphegus, &c.

An. 995.

The Byſhops ſea of Dyrham.

About the ſame tyme in the yeare of our Lord, 995. Aldunus Biſhop, tranſlated the body of S. Cuthbert from Cheſter (which firſt was in a Northren Iland thē at Rocheſter) to Durelme or Dunolme. wherupon the biſhops ſea of Dureſme firſt began.

London beſieged of the Danes.

The Danes ſpoyled the land.

Great tribute leuied of the Engliſhmen. Dane gelt.

Not long after the death of Dunſtane, the Danes agayne entred England, in many and ſondry places of the land: In ſuch ſorte, that the kyng was to ſeeke, to which coaſt he ſhould go firſt to withſtand his enemies. And in concluſion, for the auoyding of more harme, he was compelled to appeaſe them with great ſummes of mony. But when that money was ſpent, they fell to new robbyng of the people, and aſſailing the land in diuers places, not only about the countrey of Northumberland, but alſo beſieged the Citie of London at the laſt. But being frō thence repulſed by the manhood of the Londoners, they ſtrayd to other countreys adioyning, as to Eſſex, Kent, Suſſex, and Hampſhire, burnyng and killing where ſo euer they wēt, ſo that for lacke of a good head or gouernour, many things in the land periſhed. For the king gaue himſelfe to the vice of lecherie, and polling of his ſubiects, and diſinherited mē of their poſſeſſions, and cauſed them to redeeme the ſame agayne with great ſummes of money, for he payed great tribute to the Danes yerely, which was called Danegelt. which tribute ſo increaſed, that from the firſt tribute of x. M. poūd, it was brought at laſt in proceſſe of v. or vj. yere, to xl. M. pound. The which yearely (during to the comming of S. Edward, and after) was leuied of the ſubiects of this land.

The ſorrowfull affliction of the Engliſh nation.

What diſſention and diſcorde doth amōg the nobles in a realme.

To this ſorow moreouer, was ioyned hunger & penury among the commōs: in ſo much that euery one of thē was conſtrained to plucke & ſteale from other. So that, what for the pillage of the Danes, and what by inward thieues and bribers, this land was brought into great affliction. Albeit, the greateſt cauſe of this affliction (as to me appeareth) is not ſo much to bee imputed to the kyng, as to the diſſention among the Lordes themſelues, who thē did not agree one with another. But when they aſſembled in conſultation together, eyther they did draw diuers ways, or if any thing were agreed, vpon any matter of peace betwene the parties, ſoone it was broken againe: or els if any good thing were deuiſed for the preiudice of ẏ enemy, anone the Danes were warned therof by ſome of the ſame counſaile. Of whom, the chiefe doers were Edrike Duke of Mercia, and Alfrike the Admirall or captain of the ſhips, who betrayed the kings nauy to the Danes. wherefore the kyng apprehending Alfagarus ſonne of the ſaid Alfrike, put out his eyes, and ſo did he after to the two ſonnes of Duke Edrike in like maner.

The pride and wretchednes of the Danes toward the Engliſhmen.

Lord Dane.

Lurdaine.

The Danes thus preuaylyng more and more ouer the engliſh men, grew in ſuch pride & preſumption: that when they by ſtrength, cauſed the huſbandmen to eare and ſowe the land, and to do all other vile labour belongyng to the houſe, they would ſitte at home, holding the wiſe at theyr pleaſure, with daughter and ſeruaunt. And when the huſbandman came home, he ſhould ſcantly haue of his own, as his ſeruants had, ſo that the Dane had all at his will & fill, faring of the beſt, when the owner ſcantly had his fill of the worſt. Thus the common people beyng of them oppreſſed, were in ſuch feare and dread, that not onely they were conſtrained to ſuffer them in their doings, but alſo glad to pleaſe them, & called euery one of them in the houſe where they had rule, Lord Dane. which worde after (in proceſſe of tyme, when the Danes were voyded) was for deſpite of the Danes turned of the engliſh men to a name of opprobry, that when one Engliſh man would rebuke an other, he would for the more part call him Lurdaine.

King Egelred marieth Emma the Dukes daughter of Normandy.

Richard Duke of Normandy.

The Danes by ſecret cōmiſsion ſlayne in euery towne of England.

And thus hitherto (through the aſſiſtaunce of Chriſt) we haue brought this hiſtory to the yere of our lord, 1000. During now & continuing theſe great miſeries vpon this Engliſh natiō, the land being brought into great ruine by the grieuous tribute of the Danes, and alſo by ſuſtainyng the manifold villanies and iniuries, as wel by them as by other oppreſſions within the realm. This yere which was the yeare of our ſauiour 1000. This Egelred through the counſail of certain his familiars about him, in the 21. yeare of his raigne, began a matter which was occaſion eyther geuen by the one, or taken by the other, of a new plague to enſue vpon the Saxōs, who had driuen out the Britaines before. That was in ioyning with the Normans in mariage. For the king this yere aboueſaid, for the more ſtrēgth (as he thought) both of him and the realm, maried Emma the daughter of Richard Duke of Normandy. which Richard was the third Duke of the Normains, and the firſt of that name. By reaſon of which mariage, king Egelred was not a little enhaunſed in his owne mynd: and by preſumption thereof, ſent ſecret & ſtraight commiſſions to the rulers of euery towne in England, that vpon S. Brices day at a certayne houre appointed, the Danes ſhould bee ſodenly ſlayne. And ſo it was performed, which turned after to more trouble.

Suanus K. of Denmarke ariſeth in England.

Exeter beat down.

Norwiche ſpoyled and waſted by the Danes.

Anno. 1004.

A tribute payd to the Danes of xxx. M. pound to haue peace.

After that tidings came into Denmarke of the murder of thoſe Danes. Anone after, Suanus king of Denmarke with a great hoſt and nauy, landed in Cornewall: where, by treaſon of a Norman named Hugh, which by fauour of Queene Emma, was made Erle of Deuonſhire: The ſayd Suanus toke Exceter, & after beat downe the wals. From thence proceding further into the land, they came to wilton and Shireborne, where they cruelly ſpoyled the countrey and ſlew the people. But anone Suanus hearing that the king was comming to him with the power of his land, toke his ſhips & ſet about to Norfolke: where, after much waſting of that countrey, and ſpoyling the citie of Norwich, and burning the towne of Thetford, and deſtroying the countrey thereabout, at length Duke Vlkatel met him and beat him, & ſlew many of the Danes. wherfore, Swanus for that yeare returned to Denmarke, and there made great prouiſion, to reenter the land againe the next yeare following. And ſo did, landing at Sandwich about the 25. yere of the raign of king Egelred, & there ſpoiled that countrey. And as ſoone as he heard of any hoſte of engliſhmen comming toward him, then he toke ſhipping againe. So that when the kings army ſought to meet him in one coaſt, then would he ſodainly land in an other. And when the king prouided to meete with them vpon the ſea, either they would fain to flee, or els they would with gifts blynd the Admirall of the kings nauy. And thus wearied they the engliſhmen, & in concluſion brought them in extreme and vnſpeakable miſery. In ſo much that the King was fayne to take peace with them, & gaue to king Suanus 30000. pound. After which peace thus made, Suanus returned agayne to Denmarke.

The perſecution of Turkillus a Dane.

Euill counſell about a king what hurt it doth.

But this peace continued not long. For the yeare next following, king Egelred made Edricus aboue mētioned, Duke of Mercia, which was ſubtile of witte, gloſing and eloquent of ſpeach, vntruſty, and falſe to the king and the Realme. And ſoone after one Turkillus (a Prince of the Danes) landed in Kent with much people, and there dyd ſuch harme, that the Kentiſhmē were faine to make peace with great gifts, and ſo thence departed. But this perſecution of the Danes (in one country or other in England) neuer ceaſed, nor the king did euer geue to them any notable battaile. For when he was diſpoſed to geue them battail, this Edricus would euer counſaile him to the contrary, ſo that the Danes euer ſpoyled and robbed, and waxed rich, and the engliſh men euer poore and bare.

After this Suanus beyng in Denmarke, and hearing of the increaſe of hys people in England, brake hys couenaunts before made, and with a great army and nauie in moſt defenſable wyſe appoynted, landed in Northumberland proclaimyng himſelfe to be king of this land. where, after much vexation, when he had ſubdued the people, and cauſed the Erle with the rulers of the countrey to ſweare to him fealtie: he paſſed by the riuer of Trent to Gainſburgh, and to Northwatlyng ſtreete, and ſubduyng the people there, forced them to geue hym pledges: which pledges he committed with his nauy vnto Canutus hys ſonne to keepe, whyle he went further into the lande. And ſo with a great hoſte came to Mercia, killing and ſlaying. Then he toke by ſtrength wincheſter, and Oxford, & dyd there what him liked. That done, he came toward London, and hearing the king was there, paſſed by the Riuer Thamis, and came into Kent and there beſieged Canterbury, where he was reſiſted the ſpace of 20. dayes. At lēgth by treaſon of a Deacon called Almaricus (whom the Biſhop had preſerued from death before) wanne it, and toke the goods of the people and fired the Citie, and tythed the Monkes of S. Auguſtines Abbey (that is to meane, they ſlew ix. by cruell torment, and the tenth they kept aliue as for their ſlaues.) So they ſlew there of religious men, to the number of 900. perſons: of other men, women, & childrē, they ſlew aboue 8000. And finally, whē they had kept ẏ Biſhop Elphegus in ſtraight priſon the ſpace of 7. monethes, & becauſe he would not cōdeſcend to geue vnto thē 3000. pound: After many villanies vnto hym done, they brought him to Greenewich, & there ſtoned him to death.

The vertue of Chriſten mens prayer.

The death and end of Suanus.

Kyng Egelred in the meane tyme, fearing the ende of this perſecution, ſent his wyfe Emma with his ij. ſonnes Alphred and Edward, to the Duke of Normandy, with whom alſo he ſent the biſhop of Londō. The Danes proceeded ſtill in their fury and rage: and when they had won a great part of weſtſaxonie, they returned againe to London. whereof hearing the Londiners, ſent vnto them certayne great giftes and pledges. At laſt the king about the 35. yeare of his raigne, was chaſed vnto the Iſle of wight, & with a ſecret company, he ſpent there a great part of the winter. And finally, without cattaile or comfort ſailed into Normandy to his wyfe. Swanus beyng aſcertayned thereof, (inflamed with pride) reared exceeding impoſitions vpon the people. And amōg other he required a great ſumme of mony of S. Edmunds lands, which the people there claiming to bee free from kings tributes, denied to pay. For this Suanus entred the territory of S. Edmūd, and waſted, and ſpoyled the countrey, deſpiſing the holy Martyr, & manacing alſo the place of his ſepulture. wherfore the men of that countrey fearing his tiranny, fell to prayer and faſting, ſo that ſhortly after Suanus dyed ſodenly, crying and yelling among his knightes. Some ſay that he was ſtriken with the ſword of S. Edmund, wherof he dyed the 3. day after.

The Abbey of S. Edmundeſburie builded.

In feare wherof, Canutus his ſonne which ruled as king after his father, graunted them the freedome of all their liberty, and moreouer ditched the land of the ſayde Martyr with a deepe ditche, and graunted to the inhabitaunts thereof, great freedomes, quityng them from all taſke or tribute. And after builded a Church ouer the place of his ſepulture, and ordained there an houſe of Monkes, and endued them with rich poſſeſſions. And after ẏ tyme it was vſed, that kings of England when they were crowned, ſent their crownes for an offring to Saint Edmūds ſhrine, and redeemed the ſame agayne afterwardes with a condigne price.

Canutus taketh Weſtſaxon.

when king Egelred heard of the death of Suanus, he made prouiſion & returned into england. Of whoſe ſodain comming Canutus being vnprouided fled to Sandwich, And there cutting of the noſes and handes of the pledges, which his father left with him, ſayled into Denmarke: who the next yere returned againe with a great nauy, and landed in the South country. wherfore the eldeſt ſonne of king Egelrede called Edmond Ironſide: made prouiſion with the ayd of Edrike Duke of Mercia to meet him. But Edrike fayning himſelfe ſicke came not, but deceiued him. For as it was after proued, Edrike had promiſed his allegeance to Canutus. By reaſon wherof, Canutus entred ẏ country of weſtſaxon, & forced the people to be ſworn vnto him, and to geue him pledges. In this ſeaſon, king Egelred being at london, was taken with great ſicknes, & there dyed: and was buried in the Northſide of Paules church behind the quire, after he had raigned vnproſperouſly 36. yeares: leauing after him his ſayd eldeſt ſonne Edmond Ironſide, and Alphred, and Edward which were in Edmund Ironſide a Saxon, and Canutus a Dane, Kings together in England.

Anno. 1016.

Edmund Ironſide ſunne of Egelred, king.

Canutus ſonne of Swanus, king.

The battayles betweene Edmundus and Canutus.

After the death of Egelred, variaunce fell betwene the Engliſhmen for the election of their king. For the citizens of London with certayne other Lordes: named Edwyne the eldeſt ſonne of Egelred (a yong man of luſty and valiant courage) in martial aduẽtures, both hardy & wiſe, and could very well endure all paynes. Wherfore he was ſurnamed Ironſide. But the more of the Lordes, fauoured Canutus the ſonne of Swanus: eſpecially the Abbots Biſhoppes, and men of the ſpiritualtye which before had ſworne to his father. By meanes whereof, betwene theſe two martial princes were fought many great battels, firſt in Dorſetſhyre, where Canutus was compelled to flie the field. And after that they fought an other battayle in Worceterſhire, ſo ſore, that none could tell, who had the better: but either for wearines or for lacke of day, they departed one from the other, and on the next morow fought againe: but then Canutus was compelled to forſake the field. After this they met in Mercia, & there fought agayne, where Edmond (as ſtoryes ſay) by the treaſon of that falſe Edrick Duke of Mercia (whom he before had receiued to fauour) had the worſe. Thus many great conflicts there were betwene theſe 2. princes. But vpon a ſeaſon, when the hoſts were redy to ioyne, and a certayne time of truce taken before battayle: a knight of the party of Edmond ſtode vp vpon a high place, and ſayd theſe wordes.

A witty oration to ſtay bloud betweene 2. armyes.

Daylye we dye, and none hath the uictorye: And when the knightes be dead on either part, then the Dukes compelled by need ſhall accord: or els they muſt fight alone. And this kingdome is now ſufficient for 2. men, whiche ſome time ſufficed, 7. But if the couetouſneſſe of Lordſhip in theſe twayne be ſo great, that neither can be content to take part and liue by the other, nor the one vnder the other · then let them fight alone, that will be Lordes alone. If all men fight ſtill: at the laſt all men ſhall be ſlayne, and none left to be vnder their Lordſhip, nor able to defend the king that ſhall be, agaynſt ſtraunge enemies and natiõs.

Two k fight ha to hand,

These wordes were ſo well allowed of both the hoſtes and Princes: that both were content to try the quarrel betwene thẽ two onely. Then the place & time was appointed where they both met, in ſight of both hoaſtes. And whẽ either had aſſayd other with ſharpe ſwordes and ſtrokes: firſt by the motion of Canutus (as ſome write) haſtelye they were both agreed, and kiſſed each other to the comfort of both hoſtes. And ſhortly after they agreed vpon partition of ẏ land: & after that, during theyr liues they loued as brethren. Soone after, a Sonne of wicked Edricus, by the minde (as appeared afterward) of his father: eſpied, when king Edmond was at the draught: & with a ſpeare (ſome ſay with a long knife) thruſt him into the fundamẽt, whereof the ſayd Edmond ſhortlye after dyed, after that he had raigned two yeres. He left behinde him two ſonnes, Edmond and Edward, whom Edricke the wicked Duke, after the death of their father, tooke from theyr mother (not knowing yet of the death of Edmond her huſband) & preſẽted them to king Canutus, ſaluting him in theſe wordes: Aue Rex ſolus. Thus Canutus after the death of Edmond Ironſide, was king alone of the whole realme of englãd. And afterward by the aduiſe of his counſayle, he ſent the foreſayd ſonnes of Edmond Irõſide, to his brother Swanus king of Sueueland to be ſlayne: who abhorring that deed, ſent them to Salomon king of Hũgary, where Edmond being maried to the kings daughter dyed. Edward was maried to Agatha daughter of his brother Henry the 4. Emperour.

The wic murther of king Edmund,

Two so of Edm Yronſide,

Flattery fidelitie vntruth English Lordes,

When Canutus was ſtabliſhed in the kingdom, he called a parliament at London, where (among other things there debated) it was propounded to the biſhops, Barõs, and Lordes of the parliament there preſent, whether that in the compoſitiõ made betwene Edmund and Canutus, any ſpeciall remembraunce was made for the children, or brethren of Edmund, for any partition of any part of the land. Whereunto the engliſh Lordes falſly flatteryng with the foraine kyng, and ſpeaking againſt their own myndes, as alſo againſt their natiue countrey, aunſwered and ſayd nay. Affirming moreouer with an oth (for the kings pleaſure) that they to ẏ vttermoſt of their powers, would put of the bloud of Edmund, in all that they might. By reaſon of which anſwer and promiſe, they thought (many of thẽ) to haue purchaſed with the king great fauour. But by the iuſt retribution of God, it chaunced farre otherwiſe. For many of them, or the moſt part (ſuch eſpecially as Canutus did perceiue to be ſworne before tyme to Edmund, & his heyres: and alſo conſidering that they were natiue engliſhmen) he miſtruſted and diſdained euer after. In ſo much, that ſome he exiled, a great ſort he beheaded, & ſome by Gods puniſhment died ſodainly. Among whom wicked Edricke alſo the traytour (although with hys ſugred wordes he continued a while in the kings fauour) at lẽgth eſcaped not condigne reward for his deceiuable dealyng. For (as the hiſtory of Iornalẽſis recordeth) as the king was in his palace beyond Thames, this Edricke (beyng belike accuſed, or els ſuſpected of the king before) comming vnto him, began to reckon vp his benefites & labours beſtowed for his ſake. Firſt, in forſaking and betraying Egelred, then in ſlaying king Edmund his ſonne, with many ſuch other deedes moe, which all for his ſake he had done. Well ſaith the king, thou haſt here rightly iudged thy ſelfe, and worthily thou ſhalt dye, for ſlaying thy naturall Prince, & my ſworne brother. And ſo commaunded him to be bound immediatly hand and foote, & to be throwen into Thames. Some ſtories ſay, that when he had ſaluted the king with Aue rex ſolus, and ſhewed him the ſlaying of Edmund, Canutus (promiſing that he would make him therfore higher then all the lordes of the realme) commaunded his head to be ſtriken off, & to be ſet vpon London bridge, and hys body to be caſt in the towne ditche. And thus with ſhame ended he his wretched life, as al they commonly do, which with like diſſimulatiõ ſeeke the deſtruction of their Prince and of their countrey.

Edmund and Edward two ſonnes of

This Canutus (ſhortlye after the death of king Edmond, by the counſayle of Edricke) exiled Edmond, being brother to king Edmund, called Rex ruſticorum: the king of Choorles. But afterward, he was reconciled agayne to the kinges fauour: and laſtly ſlayne by certayne of the Kinges Secretaryes or Seruauntes. Alſo, through the counſayle of the ſayd Edricke, and of Emma his wife he ſent the two Sonnes of Edmond Ironſide (Edmond and Edward) to his brother Suanus king of Denmark, to be ſlaine, as is aboue ſayd.

Canutus K. of Denmarke. Canutus maryeth Emma, wife before of Egelred. Lawes of K. Edgar.

In this meane time, Suanus king of Denmarke, brother to Canutus, died. wherfore that land fel to Canutus: which anon after ſailed thether, and toke thereof poſſeſſion. And after he had ſet it in an order, he retourned into England, and maried Emma, late wife before of Egelred: and by her had a ſōne called Herdeknight or Hardeknoutus. Moreouer this Canutus aſſembled a Parliament at Oxford: where it was agreed, that Engliſhmen & Danes ſhould holde the lawes made by king Edgar, becauſe they were thought ſo good & reſonable aboue any other lawes.

Thus the Danes being in England, began by little & little to be Chriſten men. And Canutus went to Rome, & ſo returning againe to England, gouerned that lande the ſpace of 20. yeares, leauing after him two ſonnes, Harold & Hardeknoutus: which Hardeknoutus was made king of Denmarke in his fathers time.

Harold Harefoot K. of Englād a Dane.

Harold (called Harefoote, for his deliuernes and ſwiftnes) ſonne to Canutus by Elgina his firſt wife: began his raigne ouer England, an. 1039. Of him is little left in memory, for he raigned but 4. yeres, ſaue that he baniſhed his ſtepmother Emma, & tooke her goods & iewels from her.

Anno. 1039.

Hardeknout king laſt of the Danes that reigned in England. Erle Godwyn.

The miſerable wretchednes of Godwyn agaynſt the Normands. The Normandes tythed: and yet the tenthes retithed agayn. Alfredus ſonne of Egelred right heyre of the crowne, tormented with cruell death. The cauſe expended, why God ſuffered this land to be conquered by the Normannes. Example of Gods righteous iudgement.

Hardeknoutus, being king of Denmarke, and ſecond ſonne to Canutus by his laſt wife Emma, was next King of England. In the time of theſe Daniſh kings, there was one Godwyn an earle in England, which had bene before in great fauour with Canutus, for his actes done in Denmarke againſt the Northwegians: and afterward maryed yͤ ſiſter (ſome ſay the daughter) of Canutus. This Godwyn was of a cruell and ſubtill wit, as he declared no leſſe by the two ſonnes of king Egelred: For when theſe two aforeſaid (whoſe names were Alfride, and Edward) came from Normādie into England, to viſit their mother Emma, and brought wt them a great company of Normands: this Godwine (hauing a daughter called Godith, whome he thought to marry to Edward, & ſet him vp to be King, to bring his purpoſe about) vſed this practiſe: yͭ is, to perſwade king Hardeknout, & the Lordes not to ſuffer thoſe Normandes to be within the realme for ieopardie, but rather to puniſh them for example. By which meanes he gat authoritie to order the matter himſelfe: wherefore he mette them on Guild downe, and there moſt wretchedly murthered, or rather Martyred the moſt number of the Normandes, and that innocently. For as Swanus before had tithed the Monkes of Canterburie: ſo hee with the cruell cōpany of engliſh ſoldiors, ſlew ix. of the ſaide Normands and ſaued the x. And yet paſſing the furie of Swanus (as not contented with that tiranny) he tithed againe the ſayde tithe, and ſlew euery x. knight, and that by cruel tormēt, as winding their guts out of their bodies, as writeth Ranulphus. And among other, put out the eyes of the elder brother Alfridus, and ſent him to an Abbey of Elie: where he being fed wyth breade and water, endured not long after. Of ſome writers it was recorded, that he was there ſlayne wyth the forenamed torment, and Edward was conueied by ſome other to his mother. who fearing the treaſon of Godwine, ſent him ſoone ouer the ſea to Normandy againe. This cruell facte of Godwine and his men againſt the innocent Normandes, whether it came of himſelfe, or of the kings ſetting on: ſeemeth to me to be the cauſe, why the iuſtice of God, did ſhortly after reuenge the quarell of theſe Normands, in conquering & ſubduing the engliſh nation by william Conqueror, and the Normandes which came with hym. For ſo iuſt and right it was, that as the Normandes comming with a naturall Engliſh Prince, were murthered of Engliſh men: ſo afterwarde the Engliſhe men ſhoulde be ſlaine and conquered by the Normandes, comming with a forraine King being none of their naturall countrey.

The death of K. Hardeknout.

Then it followeth in the ſtorie that this king Canute or Hardeknout: when he had reigned ij. yeres (being mery at Lambeth) ſodainly was ſtriken dombe, & fell downe to the ground, and within 8. daies after died, without iſſue of his body. who was the laſt that raigned in England of the bloud of the Danes.

The ſonnes of Erle Godwyn.

This foreſaid Godwine, had by the daughter of Canutus his wife, but one ſonne which was drowned. Of hys ſeconde wife he receiued vj. ſonnes, to wit, Suanus, Harold, Toſtius, wilmotus, Sirthe, or Surth, and Leofricus, with one daughter called Goditha, which after was maried to king Edward the Confeſſor.

The ſtory of Alfred repeated.

Taken out of the engliſh ſtory or chronicle compiled of certayne engliſhe Clerkes.

Concerning the ſtory of this Alfred, I find it ſomthing otherwiſe reported in our engliſh chronicles: that it ſhuld be after the death of Hardeknout: foraſmuch as the Earles & Barons after his death, aſſembled and made a councell, that neuer after, any of the Danes bloud ſhould be king of England, for the deſpite that they had done to engliſh mē. For euermore before, if the Engliſh men and the Danes, had happened to mete vpō a bridge, the engliſh men ſhuld not ſo hardy to moue a foote, but ſtande ſtill, till the Dane were paſſed forth. And moreouer, if the Engliſh men had not bowed downe their heades to doe reuerence vnto the Danes, they ſhould haue bene beaten and defiled. For the which deſpites and villanie, they were driuen out of the land after the death of Hardeknout, for they had no Lorde that might maintaine them. And after this maner auoided the Danes England, that they neuer came againe.

The Erles and Barons, by their common aſſent and counſaile: ſent vnto Normandy for theſe two brethren, Alphred and Edward: intending to crowne Alphred the elder brother, & to make him king of England. And to thys the Earles and Barons made their othe: but the Earle Godwine of weſtſaxe (falſly and traiterouſly) thought to ſlea theſe two brethren, aſſone as they came into Englād, to that intēt to make Harold his ſonne king: which ſonne he had by his wife Hardeknoutes daughter that was a Dane. And ſo this Godwine went priuily to Southampton, to meete there with the two brethren at their landing. And thus it fell, that the meſſengers that went (ſaith mine author) into Normandie, found but onely Alphred the elder brother. For Edward his younger brother was gone to Hungarie, to ſpeake wyth his coſin the outlaw, which was Edward Ironſides ſonne.

Alfred or Alured ſonne of K. Egelred.

When Alfrede had heard theſe meſſengers and perceiued their tidings: he thanked God, and in all haſt ſped him to England, arriuing at Southampton. There, Godwin the falſe traitor (hauing knowledge of his comming) welcommed & receaued him with much ioy: pretending to lead him vnto London, where the Barons waited for to make him king. And ſo they together paſſed forth towarde London. But when they came to Guild downe, the traitor cōmanded all his men to ſlea all that were in Alphredes cōpany, which came wt him from Normandie. And after that to take Alphrede, & to lead him into the Iſle of Ely, where they ſhuld put out both his eyes: and ſo they did. For they ſlew all the company that were there, to the number of xij. Gentlemen, which came wt Alfrede from Normandie: and after that they tooke Alphrede, and in the Iſle of Ely they executed their commiſſiō. That done, they opened his body, tooke out his bowels, ſet a ſtake into the grounde, and faſtened an end of his bowels therunto, & with needles of yron they pricked his tēder body, therby cauſing him to go about the ſtake, till that all his bowels were drawen out. And ſo died this innocent Alphred or Alured, being the right heire of the crowne: through treaſon of wicked Godwyne. when the Lordes of Englande heard thereof, and how Alphred, that ſhould haue ben their king, was put to death through the falſe traitor Godwyne, they were wonderous wroth: and ſware betwene God and them, that he ſhould die a worſe death then did Edrith which betrayed his Lord Edmund Ironſide: and wold immediatly haue put him to death, but that the Traitour fledde thence into Denmarke: and there helde him iiij. yeares and more, and loſt all his landes in England.

Ex hiſtoria ignoti autoris.

An other Latin ſtory I haue (bearing no name) which ſaith that this comming in of Alphred & the Normandes: was in the time of Harold Canutus ſōne. And how Godwyne (after he pretended great amitie to them) ſodenly in the night came vpon them at Gilford: And after he had tithed the Normandes: ſent Alfrede to Harold at London, who ſent him to the Iſle of Ely, and cauſed his eyes to be put out,

And thus much of Canutus: and of his ſonnes, Harold and Hardecanutus. Beſides theſe ij. ſonnes Canutus had alſo a daughter named Gunilda: maried to Henricus the Emperour. Of whome ſome write, that ſhe being accuſed to the emperor of ſpouſebrech, and hauing no champion or Knight that woulde fight for her (after the maner of that cōtrey) for trial of her cauſe: a certaine litle dwarf or boy, whom ſhe brought with her out of England (ſtirred vp of God) fought in her cauſe againſt a mighty bigge Germain of a monſtrous greatneſſe: which ſelie dwarfe, cutting by chaūce the ſinews of his leg, after ſtroke him to the groūd, and ſo cut of his head, and ſaued the life of the Queene, if it be true that Gulielmus and Fabianus reporteth.

Of this Canutus it is ſtoried, that he folowing muche the ſuperſtition of Achelnotus Archbiſhop of Cant. went on pilgrimage to Rome: and there founded an hoſpital for Engliſh pilgrimes. He gaue the Pope pretious gifts, and burdened the land with an yerely tribute called the Rome ſhote: he ſhrined the body of Berinus, & gaue great lands and ornaments to the Cathedrall Churche of wincheſter: he builded S. Henricus Archdeacon of Huntyngton, Lib. 6. maketh mention of thys Canutus, as doeth alſo Polidorus, Lib. 7. That he after his comming from Rome, walking vppon a time by the porte of Southhampton. (But as Polydorus ſayeth) and Fabian affirmeth the ſame, that it was by Thames ſide at London. when his flatterers comming about him, began to exalt him vp with high wordes, calling him a king of all kings (moſt mighty) who had vnder his ſubiection both the people, the land, and alſo the ſea. Canutus reuoluing this matter in his minde (whether for pride of his heart exalted, or whether to trie and refell their flattering words) cõmaunded his chaire of eſtate to be brought to the ſea ſide, at what time it ſhould begin to flowe. Polydore ſayth, that no ſeate was brought, but ſitting vpon his garments being folded together vnder him: there charged and commaunded the floudes ariſing & comming toward his feete, that they ſhoulde not touch neither him, nor his clothes. But the water keeping his ordinary courſe, came nearer and nerer: Firſt to his feete, and ſo growing higher began to waſh him welfauoredly. wherewith the king abaſhed & partly alſo afeard ſtarte backe: and looking to his Lordes: Loe (ſayth he) ye call me ſuch a mighty king & yet can I not commaunde backe this litle water to ſtay at my worde, but it is ready to drowne me. wherfore all earthly kings may know, that all their powers be but vaine: and that none is worthy to haue the name of a king, but he alone: which hath all things ſubiect to the power & authoritie of his word: which is the Lord of heauen & earth: the creatour aboue of all thinges: the father of our Chriſt and Lorde: who with him for euer is to be glorified: him let vs worſhip and extoll for our king for euer. After this (as hiſtories witnes) he neuer ſuffred the crowne to come vpon his head, but went to wincheſter (or as ſome ſay, to Canterbury, but both thoſe may be true) for his going to Cãterbury, was to acknowledge yͭ there was a Lorde much higher, & of more power then he himſelfe was, and therewithal to render vp his crowne for euer. with that, Egelnothes Archbyſhop of Canterbury: informed him of the image of the Crucifix before mẽtioned, which diſſolued the matter betweene maried Prieſts and life of Monkes, and did many other myracles moe, being then at wincheſter. wherewith the King prouoked to go to wincheſter to the rode, there reſigned vp hys regall Crowne, and made the rode king ouer all the land.

Here is alſo to be noted in this Canutus, that although (as is ſaid) he cõdeſcended in the beginning of his raigne, vpon king Edgares lawes: yet after in proces of time, hee ſet forth peculiar lawes of his own. Among which, diuers there be that concerne as well cauſes Eccleſiaſticall, as alſo temporal. whereby it may appeare, that the gouernmẽt of ſpirituall matters not to depende then of the Biſhop of Rome: but to appertaine to the lawfull authoritie of the temporall Prince, no leſſe then of matters and cauſes temporall. And heere an ende of the Daniſh kyngs. Nowe to the Engliſh kings againe, whoſe right line cõmeth in againe in Edward here following.

King Edward called the Confeſſor.

For ſo much as God of his mercye and prouidence, who is onely the maker of heires: thought it ſo good, after the wofull captiuitie of this Engliſhe nation, to graunt now ſome reſpite of deliuerance, in taking away the Daniſh kings without any iſſue left behind them: who reigning here in Englãd, kept the engliſh people in miſerable ſubiection, about the ſpace of xxviij. yeares, and that from their firſte landing in the time of King Brightricus: waſting and vexing this land, the terme of cc. lv. yeres: Now their tiranny here comming to an ende, the next election & right of the crowne fell (as appertained) to Edwarde the yonger ſonne of king Egelred and Emma, a meere Engliſhman: who had bene now long baniſhed in Normandy, as is aboue declared. A man of gentle and ſoft ſpirite: more appliable to other mens cõſailes, then able to truſt to his owne: of nature & condition ſo geuen from al warre and bloudſhed: that being in his baniſhment, he wiſhed rather ſo to continue all his life long in that priuate eſtate, then by warre or bloudſhed to aſpire to any kingdome. This Edward, after the death of Canutus the ſeconde, or Hardecanute, being ſent for of the Lordes into Normãdie to take poſſeſſion of the Realme, although he ſomething miſtruſted the vnconſtant and fickle heads of Engliſhmẽ (yet hauing ſufficient pledges laid for him in Normandie) came ouer, with a few Normands accompanied: and not long after was crowned at wincheſter. an. 1043. by Edſius then Archbiſhop of Cant. And not long after that, he maried Goditha, or Editha daughter of Earle Godwyne: whome he entreated after ſuch ſort, that he neither put her from his bed, nor yet delt with her fleſhly. whether it were for hate of her kin (as moſt like it was) or for loue of chaſtitie, it remaineth vncertaine. But moſt writers agree, yͭ he continued his lyfe without offence with women: for the which he is highly exalted among our ſtory writers and called holy king Edwarde. After he had thus taken vpon him the gouernement of the realme, he guided the ſame wͭ much wiſedome and iuſtice, the ſpace of 24. yeres, lacking two monethes: from whome iſſued (as out of a fountaine) much godlineſſe, mercy, pitie, and liberalitie towarde the poore: gentlenes and iuſtice toward all men: and in all honeſt life he gaue a vertuous example to his people. He diſcharged the Engliſhmen of the great tribute called Danegelt, which before time was yerely leuied to the great impoueriſhing of the people. Hee ſubdued the Scottes and welſhmen, which in their borders began to rebell againſt him. In much peace he continued his reigne, hauing no forreine enemie to aſſault him: Albeit, as ſome Chronicles do ſhewe, certaine Danes and Norgwaines there were, which entended to ſet vpon Englande: But as they were taking ſhipping, there was brought to them firſt one bowle, then an other, of meede or methe, to drinke vpon a bon viage. Thus one cup comming after an other: after drinke came dronkennes, after dronkennes folowed iangling, of iangling came ſtryfe: and ſtrife turned vnto ſtripes. whereby many were ſlayne, and the other returned to their home agayne. And thus the mercifull prouidence of the Lord diſpatched that iourny.

K. Edward crowned.

Holy king Edward a virgine in maryage.

Methe in Greeke ſignifieth dronkennes.

In the time of this Edward: Emma his mother, was accuſed to be familiar with Alwyn the Byſhop of wincheſter: vpon which accuſation (by counſayle of Earle Godwyn) he tooke from her many of her iewels, and cauſed her to be kept ſomedele more ſtraightly in yͤ Abby of warwel, and the Byſhop committed to the examination of the clergy. Polydore ſayth, they were both in priſon, at wincheſter: where ſhe ſorrowing the defame both of her ſelfe and of the Byſhop, and truſting vpon her conſcience, deſireth them of iuſtice, offering her ſelfe ready to abide any lawfull triall: yea although it were with the ſharpeſt.

Then diuers of the Byſhops made labour to the king for thẽ both, and had obtayned, had not Robert thẽ Archbiſhop of Cant. ſtopped the ſute. who not well contented with their labour ſayd vnto them: My brethren how dare ye defend her which is no woman but a beaſt? ſhe hath defamed her owne ſonne the king, and taken her lecherous leman the Byſhop. And if it be ſo, that the woman will purge the prieſt, who ſhall then purge the woman that is accuſed to be conſenting to the death of her ſonne Alphred: and procured venim to the poyſonyng of her ſonne Edward? Who perceauing that he could not wiſtand the kings malice, (although he gathered a great company to worke therein what he could) fled into Flanders, & was outlawed with his 5. ſonnes. King Edward repudiated his wife, the daughter of the ſayde Godwine: but the ſecond yere after, by mediators he was recōciled to the king againe, and called from baniſhment: And for his good a bearing, he gaue for pledges his two ſōnes, Byornon, and Toſtius, which were ſent to the Duke of Normandy there to be kept.

And there (as ſome wryte) made promiſe to him, that if he died without iſſue, the ſaid William ſhould ſucceede him in the kingdome of England.

The end and death of vngodly Godwyn.

Ex Iorna. Malmeſberienſi. Polydor. Fabiano & alijs.

Gods iuſt puniſhment vpon Godwyn, for the murthering of Alphred. Periurie plagued.

In this kinges raigne liued Marianus Scotus the ſtory writer. As concerning the end of erle Godwin, yͤ cruell murderer of Alphred, and of the Normandes: although diuers hiſtories diuerſly do vary: yet in this the moſt part do agree, that as he ſate at the table with king Edward at Winſor, it happened one of the cupbearers one of erl Godwins ſonnes to ſtumble and recouer againe, ſo that he did ſhed none of the drinke: wherat Godwin laughed, & ſayd, howe the one brother had ſuſtained the other. With whych wordes the King calling to minde his brothers death that was ſlaine by Godwine: beheld the erle (ſaying) ſo ſhould my brother Alphred haue holpē me, had not Godwin ben. Godwine then fearing the kinges diſpleaſure to be newly kindled, after many words in excuſing himſelfe, ſayde: So mought I ſafely ſwalow this morſel of bread as I am giltles of the deede. But aſſone as hee had receiued the bread, forthwith he was choked. Then the king commanded him to be drawne from the table, & ſo was cōueyed by Harolde his ſonne to Wincheſter, and there buried.

Edward the outlawe ſonne of Edmund Yronſide ſenr for to England.

Anno. 1056.

The death of Edward, ſonne of Edmond Yronſide.

William Duke of Normandy admitted heyre to the crowne.

About the 13. yere of this kings reigne, the ſayde King Edward ſent Aldred biſhop of Worceter to the Emperour Henricus the 4. praying him, that he would ſend to yͤ king of Hungary, that his coſin Edward ſonne of Edmund Ironſide, might come to England: for ſo much as he intended to make him King after him, which was called Edward outlawe. The which requeſt was fulfilled, ſo that he came into Englande with his wife Agatha, and with hys children, to witte, Edgar Adeling, Margarete, and Chriſtina. But the yeare after his returne into the realme, thys Edwarde deceaſed at London, and was buryed at Weſtminſter: or as Iornalenſis ſayeth, at Paules church in London. After whoſe deceaſe, the King then receaued Edgar Adeling his ſonne, as his owne childe: thinking to make him his heire. But fearing partly the vnconſtant mutabilitie of the Engliſhmen, partly the pride and malice of Harold the ſonne of Godwine, & of other (perceauing therby, that he could not bring that his purpoſe ſo wel to paſſe) directed ſolemne Embaſſadors vnto Williā Duke of Normandy, his kinſman: admitting & aſſigning him to be hys lawfull heire, next to ſucceede after him to the crowne.

The enuy and diſcorde of brethren.

Vngracious children of a wicked father.

After the death of Godwin, Harolde his ſonne waxed ſo in the kings fauour: that he ruled the moſte and greateſt cauſes of the realme, and was lieſetenant of the kings army: who with his brother Toſton or Toſtius (ſent by the king againſt the Welchmen) ſubdued their rebellion. But afterward, ſuch enuie grewe betwene theſe ij. brethren, for that Toſtius ſaw his brother Harold ſo greatly aduanced in the kings fauour, that at Herford, the ſaid Toſtius ſlew all his brothers men. Whom when he had cut in pieces, he poudered their quarters and mangled parts, in barrels of ſalt, vinegre, wine, and other liquors. That done, he made a power againſt his brother Harold (being king) with the aide of certaine Danes and Norgaines, and fought a battail with him in the North, as after ſhal follow (God willing) to be ſeene. So vngracious were theſe wicked children of Erle Godwin: that if they had ſene any faire manſion or maner place, they woulde ſlay the owner thereof, withall his kinrede, and enter the poſſeſſion thereof themſelues.

A place of Polydorus Virg. examined.

Harold taken of the Normands.

Harold promiſeth Duke William to marry hys daughter, and to keepe the realme for hys behoofe.

At length it came in the minde of this Harolde to ſaile ouer the ſea (as Polydore ſayth) into Normandie to ſee hys brother Wilnotus, as alſo his coſin Hacus, whom yͤ king had ſent thither to be kept for pledges, as yet heard before. Polydore ſayth theſe pledges were Toſto & Byornon, but that can not be, for Toſtius was then in England. But as Henricus Archdeacon of Huntington ſayeth, his iourney was into Flāders, as ſemeth more like. For it is not to be thought, that Harold who was a doer in yͤ cruell murther of Alphred, and of the Normanes: wold venter into Normandy, & therefore more like it is, that his ſailing was into Flaunders. But as the ſtorie procedeth, he being in the courſe of his ſailing, was weather driuen by tempeſt into the prouince of Pountith, where he was taken as a priſoner, and ſent to Duke William of Normandy. To whome he was made to ſweare, that he in time following ſhoulde marry his daughter: and that after the death of King Edward, he ſhould kepe the land of Englande to his behoue, according to the will & minde of Edward (after ſome writers) and ſo to liue in great honor & dignity next vnto him in the realme. This promiſe faithfully made to the Duke, Harold returneth into Englād (with his coſin Hacus the ſonne of his brother Suanus being deliuered vnto him.) But Wilnotus brother of Harold, the duke kepeth ſtil for performance of the couenāts. Thus Herold I ſay, returning home, ſheweth yͤ king al that he had done in the foreſayde matters. Wherewith the King was well contented. Wherby it may be gathered, that king Edward was right wel willing, that Duke William ſhould reigne after hym, and alſo ſemeth not vnlike, but that he had geuen him his promiſe therunto before.

The Abby of Couentry builded by Leofricus.

Among all that were true and truſty to king Edward of the engliſh nobility, none had like commendatiō as had Leofricus erle of Mercia and of Cheſter. This Leofricus purchaſed many great liberties for the towne of Couētry, and made it free of all maner things, except onely of horſe. Which fredom there was obtained by meanes of his wife Godina, by riding (as the fame goeth) after a ſtrāge maner through the towne. This Leofricus with his wife Godina, builded alſo the abbey of Couentrie, & indued the ſame with great lands and riches.

Edward the outlaw.

Edgar Edeling.

Margaret Queene of Scottes.

Matilde Queene of England.

Dauid King of Scots.

You hearde a little before, of the comming ouer of Edward called the outlaw, ſonne of king Edmund Ironſid: whom king Edward had purpoſed to haue made king after him. But ſone after his comming ouer, he deceaſed at London. This Edwarde had by his wife Agatha, a ſonne & a daughter called Edgar Adelyng, & Margaret. Which Margaret being maried afterward to the king of Scots, was the mother of Matild or Maude Quene of England and of Dauid king of Scots. &c.

The death of King Edward.

Weſtminſter repayred.

This vertuous & bleſſed king Edwarde, after he had reigned 23. yeres, and 7. moneths, died and was buried in the monaſtery of Weſtminſter, which he had greatly augmented & repaired, but afterward was more inlarged after this form which it hath now, by Henry the third, ſōne of king Iohn.

Ex Iornalen.

Ex Hiſtoria Richardi. 2. iuſſu compoſita.

They that write the hiſtorie of this King, heere make mention of a dreame or reuelation that ſhoulde be ſhewed to him in time of his ſicknes: how, that becauſe the peeres & biſhops of the realme were ſeruantes not of God, but of the deuil: God wold geue this realm to the hād of others. And the king deſired vtterannce to be geuen him, that hee might declare the ſame to the people, whereby they might repent. It was anſwered againe, that neither would they ſo do, or yet if they did, it ſhould be geuen to an other people. But becauſe it is a dreame, I let it paſſe.

The lawes of K. Edward.

Diuers lawes were before in diuers countreis of this realme vſed, as the lawe firſt of Dunuallo Molmucius, wͭ the lawes of Mercia called Mercenelega: then the lawes of Weſtſaxone kinges, as of Iue, Offa, Alfred, &c. whyche was called Weſtſaxenelaga. The thirde were the lawes of Canutus & of Danes called Danelaga. Of all theſe lawes which before were diuerſly in certain particuler countreis vſed and receiued: this Edward compiled one vniuerſal & cōmō law for al people through the whole realm, which were called K. Edwardes lawes: which lawes being gathered out of the beſt and chiefeſt of the other lawes, were ſo iuſt, ſo equall, and ſo ſeruing the publike profite & weale of all eſtates: that mine authors ſay: the people long after did rebell againſt their heads and rulers, to haue the ſame lawes againe (being taken from them) and yet coulde not obtaine them.

Ex Mathæo pariensi.
William Conquerour ſworne to K. Edwardes lawes, yet went from it.

Furthermore, I read and find in Math. Pariſ. that when Will. Conquerour at his comming in, did ſweare to vſe & practiſe the ſame good lawes of Edwarde, for the common lawes of this realme: afterward (being eſtabliſhed in his kingdome) he forſwore himſelfe, & placed his owne lawes in their rowme, much worſe and obſcurer then the other were. &c.

Notwithſtanding among the ſaid lawes of Edward, and in the firſt chapter and beginning therof, this I finde among the auncient recordes of the Guildhal in London. The office of a King, with ſuch other appurtenaunces as belong to the realme of Britaine: ſet forth and deſcribed in the latine ſtile, which I thought here not vnmete to be expreſſed in the Engliſh tong, for them that vnderſtande no Latine. The tenor and meaning wherof thus followeth.

¶ De iure & appendijs regni Britanniæ, & quod ſit officium Regis.

Ex libro Reg. antiquorum in prætorio Londinenſi.
The office of a king deſcribed in the lawes of K. Edward.

A king the vicare of God in earth.

The king becauſe he is the vicar of the hieſt king, is appointed for this purpoſe: to rule the earthly kingdom, and the lords people, and aboue al things, to reuerence his holy church: to gouerne it, and to defende it from iniuries: to plucke away wicked doers, and vtterly to deſtroye them. Which vnleſſe he doe, the name of a king agreeth not vnto him, but he loſeth the name of a King, as witneſſeth Pope Iohn: to the which Pope, Pipinus & Carolus his ſonne (being not yet kings but princes vnder the French King being not very wiſe) did write, demaunding this queſtion, whither the kings of France ought ſo to continue hauing but onely the name of a king. Vnto whome Pope Iohn anſwereth againe, that it was conuenient to cal thē kings which vigilātly do defend and gouerne the church of God and his people, following the ſaying of King Dauid the Pſalmograph. He ſhal not dwel in my houſe which worketh pride. &c. Moreouer, the king by right & by his office, ought to defend & conſerue fully & wholy in all ampleneſſe wᵗout diminution, all the lands, honors, dignities, rights, and liberties of the crowne of his kingdome. And further to reduce into their priſtine ſtate, all ſuche thinges as haue bene diſperſed, waſted and loſt, which appertaine to hys kingdome. Alſo the whole and vniuerſall lande wyth all Iſelands about the ſame vnto Norwey and Denmarke, be appertaining to the crowne of his kingdome, and be of the appurtenances and dignitie of the King: making one monarchie and one kingdome, which ſomtime was called the kingdom of Britains, and now the kingdom of England: ſuch bonds and limites as is aboueſaid, be appointed and limited to the name of this kingdome.

The limits of the kingdome of England how farre they doe extend.

The office of a king farther deſcribed.

Moreouer, in the foreſaid lawes of this king Edward, it followeth in the ſame booke where the foreſaid Edward deſcribing the office of a King, addeth in theſe wordes. A king ſayth he, ought aboue al things to feare God: to loue and to obſerue his commaundements: and cauſe them to be obſerued through his whole kingdome. He ought alſo to kepe, cheariſh, maintaine, & gouerne the holy church wᵗin his kingdome, with al integritie and liberty, according to the conſtitutions of his aunceſtors and predeceſſors: and to defend the ſame againſt all enemies, ſo that God aboue all things be honored, & euer be before his eies. He ought alſo to ſet vp good lawes and cuſtomes, ſuch as be wholeſome and approued: ſuch as be otherwiſe, to repeale them, and thruſt them out of his kingdom. Item, he ought to do iudgement and iuſtice in his kingdome, by the counſell of the nobles of his realme. All theſe things ought a King in his own perſon to do, taking his othe vpon ẏ Euangeliſt, and the bleſſed reliques of ſaintes, ſwearing in the preſence of the whole ſtate of his realme (as well of the temporaltie as of the ſpiritualtie) before he be crowned of the Archbyſhops & Biſhops. Three ſeruants the king ought to haue vnder him as vaſſals: fleſhly luſt, auarice, and greedie deſire. Whom if he kepe vnder as his ſeruants and ſlaues, he ſhal reigne wel and honorably in his kingdom. Al things are to be done with good aduiſement and premeditation: and that properly belongeth to a king. For haſtie raſhnes bringeth all things to ruine, according to the ſaying of the Goſpell: Euery kingdome deuided in it ſelfe, ſhall be deſolate. &c.

Three ſl and ſer. uauntes a king oug to haue v der hys ſu iection.

After the duetie and office of Princes thus deſcribed, conſequently followeth the inſtitution of ſubiects, declared in many good & neceſſary ordinaunces, very requiſite and cōuenient for publique gouernment. Of the which lawes William Conquerour was cōpelled, thorough the clamor of the people to take ſome: but the moſt parte he omitted, contrary to his owne oth at his coronation, inſerting and placing the moſte of his owne lawes in his language: to ſerue hys purpoſe: and whych as yet to this preſent day in the ſame Normande language do remaine. Nowe (the Lorde willing) let vs procede in the ſtorie, as in order followeth.

❧ King Harold.

Anno 1066.

Harold laſt K. of Saxons.

HArolde the ſeconde ſonne of Earle Godwine, and laſt king of the Saxons: notwithſtanding that diuers of the nobles went with Edgar Adeling, the next heire after Edmund Ironſide: yet he through force and might contemning the young age of Edgar, and forgetting alſo his promiſe made to duke William, toke vpon him to be king of England, An. 1066. when Harolde Harefager, ſonne of Canutus, king of Norway & Demark, heard of the death of king Edward, he came into England with 300. ſhippes or mo: who, then ioyning wᵗ Toſtius, brother to the ſayde Harold king of England, entred into the North partes, & clamed the land after the death of Edwarde. But ẏ Lords of the countrey aroſe and gaue them battail, notwithſtanding the Danes had ẏ victory. And therfore Harold king of Englād prepared toward them in all haſt, & gaue them an other ſtrōg battel, and there had the victory, where alſo Harold the Dane was ſlaine, by the hand of Harold king of Englande. And Toſtius was alſo ſlaine in the battell. After this victorie, Harold waxed proude & couetous: and would not deuide the praies to his Knightes that had deſerued it, but kept it to himſelfe whereby he loſt the fauour of many of his knights and people.

Harold king of Denmarke and Toſtius ſlayne.

In this meane time William Duke of Normādy, ſent Ambaſſades to Harolde king of Englande, admoniſhing him of the couenauntes that were agreed betweene them: which was, to haue kept the land to his vſe after the death of Edwarde. But becauſe that the daughter of Duke William (that was promiſed to Harolde) was dead: Harolde thought him thereby diſcharged, and ſayd, that ſuch a nice fooliſh promiſe ought not to be holden (concerning an others land) without the conſent of the Lordes of the ſame: and eſpecially for that hee was thereunto, for neede or for dread compelled.

The Pope ſendeth a banner to Duke W. vpon bone viage into England.

Vpon theſe anſweres receaued, Duke William, in the while that the meſſengers went and came: gathered his knightes, and prepared his nauie, and had the aſſent of the Lordes of his lande to aide and aſſiſt him in his iourney. And ouer that ſending vnto Rome to pope Alexander, cōcerning his title & viage into england: the pope cōfirmeth him in the ſame, and ſent vnto him a banner, willing him to beare it in the ſhip, wherein himſelfe ſhould ſaile. Thus Duke William, being puruеied of al things cōcerning his iourney: ſped him to the ſea ſide, and tooke ſhipping at the hauen of S. Valery: where he taried a lōg time, or he might haue a conuenient winde. For the which his ſouldiours murmured (ſaying) it was a woodneſſe, & a thing diſpleaſing God, to deſire to haue an others mans kingdome by ſtrength, and namely whē God was againſt it in ſending contrary wind. &c. At the laſt the winde ſhortly after came about, and they tooke ſhipping with a great cōpanie, and landed at Haſtings in Suſſex.

Duke William landeth at Haſtinges.

Three cauſes why Duke William entred England.

For three cauſes Duke William entred thys lande, to ſubdue Harold. One was, for that it was to him geuen by king Edward his nephew. The ſecōd was to take wreke, for the cruell murther of his nephewe Alfrede, King Edwardes brother, and of the Normands, which deede he aſcribed chiefly to Harolde. The thirde was, to reuenge the wrong done to Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which was exiled by the meanes & labour of Harold, in the time of king Edward.

Thus, while Harold was in the North: Duke William made ſo great ſpede that he came to London before the King: out of which he was holden, till he had made good ſurety, that he & his people ſhould paſſe through the Citie without tarying: which promiſe he well obſeruing, paſſed the bridge, and went ouer vnto Suſſex. From whence he ſent a Monke vnto Harold, & profered to him three maner of wayes. 1. Either to render to him the poſſeſſion of the land, and ſo to take it againe of hym vnder tribute, raigning vnder him. 2. or els to abide and ſtand to the Popes arbitrement betwixt them both: or thirdly to defende hys quarel in his own perſon againſt the Duke, and they two onely to trie the matter by dinte of ſworde, wythout any other bloudſheding.

Three conditions offered to Harold by D. William.

But Harold refuſed all theſe offers, ſaying: it ſhould be tried by dinte of ſwordes, & not by one ſworde. And ſo gathered his people, & ioyned battaile with the Normands, in the place where afterwarde was builded the Abbey of Battaile in Suſſex. In the beginning of which fight the engliſhmen kept them in good array, like to vanquiſhe the Normandes. wherefore Duke william cauſed hys men to geue backe, as though they fled: wherby the engliſhme followed faſt and brake their array. Then the Normaues fiercely geuing a charge vpon them, in cōcluſion obtained the victorie, through the iuſt prouidence of God. where king Harolde, who before had murdered Alfrede the true heire of the Crowne, with his company of Normandes ſo cruelly: was now wounded of the Normandes, in the left eye with an arrow, and therof incontinent died: although Gerardus ſayeth, hee fled away to Cheſter, and liued after that a Monke in the monaſterie of S. Iames. whyche is not like, but rather that he was there ſlaine, after that he had raigned nine moneths, and was buried at waltham (which proueth that he died not at Cheſter) and ſo was he the laſt that raigned in England of the bloud of Saxons: the which continued (to recken from Hengiſtus his firſte raigne in Kent) by the ſpace of 591. yeres. And if it be reckened from the yeares of the weſtſaxons, then it endured the ſpace of 565. yeres.

The fight betweene Harold and Duke William,

K. Harold ſlayne,

This william Duke, and king Edward, were by the fathers ſide, couſin germaines remoued. For Richard the firſt of that name, which was the thirde duke of Normandy after Rollo: was father to Duke Richard the ſecond of that name, & brother to Emma mother to king Edward. which Duke Richarde the ſeconde, was father to Duke Robert, this Duke williams father.

The conſanguinitie betweene K. Edward and William Conquerour,

Albeit in this matter, other ſome may gather otherwiſe and better, perchance, yet if I may ſay what I thinke, verely I ſuppoſe, that there is no conſanguinitie ſo muche here the cauſe, why God of hys vnknowen iudgementes ſuffered the Normandes here to preuaile: as was rather the cruell murder of Alfred, & of the innocent Normands, wrought by the cruel deſpight of Harold and the engliſhmen, as is before declared. The which merciles murther, God here iuſtly in this conqueſt recompenſed.

Murther iuſtly recompenſed.

Now remaineth alſo to theſe forein affaires of kings & Princes, to adde ſomthing likewiſe concerning the continuation of the Archbiſhops of Caunterburie, beginning there where we laſt left: that is with Elphegus, whome we declared a little before to be ſtoned by the Danes at Grenewich. After which Elphegus next ſucceded Liningus, after him Egelnothus alſo aboue mentioned. Then Robertus a Normand, a great doer (as is declared) about king Edward, and a faithfull counſailer vnto him: but he abode not long. After whom, Stigandus inuaded the ſea (as they report) by ſimony: being both Archbiſhop of Cāt. Byſhop of wincheſter, and alſo Abbot in an other place. wherin he cōtinued a great ſpace, gathering and heaping goodes together, till at length Duke william clapt him in priſon, and there kept him: placing in his romme, Lancfrācus a Lombard borne, of whom more ſhall follow (Chriſt willing) hereafter to be declared.

Archbiſhops of Caunterb,

Liningus, Egelmothus. Robertus. Stigandus,

¶ Although the Church of Chriſt, and ſtate of religion firſt founded and grounded by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, did not continually altogether remaine in his primatiue perfection, wherein it was firſt inſtituted: But in proceſſe of time, began from better to worſe, to decreaſe & decline into much ſuperſtition & incōuenience: partly through the comming in of Mahumet, partly through ẏ increaſe of wealth and riches, partly through the decreaſe of knowledge & diligence in ſuch as ſhould be the guides of Chriſtes flocke: yet the infection & corruption of that time (though it were great) did not ſo abounde in ſuch exceſſiue meaſure, as afterwarde in the other latter times nowe following, about the thouſand yeares expired after Chriſt: whereof we haue to intreat, Chriſt ſo permitting. About the which time and yeare came Silueſter the ſeconde of that name, who next ſucceeded after Gregorie the v. before mentioned. pag. 159. and occupied the ſea of Rome about the yere of our Lorde 1000. lacking one or two.

The decay of the Church,

Pope Silueſter, 2,

This Silueſter was a Sorcerer, which after the ſorte of them, that worke by familiars (as they cal them) and by cōiuration, cōpacted with the deuil, to be made pope. And ſo he was (through the operation of Sathan) according to his requeſt. which thing ſome hiſtories ſay, he did greatly repent before his death. But for a more ample declaration hereof, I will bring in the wordes of Ioannes Stella, a Venetian, tranſlated from Latin into Engliſh, cōcerning the ſaid Silueſter: to the entent that our inchaunters and ſorcerers now a dayes (wherof there be to many in England) may the better through his example be admoniſhed. The words of Stella be theſe, agreeing alſo with the narration of Benno, Platina and many other. Silueſter the ſecond of that name, being Pope, and a Frenchman, called Gibertus: ſate in his Papacie iiij. yeares, one moneth and viij. dayes. He entred into his Papacie, through wicked & vnlawfull meanes: who from his youth being a monke, and leauing his monaſterie, gaue himſelf wholy to the deuill, to obtaine that which he required. And firſt comming to Hiſpalis a City in Spayne, there applied his booke and profited there in ſomuch, ẏ he was made Doctour, hauing amongſt his auditours, Otho the Emperours ſonne, and Robert the French King, Lotharius Archbyſhop of Senon, with diuers other moe. By whoſe aduauncement he was promoted, firſt Biſhop of Rheme, afterward Biſhop of Rauenna, and at laſt through the operation of Sathan, was exalted to the Papacy of Rome, vpon this condition, that after his death, he ſhould geue himſelfe to the deuil, by whoſe procuremēt, he came to that promotion. Vpō a certaine time he demanded an anſwer of the deuill, how long he ſhould enioy his Popedome? to whom he anſwered againe: vntill thou ſay Maſſe in Ieruſalem thou ſhalt liue. At length the iiij. yeare of his Popedome, ſaying Maſſe at Lent time, in the temple of the holy croſſe being called then Ieruſalem, there he knewe the time was come, when hee ſhould die. wherupon being ſtroke with repentance, confeſſed his fault openly before the people: deſiring al men to cut his body al in peeces (being ſo ſeduced by deceits of the deuil) & ſo being hewen in peeces, they woulde lay it vpon a cart, and bury it there, where ſoeuer the horſes wold cary it of their accorde. And ſo the ſaying is to be, that by the prouidence of God (whereby the wicked may learne yet hope of remiſſion wt God, ſo that they will repent them in their life) the horſes of their own accord ſtaid at the church of Laterane, and there he was buried: wheras commonly by the ratling of his bones within the tomb, is portended the death of Popes as the common reporte goeth. Thus much out of Ioannes Stella, concerning Silueſter. By whō our ſorcerers and inchanters, or magicians may learne to beware of the deceitfull operation of Sathan: who, at the ende deceiueth and fruſtrateth al them, that haue to do with him: as the ende of all ſuch doth declare commonly, which vſe the like art or trade. The Lorde and God of al mercye, through the ſpirite of Ieſus our redemer, diſſolue ẏ works of Sathan, and preſerue the hartes of our nobles, and of al other Engliſhmen from ſuch infection. Amen.

An admonition for ſorcerers and wicked coniurers.

After Silueſter ſucceded Ioannes xix. by whom was brought in (as Volateran ſayth) the feaſt of all ſoules, an. 1004. through the meanes and inſtigation of one Odilo Abbot of Cluniake, to be celebrate; next after the feaſt of all Saintes. This Monke Odilo, thinking that Purgatory (as he heard) ſhould be in the mount Aetna: dreamed vpō a time in the countrey of Sicile, that he by his Maſſes had deliuered diuers ſoules from thēce: ſaying moreouer, that he did heare the voyces and lamētations of deuils crying out, for that the ſoules were taken frō them by the Maſſes & Dirges funerall. Ex Bakenthorpo. in prolo. 4. Lib. Sentent. And not lōg after him came Iohn the xx. and Sergius the iiij. After whom ſucceded Benedictus the viij. then Iohn the 21. who being promoted by art magike of Theophilact his nephew, Gratianus, Brazutus and other Sorcerers brought in firſt the faſt of the eue of Iohn Baptiſt and S. Laurēce. After him followed pope Benedictus the 9. likewiſe aſpiring to his Papacy, by like magike, practiſing inchauntmentes and coniuration in woodes, after horrible maner. who reſiſting the Emperor Henricus 3. ſonne to Conradus, and placing in his rowme Petrus the king of Hungarie wyth this verſe. Petra dedit Romam Petro, tibi Papa coronam: Afterward for feare of Henricus preuailing in battaile, hee was faine to ſell his ſeate to his ſucceſſoure Gratianus, called Gregorius vi. for 1500. poundes. At which time were 3. Popes together in Rome, raigning & raging one againſt an other. Benedictus ix. Silueſter 3. & Gregorius vi. thereupon inacting, that there ſhould no biſhop of Rome henceforth be choſen, but by the conſent and confirmation of the Emperour. which conſtitution though it was both agreable & alſo neceſſary for publike trāquillitie of that citie, yet the Cardinals would not ſuffer it long to ſtand, but did impugne it afterward by ſubtile practiſe and open violence, as in proceſſe (the Lord permitting) ſhal appeare, in the time of Henricus the 4. and 5. In the time of this Clement, the Romanes made an othe to the Emperour, concerning the election of the Byſhops, themſelues to entermeddle no farther therein, but as the aſſent of the Emperour ſhould goe with all. Howbeit the Emperour departing thence into Germanie againe, by and by they forgote their othe, and within 9. monethes after poyſoned the Biſhop. which fact ſome impute to Stephen his ſucceſſour, called Damaſus 2. Some impute it to Brazutus, who (as hiſtories record) within 13. yeares poyſoned 6. popes, that is, Clemens 2. Damaſus. 2. Leo. 9. Victor. 2. Stephanus 9. Nicolaus the 2.

Pope Leo the 9.

Thus Clement being poyſoned, after him ſucceded Damaſus 2. neither by conſent of the people, nor of the emperour elected: but by force and inuaſion, who alſo within 23. daies being poiſoned. An. 1049. much contention and ſtriuing began in Rome about the Papal ſeat. wherupon the Romans, through the counſel of the Cardinals, ſent to the foreſaid Emperor, deſiring to geue them a biſhop, and ſo he did, whoſe name was Bruno an Almain, and biſhop of Collen, afterwarde called Leo 9. This Bruno being a ſimple man and eaſie to be led with euil counſel, comming from the Emperour towards Rome in his pontificall apparell like a Pope: meeteth him by the way the Abbot of Cluniake, and Hildebrand a monke. who ſeing him ſo in his pontificalibus, begā to rate him, laying to his charge, that he would ſo take his authoritie of the Emperour, and not rather of the Clergy of Rome & the people thereof, as other his predeceſſors were wont to doe: and ſo counſelled him, to lay downe that apparel, and to enter in wᵗ his own habite, till he had hys election by them. Bruno following their counſel, and confeſſing his fault before the Clergie of Rome, obtained their fauor, and ſo was nominate Leo 9. wherby Hildebrand was made a Cardinall, & put in high rowme. Under this Pope Leo were two Councels, one kept at Vercellis, where the doctrine of Berengarius againſt the reall ſubſtance in the Sacrament was firſt condemned, although Berengarius yet recanted not, whych neuertheleſſe was done after in the Councel of Laterane, vnder Nicolas 2. An. M. lx. The other was kept at Moguntia, where amongſt many other decrees was enacted, prieſts to be excluded and debarred vtterly from mariage. Item, that no lay men might geue benefice, or biſhoprick, or any ſpirituall promotion. &c.

This Leo, being at Wormes wᵗ the Emperour vpon Chriſtmas day, did excommunicate the ſubdeacon becauſe in reading the Epiſtle, he did it not in the Romane tune, he being there preſent. The Archbiſhop moued therewith, departed from the altare (being then at Maſſe) ſaying, he woulde not procede no farther in his ſeruice, vnleſſe hys ſubdeacon were reſtored. wherupon the Pope cōmāded him to be releaſed, & ſo they went forward in their ſeruice.

Concilium Florentinum.

After the death of Leo, whom Brazutus poyſoned the firſt yere of his popedome. Theophilactus did ſtriue to be Pope: but Hildebrand to defeat him, went to the emperor, (partly alſo being ſent by yͤ Romanes for feare of the Emperours diſpleaſure) who aſſigned an other biſhop, a Germaine, called Victor 2. This Victor hauing a Councell at Florence, depoſed diuers Biſhops and Prieſtes, for ſimony and fornicatiō. For ſimony, in that they toke of ſecular men their dignities for money: for fornication, in that contrary to their Canon, they were maried. &c. The 2. yeare of his papacie and little more, this Pope alſo followed his predeceſſours being poyſoned by the foreſaide Brazutus, through the procurement of Hildebrand and his maiſter.

Pope Stephan the ix.
The Church of Millan firſt brought vnder the Church of Rome.
The Emperour accuſed of hereſie.
Hildebrand ſent in commiſſion for ſimonie.

Here now began the Church and Clergie of Rome, to wring out of the emperours hand the election of the pope: electing Stephen the 9. for pope, contrary to their oth and to the Emperours aſſignement. Here was the Churche of Millan firſt brought to obedience of the Romiſh Church, by this Stephanus the 9. biſhop of Rome. who alſo ſhamed not to accuſe the Emperor Henry (of whom mention is made before) of hereſy: for miniſhing the authority of the Romane ſea. So this was their hereſie at that time, not to maintaine the ambitious proceedings of the Romiſh prelate. And ſimonie they called this, to take & enioy any ſpirituall liuing at a ſecular mans hand. wherefore Stephen hearing this ſimonie to raigne in diuers places, namely in the Churches of Burgundy and Italy, ſent forth the Cardinal Hildebrand to reforme the matter: who was no leſſe earneſt in that kinde of commiſſion to help the matter forwarde.

Hildebrand beginneth to ſturre.

Pope Benedictus.

Pope Nicolaus the 2.
Two Popes together at Rome.
Pope Benedict vnpopeth himſelfe.

In the meane time Stephanus yͤ pope, taking of Brazutus cup fel ſick. Hildebrand hearing that, applieth home wᵗ all poſt ſpeede. So being returned to Rome, aſſembleth all the companies and orders of the Clergy together, making thē to ſweare: that they ſhould admit none to be Byſhop, but which ſhould be appointed by the publike cōſent of them altogether. This being done, Hildebrande taketh his iorney to Florēce (belike to fetch the biſhop of Florēce) to ſtal him biſhop: the clergy ſwearing to him, that no biſhop ſhuld be ordained before his returne againe. But the people of Rome not ſuffering the election to ſtand ſo long, after the death of Stephan: elected one of their owne citie, called Benedictus the 10. Hildebrand hearing of this, was not a little offended: wherefore returning to Rome wyth one Gerhardus biſhop of Florēce, cauſed yͤ clergy to procede to a newe election, ſaying: that Benedictus was not lawfully called but came in by force & bribing. But yͤ clergie not daring to attempt any new election at Rome, wēt to Sene, and there elected this Garhardus biſhop of Florence, whome Hildebrande brought with him. So were 2. popes in Rome together: But Garhardus named Nicolaus 2. holding a councel at Sutrium, through the helpe of Duke Godfride and Guibert, and other biſhops about Italie, cauſed the other Pope to be depoſed. Benedictus vnderſtāding them to be ſet againſt him through yͤ means of Hildebrand, vnpoped himſelf, and went to Velitras, liuing there more quietly thē he ſhuld haue done at Rome.

The gloſe of the popes decrees refuted.

Concilium Laterani.
Anno. 1059.
Diſt. 23. cap. In no.

Here is to be touched by the way, the error of the gloſe vpon the 23. diſt. which falſly alledgeth out of the Chronicles, yᵗ Benedictus 10. which ſucceded Stephen, was depoſed: after whō came Ioannes biſhop of Sabine for money, & he againe depoſed. Benedictus was then reſtored, and after diſplaced againe, and then Ioannes Archdeacon ad portam latinam, was made Pope, and he againe depoſed by the Emperor, and all this wᵗin one yere. which hiſtory neither is founde in any Chronicle, nor agreeth vpon any Benedictus, ſaue only that Benedictus 9. was depoſed, & then reigned 3. popes together, Benedictus 9. Siluester 3. & Gregorius 6. which before was called Ioannes ad portam latinam, whome the Emperor depoſed (all three together.) But that Benedict neither was the 10. neither did hee ſucceede pope Stephen, as the gloſe recordeth. Nicolas thus being ſet vp without the minde both of the emperour, & of the people of Rome, after his fellow Pope was driuen away: brake vp the Synode of Sutrium, & came to Rome, where he aſſembled an other councel, called concilium Lateranum. In which councel firſt was promulgate the terrible ſentence of excommunication mentioned in the decrees, & beginneth: In nomine Domini noſtri. &c. The effect whereof is this. Firſt, that he after a ſubtile practiſe (as farre and as plainly as he durſt ſpeake) vndermindeth the Emperours iuriſdiction, and transferreth to a few Cardinals, and certaine Catholike perſons, the full authoritie of chuſing the Pope. Secondly, againſt all ſuch as do creepe into the ſeat of Peter, by money or fauoure wᵗout the full conſent of the Cardinals: he thundreth with terrible blaſts of excommunication, accurſing them and their children with deuils, as wicked perſons to the anger of almighty god, geuing alſo authoritie and power to Cardinals, with the Clergie and laitie, to depoſe all ſuch perſons, and cal a councel general, whereſoeuer they wil againſt them.

A terrible curſe of Pope Nicolaus.

Berengarius driuen to recantation.

Item, in the ſayde Councell of Laterane, vnder Pope Nicholas the ſeconde, Berengarius Andegauenſis, an Archdeacon was driuen to the recantation of his doctrine, denying the reall ſubſtance of Chriſtes holy body and bloud to be in the Sacrament, otherwiſe then ſacramentally and in myſterie.

Tranſubſtantiation brought into the Church.

In the ſame councell alſo was hatched & inuented, the new found deuiſe and terme of Tranſubſtantiation.

Nauclerus, Platina. Eneas Sil.

Potentia papæ Coactiua ſtandeth not with the Goſpell.

It were to long heere to declare the confederation betwixt this Nicholas, and Robertus Guiſcardus: whome this pope (cōtrary to all right and good law, diſplacing the right heire) made Duke of Apulia, Calabria, Sicilia, and captain general of S. Peters lands: that through his force of armes and violence, he might the better ſubdue all ſuch as ſhould rebell to his obedience, and ſo did. Nowe let all men iudge & vnderſtand (which be godly wiſe) howe this ſtandeth wᵗ the doctrine of Chriſt, the example of Peter, or the ſpirit of a chriſten biſhop, by outward armes & violēce to conquer chriſten men & countreis, vnder the obedience of a biſhops ſea. Thus Pope Nicolas the 2. well anſwering to his Greeke name: by might and force continued 3. yeres and a halfe. But at length he mette with Brazutus cup, and ſo turned vp his heeles.

Anno. 1062.

At the beginning of this Nicolas, or ſomewhat before, Henricus.4. Emperour.

about the yere of our Lorde 1057. Henricus the 4. after the deceaſe of Henrie the 3. was made Emperour being but a childe, & raigned 50. yeres: but not without great moleſtatiō and much diſquietnes, and all through the vngracious wickedneſſe of Hildebrand, as hereafter (the Lord ſo permitting) ſhalbe declared.

Here, by the way commeth to be noted, an exāple, whereby all Princes may learne and vnderſtand, how the pope is to be handled, whoſoeuer loketh to haue any goodneſſe at his hand. If a man ſtand in feare of his curſe, he ſhall be made his ſlaue, but if he be deſpiſed of you, ye ſhalhaue him as you liſt. For the Popes curſe may well be aſſimiled to Domicianus thunder: If a man geue eare to the noiſe and cracke, it ſemeth a terrible thing: but if ye conſider the cauſes and effect therof, it is a moſt vaine ridicle.

The Popes curſe compared to Domicianus thunder.

Aldredus Archbiſhop of Yorke.

In the reigne of this Nicolas, An. 1060. Aldredus Byſhop of worceſter, after ẏ deceaſe of Kinſius his predeceſſor ſhuld be made Archbiſhop of Yorke, who comming to Rome with Toſtius erle of Northumberlād, for his palle (as the maner was) could not obtein it, but was depriued of all his dignitie (for ſome default, I can not tell what) in his aunſwer. And furthermore, after his reuerſion home, was ſpoyled alſo of all that he brought wt him. whereupon he returning againe to Rome with Toſtius the foreſayde Erle, there made his complaint, but could not be heard: til Toſtius, a man of ſtout courage, taking ẏ matter in hand, tolde the Pope to his face, that his curſe was not to be feared in farre countreis, which his owne neighbours, yea & moſt vile vacabonds derided and deſpiſed at home. wherfore he required the Pope, either to reſtore Aldredus again to his goods loſt, or els it ſhould be knowen, that they were loſt through his meanes and ſubtlety. And furthermore, it would come to paſſe, that ẏ king of England hearing this, would debar him of ſ. Peters tribute, taking it for a great ſhame to him & his realme, if Aldredus ſhould come from Rome both depriued of dignity, & ſpoiled alſo of his goods. &c. In fine, the Pope thus perſwaded by the argument of his purſe, was content to ſende home Aldredus with his palle, according to his requeſt.

Toſtius how he perſwaded the Pope.

After the death of Nicholas, the Lombardes being oppreſſed before by pope Nicholas, and brought vnder fear, were the more deſirous, and thought it good to haue a Biſhop of their company: and ſo elected the biſhop of Parmē called Cadolus, to be Pope: ſending to the emperour and deſiring his fauour and ſupportation therein. For the election of the Pope (ſayd they) moſt properly apperteined vnto him.

Cadolus a Lombard made Pope by the Emperour.

The emperor wel pleaſed and content, geueth his good leaue and voice wt al. Hildebrandus, no leſſe a wicked Necromancer, then a ſtoute mainteiner of popiſh liberties againſt good emperors, hearing this: ſetteth vp by a cōtrary faction, an other biſhop, Anſelmus, after called Alexander the 2. Cadolus thus elected by the emperor & the Cardinals, ſetteth forwarde to Rome with a ſufficient army & ſtrength of mē. Alexander alſo no les prepared, there receiueth him with an other army, where they had a great conflict, & many ſlaine on both ſides. But Cadolus as he had the better cauſe, ſo had he the worſe fortune: who being repelled, yet repaired himſelf and came again with a greater power. Albeit, he preuailed not. The Emperor ſeeing this hurly burly: to take vp the matter, ſent thither his embaſſador Otho, Archbiſhop of Colen: who cōming to Rome, beginneth ſharply to chide the pope for taking ſo vpō him without the leaue or knowledge of the emperor, declaring how ẏ election of that ſea ought chiefly to appertein to the right of the emperor, as it hath done for ẏ moſt part in the time of his predeceſſors tofore. But Hildebrande all ſet on wickednes and ambition, and alſo puft vp not a litle, with his late victories: not ſuffering the embaſſador to tel to the end, interrupted him in the middle of his tale, affirming, ẏ if they ſhould ſtand to law and cuſtome, the libertie of that election ſhuld rather belong to the clergy, then to the Emperor. To make ſhort, Otho the embaſſador bearing (belike) more with the Clergie, then with the emperour, was content to be perſwaded: onely required this in the emperors name, a coūcell to be had, to decide the matter: wherat the emperor ſhould be preſent himſelfe. And ſo he was: In the which councel being kept at Mantua, Alexander was declared pope, the other had his pardon graunted. In this councell amongſt many other cōſiderations, was concluded concerning prieſts to haue no wiues: ſuch as haue cōcubines to ſay no maſſe: prieſts children not to be ſecluded from holy orders: no benefices to be bought for mony. Alleluya to be ſuſpended in time of Lent out of the church. &c. This alſo was decreed (which made moſt for Hildebrandus purpoſe) that no ſpirituall man, whatſoeuer he be, ſhoulde enter in any Church, by a ſecular perſone, & that the Pope ſhould be elected onely by the Cardinals, &c. Benno Cardinalis wryteth thus of Alexander, that after he perceiued the frauds of Hildebrande, and of other the Emperours enemies: and vnderſtanding that he was ſet vp and inthroniſed, but onely for a purpoſe: being at his Maſſe, as he was preaching to the people, told them, he wold not ſit in ẏ place, vnleſſe he had the licence of the Emperour. which when Hildebrandus heard, he was ſtroken in ſuche a furie, that ſcarſly he could keepe his handes of him, while Maſſe was done. After the Maſſe being finiſhed, by force of ſouldiours & ſtrength of men he had him into a chamber, and there all to be pomild Pope Alexander with his fiſtes, rating and rebuking him for that he would ſeeke for fauoure of the Emperor. Thus Alexander being kept vp in cuſtody, and being ſtinted to a certaine allowance, as about v. groates a day. Hildebrand incrocheth all the whole reuenues of the Church to him ſelfe, procuring thereby muche treaſure. At length Alexander vnder the miſerable enduraunce of Hildebrand, died at euentide after 11. yeares & half of his popedome. And thus much of Romiſh matters.

Pope Alexander knockt about the pate by Hildebrand.

These things thus diſcourſed concerning the matters of Rome (now returning againe to our owne country ſtory) the order therof would require to enter againe into the reigne of william Conqueror, the next king following in England. But as a certain oration of K. Edgarus, which ſhould haue bene placed before, chanced in the meane time to come to my hands, not vnworthy to be read: I thought by the way in the ende of this booke, to inſert the ſame (although out of order) yet better I iudge it out of order, then out of the booke.

The oration of king Edgar to the Clergie.

BEcauſe God hath ſhewed his great mercy to worke with vs: it is meete (moſt reuerend Fathers) that with worthy works we ſhould anſwer his innumerable benefites. For we poſſeſſe not the land by our owne ſworde, and our owne arme hath not ſaued vs: but his right hande and his holy arme, becauſe he hath bene delighted in vs. Therfore it is meete that we ſhould ſubmit both our ſelues and our ſoules to him that hath ſubiected all theſe thinges vnder our gouernement: and that we ought ſtoutly to laboure, that they whome he hath made ſubiect to vs, might be ſubiect to his lawes. It belongs to me to rule the lay people with the lawe of equitie, to doe iuſt iudgement betwene man and his neighbour, to puniſh Church robbers, to holde vnder rebelles to deliuer the helpleſſe from the hande of the ſtronger, the needye alſo and the poore from them that robbe them. It belongs alſo to my care to prouide neceſſary things to the miniſters of the Churches, to the flockes of the Monkes, to the company of virgins, and to prouide for their peace and quiet. The examining of all whoſe maners belongeth vnto vs: whether they liue chaſtly, if they behaue themſelues honeſtly towarde them that be without, whether they be diligent at Gods ſeruice, if they be earneſt to teache the people if they be ſober in eating and drinking, if they keepe meaſure in apparell, and if they be diſcreete in iudgement. If ye had regarded theſe thinges with a triall of them (O reuerende fathers, by your leaues I ſpeake) ſuche horrible and abhominable thinges of the Clearkes, ſhoulde not haue come vnto our eares. I omit to ſpeake how their crowne is not broad, nor their rounding conuenient, the wantonneſſe in your life, your pryde in your geſture, the filthineſſe in your wordes, doe declare the euill of the inward man.

Pſal. 43.

Furthermore what negligence is in Gods ſeruice, when ſcarce they will be preſent at the holy vigils? And when they come to maſſe, they ſeeme rather to be gathered to play and laugh, then to ſing. I will tell that, that good men be ſory for, and the euil laugh at. I will ſpeake with ſorrow (if ſo be I may expreſſe it) how they be riotous in banquetings, in chambering dronkennes, and vnſhamefaſtnes: that now clerkes houſes may be thought to be a ſtewes of harlots, and a couent of players. There be dice, there is dancing, and ſinging, there is watching to midnight, with crying and ſhouting. Thus the goods of kinges, the almes of princes, yea (and that more is) the price of that precious bloud is not eſteemed. Haue our fathers thē ſpent their treaſures for this purpoſe? Hath the kinges cofers decayed by taking awaye many reuenues, for this cauſe? Hath the kinges liberalitie geuen landes and poſſeſſions to Chriſtes Churches for this intent, that Clarkes harlots ſhoulde be decked with the ſame? that riotous feaſtes might be dreſſed? that houndes and haukes and ſuch other toyes might be gotten? The ſouldiours crye out of theſe thinges, the people grudge minſtrels ſing and daunce, and yet ye regard it not, ye ſpare it, ye diſſemble it. Where is the ſworde of Leuy, and the zeale of Simeon, whiche killed the Sichemites, and the Circumciſed, which bare the figure of them that defile Chriſtes Churche, with filthy deedes, becauſe they abuſed Iacobes daughter as a harlot? Where is Moyſes ſpirite whiche ſpared not hys owne kinſfolke that worſhipped the head of the Calfe?

Deut.33.

Where is Phinies the prieſtes dagger, which pacified Gods anger by his holy zeale, when he killed him that plaied the harlote with the Madianite? Where is Peters ſpirite, by whoſe power couetouſnes is deſtroied, & ſimonical hereſie is condemned? Be earneſt ye Prieſts, be earneſt, to followe the waies of the Lord, & the righteouſnes of our God. It is time to doe againſt them that haue broken the law of God. I haue Conſtantines ſword, and yee haue Peters ſworde in your hands, let vs ioyne right hands, let vs couple ſword to ſword, that the lepers may be caſt out of the tēples, that the holy place of the Lord may be purged, and the ſonnes of Leuie may miniſter in the temple, who ſaid to his father and mother I know you not, and to his brothers I know not you. Goe to diligently I pray you, leaſt we repent to haue done that, that we haue done, & to haue geuen that, that we geue. If we ſhall ſee that to be ſpent not in Gods ſeruice, but on the riotouſnes of wicked men, through vile and corrupt liberty of life for lacke of chaſtiſement: let the reliques of holy ſaintes which they deſpiſe, and the holy altars, before which they play the madde men, mooue you. Let the great deuotion of our ancetours moue you, whoſe almes the madneſſe of the Clearkes doeth abuſe. My great graundfather (as yee know) gaue the tenth parte of all hys landes to Churches and Abbeys. My greate greate graundfather Alfredus of holy memorie, thoughte it not meete to ſpare hys Treaſures, his goodes, no coſtes, nor rentes, that he might enriche the Church. My grandfather the elder, Edward, your fatherhoode is not ignoraunt, howe great things he gaue to the Churches It becommeth you to remember with what gifts my father & his brothers did enrich Chriſtes altars. O father of fathers Dunſtane, beholde I pray thee the eyes of my father looking on thee, from that bright place of heauen. Harken his complaining words, ſounding in thine eares thus pitifully lamenting. O father Dunſtane, thou, thou I ſay, geueſt me counſell to builde Abbaies and Churches, thou waſt my helper and fellow worker in all things. I choſe thee as a ſhepheard and biſhop of my ſoule, and a keper of my maners. Whē did I not obey thee? what treaſures did I preferre in reſpect of thy counſels? What poſſeſsions did I not deſpiſe, if thou badde me? If thou thought meete to geue any thing to the poore, I was ready. If thou thought meete to geue any thing to Churches, I deferred not. If thou complained that Monkes or Clearkes wanted any thing, I ſupplied. Thou ſaideſt that almes laſted for euer, and that there was none more fruitfull then that which was geuen to Abbeis or Churches. For with that, both Gods ſeruaunts are ſuſtained, and that which remaineth is geuen to the poore. O worthy almes. O worthy price of the ſoule. Oh wholeſome remedie for our ſinnes, which nowe doeth ſtincke in the ſweete furres of prieſts lemmans, wherwith they adorne their eares & decke their fingers, apparelling their delicate bodies with ſilke and purple. O father, is this the fruite of mine almes, is this the effect of my deſire, and of thy promiſe? What wilt thou anſwer to this complaint of my fathers? I know, I know, when thou didſt ſee a thiefe, thou runneſt not with him, neither haſt thou put thy portion with adulterers. Thou haſt rebuked, thou haſt exhorted, thou haſt blamed them, but wordes haue bene deſpiſed. Nowe we muſt come to ſtripes of correction, thou haſt here with thee the worſhipfull father Edward biſhop of Wincheſter. Thou haſt the reuerend Prelate Oſwold biſhop of Worceſter, I commit this buſineſſe to you, that both by Biſhoply correction, and the kings authority the filthy liues may be caſt out of the Churches, and they that liue orderly may be brought in. &c.

The ignorance and ſuperſtition of the tyme of K.Edgar noted.

The doctrine of iuſtification vnknowne.

Iuſtification by fayth in Chriſt.

In this Oration of K. Edgar aboue prefixed, 3. things are chiefly to be noted & conſidered, to them ẏ haue iudgements to marke and vnderſtand, to witte: The religious zeale and deuotion of kings, both in geuing to the church, & alſo in correcting the maners of churchmen. 2. Secondly, the diſſolute behauiour and wantonneſſe of the clergie, then abuſing the great donatiōs and patrimonies of princes beſtowed vpon them. 3. Thirdly, the blinde ignorance and ſuperſtition of that time in both ſtates, as well Eccleſiaſtical as temporal, in eſteeming Chriſtes religion chiefly to conſiſt in geuing to Churches, and in maintaining of Monkery, falſly being perſwaded that remiſſion of their ſinnes, & remedy of their ſoules therein did lie in building monaſteries, erecting churches and cloyſters, and in placing monks in the ſame, and ſuch other almes deedes, and workes of deuotion. wherin appeareth how ignorāt that time was of the true doctrine of Chriſtes faith, and of free grace of the Goſpell, which promiſeth life, remedy, and iuſtification, not by any deuout merits of oures, nor by any workes either of the lawe of God, or of the inuentions of man, but onely and freely by our faith vpon Chriſt Ieſus the ſonne of God, in whom only conſiſteth al the promiſes of God. Amen.

William Conquerour.

WILLIAM Duke of Normandie, ſurnamed Conqueror, baſe ſonne of Duke Robert, the ſixth Duke of Normandie, & nephew vnto king Edward: after the foreſaid victorie againſt Harold & the Engliſhmen obtained, was receiued king ouer the Realme of Englande, not ſo much by the aſſent, as for feare and neceſſitie of time. For els the Londiners had promiſed their aſſiſtance to Edgar Atheling to the vttermoſt of their power. But being weakened & waſted ſo greatly in battailes before, and the Duke comming ſo faſt vppon them, fearing not to make their partie good, ſubmitted themſelues. Whereupon the ſaide William (of a Duke made a King) was crowned vpon Chriſtmas day the yeare of our Lorde 1067. by the handes of Aldredus Archb. of Yorke. Forſomuch as at that time Stigandus Archb. of Canterb. was abſent, or els durſt not, or woulde not come in the preſence of the king. A litle before the comming in of this Duke, a terrible blaſing ſtarre was ſeene, the ſpace of 7. daies, which was the yere before. In record whereof, as well of the conqueſt of the Duke, as of the blaſing ſtarre, theſe verſes yet remaine.

Anno. 1067.

A blaſing ſtarre.

Sexagenus erat ſextus milleſimus annus.
Cum pereunt Angli, ſtella monſtrante cometa.

Which king thus being crowned, did reigne ouer the realme of England the ſpace of 21. yeres, and one moneth, with great ſeuerity & cruelnes, towarde the Engliſhmen, burdening them with great tribute and exactions, which was to pay of euery hide of grounde, containing 20. acres 6. ſhillings. By meane wherof certaine parties of the land rebelled, and ſpecially the citie of Excester. But at laſt William ouercame them, and wan the city and puniſhed them grieuouſly. But for that & for other ſterne deedes of William, diuers of the Lordes departed to Scotland: wherfore he kept the other Lordes that taried the ſtraiter, and exalted the Normanes, geuing to them the chiefe poſſeſſions of the land. And for ſo much as he obteyned the kingdome by force and dent of ſword, he chaunged the whole ſtate of the gouernance of this common weale: and ordeined new lawes at his owne pleaſure, profitable to himſelf, but greuous & hurtful to the people: aboliſhing the lawes of king Edward, wherunto notw̄ſtanding he was ſworn before, to obſerue & maintaine. For the which great commotions and rebellions remained long after among the people, as hyſtories record: to haue the ſayd lawes of king Edwarde reuiued againe.

Tribute.

Rebellion. Erle Marcarus, and Eerle Edwyne, Edgar Atheling, with hys mother, & ij. ſiſters, Margaret, and Chriſtian fled into Scotland.

New king new lawes. King William forſworne in aboliſhing King Edwardes lawes.

Ouer and beſides this, he builded 4. ſtrong caſtles, 2. at Yorke, one at Notingham, another at Lincolne, which garriſons he furniſhed with Normanes.

About the third yere of his reigne, Harold & Canutus ſonnes of Suanus, King of Denmarke, entered into the North countrey. The Normanes wythin Yorke fearing that the Engliſhmen woulde aide the Danes, fired the ſuburbes of the towne, wherof the flame was ſo big, and the winde ſo ſtrong, that it tooke into the city, and brent a great part therof, with the minſter of S. Peter, where no doubt many worthy workes and Monuments of bookes were conſumed. In the time whereof, the Danes by fauour of ſome of the citizens entred the citie, and ſlew more then iij. M. of the Normanes. But not long after King William chaſed them out and droue them to the ſhips, & tooke ſuche diſpleaſure with the inhabitaūtes of that countrey, that he deſtroied the land from Yorke to Durham, ſo that 9. yeres after, the prouince lay waſt and vnmanured, onely except S. Iohns land of Beuerley, & the people therof ſo ſtraitly being kept in penurye by the warre of the king, that (as our Engliſh ſtorie ſayeth) they eate rats, cats, and dogs, and other vermine.

Yorke with the minſter of S. Peter brent.

The north countrey waſted. Horrible famine in the north partes. Slaughter of Northumbland men. Scots ſubdued to K. William.

Alſo in the fourth yeare of this king, Malcolyn king of Scots, entred into Northumberland & deſtroyed the coūtrey, & ſlew there much of the people both of men, women and children after a lamentable ſorte, and tooke ſome priſoners. But within 2. yeares after, king William made ſuch warre vpon the Scottes, that he forced Malcolyn theyr king to doe him homage.

The continuall affliction and diſquietnes of this Realme of England. Fiue conqueſtes which haue bene in this Realme. Romaines, Scots and pictes, Saxons, Danes, Normandes.

And thus much concerning the outwarde calamities of this Realme, vnder this foreine Conquerour. Whych is nowe the fifth time that the ſayd land, with the inhabitaunce thereof hath bene ſcourged by the hande of God. Firſt by the Romaines in the time of Iulius Ceſar. Then by the Scottes and Pictes (as hath bene ſhewed) afterwarde by the Saxons. Againe, the Saxons or Engliſhmen did not enioy the poſſeſſion of Britain with long quiete, but were brought in as much ſubiection themſelues vnder the Danes, as they had brought the Britaines before (and that muche more) in ſo muche that throughe all England, if an Engliſhe man had mette a Dane vppon a bridge, he might not ſtirre one foote, before the Lord Dane (otherwiſe Lurdane) were paſt. And then if the Engliſhe man had not geuen lowe reuerence to the Dane, at hys comming by, he was ſure to be ſharpely puniſhed (wyth more) as aboue hath bene declared. And this ſubiection almoſte continued from the reigne of Kinge Ethelwolfus 230. yeares, till the reigne of king Edwarde. And yet the indignation of God thus ceaſed not: but ſtirred vp ẏ Normandes againſt them, who Conquered and altered the whole Realme after their owne purpoſe, inſomuche that beſides the innouation of the lawes, coignes, and poſſeſſions: there was in no Church of England almoſte anye Engliſh biſhop, but only Normands & forreiners placed through all their Dioces. To ſuche miſerie was this lande then brought vnto, that not onely of all the Engliſh nobilitie not one houſe was ſtanding: but alſo it was thought reprochfull to be called an Engliſh man. This puniſhmēt of God againſt the Engliſh nation, writers do aſſigne diuerſly to diuers cauſes (as partly before is touched) of whō ſome aſſigne this to be cauſe, as foloweth in the wordes of the ſtorie: In primitiua Angliæ Eccleſia religio clariſſimè ſplenduit, ita vt Reges & Reginæ, Duces & Epiſcopi, vel Monachatū, vel exilium pro Dei amore appeterent: proceſſu verò temporis adeo omnis virtus in eis emarcuit, vt gentem nullam proditione & nequitia ſibi parem eſſe permitterent. &c. The meanyng whereof is, that whereas Kings and Queenes, Dukes, and Prelates in the primitiue time of the Engliſh church, were ready for Religion, to forſake either liberty or countrey, and giue themſelues to a ſolitarie life: In proceſſe of time they grew to ſuch diſſolutenes, that they left no other realme like vnto them in iniquity. &c. Againe ſome writing of the viſion of king Edward a litle before the inuaſion of the Normāds: teſtify, how the king reporting of his owne viſion, ſhould heare, that for the great enormitye and miſbehauior of the heade Dukes, Biſhops, and Abbats of the realme: the kingdome ſhould be geuen to the hand of their enemies, after the deceaſe of him, for the ſpace of a C. yeres, and one day. Which ſpace was alſo ſeene by William conquerour, to be a hundreth yeres & fiftie: and that his progenie ſo long ſhould continue. Againe, ſome wryters entreating of this ſo great wrath of God vpon the Engliſhe people, declare the cauſe thereof, as foloweth. Nam ſicut Angl. Britones, quos Deus diſterminare propoſuerat (peccatis ſuis exigentibus) humiliuerant, & a terra Angliæ minus iniuſtè fugauerant: ſic ipſi duplici perſecutione. &c. Like as the Engliſhmen did ſubdue the Britons (whom God propoſed, for theyr deſeruings, to exterminate) and them vniuſtly did diſpoſſeſſe of their land: ſo they ſhould likewiſe be ſubdued and ſcourged with a double perſecution, firſt by ẏ Danes and after by the Normanes. &c. Moreouer to theſe iniuries and iniquities done, and wrought by the Engliſh men hetherto recited, let vs adde alſo the cruell villanie of this nation, in murdering and tything of the innocent Normans before: who comming as ſtraungers wyth Alrede the lawfull heire of the Crowne, were deſpitefully put to death. Which ſeemeth to me no little cauſe, why the Lorde (whoſe doings be alwaies iuſt & right) did ſuffer the Normans ſo to preuaile. By the cõming in of the which Normans, and by their quarel vnto the Realme, iij. things we may note & learne. Firſt to conſider and learne the righteous retribution, and wrath of God from heauen, vpon all iniquitie and vnrighteous dealing of men. Secondly, we may thereby note, what it is for Princes to leaue no iſſue or ſure ſucceſſion behinde them. Thirdly, what daungers often do chaunce to Realmes publiquely by foreine mariage with other Princes. &c.

Three thinges in this conqueſt to be noted.

A councell holden at Wincheſter.
Might ouercommeth right.

In the ſame fourth yeare of this king, betwene Eaſter and Whitſontide, was holden a ſolemne councell at Wincheſter of ẏ clergy of England. At the which counſell were preſent two Cardinals, ſent from Pope Alexander 2. Peter, & Iohn. In this counſell the king being there himſelfe preſent, were depoſed diuers biſhops, Abbots, and priors (by the meanes of the king) wout any euident cauſe: to the intent his Normans might be preferred to the rule of the Church as he had preferred his knightes before to ẏ rule of the tẽporaltie, therby to ſtand in more ſurety of the land. Amongeſt whõ alſo Stigandus Archb. of Cant. was put downe, for 3. cauſes againſt him pretended.

Diuers Biſhops, Abbots, and priours depoſed in England.
Stigandus Archb. of Cant. depriued, and the cauſes why.

The firſt was, for that he had holden wrongfully that byſhoprike, while Robert the Archbiſhop (aboue mẽtioned, pag. 156.) was liuing.

The ſeconde was, for that he had receiued the palle of Benedict byſhop of Rome the fifth of that name. Whyche Benedict, for buying his Popedome, had bene depoſed, as is ſhewed before.

The thirde cauſe, for that he occupied the ſaid palle wout licenſe and lawfull autoritie of the court of Rome.

Faire countenaunce not to be truſted.

Then Stigandus wel proued the beneuolence of king William. For where before the king ſeemed in frendly cõtenance to make much of him, and did vnto him great reuerence: then he chaunged all his mildeneſſes into ſternes, & excuſed himſelfe by ẏ biſhops of Romes autority: So that in the ende, Stigandus was depriued of his dignitie, and kept in Wincheſter, as a priſoner during his life. This Stigandus is noted for a man ſo couetous and ſparing, that when he would take nothing of his owne, and ſwearing that he had not a penie, yet by a key faſtned about his necke, was found great treaſours of his vnder the groũd.

A couetous Byſhop.

Thomas made Archb. of York.
Lanfrancus an Italian Archb. of Canterb.

At the ſame time was preferred to the Archbiſhoprike of Yorke, Thomas a Normand, and Chanon of Baion.

At which time alſo Lanfrancus Abbot of Cadomonencie (a Lumbard, and Italian borne) was ſent for, and made Archbyſhop of Cant. betweene which two Archbyſhops about their cõſecration, firſt began a contention, for geuing & taking the othe of obedience, but that contention was at that time appeaſed by the king. And Thomas contented to ſubſcribe to the Archbiſhop of Cant. obedience.

The minſter of Yorke builded.

Iacobus Archb. of Mentz.

Eneas Siluius writeth to be 50. Biſhoprickes in Germany.

After this it followed within ſhort ſpace, that the ſayde Lanfrancus and Thomas Archbyſhop of Yorke, who firſt builded the minſter of Yorke, & gaue poſſeſſions therunto: came to Rome with Remigius Byſhop of Dorceſter, for their palles, as the maner was: without which, no Archbiſhop nor biſhop could be cõfirmed, although their election were neuer ſo lawfull. This palle muſt be aſked no where but of the Pope or his aſſignes, and that wythin 3. monethes: alſo it muſt be aſked not faintly but mightely: Diſt.C cap.priſca. Which, as it was a chargeable thing to other nations (eſpecially ſuche as were far from Rome) ſo it was no ſmall gaine to the Romiſh ſea, ſo as they did order it: for although at the beginning the palle was geuẽ without money, according to the decree. Diſt.C. or for litle, as percaſe in this time of Lanfrank: yet in proceſſe of yeres it grew to ſuch exceſſe, that where the biſhoprik of Mentz was wonte to geue to Rome but x. M. Florences: afterward it aroſe ſo, that he that aſked to haue his confirmation, coulde not obtaine it, without xx. M. And from thence it exceded to xxv. M. and at length to xxvij. M. Florences: which ſumme Iacobus Archbyſhop of Mentz was preſt to paie, a little before the councell of Baſill: in ſo much that the ſayde Iacobus, at his departing (which was wythin foure yeares after) ſayde, that his death did not ſo muche grieue hym, as to remember hys poore ſubiectes, whyche ſhuld be conſtrained to pay ſo terrible a fine for the Popes palle. Nowe by this what did riſe to the Pope in whole Germanie, containing in it aboue 50. Byſhopprickes, it may be eaſely coniectured. Lanfrancus thus comming to Rome, with the other two Byſhops: he for the eſtimation of his learning, obtained of Alexander two palles, one of honour, the other of loue. Item, he obtained for the other two Biſhops alſo their confirmation. At which time, they being there preſent before Alexander: the controuerſie began firſt to be moued (or rather renewed) for the primacie betwixt the two metropolitanes, that is betwixt the archbiſhop of Canterburie, and Archbiſhop of York, whether of them ſhoulde haue preeminence aboue the other: For Canterburie chalenged to himſelfe prerogatiue and the primacie, ouer whole Britanie, and Irelande: the whiche contention continued a long ſeaſon, betwixt theſe ij. churches, and was often renued in the daies of diuers kinges after this: as in the reigne of Henrie the firſte, betwixte Thurſtinus of Yorke, and Radolphus of Canterburie. And againe in the 27. yeare of the ſayd king, at his ſeconde coronation: for Radolphus woulde not ſuffer the firſt coronation to ſtande, becauſe it was done by the Byſhop of Yorke, without his aſſent. Alſo in the reigne of Henry the ſecond, where Alexander Pope made a letter decretall betwixt theſe ij. Metropolitanes, for bearing the croſſe. An. M.Clix. Alſo an other time, in the raigne of the ſaid king, betwixt Richard of Canterburie, and Roger of Yorke: againe about the yere of the Lord. M.Clxx. when Thomas Becket, hearing the king to be crowned of Roger byſhop of Yorke: complained thereof grieuouſly to Pope Alexander the third. Item an other time. An. M.Clxxvj. betwixt Richard, and the ſayde Roger, whether of them ſhould ſit on the right hande of Cardinall Hugo, in his Councell at London. Moreouer, in the beginning of the reign of king Richard, An. M.Cxc. betwixt Baldwinus of Canterburie, and Godfridus of Yorke. &c.

Now to procede in the ſtory hereof. After this queſtion was brought as is ſaid, to the Popes preſence (he not diſpoſed to decide the matter) ſent them home vnto Englãd, there to haue their cauſe determined. Whereupon they ſpeding thẽſelues frõ Rome, to Englãd an. M.lxx. and the 6. yeare (as is ſayd) of this William: brought the matter before the king and the clergy, at Windſore. Whereas Lancfrank firſt alledging for himſelfe, brought in, from the time of Auſten, to ẏ time of Bede (which was about 140. yeres) how that the Byſhop of Cant. had euer the primacie ouer the whole land of Britaine, and Ireland: how he kept his Coũcels diuers times within the precincts of Yorke: how he did call and cite the Byſhops of Yorke thereto: whereof ſome he did conſtitute, ſome he did excõmunicat, & ſome he did remoue: beſides alſo he alledged diuers priuileges grãted by princes and prelates to the primacie of that ſea. &c.

To this Thomas Archbiſh. of Yorke replieth againe, and firſt beginning with the firſt originall of the Britains Church, declareth in order of time, how the Britanes. &c.

Lucius the firſt king of Britanie chriſtened.
Theonus firſt Archb. of London.

¶ The Britaines firſt poſſeſſioners of this kingdome of Britaine, which endured from Brutus & Cadwalader 2076. yeares vnder an hundreth and ij. Kynges, at length receaued the Chriſtian faith. Anno. Clxij. in the tyme of Lucius their king. Eleutherius Byſhop of Rome, ſent Faganus and Damanus, preachers vnto them, at which time after theyr conuerſion, they aſſigned and ordeined in the Realme 28. Byſhops, with two Archbiſhops Theonus the Archbyſhop of London, and Theodocens Archbiſhop of Yorke. Under thoſe Byſhops and Archbiſhops the church of Britaine was gouerned, after their conuerſion, almoſt. 300. yeares, till at length the Saxons being then infidels, with Hengiſtus their king, ſubdued ẏ Britans by fraudulẽt murder, and inuaded their land: which was about the yere of the Lorde. 440. After this the Britans being driuen into Cambria (which we now cal Wales) the Saxons ouerrunning the land, deuided thẽſelues into 7. kingdomes. And ſo being infidels and Paganes, cõtinued, til the time that Gregory Byſhop of Rome, ſent Auguſtinus, to preach vnto them: which Auſten comming firſt to Douer, being then the head Citie of Kent, called in Latine Dorobernia, and there planting himſelfe, conuerted firſt the king of Kent, called Edilbertus: who had thẽ ſubdued certaine other kings vnto Humber. By reaſon whereof Auguſtine was made Archbiſhop of Douer, by the appoyntment of Gregorius, who ſent him certaine Palles, with his letter from Rome, which before is expreſſed, pa. 158. Which letter being recited, then Thomas expoũding vpon the ſame, beginneth to declare for himſelfe, howe the meaning of Gregory in this letter, was to reduce the new Church of Saxons, or Engliſhmen, to the order that was in the old time among the Britanes: that is, to be vnder 2. Metropolitanes, one of London, the other of York: for ſo the Church was ordered in the time of the Britanes, as is before declared. Notwithſtanding, he geueth to Auſten thys prerogatiue during his life time, to haue authoritie & iuriſdiction, not onely ouer his 12. Byſhoppes, but vpon all other Biſhops and Prieſts in England. And after his deceaſe, Ex Chron. Sigeberti.

Douer the head citie of Kent.

This was about 150. yeares after the comming of the Saxons.

ceaſe, then theſe 2. metropolitanes, London and Yorke, to ouerſee the whole Clergie, as in times paſt, amongeſt the Britaines: whõ he ioyneth together after the death of Auguſtine, to conſtitute Biſhops, and to ouerſee the Church. And that he ſo meaneth, London to be equall in authoritie with Yorke, it appeareth by 4. argumentes: Firſt, that he wil London to be conſecrate by no Biſhop, but of his own Sinode. Secondly, in that he willeth no diſtinction of honor to be betwixt London and Yorke, but according only, to that as eche of them is elder in time. Thirdly for that he matcheth theſe two together in common coũſell, and with one agreement to conſent together in doing and diſpoſing ſuch things, as they ſhall conſult vpõ in the zeale of Chriſt Ieſus: and that in ſuch ſort, that one ſhould not diſſent nor diſcorde from the other. What meaneth thys, but that they ſhould gouerne together, whome he woulde not to diſſent together? Fourthly, where he wryteth, that the biſhop of Yorke ſhould not be ſubiect to the biſhop of London: what meaneth this, but that the Biſhop of London ſhould be equiualent with the Metropolitane of Yorke, or rather ſuperiour vnto him?

Lancfrancus replyeth.

And thus he expounded the meaning of Gregory, to be in the foreſaid letter. To whom Lancfrancus, againe aunſwereth, that he was not the Byſhop of London, and that the queſtion pertained not to London. Thomas replieth, hauing on his part many fautours, yͭ this priuiledge was graũted, by Gregory, to Auguſtine alone, to haue al other Byſhops ſubiect to him: but after his diſceaſe, there ſhould be equalitie of honor, betwixt London, and York, without all diſtinction of pryoritie ſaue the onely prioritie of time ſhuld make ſuperiority betwene them. And although Auguſtin tranſlated the ſeat from London to Kent, yet Gregory, if his mind had bene, to geue the ſame prerogatiue to the ſucceſſors of Auſten (which he gaue to him) would expreſly haue vttered it in the words of his Epiſtle, writing thus to Auſten. That which I geue to thee Auſten, I geue alſo and graunt to al thy ſucceſſors after thee. But in that, he maketh heere no mention of his ſucceſſors, it appeareth thereby, that it was not his minde ſo to do.

Thomas argueth.

Lancfrancus replyeth.

To this Lancfrancus argueth again. If this authority had bene geuen to Auſten alone, & not to his ſucceſſors, it had bene but a ſmal gift, proceeding from the Apoſtolike ſeate, to his ſpeciall and familiar frend: eſpecially ſeeing alſo that Auſten, in all his life, did conſtitute no Byſhop of Yorke, neither was there any ſuch Biſhop to be ſubiect to him. Againe we haue Priuileges from the Apoſtolike ſea, which confirme this dignitie in the ſucceſſors of Auſten, in the ſame ſeat of Douer. Moreouer, all Engliſhmen thinke it, both right and reaſon, to fetch the directiõ of wel liuing, from that place, where firſt they tooke the ſparkle of right beleuing. Farther, where as you ſay, that Gregory might haue confirmed with plaine wordes, the ſame thing, to the ſucceſſours of Auſten, which he gaue vnto him: all that I graunt: yet notwithſtanding, this is nothing preiudiciall to the ſeat of Canterburie. For, if you know your Logike, that which is true in the whole, is alſo true in the parte: And what is true in the more, is alſo true in the les. Now the Church of Rome is, as the whole, to whome all other Churches be as partes thereof. And as Homo. i. mankinde is Genus i. the general, in a certaine reſpect to al his Indiuidua. i. to all particular perſons, and yet in euery particular perſon lieth the propertie of the generall: ſo in like maner, the ſea of Rome, in a certain reſpect, is the general and the whole, to other churches, & yet in euery particular church is contained the whole fulnes of the whole chriſtian faith. That Church of Rome is greater then all Churches, that which is wrought in it, ought to worke in the leſſe Churches alſo: ſo that the authority of euery chiefe head of the church, ought to ſtand alſo in thẽ, yͭ do ſuccede: vnles there be any preciſe exceptiõ made by name. Wherfore, like as yͤ Lord ſaid, to al biſhops of Rome, the ſame thing, which he ſaid to Peter: ſo Gregory in like maner ſaid to all the ſucceſſors of Auſten, that which he ſaid to Auſten. So thus I conclude, likewiſe as the biſhop of Canterburie is ſubiect to Rome, becauſe hee had his Faith from thence, ſo Yorke ought to be in ſubiection to Cant. which ſent the firſt preachers thether. Now, where as you alledge, that Gregorie would Auſten to be reſident at Lõdon: that is vtterly vncertaine. For how is it to be thought that ſuche a Diſciple, wold do contrary to the mind of ſuch a maſter? But graũt, as you ſay, that Auſten remoued to London: what is that to me, which am not biſhop of London? Notwithſtãding, all this cõtrouerſy ceaſing betwixt vs, if it ſhal pleaſe you, to come to ſome peaceable compoſition with me (all contention ſet apart) you ſhall finde me not out of the way, ſo farre as reaſon and equitie ſhall extend.

The dignitie of Caut. confirmed by priuileges.

Well replyed of an Italian.

If this ſimilitude were formed into a ſilogiſme, neyther were the Maior true. And ſpecially the minor were vtterly falſe.

With theſe reaſons of Lancfranke, Thomas gaue ouer, condeſcending that the firſt of his prouince ſhoulde begin at Humber.

Order taken betwene Lancfrancus Biſh. of Canterbury and Thomas Biſhop of Yorke.

Whereupon it was then decreed, that Yorke from that time, ſhould be ſubiect to Caunterbury, in all matters appertaining to the rites & regiment of the catholike church: So that whereſoeuer within Englãd, Canterbury ſhuld or would hold his Councel, the Byſhop of Yorke ſhoulde reſort thether, with his Byſhops, and be obedient to hys decrees canonicall.

Prouided moreouer, that when the biſhop of Canterbury ſhould deceaſe, Yorke ſhould repair to Douer, there to conſecrate with other, the Byſhop that ſhoulde be elect. And if Yorke ſhould deceaſe, his ſucceſſor ſhould reſorte to Cãterbury, or els, where the byſhop of Cãterbury ſhould appoint, there to receiue his cõſecration, making his profeſſion there wͭ an othe of Canonicall obedience. Thomas being content wͭall, Lancfrancus the Italian triumpheth with no ſmall ioy: and putteth the matter forthwͭ in wryting, that the memory therof might remain to the poſterity of his ſucceſſors. But yet that decree did not long ſtand. For ſhortly after, the ſame ſcar ſo ſuperficially cured, braſt out againe. Inſomuch yͭ in the reigne of king Henrie the firſt. An. Domini 1121. Thurſtinus Archbyſhop of Yorke could not be cõpelled to ſweare to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury: and yet notwithſtanding, by the letters of Calixtus 2. was conſecrate without any profeſſion made to the ſayde Byſhop, wyth much more matter of contention: all which to recite it were too long. But this I thought to commit to hiſtorie, to the intent men might ſee the lamentable decay of true Chriſtianitie amongeſt Chriſten Byſhops: who inflamed with glorious ambition, ſo contended for honor, that without mere forcemẽt of law, no modeſtie could take place.

Of ſuch like contentions among Prelates of the Clergie, for ſuperioritie, we read of diuers in olde Chronicles: as in the hiſtory intituled Chronicon Hirſſeldenſe, where is declared a bloudy conflict, which twiſe hapned in yͤ church of Goſlaria, betwene Hecion biſhop of Hildeſheime, and Wideratus biſhop of Fulda: and all for the ſuperior place, who ſhould ſit next to the Emperour, the Emperour hymſelfe being there preſent, and looking on them, and yet not able to ſtay them.

Thus I haue deſcribed the troublous contention betwene Lancfrancus, & Thomas Metropolitane of Yorke in the daies of Alexander, of which controuerſie and of the whole diſcourſe thereof: Lanfrancus writeth to Pope Alexander beginning thus.

A letter of Lanfrancus ſent to Pope Alexander.

Domino totius Chriſtianæ religionis ſummo ſpeculatori Alex. Papæ. Lancfrancus ſanctæ Dorobernenſis Eccleſiæ antiſtes, debitam cum omni ſeruitute obedientiam. In concilio quod Angliæ per veſtram autoritatem coactum eſt, vbi querelæ Thomæ Archiepiſcopi prolatæ & ventilatæ ſunt, allata eſt Eccleſiaſtica gẽtis Anglorum hiſtoria, quam Eboracenſis Eccleſiæ præsbyter, & Anglorum Doctor Beda compoſuit: and ſo forth in a long proceſſe of wordes which followe. Among whiche in the middle of the epiſtle, ſpeaking of Douer and Canterbury, he hath theſe wordes. Vrbs namque, quæ nunc Cãtuarberia nominatur, antiquis temporibus, ab ipſius terræ incolis Dorobernia vocabatur. &c. with many other wordes in the ſaid Epiſtle, which for breuitie here I ouerpaſſe.

Byſhops ſeates tranſlated into England.

In the ſtory before of king Egelrede, was declared about the yeare of our Lord. M. xvj. how the Biſhoprik of Lindaffarne otherwiſe named holy lande, in the floude of Twede, was tranſlated to Durham: ſo likewiſe in the dayes of this Lancfrancus Archbiſhop of Cant. Anno M. lxxvj. diuers Biſhops ſeates, were altered and remoued from towneſhips to greater Cities. As the Byſhoprike of Seleſe was remoued to Chicheſter, out of Cornewall to Exeter, from Welles to Bathe: from Shyrburne to Saleſbury: from Dorceſter to Lincolne, from Lichfield to Cheſter: which Byſhopricke of Cheſter, Robert being then Byſhop reduced from Cheſter to Couentrie. Likewiſe after that in the raigne of William Ruſus. An. 1095. Herbert Biſhop of Thetford, from thence reduced the ſeat to Norwige. &c.

As concerning Douer and Caunterbury, whether the ſea, was likewiſe tranſlated frõ the towne of Douer to the City of Cant. in the time of Theodorus: or whether Canterbury by old time had the name of Dorobernia (as yͤ letter of Lancfrancus to Pope Alexander, aboue mentioned, doth pretend) I finde it not in hiſtories expreſſely defined. Saue that I read by yͤ words of William being yet Duke of Normandie, charging then Harolde to make a welle of water for the kings vſe in the Caſtel of Dorobernia: that the ſaid Dorobernia then was taken for that which nowe we call Douer: but whether Dorobernia and the Citie of Cant, be both one or diuers, the matter is not great. Not-withſtanding this I read in the epiſtle of Pope Bonifacius to king Ethelbert, as alſo to Iuſtinus Archbiſh. Item in the epiſtle of pope Honorius, to biſhop Honorius. Itē, of Pope Vitalianus, to Theodorus: of Pope Sergius to king Ethelred, Alfred, and Adulphus, and to the Biſhops of england. Likewiſe of pope Gregory the 3. to yͤ Biſhops of England. Item of Pope Leo to Atherlard Archbyſhop of Cant. Of Formoſus to the biſhops of England: and of Pope Iohn to Dunſtane, that the name of Dorobernia & of Canterbury indifferently are taken for one matter.

Dorobernia and Canterbury takē both for one.

A councell holden at London, and what were the actes thereof.

In this time (and by the procuring of this Lancfrancus) the 9. yere of this king: a councel was holden at London, where among the actes thereof, theſe were the principall things concluded.

1. For the order of ſitting: that the Archbiſhop of Yorke ſhould ſit on the right hand, and the Byſhop of London of the left hand: or in the abſence of Yorke, London ſhoulde haue the right, and wincheſter the left hand of the Archbyſhop of Cant. ſitting in counſell.
2. The ſeconde, that Biſhops ſhoulde tranſlate their ſees from villages into cities: wherupon thoſe ſees aboue named were tranſlated.
3. That Monkes ſhould haue nothing in proper. And if any ſo had, he dying vnconfeſſed, ſhoulde not be buried in the Churchyard.
4. That no Clerke or Monke of an other dioceſſe, ſhould be admitted to orders, or retained without letters cōmendatorie or teſtimoniall.
5. That none ſhould ſpeake in the Cōucel except biſhops and Abbots, without leaue of the Archmetropolitanes.
6. That none ſhould marry within the 7. degree, with any either of his owne kinred, or of his wiues departed.

Biſhops of England about to driue out Monkes and to place prieſtes agayne in their ſteede.

Moreouer, in the dayes of this Lancfrancus, diuers good biſhops of the realme, began to take part with prieſts againſt the monkes, in diſplacing theſe out of their Churches, and to reſtore the maried Prieſts againe: in ſo much that walkelmus biſhop of wint. had placed aboue 40. canons in ſtede of monkes for his part: but this godly enterpriſe was ſtopped by ſtout Lancfranke the Italian Lombard. This luſtie Prelate ſate 19. yeares, but at latter end, he was not ſo fauored of william Rufus, and died for ſorowe. Although this Italian Franke being Archbiſhop: had litle leiſure to write, yet ſomething he thought to doe, to ſet out his famous learning, and wrote a Booke againſt Berengarius, intituling it: Opus Scintillarum. The olde church of Cant. he plucked downe & builded vp the new.

Hildebrandus ſeu Gregor.7. Hildebrand the cauſe of all this ſtoutnes and pride in prelates.

After the death of Pope Alexander aboue mentioned, next to him folowed Hildebrād ſurnamed Gregory the 7. This Hildebrand as he was a ſorcerer, ſo was he the firſt and principal cauſe of all this perturbation that is nowe & hath bene, ſince his time in the Church: by reaſon that through his example, all this ambition, ſtoutnes & pride, entred firſt into the church of Rome, & hath euer ſince continued. For before Hildebrandus came to Rome, working there his feates: ſetting vp and diſplacing what Byſhops he liſted: corrupting them with pernicious counſell, and ſetting them againſt Emperors: vnder pretence of chaſtitie deſtroying matrimonie: and vnder the title of libertie, breaking peace and reſiſting authoritie: before this (I ſay) the church of Rome was in ſome order, & biſhops quietly gouerned vnder chriſten Emperors, and alſo were defended by the ſame. As Marcellus, Melciades, and Silueſter were ſubdued, and vnder obedience to Conſtantinus. an. 340. Syricus to Theodoſius. Anno. 388. Gregorius to Mauritius. An. 600. Hilarius to Iuſtinian. An. 528. Adrianus and Leo to Carolus Magnus: An. 801. Paſchalis and Valentius to Ludouicus Pius. an. 830. Sergius 29. vnto Lotharius. An. 840. Benedictus the 3. and Ioannes the 9. vnto Ludouicus ſonne of Lotharius. an. 856. But againſt this obedience and ſubiection Hildebrād firſt began to ſpurne, and by his example taught all other Biſhops to do the like.

The obedience of Biſhops in auncient tyme to Emperours.

What Popes haue done.

In ſomuch, that at length they wrought and brought to paſſe, to be lawful for a fewe curtiſans & Cardinals (contrary to auncient ordinance and ſtatutes decretal) to chuſe what Pope they liſt, without any conſent of the Emperor at all. And where as before it ſtoode in the Emperors gift, to geue and graunt Byſhopriks, Archbiſhopriks, benefices and other Eccleſiaſticall prefermentes within theyr owne limites, to whom they liſt: now the Popes through much wraſtling, warres, and contention, haue extorted al that into their owne hāds, and to their aſſignes: yea, haue pluckt in, all the riches & power of the whole worlde. And not cōtent with that, haue vſurped and preuailed ſo much aboue Emperors: that, (as before) no Pope might be choſen wᵗout the cōfirmation of the Emperor: ſo now no Emperor may be elected wᵗout the confirmation of the Pope, taking vpon them more then Princes, to place or diſplace Emperours at their pleaſure, for euery light cauſe: to put downe, or to ſet vp when, & whom they liſted: as Fridericus Primus, for holding the left ſtirrup of the popes ſadel, was perſecuted almoſte to excommunication. The which cauſe moueth me to ſtraine more diligence here, in ſetting out the hiſtory, actes, and doings of this Hildebrand: from whom, as the firſt patron and founder, ſprang al this ambition & contention, about the liberties & dominion of the Romane church: to the intent, that ſuch as cā not read the Latine hiſtories, may vnderſtand in Engliſh, the original of euils: howe, and by what occaſion they firſt began, and how long they haue continued.

Popes mo then Prin ces.

Frideric primus, ſheut for holding th Popes le ſtirrup.

And firſt howe this Hildebrand hetherto had behaued himſelfe before he was Pope, I haue partly declared. For though he was not yet Pope in name, yet he was there Pope in deede, & ruled the Pope and all their doinges, as him liſted. Item what waies and fetches he had attempted euer ſince his firſt comming to the Courte of Rome, to magnifie and maintaine falſe libertie, againſt true authoritie: what practiſe he wrought by Cōucels, what factions and conſpiracies he made, in ſtirring vp Popes againſt Emperours, ſtriuing for ſuperioritie: and what warres followed therof, I haue alſo expreſſed. Now let vs ſee further (by the helpe of Chriſte) the worthy vertues of this princely prelate, after he came to be Pope, as they remaine in hiſtories of diuers and ſondry writers deſcribed.

Gregory 7. Ex Auen no.

THe words of the latine hiſtorie be theſe: Hactenus pontifices Rom. comitijs curiatis, calatis, a ſacerdotibus, equitatu, plebe, Senatu. &c. In Engliſh: Hetherto the Byſhoppes of Rome haue bene elected by voyces, and ſuffrages, of all ſortes and degrees, as well of the Prieſts and the Clergy, as of the nobilitie, people, and Senate, all conuenting and aſſembling together. And this election ſo I finde to ſtande in force, if ſo be it were ratified and confirmed, by the conſent of Romane Emperors: who had authoritie to call and to aſſemble all theſe, as well, as Byſhops together, vnto councels, as caſe required. Vnder the authoritie and iuriſdiction of theſe Emperours, were contained both in Germany, Fraunce, Italy, and through the whole dominion of Rome, all Patriarches, Biſhops, maſters of Churches and Monaſteries, by the decree of Councels, according to the olde cuſtome of our aunceters, as is declared in a certaine ſtorie, in the life of Carolus Magnus. The holy and auncient fathers (like as Chriſt our Lorde with his diſciples and Apoſtles both taught and did) honoured and eſteemed their Emperours, as the ſupreame poteſtate next vnder God in earth, ſet vp, ordained, elected and crowned of God, aboue all other mortall men, and ſo counted them, and called them their Lords. To them they yelded tribute, and paide their ſubſidies. Alſo prayed euery day for their life. Such as rebelled againſt them, they tooke as rebelles and reſiſters againſt God his ordinance, and chriſtian pietie. The name of the Emperor then was of great maieſtie, and receiued as geuen from God. Then theſe fathers of the Church neuer intermedled, nor intangled themſelues with politike affaires of the common weale: muche leſſe they occupied Marciall armes, and matters of cheualrie. Onely in pouertie and modeſtie, was all their contention with other Chriſtians, who ſhoulde be pooreſt, and moſt modeſt amōgſt them. And the more humblenes appeared in any, the higher opiniō they cōceiued of him. The ſharpe and two edged ſworde they tooke, geuen to the Churche of Chriſt, to ſaue, and not to kill: to quicken, & not to deſtroy: and called it the ſworde of the ſpirite, which is the word of God, the life and light of men, and reuoketh from death to life, making of men, Gods: of mortall, immortall. Farre were they from that, to thruſt out any Prince or Kyng (though he were neuer ſo farre out of the way, yea an Arrian) from his kingdome: or to curſe him, to releaſe hys ſubiects from their oth and their allegeance, to change and tranſlate kingdoms, to ſubuert empires, to pollute themſelues with Chriſten bloude, or to warre with their Chriſtian brethren for rule & principalitie. This was not their ſpirite & maner then, but rather they loued & obeyed their Princes. Again Princes loued them alſo, like fathers and fellow princes with them of the ſoules of men. Now this Prieſtes maryage made hereſie.

Ottho Biſhop of Cōſtance.

Gregorius the ſeuenth, otherwiſe named Hildebrandus, truſting vpon the Normains which then ruſled about Apulia, Calabria, and Campania, truſting alſo vpon the power of Machtilda, a ſtout woman thereabout Rome, & partly again, bearing himſelf bold for the diſcord among the Germains: firſt of all other (contrary to the maner of elders) contemning the authoritie of the emperour, inuaded the Cathedrall ſea of Rome, vauncing himſelfe as hauing both the eccleſiaſtical and temporal ſword committed to him by Chriſt, & that fulnes of power was in his hande to bind and looſe what ſo he liſted. Wherupon thus he preſumed to occupy both the regiments, to chalenge all the whole dominion, both of the Eaſt & Weſt church, yea and all power to himſelf alone, abiding none to be equal, much leſſe ſuperior to him, derogating from other, and arrogating to himſelfe their due right and honor, ſetting at light Ceſars, kings, and Emperours, and who raigned but by his owne godamercy? Biſhops and Prelates as his vnderlings, he kept in awe: ſuſpending and curſing, & chopping of their heads, ſtirring vp ſtrife and warres, ſowyng of diſcord, making factions, releaſing othes, defeating fidelitie and due allegeance of ſubiects to their princes. Yea and if he had offended or iniured the Emperour himſelfe, yet notwithſtanding he ought to be feared, as he himſelfe glorieth in a certain epiſtle, as one that could not erre, and had receiued of Chriſt our ſauiour, and of Peter, authoritie to bynd and vnbind at his will and pleaſure. Prieſtes thē in thoſe daies had wiues openly and lawfully (no law forbidding to the contrary) as appeareth by the deede and writings of their chapter ſeales & donations, which were geuen to temples and monaſteries, wherein their wyues alſo be cited with them for witnes, and were called preſbiteriſſæ. Alſo for Biſhops, Prelates, Perſons of Churches, gouernors of the Clergy, maiſters of monaſteries, & religious houſes, all theſe were then in thoſe times in the emperors ordination, to aſſigne by voice or conſent to whom he would. Now theſe two things Gregorius this Pope could not abide. For the which two cauſes onely, was all his ſtriuing and driuing from his firſt beginning, to aboliſh the mariage of Prieſts, and to tranſlate the authoritie Imperiall to the Clergy. For to this ſcope only tended all his labour, practiſes and deuiſes, as appeared before in the councell of Lateran, vnder Pope Nicolas, and alſo in the councell of Mantua, vnder Alexander, making their mariage hereſie, and the other to be ſimonie. And that which before he went about by other, now he practiſeth by hymſelf to condemne miniſters that were maried, for Nicolaitans, and to receiue any ſpirituall regiment of ſecular perſons for ſimonie. Directing forth his letters vpō the ſame to Henricus the Emperour, to Dukes, Princes, Poteſtates, Tetrarkes: namely, to Berchtoldus, to Rodulphus of Swenia, to Whelpho, Adalberon, & their wiues. Item, to biſhops, Archbiſhops, to Prieſts, and to all the people, in the which letters he denounceth them to bee no prieſts, ſo many as were maried, forbidding men to ſalute them, to talke, to eate, to company with them, to pay them tithes, or to obey thē, if they would not be obedient to him. Amongſt all other, he directed ſpecial letters to Ottho biſhop of Conſtance, concerning this matter. But Ottho perceiuyng the vngodlye and vnreaſonable pretence of Hildebrand, would neyther ſeperate them that were maried from their wyues, nor yet forbid thē to marrie, which were vnmaried, &c.

The Pope diſpenſeth for diſobedience.

Gregorius biſhop, ſeruaunt of ſeruants of God, to the Clergie and laitie, both more and leſſe within the Dioces of Conſtancie, ſalutation and benediction. We haue directed to our brother Ottho your biſhop, our letters exhortatory: wherin we enioined him, according to the neceſſitie of our duetie, by the authoritie Apoſtolicall, that he ſhould vtterly aboliſh out of his Church the hereſie of ſimonie, and alſo ſhould cauſe with all diligence to bee preached the chaſtitie of prieſts. But he neither moued with reuerence of S.Peters precept, nor yet with the regard of his duty, neglected to do theſe things, whereunto we ſo fatherly haue exhorted him, incurring thereby a double offence, not onely of diſobedience, but alſo of rebellion, in that he hath gone and done cleane contrary to our commaundement (yea rather the commaundement of bleſſed S Peter) ſo that he hath permitted his clergy not onely ſuch as had wiues, not to put them away, but alſo ſuch as had none, to take vnto them. Whereupon, we beyng truely informed thereof, and agrieued therewith, haue directed to him an other letter, declaring the motion of our diſpleaſure and indignation. In which letters alſo we haue cited him vp to our Councell at Rome, there to appeare and geue account of his diſobedience, in the audience of the whole Synode. And nowe therefore we thought it beſt to ſignifie this to you (our deare children) whereby in this behalfe we might the better prouide for your health & ſaluation. For if your biſhop ſhall continue ſo obſtinately to repugne aud reſiſt againſt our commaundement, he is not meete to ſit ouer you, &c. Wherfore theſe ſhall be to commaund you, & all them that be obedient to God, and to bleſſed S.Peter, by our Apoſtolicall authoritie, that if this your Biſhop ſhall perſiſt in his obſtinacie, you that be his ſubiects, hereafter geue to him no ſeruice, nor obediēce. For the which thing doyng, we here diſcharge you before God and your ſoules. For if your biſhop ſhall ſeeme contrary to the decreements & iniunctions Apoſtolicall. We through the Apoſtolicall authoritie of S.Peter, diſcharge and abſolue you frō the band of your allegeāce to him. So that if you be ſworne to him, ſo long as he is a rebell againſt God, and the Apoſtolike ſeat, we loſe you from the peril of your othe, that you ſhall not need to feare therein no daunger, &c.

Three thinges enacted by Hildebrand. Here commeth in the vow of chaſtitie.

Ottho biſhop of Conſtance thus being cited, whether he did appeare perſonally himſelfe, I doe not reade. This I read and find, that in the ſayd councel holden at Rome, Hildebrand with other biſhops of Rome, did then enacte amongſt many other, theſe three things moſt ſpecial. Firſt that no Prieſt hereafter ſhould marrie wiues. Secondly, that all ſuch as were married ſhould be diuorſt. Thirdly, that none hereafter ſhould be admitted to yͤ order of prieſthood, but ſhould ſweare perpetual chaſtitie, &c. This cōcell of Rome beyng ended, forthwith the act of Hildebrād, concerning the ſingle life of Prieſts, was proclaymed and publiſhed in all places, and ſtraight commaundement geuen to biſhops to execute the ſame.

✼ The Copy of his Bull ſent into Italie and Germanie, was this.

Gregory the Pope, otherwiſe Hildebrand, the ſeruaunt of the ſeruaunts of God, ſendeth the Apoſtles bleſſing to all them within the kingdoms of Italy and Germany, that ſhew their true obedience to S.Peter If there be any Prieſts, Deacons and Subdeacons, that ſtill will remayne in the ſinne of fornication. We forbid them the Churches entrance, by the omnipotent power of God, and by the aucthoritie of S.Peter, till tyme they amend and repent. But if they perſeuere in their ſinne, we charge that none of you preſume to heare their ſeruice For their bleſſing is turned into curſing, and their prayer into ſinne, as the Lord doth teſtifie to vs by his Prophets. I will turne your bleſſing, &c.

The Clergy of Fraunce repugning for deuorcing from their wyues.

The biſhops of France being called vpon daily, with the popes letters, were compelled to obey the decree of the councel, but the reſidue of the clergy manfully and ſtoutly withſtanding the Popes decree, and inforcement of their biſhops would not agree, but repined thereat, & ſayd, that the councell did manifeſtly repugne agaynſt the worde of God, & that the Pope did take from Prieſtes, that whiche both God and nature had geuen them, and therefore that perſon to be an heretike, and Author of a wicked doctrine, which ruled and gouerned not by the ſpirit of God, but by Sathan. The decree and act ſet forth, to tende directly againſt the word of God, and the ſaying of Chriſt: Non omnes capiunt verbum hoc, all men haue not the gift and capacitie of the word. Item, to be againſt the ſound doctrine of S. Paule writing theſe wordes: As concerning virginitie, I haue no commaundement of the Lord, &c. Agayne, he that cannot otherwiſe liue continently, let him marrie. Item, that it was agaynſt the Canons both of the Apoſtles, and of Nicene councell. Moreouer, that it was againſt the courſe of nature whiche he required, that men beyng ſequeſtred from their naturall wiues, and women, ſhoulde be coacted to liue as aungels, that is, to performe that which nature doth not geue. And therefore the biſhop therin did open a pernicious windowe to vncleannes and to fornication. In ſumme, geuing vp their anſwer, thus they concluded, that they had rather geue vp their benefices, then to forſake their naturall and lawfull wiues, againſt the worde of Chriſt. And finally, if maried prieſts could not pleaſe them, they ſhould call downe Angels from heauen to ſerue the Churches. But Hildebrand nothing moued, neither with honeſt reaſon, nor with the authoritie of holy Scripture, nor with the determinatiō of Nicene councell, nor any thing els: followeth this matter, calleth vpon the biſhops ſtil, with his letters and Legats doth ſollicitate their mindes, accuſeth them of negligence and daſtardnes, threatneth them with excommunication, vnles they cauſe their prieſts to obey his decree enioyned them. Whereupon, a great number of biſhops for feare of the Popes tiranny, laboured yͤ matter with their prieſts, by all means poſſible to bereaue them of their accuſtomed matrimony.

The Prieſtes of Germany ſtout agaynſt the popes vnlawfull proceedinges.

this acte of taking away Prieſtes mariage, might breede him no little trouble: talketh with his Clergy gently, admoniſheth them of the Popes minde & decree, and geueth them halfe yeres reſpite to deliberate vpon the caſe, exhorting them diligently to ſhewe themſelues obedient to the Pope and to him, and to graũt with good will that, which at length, will they, nill they, needes they muſt bee forced vnto, and therefore of their owne accord to ſtande, content therewith, leaſt the Pope ſhould be compelled to attempt wayes of ſharper ſeueritie. The time of deliberation expired, the Archbiſhop aſſembleth his clergy at Erpford, the month of October, and there willeth them according to the pontificall decree, either to abiure for euer all matrimony, or els to abrenounce their benefices and Eccleſiaſticall liuings. The clergy agayne defend themſelues, againſt the Popes decree with ſcriptures, with reaſon, with the actes of generall councels, with examples of aunceſtors, by diuers ſtrong arguments, declaring the Popes decree not to be conſonant, nor ought to take effect. But the Archbiſhop ſayd, he was compelled ſo of the Pope, and could not otherwiſe do, but to execute that was enioyned him. The clergy ſeeyng that no reaſon, nor prayer, nor diſputation would ſerue, layd their heads together cõſultyng among themſelues what was beſt to be done. Some gaue counſail not to returne agayne to the Synode. Some thought it good to returne and to thruſt out the Archbiſhop frõ hys ſeat, & to geue him due puniſhment of death for his deſeruing, that by the example of him, other may bee warned hereafter, neuer to attempt that thing any more to the preiudice of the church, and the rightfull liberty of miniſters. After that this was ſignified to the Archbiſhop, by certaine ſpies that were amongeſt them, what the clergy entended to do. The Archb. to preuent and ſalue the matter, ſendeth to the prieſts as they were comming out, certaine meſſengers, bidding them of good hope, and to returne againe to the Metropolitane, and they ſhould haue that ſhould content their myndes. So beyng perſwaded, they come again to the Councel. The biſhop promiſeth he would doe hys indeuour what he could, to reuoke & turne the mind of the Biſhop of Rome from that ſentence, willing them in the meane tyme to continue as they had done in their cure and miniſtery. The next yeare followyng, Hildebrand yͤ ſouldiour of Sathan, ſendeth his Legate (a certaine Biſhop called Curieſis) vnto the Archb. of Mentz, and aſſembled there a Councell. In the which councel, the Archb. againe propoſeth the matter, commaunding all the clergy vnder payne of the Popes curſe, there, perpetually eyther to abrenounce their wyues, or their liuings. The clergy defended their cauſe againe with great conſtancy. But when no defenſion could take place, but all went by tiranny & mere extortiõ, it burſt in the end to an vprore and tumult, where the Legate and the Archbiſhop beyng in great daunger, hardly eſcaped with their lyues, and ſo the Councell brake vp. By this ſchiſme and tumult it followed, that the churches after that in chuſing their prieſts, would not ſend thẽ to the biſhops (the enemies and ſuppreſſors of Matrimony) to be confirmed and inducted, but did elect them within themſelues, and ſo put them in their office, without all leaue or knowledge of biſhops, who then agreed & were determined to admit no prieſts, but ſuch as ſhould take an othe of perpetuall ſingleneſſe, neuer to marrie after. And thus firſt came vp the othe and profeſſion of ſingle Prieſthood. Notwithſtanding, if other nations had followed the like conſtancie & concord of theſe Germain miniſters, the diueliſh drift and decre of this Hildebrand (or rather Helbrand) had bene fruſtrate and auoyded. But this greedines of liuings in weak prieſts, make them to yeld vp their godly liberty to wicked tiranny. Yet this remayneth in theſe Germains to be noted: what concord can doe in repreſſing vnordinate requeſts of euil biſhops, if they conſtantly ſtand to truth, and hold together. And thus much for baniſhing of matrimony. Now let vs proceede to the contentions betwixt wicked Hildebrand, and the godly Emperour. But before by the way of digreſſion it ſhal not be much wide from the purpoſe, to touch a little of the properties of this Pope, as we find them deſcribed in certaine epiſtles of Benno a Cardinall, writing to other cardinals of Rome. which Benno lyued in the ſame tyme of Hildebrand, and detecteth the prodigious actes and doings of this monſtrous Pope.

Ex Benno Cardinali.

First, declaring that he was a Sorcerer moſt notable, and a Nicromanſer, an olde companion of Silueſter, of Laurentius, and Theophilactus, called otherwiſe Benedictus nonus. Amongſt other Benno Cardinals writeth this hiſtory of him. How vpon a certaine tyme this Gregorius comming from Albanus to Rome, had forgot behynd him his familiar booke of Nicromanſie, which he was wont commonly to cary alwayes with him. Whereupon remembring himſelfe, entered the port of Laterane, he calleth two of his moſt truſty familiars to fet the booke, charging them at no hand to looke within it. But they beyng ſo reſtrayned, were the more deſirous to open it, & to peruſe it, and ſo did. After they had read a little the ſecrets of the Sathanicall booke, ſodenly there came about them the meſſengers of Sathan, the multitude and terrour of whom, made them almoſt out of their wittes. At length they comming to themſelues, the ſpirites were inſtant vpon them to know, wherefore they were called vp, wherfore they were vexed: Quickly (ſaid they) tell vs what ye would vs to do, or els we will fall vpon you, if ye retaine vs longer. Then ſpake one of the yong men to them, bidding thẽ go and plucke downe yonder walles, pointing to certayne high wals there nigh to Rome, which they did in a moment. The yong men croſſing them for feare of the ſpirites (ſcarſe recouering thẽ ſelues) at length came to their maiſter. And it followeth moreouer in the epiſtle of the ſayd Benno to the Cardinals.

Pope Hildebrand forſaken of diuers of his Cardinals.

We haue made mention to you before of diuers colledges of the church of Rome, which refuſed to communicate with him. As Leo then Archprieſt of the Cardinals, Benno, Vgobaldus, Iohannes the Cardinal, Peter Chauncellor and Cardinall, beyng all inſtituted before this Hildebrand. Theſe three alſo beyng conſecrated by him, that is, Natro, Innocentius and Leo, forſoke him, curſing the deteſtable errours which he held. In like caſe Theodinus whom he conſtituted Archdeacon, and other Cardinals mo, Ioannes ſurnamed Primicerius, Petrus oblationarius with all that appertayned vnto them, ſauing one onely man. And now when this Hildebrand ſaw that the biſhops alſo would forſake him, he called vnto him the lay men, and made them priuy of his counſail, thinking thereby to ſeparate the biſhops, that they ſhould haue no cõference with the Cardinals. After that he called together thoſe biſhops, and beyng garded with bandes of lay men, he enforced the biſhops partly for feare, and partly for his manacing wordes, to ſweare vnto him, that they ſhould neuer diſagre vnto that, which he would haue done, that they ſhould neuer defend the Kynges quarell, and that they ſhould neuer fauour or obey the Pope, that ſhould in his ſtead be inſtituted. Which thing beyng done, he ſent them by meanes of the Prince of Salernites, into Campania, and thus did he ſeparate them, from the company of the Cardinals, & from the citie of Rome. And not onely the biſhops, but alſo the Prieſts of the citie, and clarkes of inferior orders, as alſo the laye men, he bound by their othes, that at no tyme nor for any cauſe, they ſhould condiſcend vnto the king.

Pope Hildebrand compelleth the Biſhops and prieſtes of Rome to ſweare vnto him.

Pope Hildebrand vnorderly made Pope.

Aſſoone as Pope Alexander was dead, which dyed ſomwhat before night, the ſame day contrary to the Canons, he was choſen Pope of the laymen. But the Cardinals ſubſcribed not to his election. For the Canons preſcribe (vnder payne of curſing) that none ſhould be choſen Pope before the third day, after the burial of his predeceſſours. But he (by finiſter meane thus clyming to the ſeat) remoued the Cardinals of the ſayd ſeat, from being of the counſail. But with what perſons he conſulted night & day, Rome well heard and ſaw. And he now puttyng the Cardinals from hys counſaile, his lyfe, fayth, and doctrine, no man could accuſe or beare witneſſe off: where as in the Canons is commaunded, that in euery place where ſo euer the Pope is, ſhould be with him iij. Cardinals beyng prieſts, & ij. Deacons, becauſe of his Eccleſiaſticall teſtimony and ſtile of veritie, of whiche Canonical decree, looke gentle Reader before. He violently wreſted the ſacred ſcriptures to couer his falſhood, which kynd of Idolatry, how great it is, manifeſtly throughout all the Scripture it appeareth. Contrary to the myndes and counſaile of the Cardinals, and beſides the determinate order of pronouncing iudgement by the Canons, he raſhly did excommunicate the Emperour, beyng in no Synode ſolemnly accuſed before. The ſentence of which excommunication after reherſal of theſe preſents, ſhal alſo be manifeſted (Chriſt willing) to the which excommunication ſaith Benno, none of the Cardinals would ſubſcribe. As ſoone as he aroſe out of hys ſeate papall, to excommunicate the Emperour, the ſame ſeate (beyng made but a little before, with big tymber) ſodainly by the appointment of God was rent and ſhiuered in pieces: ſo that all men might plainly vnderſtand, what, and how great and terrible ſchiſmes: that lubber had ſowne againſt the Church of Chriſt, agaynſt the ſeat of S. Peter: and how cruelly he had diſperſed the chayre of Chriſt, in defilyng the lawes of the Church, ruling by might and auſteritie, in that hys ſo perillous and preſumptuous excommunication.

The Emperour wrongfully excommunicated.

The Popes chaire brake vnder him as he roſe to excommunicate the Emperour

The Pope deuideth the vnitie of the Church.

In the deſcription of the ſame excommunication, he inſerteth thoſe things, wherin he himſelfe erred, when he abſolued the Emperour, being vniuſtly excommunicate, and the biſhops alſo communicating with him, & to the vttermoſt thus cutting & mangling the vnitie of the Church and thoſe that communicated with them, did as much as in him lay to make two churches.

Alſo the ſame bold merchaunt, commaunded that the Cardinals ſhould faſt, to the intent that God would reueale whoſe opinion was better (eyther of the Church of Rome, or of Berengarius) touching the controuerſie of the Lordes body in the Sacrament. And hereby he prooued himſelfe to be a manifeſt Infidell:

for that in the Nicene Councell it is written, he that doubteth is an Infidell.

Further, he ſought after a ſigne to eſtabliſh his fayth, concerning the Article of the Lordes body, as did Gregory to confirme the womans fayth, when the conſecrated bread was tranſubſtantiated into the forme of a fleſhly finger. He alſo ſent two Cardinals (Attones and Cunones) vnto Anaſtaſie, that with the Archprieſt of the ſame Church, they ſhould begin a faſt of three dayes ſpace. And that euery of them (euery day during thoſe iij. dayes) ſhould ſay ouer the Pſalter, & ſing Maſſes, that Chriſt would ſhew vnto them ſome ſuch like ſigne of his body, as he did to the foreſayd Gregory, which thing they could not ſee.

Of this miracle we read in no approued hiſtory.
